Samuel Hammons.

Notice.

Preachers wishing to make appointments with the church in New Haven, Ct., will do so, in all cases, by previous correspondence with, and invitation of, the Corresponding Secretary, Ardin Hotchkiss, Fair Haven, Ct.

Notice.

Meetings are held regularly every Sunday at West Winsted, Ct., in Camp's Block.

Maine Second Advent Tract Society.

S. K. Partridge, R. R. York, I. C. Wellcome, Board of Managers.

I. C. Wellcome, Secretary and Business Agent.

Isaac Wight, Treasurer.

It was voted that all orders for tracts and books for distribution by this Society be addressed to the Agent, I. C. Wellcome, Yarmouth, Me., who will supply them as fast as the means are furnished.

All our ministers will receive subscriptions for the Tract Fund, and they purpose to raise $200, or more, for free distribution in Maine this year.

I. C. Wellcome, Agent.

Agency for Maine.

Having been solicited to take the agency for Maine of Bro. Himes' "New Chart of Daniel and John," I would say to any and all in Maine who wish it, I am prepared to furnish it at the regular retail price, $5.00, and to preachers (or others who wish them to sell) at a liberal discount. Address orders to I. C. Wellcome, Yarmouth, Me.

Appointments.

We would say to our preaching Brethren that it is necessary we should receive their appointments as early as Tuesday Morning, as our paper goes to press about noon; otherwise they will not be inserted till the week following.

Lowell Street Chapel, Boston, corner of Causeway and Lowell Streets. Meetings are held regularly three times every Sunday, and Tuesday and Friday evenings. Seats free.

Lowell Street Chapel.

Eld. T. Cole .... Sunday, March 12th

Lowell, Mass. .... Saturday evening, March 11th and Lord's day, the 12th. Miles Grant.

Fairhaven .... Sunday, March 12th. J. S. White.

Portsmouth, N. H. .... Sunday, March 12th. Wm. C. Thurman.

Portsmouth, N. H. .... Sundays, April 9th and 10th. George Champlin.

Griswoldville .... March 10th
Northfield .... March 12th. E. McCulloch.

Lunenberg, Mass. .... March 12th. S. S. Brewer.

Pleasant Valley, Conn. .... Sunday, March 12th
North Canton, Conn. .... Sunday, March 19th
Wallingford Farms, Conn. .... March 26th. B. Hitchcock.

Northville, Newport, N. H. .... Sunday, March 19th. Wm. W. Sutherland.

New Hartford, (Garrett school-house), Sunday, March 12th. S. Woodruff.

Lovely Street, (School-house) .... Sunday, April 2d. Wm. Ripley.

Lee, N. H., (Union house), Wednesday evening, March 8th, and afternoons and evenings through the week, and over the following Lord's day. A. Simpson, E. S. Emerson.

Vernon, Vt. .... Sunday, March 12th. Geo. A. Otis.

West Abington, Mass. .... Sunday, March 12th. C. C. Ramsay.

South Poland, Me. .... Sunday, March 12th
N. Norway .... Sunday, March 26th. C. M. Courier.

Dover, N. H. .... Sunday, March 12th. Geo. W. Brown.

Augusta, Me. .... March 12th. H. B. Sevey.

Norwalk, Ohio, (all day) .... Sabbath, March 19th. J. V. Himes.

Plainville, Ct. .... Sunday, March 12th. O. D. Woodruff.

Warner, N. H., (Schoodoc school-house), March 11th and 12th. John G. Hook.

West Stafford .... March 12th. A. M. Higgins.

South Wolfborough .... March 12th. Nelson Hartshorn.

Carlisle .... Sunday, March 12th
Groton, (where Bro. Putman may appoint), Sunday, March 19th. B. Spaulding.

Warehouse Point, Ct. .... Sunday, March 12th
Agawam, Mass .... Sunday, March 19th
West Stafford, Ct. .... Sunday, March 26th. I. B. Potter.

Exeter, N. H. .... Sunday, March 26th. Thos. M. Luthum.

Bristol, Ct. .... Sunday, March 12th
Vernon, Vt. .... Sundays, March 19th and 26th. L. Boutell.

South Reading, Mass. .... March 12th
Lynn, Mass. .... March 19th and 26th. J. K. Bellows.

Lovely Street, Ct. .... Sunday, March 19th. H. Rockwell.

Worcester, Mass. .... March 12th
London Ridge, N. H. .... March 19th
Lawrence, Mass. .... March 26th. J. Couch.

Canaan, Vt. .... Sunday, March 12th
Woodstock, N. H. .... Wednesday evening, March 15th
Holderness, (Brick school-house), Thursday evening, March 16th.
South Farmington, (school-house near Esq. Ricker's), March 19th. J. Pinkham. J. H. F. Varney.

Hartford, Ct. .... March 12th
Bristol, Ct. .... March 26th
At liberty in April. H. Munger.

Exeter, N. H. .... March 12th. J. G. Smith.

Goshen .... Sundays, March 19th, 26th, and April 2d. H. Pratt.

Newark, N. J. .... March 8th to the 12th. A. Ross.

East Otis, Mass. .... Sunday, March 19th. George L. Teeple.

Concord, N. H. .... March 12th. Israel Damman.

ENGLISH BIBLES FOR SALE.

We can fill no more orders for English Bibles except for the following: Diamond, fine print, marginal references, at the following prices:

Morocco, $1.75; postage 12 cents. Calf, one copy, $1.60; postage 12 cts. Roan, gilt, $1.10; postage 12c. Address Miles Grant, Boston, Mass.

The Great Symbolic Chart of the Times of Daniel and John, in which the most important features of chronological prophecy are made plain upon tables, that he may run that readeth. Sent by express for $1.00.

Business.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

E. Phelps—The first $1.00 for A. A. paid to No. 391; the $2.00, to No. 443; and the last, $2.50, to No. 500, as noted.

J. D. Dunn—Yes. Paid to No. 487.

J. M. Gerrerd—The order was received. Will be filled soon.

R. Benner—Buchanan, Mich.

K. Macomber—Her address is Prairie du Chien, Wis.

Wm. Hayes—Paid to No. 501.

Mrs. L. Irish—Received. Paid to No. 499.

S. F. Mudgett—$1.50 received Nov. 18th.

CASH RECEIPTS FOR THE CRISIS.

To find how your account stands.

The present No. of the Crisis is 492. The No. which follows your name is the No. to which you have paid.

If the No. paid to, is greater than the present No., the difference shows how many weeks you have paid for in advance. If the No. paid to, is less than the present No., the difference shows for how many weeks you owe.

For every week of indebtedness before No. 468, charge (at the old rate) four cents; and, for every week of indebtedness since No. 468, charge (at the new rate) five cents,—and you have the amount due the office. (This, however, will give a trifle more than the amount due. To make it exact, deduct four cents for every dollar due before No. 468, and five cents for every dollar due since No. 468.)

$1.00 each.—J Pulver 502, E Bachelder 512, J Spear 522, C S Bushnell 512, G W Gish 492, R N Orton 513, N Wark 512, F B Tyler 503, L Barber 508, P. E. Armstrong 535, E H Shaw 512, A Hazard 512.

$1.25 each.—D. J. Burditt 513, S. Tibbetts 517, S. A. Munroe 517, E Lee 546, B O Wheeler 517, G W Dickenson 517, J Thomas 517, M A Belding 520, J Mitchell 517, J N Young 517, A. J. Hanson 510, B. O. Emerson 522, J Downing 517, W Pitts 502, Mr. Hill 517, J Moore 517, Mrs. O Wood 517, M A Pierce 535, J M Crosby 517, D B Rogers 520, H F Snow 517.

$1.50 each.—H L Bradley 499, J R Towle 505, J Clay extra copies, L Barber 328, M L Calder 514.

$2.00 each.—O D Eastman 535, E F Eastman 533, H Catton 528, L A Crowninshield 522, J Rowley 511, T. Lee 489, W Hayes 501, J M Jenness 531, S S Murgent 533, H Rowell 528, J Andrews 527, A S Barber 506, B F Wilkins 312, W Morphy 503, J Mathews 494.

$2.50 each.—P Holler 489, I Andrew 534, B S Colby 546, D D Lathrop 543, J A Cole 512, L Leach 541, A W Davenport 544, H Luce 543, E P Atwater 543, A Smith 572, N S Wilbur 543, C H Willey —, H Johnson 543, J G Baker 503, A D Peasley 539, A D Stanwood 527, O Birge 543, J Clay 520, J Tracy 543, G S Gates 520, B. Little 529, L Bramer 543, S Geyer Jr. 543, C Avery 520, E Bolles 547, H P Sikes 520, Miss L Allen 546, J Woodman 536, J L Smith 546, W A Orcutt 479, J Wise 536, E B Boynton 520, T Cheney 543, J M Jenness 531.

$3.00 each.—E Scott 562, Mrs. I N Montague 544, W Gilmore 517, F H Kenney 508, P Keyes 536.

Various Sums.—G. W. White $1.40, 492; W. Loker $5.00, 431; H W Dann $3.90, 534; J Y Briggs 50c, 454; G Chapman $10.20, 541; W Holsinger 40c, 499; J Gerrond $2.95, 549; A Wheeler 65c, 504; Mrs. M A Norton $1.30, 495; M Gilegan 65c, 504; N Danks 62c, 504; R T Merriman 62c, 504.

FOR BOOKS AND TRACTS.

H S Perry 50c, B W Boothby $1.00, A Curtis 60c, A W Davenport $1.50, A. W. Lester $1.00, E. P. Wilkins 25c, J B Cranshaw $1.50, E R Wood $2.00, C W Bemis 50c, J. H. Cotton 50c, A. S. Barber $5.00, J. Whitecar $2.00, M A Pierce $2.00, J M Jenness $2.15, J M Stetler $2.00, H Holden $20.00, G Marsh 2nd, $1.75, W E Brown $1.54, S A Coburn $1.00, J Gerrond $4.05, D B Day $1.20, F H Kenney $2.00, T W Piper $8.32, J M Gernerd 25c, J Spear $2.00, A P Moore $5.00, I. K. Lombard $1.00, J W Wright $1.00, J L Smith $1.00.

BOOKS AND TRACTS SENT.

By Mail.—J L Smith, J M Stetler, E B Coon, H C Hayes, Mrs. O R Baker, S E Teeple, S Gilbert, Mrs. E Hill, M Sheldon, E Thayer, C A Hamilton, E L Burnap, J. E. Ackerman, M. Chickering, Mrs. E. Howard, H. Davis, E Childs, D B Day, C W Bemis, E R Wood, T W Piper, E P Wilkins, J B Cranshaw, W E Brown, A W Davenport, A Curtiss, J Whitecar, I K Lombard, M A. Pierce, S. L. Wells, M. C. Kershaw, M. P. Small, Mrs. M. H. Robinson, M. Parry, Mrs. S. P. Brown, Mrs. J. C. Shorey, Chas. Pettibone, Harvey Pratt, R Woodward, S S Folsom, H Rockwell, Miss L Bandy, B P Braley, L Watrous, H T Mussey, R R King, H W Dann, H S Perry, P B Hoyt, D J Burditt, F H Kenney, G. Nash 2nd, Mrs. B H Boothby, A. W. Lester, J. Gerrond, J H Cotton, J Spear, J W Wright.

By Express.—H. Holden, S. W. Worthington, A. L. Barber, J M Jenness.

LETTERS RECEIVED.

T M Preble, J Taylor, I K Lombard, A. J. Taylor, C. Bunnell, S Elliott, H K Flagg, C Pike, L Boutell, G., S S Brewer, D. G. M., A N Seymour, J C Newhouse, M M Weaver, N Orcutt, H. L. H., W Morphy, M Belding, N Wheeler, M C Rogers.

POST OFFICE ADDRESS.

C. Goodrich—No. 167 Hanover Street, Boston, Mass., until March 18th.

A. Mussey—Plymouth, N. H., care of E. Emery.

John C. Wheeler—Carthage, Me., till April 1st.

Bro. Wm. C. Thurman's address for the present is Boston, Mass., Box 292, care of Miles Grant.

C. H. Leverton—Bath, Me., Box 553.

Mrs. Anna E. Smith—128 East twenty-seventh Street, New York City.

A. W. Sibley—East Boston, Mass.

BOOKS FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

The Emphatic Diaglott: containing the Original Greek Text of the New Testament, according to the Recension of Dr. J. J. Griesbach, with an Interlinear Word-for-Word English Translation, based on the renderings of eminent critics, and on the various readings of the Vatican Manuscript (No. 1209) in the Vatican Library; with Notes, References, and an Appendix. 880pp. 12mo. Price, plain leather, $4.00; extra, gilt, $4.50; Turkey morocco, $5.00. Postage, 16 cents.

The New Testament of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ; with brief Notes and Instructions; containing the references and marginal readings of the Polyglott Bible; also the Psalms, Maps, and Harmony of the Gospels. Published by the American Tract Society. For family use. $1.75; by mail, $1.90.

Dictionary of the Holy Bible, for general use in the study of the Scriptures, with Engravings, Maps, and Tables. Published by the Amer. Tract Society. This is one of the best. Cloth, $1.60; by mail, $1.75. Sheep, $2.00; by mail, $2.25.

Canon of the Holy Scriptures examined in the light of History. By Prof. L. Gaussen, of Geneva, Switzerland. Translated from the French, and abridged by Edward N. Kirk, D. D. $1.75. By mail, $2.00.

Cruden's Complete Concordance to the Holy Scriptures. New and condensed edition. Edited by John Eadie, D. D., L.L.D. Cloth, $1.50; by mail, $1.80. Sheep, 2.00; by mail, $2.30.

Thurman's Bible Chronology, or, The Sealed Book of Daniel Opened. A work for every Bible Student. $1.50; by mail, $1.75.

Why the Shoe Pinches. A useful little work, with cuts, showing the conditions of a healthy foot, the causes of deformities, and how to avoid those troublesome diseases and malformations, such as chilblains, corns, bunions, flat-foot, bent-up toes, grown-in nails, etc. Price, 30 cents.

The Scriptural Question Book. "Sanctify them through thy truth: thy word is truth." A valuable help to Sunday School and family instruction. 127 pp. Price, 15 cts.; postage 4 cts. $1.50 per dozen; postage 8 cts. on every three copies.

The taking of Human Life incompatible with Christianity; with remarks on the present crisis. By T. F. Tukesbury. Price, 8 cts.; postage 2 cts. A tract for the times.

The Syriac New Testament. A literal translation from the Syriac Peshito Version. By James Murdock, D.D. Price $2.50. Postage 36 cts.

Non-Resistance; or, the Spirit of Christianity restored. By W. C. Thurman. Price 20 cts.; postage 4 cts.

Chloe Lankton; or, Light beyond the Clouds. A Story of Real Life. 75 cents. By mail, 87 cts.

Muller's Life of Trust. A Narration of the Lord's dealings with George Muller, written by himself. $1.75; by mail, $2.00.

Diphtheria: its Causes, Treatment, and Cure. By James C. Jackson, M. D. Price, 10 cts.; by mail, 12 cts.

Home Thrusts, and Home Thoughts. The Golden Rule in High Life and Low Life, and in the Family Circle. By D. F. Newton. [illegible]

Louis Napoleon, the Destined Monarch of the World, and Personal Anti-Christ. With seven Diagrams and two Maps. Fourth edition enlarged. By M. Baxter. [illegible]

C. F. HUDSON'S WORKS.

Debt and Grace. Or the Doctrine of a Future Life, by C. F. Hudson. [illegible]

Christ our Life. The Scriptural Argument for Immortality through Christ alone. [illegible]

Human Destiny. A Critique on Universalism. [illegible]

The Doctrine of Endless Misery an occasion of Scepticism. [illegible]

Eternal Death in the literal sense is Eternal Punishment. [illegible]

The Rich Man and Lazarus. With remarks on Josephus. [illegible]

The Rights of Wrong; or, is Evil Eternal? [illegible]

Reviewers Reviewed. New edition with replies to reviewers in the Quarterlies. [illegible]

JACOB BLAIN'S WORKS.

Death not Life; or, The Destruction of the Wicked Scripturally established. [illegible]

Glad Tidings; or, Bible Proof that Woe and Sin are to end in the universe by a literal destruction of wicked men and devils after the day of Judgment. [illegible]

The Wicked not Immortal. Two hundred texts quoted to prove their destruction. [illegible]

Bible Meaning of the Word Hell. 3c.

Endless Misery not a Bible Doctrine. 3c.

Smoke of Torment and Unquenchable Fire Explained. [illegible]

Bible Meaning of Forever and Everlasting. 1c.

Letter of Rev. John Foster on Future Punishment. [illegible]

Likeness of Wm. Miller, suitable for Photographic Albums. Price 25 cts.

BOOKS AND TRACTS.

[illegible]

All orders for any of the following works must be addressed to MILES GRANT, Boston, Mass.

MILES GRANT'S WORKS.

Resurrection of the Wicked. Discussion with Jos. T. Curry. [illegible]

Eternal Suffering. Discussion with Dr. J. Litch. [illegible]

State of the Dead. Discussion with W. W. Clayton, "On the State of the Dead and the Punishment of the Wicked." [illegible]

Miles Grant's Tracts. 32 pages each. Price 5 cents single. [illegible]

What is Man? A Bible view of his creation; The meaning of Soul, Spirit, Death, and Hell.

The Soul, What is it? Or a careful examination of all the uses of the words soul and spirit in the old and new Testaments.

The Spirit, What is it? Or a careful examination of all the uses of the words ruakh and pneuma in the old and new Testaments.

The Rich Man and Lazarus.—Thief on the Cross; Souls under the Altar. [illegible]

EXPOSITORY WORKS ON PROPHECY. BY S. S. BREWER.

1. The Days in which we Live. This is a concise history of the Four Great Monarchies. [illegible]

2. An Exposition of the Seven Seals. [illegible]

3. The Slaying of the Witnesses. Showing that the "Second Woe" ended with the Reign of Terror in France. [illegible]

4. A Treatise on Revelation XIII, in Two Parts. [illegible]

5. The Kingdom of God and Signs of the Times. [illegible]

6. The Last Day Tokens. No. 1. This is an argument based upon Amos 3: 7. [illegible]

7. Last Day Tokens. No. 2 is an answer to the question, "What shall be the Sign of thy coming, and the end of the World?" [illegible]

8. Last Day Tokens. No. 3. This is a phenomenal account, containing a history of the Signs in the Sun, Moon, and Stars. [illegible]

9. The Great Image soon to be dashed to pieces. Price 4 cts., postage 2 cts.

10. The History of an Immortal Soul. Mythology and Theology vs. Bible. [illegible]

11. Rich Man and Lazarus. New edition, revised and enlarged. [illegible]

One copy of each of the above works sent by mail for $1.25.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Cruden's Condensed Concordance, by which any passage of Scripture, of which only a single word is remembered, can at once be found. [illegible]

The Life of Trust. An account of the Lord's Dealings with George Müller, Director of the Orphan House at Bristol, England. [illegible]

A Treatise on the 24th and 25th chapters of Matthew, showing by copious extracts from History, the fulfillment of Christ's Predictions. [illegible] By I. C. Wellcome. [illegible]

Should Christians Fight? A pamphlet on War, embodying the Scripture argument against fighting, and the testimonies of the Primitive Church. By I. C. Wellcome. Price 10c, postage 2c.

The Bible from Heaven, or a dissertation on the Evidences of Christianity. By M. Hall. 25c, postage 6c.

America in Prophecy. Exposition of the 18th chap. of Isaiah, showing its application to the United States of America in the present conflict, and end of the dispensation. By O. R. Fassett. [illegible]

The Celestial Railroad, or Modern Pilgrim's Progress. After the manner of Bunyan. [illegible]

The Three Kingdoms, or the Kingdom of God the Father, the kingdom of Satan, the kingdom of the Lord Jesus Christ. [illegible] By T. M. Preble. [illegible]

The Ten Virgins, or Wisdom and Folly contrasted. By T. M. Preble. [illegible]

The Two Adams. By T. M. Preble. An interesting tract. [illegible]

Messiah's Mission, or an exposition of the Gospel Covenant, as comprehended in the Scriptures of truth. By C. F. Sweet. [illegible]

The Excellency of the Lord's Anointed, or Christ the promised Messiah. By Mrs. Mary A. Seymour. [illegible]

Everybody's Book. The Bible View of the personality of God. The Devil: his origin, personality, power, and doom. By Thomas A. Smith. [illegible]

Cook Book. By Dr. F. W. Hurd. This book gives instructions for preparing all the articles of food used at Dr. Jackson's celebrated health institution, denominated "Our Home," Dansville, N. Y. [illegible]

Premature Decay of American Youth. By Dr. A. Stone. This is a valuable work, and should be read by all the young. [illegible]

The Saint's Harvest, or an exposition of Matt. 24: 14, in connection with Dan. 12: 11-12. By H. K. Flagg. [illegible]

The Old and New Covenant. Superiority of the New. By A. W. Sibley. [illegible]

The Christian Lyre. A collection of Hymns and Tunes for Worship. Price 50 cents; by mail, 55 cents.

A Disquisition on the Prophecies. By F. H. Berick. [illegible]

An Appeal to Pious Trinitarians. By H. Grew. [illegible]

THE BIBLE STUDENT'S LIBRARY.

A Series of Volumes Edited and Published by H. L. HASTINGS, 167 Hanover St., Boston, Mass.

Each vol. contains over 400 pages, uniformly bound in Cloth and in Paper Covers. Sold separately or in sets. Single volumes sent post-paid on receipt of the price.

IMPORTANT BOOKS WORTH BUYING, LENDING, READING, AND PRESERVING.

I. THE SIGNS OF THE TIMES; or, a Glance at Christendom as it is. By H. L. Hastings. Cloth $1; paper 50 cts.

A sad exhibition of the predicted perils of the Last Days; the selfishness, hypocrisy, and crimes of Christendom, as shown in Statistical Accounts of the slave trade, cotton trade, opium trade, Coolie trade, and the licentiousness, illegitimacy, child murder, bloodshed, and military preparations of this age.

II. THE VOICE OF THE CHURCH on the Coming and Kingdom of the Redeemer. By D. T. Taylor. Edited and prefaced by H. L. Hastings. Cloth $1, paper 50 cts.

A history of the doctrine of the reign of Christ on earth, containing the views and testimonies of nearly four hundred of the greatest preachers, reformers, and writers the church has ever known, concerning the establishment of the future glorious Kingdom of God, under the whole heaven.

III. THESSALONICA, OR THE MODEL CHURCH; A Sketch of Primitive Christianity; and REASONS FOR MY HOPE, or the Tokens of Speedy Redemption, by H. L. Hastings; and SPIRITUALISM A SATANIC DELUSION, by Wm. Ramsey, D.D. Cloth $1, paper 50 cts.

"Thessalonica," portraying the faith and practice of the early Christians; "Reasons," exhibiting the hope of the Church, the fulfilment of prophecy, the spread of the gospel through Missionaries, Bible and Tract Societies, etc.; and "Spiritualism," unveiling and exposing the monster delusion of Satan in these latter times.

IV. THE GREAT CONTROVERSY BETWEEN GOD AND MAN; its Origin, Progress, and End; with numerous TRACTS on Prophetical and Practical subjects. By H. L. Hastings. Cloth $1, paper 50 cts.

The "Controversy" sketches the History of the World since man's revolt from God, narrates the judgments already inflicted upon the nations of the earth for their iniquities, and those more terrible and exterminating calamities yet to overwhelm the nations, and prepare the way for the establishment of a divine government upon the earth. The TRACTS are, "The Church not in Darkness," "The Three Worlds," "The Last Days," "Plain Truths," "Ancient Landmarks," "Important Questions," "Olive Leaves," etc. etc.; a valuable and spirited collection.

V. FUTURE PUNISHMENT, as Taught in the Scriptures; with the various Doctrines of Men upon this subject. By H. L. Hastings. Cloth $1, paper 50 cts.

Containing "Pauline Theology," or Future Punishment as Taught by Paul; "The Old Paths," or the Doctrines of the Apostolical Fathers; "Retribution," or the Resurrection and Punishment of the Wicked; "Will all Men be Saved?" an Antidote for Universalism; "The Destiny of the Wicked," a Scripture Tract; "The Decrees of Popes and Councils on the Immortality of the Soul;" with the Views of Justin Martyr, Luther, Jeremy Taylor, Milton, and Bishop Law on the state of the dead, etc.

CASH PRICES.

By Mail: 1 Book, cloth $1.00, paper 50 cts.; 5 Books, cloth $5.00, paper 2.50. By Express: 5 Books, cloth $4.00, paper 2.00; 20 Books, cloth $11.00, paper $7.50; 50 Books, cloth $35, paper $16; 100 Books, cloth $65, paper $30.

☞ 3 Books, paper, sent to any three ministers for $1.

SEPARATE PAMPHLETS NOT BOUND IN CLOTH.

1. THESSALONICA, or the Model Church, 25 cts. 2. THE GREAT CONTROVERSY, 25 cts. 3. REASONS FOR MY HOPE, 20 cts. 4. SPIRITUALISM, 20 cts. 5. Looking Forward, 10 cts. 6. SOCIAL HYMNS, original and selected. By H. L. H. 15 cts. single; $1 for 8 copies; $10 for 100 copies by mail—post paid to any address.

7. RETRIBUTION; or the Doom of the Ungodly, 20 cts. PAULINE THEOLOGY, 10 cts. 9. THE OLD PATHS, 10 cts. TRACTS PRACTICAL and SCRIPTURAL in great variety. [illegible] Tracts and pamphlets free to the poor and to ministers. [illegible]

Direct all orders, with the writing, and plain directions, for sending the books, to H. L. HASTINGS, 167 Hanover St., Boston. June, 1864.

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

For the World's Crisis.

THE INAUGURATION BALL.

There is a [illegible] in the land,
Of widows' wails, and helpless orphans' cries;
Death's angel has stretched forth his blighting hand,
And dead the first born of the nation lies.
[illegible] which does not feel its scourge?
Where is a heart that mourns no loved ones slain?
Each breeze that passes bears anew the dirge
Of others gone to swell war's funeral train.
And graves are thickly strewn o'er southern soil,
Columbia's noble sons lie buried there;
And through the land the raging voice of war
Demands new victims for its altar's fire.
Such is the penalty, when man will hold
His fellow man in bonds of slavery;
Thousands of lives, and misery untold,
Must mark the time which bids the bound go free.
What sound comes from our nation's Capitol!
Is it of mourning for the noble slain?
Of pity for the wounded, dying ones,
Who lie in nameless agony and pain?
No; 'tis a sound of revelry, as when
At Waterloo were gathered "brave and fair";
They wept not for the dead and dying then,
Less are they objects of our ruler's care.
'Tis the Inauguration Day, and lo!
Shall they be humbled and bow meek in prayer?
"On with the dance" (on with Belshazzar's feast!
No thought of suffering their mirth must mar.
Oh! reckless, sinful deeds, when those who rule
Our land in times when all is deep distress,
Thus mock the hearts which feel such crushing woes,
And spread, 'mid dying groans, their impious feast.
Oh! ye who thus insult our mourning land,
Go look on all the reeking battle fields,
Where crimson rivers wash the burning sand;
What themes for merriment such places yield!
Go see the home where lately peace and joy [illegible]
And love smiled on their inmates [illegible]
With war [illegible] How wasted now!
[illegible] death, all pleasure to destroy,
And laid his seal on every manly brow.
Then stay in time your scenes of sinful mirth;
Let not your pleasures be the nation's shame;
List what the voice of prophecy sends forth!
The time is near when earthly rule shall wane;
Christ's glorious kingdom soon shall come on earth;
Then war and slavery shall pass away,
And then the last of enemies—pale death—
Be slain, and Christ our King himself bear sway.

Jonesboro, Ill. CATHARINE STRAUSS.

For the World's Crisis

ANOTHER VOICE FROM CELESTA.

BRO. GRANT:—I regret that an article from my pen appears in the Day Star, which, I fear, may influence some to go to Celesta, Pa. I had not discovered the "cloven foot" until the type was set up, and the paper about ready to be struck off; and, as I learn by Peter Armstrong's correspondence, that some are still being deceived by him, I feel it a duty I owe to the brethren, and to my own conscience, to make a few statements of facts through the Crisis, with your permission; hoping thereby to save some from the trouble and expense of selling out and going there, only to be sadly disappointed.

Peter has been very careful not to publish the whole truth; but what he thought would not be palatable, he has kept back; and all who have gone there, have discovered this to their sorrow. Furthermore, he has highly colored much that is published. This is the way he has succeeded in deceiving as many as he has; but I trust that spell-bound brethren will soon be at liberty again.

Peter claims to be following Muller's plan of "trust in God." Now let us see how well he has done it thus far. His second son, who had learned to publish the paper, finding it more than his conscience could bear, to carry the deception any farther, finally refused to have anything more to do with it; so Peter took "the Lord's money," went out into "Babylon," and hired one of her subjects to come and help the so-called "Head of the Church of the First-born" to get out one more number of "Zion's sheets!" Peter's oldest son told me that, before his father went into this movement, "he was out of debt; but now he is owing some $700." Is this the way to trust in God!" In the fourth number of the Day Star is the following NOTICE:

"All persons who wrote for us to send them the Day Star, expecting it free, and have not responded since its issue, may consider this their last number; unless we are notified the paper is appreciated. We do not feel called on to publish a sheet for waste paper, while there are hundreds of others who cannot be supplied."

What would a sane person think of a "free paper" that required a letter of appreciation after the issue of each number? I know that Peter has got hundreds of copies,—back numbers,—lying on the shelves, useless for want of readers. Then why does he say "there are hundreds of others who cannot be supplied"? Being acquainted with its author, this "Notice" teaches me that he wants his subscribers to pay for his "free' paper" in advance, or go without it. Can you see as much "trust in God" in this as he manifests in his poetry? Is he as free to "cast bread upon the waters" as he pretends? Peter gave a cordial invitation to the Lord's poor; but we know now, that he does not want any of that class, unless their labor is profitable to the place. He said he would not encourage any more poor people to come. (They may be discouraged by letter, while the invitation still holds its place in the paper. This is one of Peter's vails). Finding this bait did not attract the right class, he has put on what he calls "independent common interest," which, like cold hot water, is a contradiction of terms. The hook is visible still. Peter must exchange his worthless scrip for such money as the brethren bring in; then, after paying his debts, fill the store with just such things as he sees fit, set his own prices, set the wages, and, in fact, "lord it over God's heritage."

Peter has a strong antipathy against "Thurman's Chronology," and he now manifests as much indignation to one who speaks in its favor, as a Catholic priest would to a "heretic." Surely, has God chosen a man of such unwarrantable eccentricities to be sole dictator, both of temporal and spiritual matters?

Peter says his "independent common interest" appears to meet the concurrence of all here." Not so. There was not one, beside himself, who fully approved of it. I said to him, "You would not submit to the will of the majority of the brethren, and have it so understood in the paper, would you?" He said, "No."

Peter says, "If the Lord suffers the work to be broken up, I am willing; it will save me much trouble," etc. At the same time he is very fearful that it will be broken up; so much so that he sometimes carefully approaches his neighbors' doors to listen to the conversation within. How different this, from confiding faith!

Peter has been filling his papers with old letters of correspondents, to make it appear that the work is still going on vigorously; but when those old letters are used up, he will probably have to diminish the size of "Zion's sheet."

Peter says of every one who came to Celesta, and went away again, "their work did not amount to anything," though they worked ever so hard. The fact is, Peter has been confined in a city store until about seven years ago. He partakes largely of the sedentary nature, and therefore knows but very little of manual labor of any kind, except digging; and he is indebted to his ancestry for the greater share of that. Peter said he would rather let me have my money back again, and give me lumber enough to build a house, than to let me go away; but it was no inducement. It reminded me of the Devil's offer to Jesus on the mountain, (Matt. 4: 8, 9).—"All these kingdoms . . . will I give thee, if thou wilt fall down and worship me." The Sullivan County officers believe Peter is a monomaniac. Now, if wealthy men would go to Celesta and invest their property in improvements there, and should not accede to his notions, he could find a way to get them off, by going to those officers and acknowledging that he was under a state of fanaticism when he deeded the land to the Lord, but now had come to his right mind, and was ready and willing to pay his share of the taxes, and requesting them to cancel the deed, which, I think, they would readily do.

The county commissioners told the collecters they should look to him for the taxes of Celesta. The collector said he should collect the taxes if there was not a miracle wrought. It will probably be done soon. The duplicate holds good two years. One year is now past.

As to the conscription of Peter's oldest son, it is simply like this: Peter requested two weeks' furlough for him, and got it. The furlough run out on Sunday, but he did not report; so he stands as a deserter still; but Peter claims it was given to run out that day, to let him know that he need not report at all. Query: If the Administration can, with impunity, continue the war on Sunday, why may not they receive men on that day? Peter's petition to the Legislature;—I am creditably informed that it was laid on the table, and in all probabilities, finally rejected. So Celesta is not "cut out of the Mountain yet." Peter claims that many will come next spring and build houses, mills, factories, etc.; but he is selling off the lumber into "Babylon;" and if they do, they will have to build out of green saw-logs.

Peter says his object in publishing the Day Star is to raise a standard of faith to unite the church and prepare a bride for the coming of the Lord. Thus far it is an entire failure. At the time I came from Celesta, (Feb. 7), there was not one united with him in the work, although some twenty-four professed Christians have been there and unanimously condemned the work. Only four of them were left when I came away. But Peter still says, "I cannot give up till God condemns."

Peter appears to think much about money and about getting rich; so much so that he dreams about it nights. Peter has been trying to invent a perpetual motion. He may pretend to have accomplished it, so as to have a new inducement to attract the people. Peter promised to let his readers know, through the next number of the Day Star, that I have gone from Celesta, and also give the reasons. His readers will please look for it. Some call Peter "Eld. Armstrong;" but he is not an elder, any more than any ordinary person of similar age. God says, "I will overturn, overturn, overturn it: [the kingdom of Israel]: and it shall be no more, UNTIL HE come whose right it is; and I will give it him." Not to P. E. Armstrong, a few years before "he comes." (Ez. 21: 27).

Those who still think of going to Celesta, would do well to address me, enclosing a stamp for reply, giving post-office address in a plain hand. I can give them such a vivid description of real life there, as to make even an experimental visit unnecessary. I have nothing to say, however, to those who have decided to go, let the consequences be what they may; except this; if you are heads of families, leave them in comfortable circumstances, while you go and see for yourselves. For the benefit of those who are not personally acquainted with me, and who wish to know what my reputation is, I offer the following references: Hon. Geo. Landon, Capt. I. A. Parks, Herrickville, Brad. Co., Pa.; E. N. Keeler, Linden Fletcher, Le Raysville, Brad. Co., Pa.; R. L. Sutphin & Co., O. M. Hall, New Milford, Susq. Co., Pa.; Mrs. Mary Heaton, care of E. S. Willard, Hammonton, N. J.; Eld. C. F. Sweet, Albion, N. Y.; Peter E. Armstrong, Eaglesmere, Sullivan Co., Pa.

Yours, in hope of the glorious appearing of the great God, and our Savior Jesus Christ.

D. D. LATHROP.

New Milford, Susq. Co., Pa.

[Advent exchanges please copy.

P. S. Since my eyes are opened to see the deceptions in Celesta, I now see that what I wrote in the Day Star concerning D. Edson Smith, should not have been written. I wish publicly to take it back. May he and the Lord forgive. And may he "who knoweth the thoughts and intents of every heart, preserve us blameless unto his coming and kingdom.

D. D. L.

For the World's Crisis.

THE "ANGELS THAT STEAL BABIES."

A picture pedlar called on an Advent preacher in Wisconsin, wishing the opportunity of showing his stock of pictures, hoping thereby to induce him to purchase. This was granted. Soon a weeping mother was exhibited, seated by her dead babe. A little above this scene of death and weeping, there was an indistinct outline of an angel flying away with a babe in its arms. The minister, pointing to the angel, inquired:

"What's that?"

The pedlar replied,—"That's an angel."

"But what is that which he is lugging off?"

"That's the baby."

"Well, I don't like angels that steal babies."

A few thoughts are called forth. Where has God's word mentioned such a thing as angels being sent to carry off children from fond parents, and leave them immersed in a flood of grief? And when called upon to weep over the ravages of death, where has God ever consoled them with the thought that angels had carried them up into the skies? Where has God ever tried to cheer them with the idea that the angels would sometime bring them back, or carry them off to the same region to see them?

This idea that angels are now engaged in the work of gathering the elect, is in opposition to the teaching of Christ, who affirmed,—"They shall see the Son of man coming in the clouds of heaven, with power and great glory. And he shall send his angels with the great sound of a trumpet, and they shall gather together his elect from the four winds, from one end of heaven to the other."—Matt. 24: 30, 31. This gives the time when the angels are to do their work of gathering, namely, when the Savior comes in his glory in the clouds of heaven, in connection with a "great sound of a trumpet." No other gathering time can be pointed to in all the Bible, except in that one parable, and a parable is always one thing to represent another.

Repeatedly does the Savior mention the time when angels are to gather the redeemed, and always places it at the winding up of this age. But modern theology contradicts him. "They shall come again from the land of the enemy," is the kind of consolation dealt out to weeping parents, in the Bible, instead of telling them the angels have carried them away to a distant realm.

"Thy brother shall rise again," was the sweet consolation dealt out to weeping relatives, upon the death of an adult, by the sympathising Savior, instead of telling them that bright angels had carried him home. Now if the angels get either the children or adults before the appointed time, then heaven's appointment is a failure, being superseded by a different arrangement.

No; the angels do no such thing as to "lug off" our friends when they die, but we put them into the cold bed of death, from which they will be called by the resurrection trump, at which time the angels will escort them to meet the Savior in the air. W. SHELDON.

THE DECREE OF CYRUS.

Our readers will be deeply interested in reading the following extract from Josephus. (Antiquities, B., 11, c. 1). We have here the exact fulfillment of Isaiah's prophecy; (44: 28, and 45: 13) and from the destruction of Jerusalem by Nebuchadnezzar, to its destruction by Titus, no other "commandment to restore and build Jerusalem," can be found in history either sacred or profane. The subsequent commandments relating to the work on the temple, and the building of the wall of the city were but confirmations of the original decree.

The mere fact that GOD said "of Cyrus, HE shall build my city, and let go my captives," ought to be sufficient to convince every child of God that Cyrus did do this work, whether history recorded the action or not. But here we have history confirming, as it always does, the truth of God's prophetic word.

The same Cyrus who was to "let go the captives," and "say to the temple, Thy foundation shall be laid, "was also to say "to Jerusalem, Thou shalt be built." No one has ever dared to dispute that Cyrus gave commandment, in his first year, for the restoration of the Jews to their own land, and for the rebuilding of the temple. Why, then, when two parts of the prophecy were so plainly fulfilled by Cyrus, was it ever doubted that he fulfilled the third position also, and gave the commandment to restore and build Jerusalem?" It was doubted because men saw no other way to save the credit of the Scriptures of truth. A system of chronology founded on astronomy, and astronomy alone, was brought forward and to meet the demands of this system the prophecies of Isaiah and Daniel were explained away. Science and the Bible met, and the Bible went to the wall—but only for a time. Its truth was yet to be vindicated.

But at last some dared to doubt that the celestial bodies placed by God in the heavens "for signs and seasons" could contradict the Word of God. Doubt led to investigation; and investigation showed that both the Bible and astronomy were true, and that it was the astronomer who was in error. Thank God for this vindication of his word! Hitherto we stood upon a system of chronology founded on astronomy alone, contradictory to both prophecy and history: now we stand on Bible Chronology, confirmedly,—mark it, CONFIRMED, not founded upon—astronomy and history. Thank God, again, for light! And we shall have it brighter and clearer until the perfect day shall reveal him who will come and will not tarry.

It is wonderful how God's word vindicates itself against all the "oppositions of science falsely so called." The wise of the world bring forward their scientific facts to oppose the Bible, and, too often, the christian, appalled, endeavors to explain away his Bible to harmonize it with the supposed immutable laws of science. But time rolls on; additional discoveries are made, and sooner or later it is discovered that the Bible was right all the time, and there was no necessity to amend it: all that was wanting was a better understanding of the only apparently opposing science. Thus it will be to the end; and at the last, the glorious word of God will be vindicated in the consummation of "that blessed hope, and the glorious appearing of our Lord Jesus Christ."

Let us now turn to

THE DECREE, AND ITS HISTORY.

In the first year of the reign of Cyrus, which was the seventieth from the day that our people were removed out of their own land into Babylon, God commisserated the captivity and calamity of these poor people, according as he had foretold to them by Jeremiah, the prophet, before the destruction of the city, that after they had served Nebuchadnezzar and his posterity, and after they had undergone that servitude seventy years, he would restore them again to the land of their fathers, and they should build their temple, and enjoy their ancient prosperity. And these things God did afford them; for he stirred up the mind of Cyrus, and made him write this throughout all Asia: "Thus saith Cyrus the king: since God Almighty hath appointed me to be king of the habitable earth, I believe that he is that God which the nation of the Israelites worship; for indeed he foretold my name by the prophets, and that I should build him a house at Jerusalem, in the country of Judea."

This was known to Cyrus by his reading the book which Isaiah left behind him of his prophecies; for this prophet said that God had spoken thus to him in a secret vision: "My will is, that Cyrus, whom I have appointed to be king over many and great nations, send back my people to their own land, and build my temple." This was foretold by Isaiah one hundred and forty years before the temple was demolished. Accordingly, when Cyrus read this, and admired the divine power, an earnest desire and ambition seized upon him to fulfill what was so written; so he called for the most eminent Jews that were in Babylon, and said to them, that he gave them leave to go back to their own country; and to rebuild their city Jerusalem, and the temple of God, for that he would be their assistant, and that he would write to the rulers and governors that were in the neighborhood of their country of Judea, that they should contribute to them gold and silver for the building of the temple, and besides that, beasts for their sacrifices.

When Cyrus had said this to the Israelites, the rulers of the two tribes of Judah and Benjamin, with the Levites and priests, went in haste to Jerusalem; yet did many of them stay at Babylon, as not willing to leave their possessions; and when they come thither, all the king's friends assisted them, and brought in, for the building of the temple, some gold, and some silver, and some a great many cattle and horses. So they performed their vows to God, and offered the sacrifices that had been accustomed of old time; I mean this upon the rebuilding of their city, and the revival of the ancient practices relating to their worship. Cyrus also sent back to them the vessels of God which king Nebuchadnezzar had pillaged out of the temple, and had carried to Babylon. So he committed these things to Mithridates, the treasurer, to be sent away, with an order to give them to Sanabassar, that he might keep them till the temple was built; and when it was finished, he might deliver them to the priests and rulers of the multitude in order to their being restored to the temple. Cyrus also sent an epistle to the governors that were in Syria, the contents whereof here follow:

"KING CYRUS TO SISINNES AND SATHRABUZANES, SENDETH GREETING.

"I have given leave to as many of the Jews that dwell in my country as please to return to their own country, and to rebuild their city, and to build the temple of God at Jerusalem on the same place where it was before. I have also sent my treasurer Mithridates, and Zorobabel, the governor of the Jews, that they may lay the foundations of the temple, and may build it sixty cubits high, and of the same latitude, making three edifices of polished stones, and one of the wood of the country, and the same order extends to the altar whereon they offer sacrifices to God. I require also that the expenses for these things may be given out of my revenues. Moreover, I have also sent the vessels which king Nebuchadnezzar pillaged out of the temple, and have given them to Mithridates the treasurer, and to Zorobabel the governor of the Jews, that they may have them carried to Jerusalem, and may restore them to the temple of God. I permit them to have the same honor which they were used to have from their forefathers, as also for their small cattle, and for wine and oil, two hundred and five thousand and five hundred drachmæ; and for wheat flour, twenty thousand and five hundred artabæ; and I give order that these expenses shall be given them out of the tributes due from Samaria. The priests shall also offer these sacrifices according to the laws of Moses in Jerusalem; and when they offer them, they shall pray to God for the preservation of the king and of his family, that the kingdom of Persia may continue. But my will is, that those who disobey these injunctions, and make them void, shall be hung upon a cross, and their substance brought into the king's treasury."

And such was the import of this epistle. Now the number of those that came out of captivity to Jerusalem, were forty-two thousand four hundred and sixty-two.—Voice of the West.

For the World's Crisis.

IN THE FURNACE.

Written during a Season of Severe Affliction in Oct. 1864.

BY HUMANITAS.

"He shall sit as a refiner, and purifier of silver."—THE PROPHET.

Grateful, dear Savior, would we be,
When through some fiery trial brought,
That Thou wast seated near, to see
The furnace was not made too hot.
Oft of Thy mercy would we think,
Which kept us in the raging flame;
And when we seemed upon the brink
Of ruin, to the rescue came.
Thy name would we forever praise,
That Thou didst not forsake us there;
But turned us from sin and devious ways,
To greater watchfulness and prayer.
In this Thy purpose may we see,
To bring and keep us "nearer Thee."

Boston, March 1st, 1865.

THE PENALTY OF THE LAW OF GOD.

NUMBER TWO.

II. The penalty of the law of God for personal transgression.

It cannot be what is denominated the first death, for the following reasons, to wit:

1. All men (unless exempted by a miracle) die the first death, whether they transgress or not.

2. Christians, whose sins have been pardoned, die the first death, just as truly as do the most abandoned sinners. If a man is condemned to be hung, and the executive should grant him pardon, would he be executed? Certainly not! Will God pardon the sinner, and then execute the penalty of his law for the very transgression thus pardoned? This would outrage every principle of justice or law.

3. Christians whose sins have been forgiven, and infants which have never committed sin, are innocent before God; and yet they suffer the first death just as much as the most guilty, and the most incorrigible sinners do. Can God in justice punish the innocent with the guilty for the same transgression?

But here some object, and boldly affirm that death is not the penalty, but the remaining dead eternally.

I would object to the objection for the following reasons, viz:

1. All the heathen who have never heard the word of the kingdom, and who never having had the law of God, never have or could transgress it, suffer the same penalty. They remain dead. I can give abundance of plain Scripture to prove the non-resurrection of the heathen-world; without one text of Scripture which intimates that they shall ever live again. Where there is no law, there is no transgression. The heathen have no means of knowing the law of God; they are, therefore, no more responsible for its requirements, than though God had no law. To them, therefore, God has no law; consequently there can be no transgression of that law. How, then, can they be obnoxious to its penalty? They cannot, any more than are the inhabitants of the South Sea Islands amenable to the laws of these United States. Can God in justice inflict the same penalty upon the heathen (who can be no more responsible for the existence, or claims of the law of God, than the beasts of the field) which he will inflict upon those who have wilfully and wickedly transgressed law? This would prove that the Judge of all the earth will not do right.

2. The Bible nowhere affirms such to be the penalty of the law of God. But in contradistinction to a definition of the penalty of God's law, evidently constructed to meet the imperious demands of a preconceived opinion, the Bible affirms in every book and by every writer, that death is the penalty for the personal transgression of God's law. I will enumerate a few of the many texts to which I might refer the reader. Hear the unequivocal testimony of Ezekiel 18: 4, 20.—"Behold all souls are mine as the soul of the father, so also the soul of the son is mine; the soul that sinneth it shall die."

In these texts it is positively affirmed that "to-die" is the penalty for sinning. The law simply declares the "soul shall die." When the soul that sinneth shall have died the death threatened in this penalty, he will have answered the demands of the law.

That the death here threatened is not the first death, is evident.

1. From the fact that young and old, good and bad, die the first death, whether they sin or not.

2. That the Prophet does not refer to the first death is evident from the fact that the life placed in antithesis with the death threatened, may be forfeited by apostatizing from the truth; and the death threatened may be averted by turning from sin, and becoming obedient. For proof please read the following verses: "But if the wicked will turn from all his sins that he hath committed, and keep all my statutes, and do that which is lawful and right, he shall surely live, he shall not die. Have I any pleasure at all that the wicked should die? saith the Lord God; and not that he should return from his ways and live. But, when the righteous turneth away from his righteousness, and committeth iniquity . . . shall he live? All his righteousness that he hath done shall not be mentioned; in his trespass that he hath trespassed, and in his sin that he hath sinned, in them shall he die. For I have no pleasure in the death of him that dieth. Saith the Lord God: wherefore turn yourselves, and live ye. Say unto them, as I live saith the Lord God, I have no pleasure in the death of the wicked, but that the wicked turn from his way and live; turn ye, turn ye, from your evil ways; for why will ye die, O house of Israel?"—Ezek. 18: 21, 23, 24, 32. Ezek. 33: 11. Please read also from the 13th to the 20th verses of the last chapter referred to, for more testimony of the same import. But as far as the first life or death is concerned, neither the one may be perpetuated, or the other averted by obedience or disobedience. When the Son of God would place the reward and penalty of obedience and disobedience in antithesis the one to the other, he represents one as gaining life, and the other as losing it.—Matt. 16: 25. For a man to lose his life is to die. When he ceases to live his life is lost, and when his life is lost he is dead. Paul also places life and death in contrast as the future reward and penalty of the law of Christ.—Rom. 8: 13. "For if ye live after the flesh, ye shall die; but if ye through the Spirit do mortify the deeds of the body; ye shall live. Here it is simply affirmed that the sinner shall die, not that he shall remain eternally dead. But without a resurrection he would of necessity remain dead forever. The opposite would be equally true of the righteous, when made alive, unless they should die again they would live forever.

Again, Paul says, "for the wages of sin is death," then when the sinner is dead, he has paid the wages.

The law would then be fully satisfied. If subsequently to this full and complete payment of the sinners' wages, God should choose to raise him from the dead, the law would have no further claims upon him as far as the transgression for which he had died, should be concerned; nor could the death penalty be justly inflicted a second time in such case; for that would be punishing the criminal twice for the same offence, a thing unheard of for cruelty in criminal jurisprudence. James says, that "sin when finished bringeth forth death."—James 1: 15.

But at this point the objector may urge the following objection, viz: that other terms expressive of the nature of the penalty represent it as being everlasting in duration. Such as everlasting punishment.—Matt. 25: 46. "Everlasting destruction."

ANS.—The punishment would not be everlasting because the process of punishment will be eternally going on; but because the the issue of the punishment will be final and irrevocable. In this light we believe the judgment and salvation will be eternal.—Heb. 5: 9. Heb. 6: 2. Not that the process of judging and saving men will be going on eternally. This would prove endless probation. It will be eternal punishment and destruction, not because God will be destroying and punishing men eternally, but because the issues of the punishment will be final and irrevocable. If the penalty is death, then to be eternal in any other sense than that above named, the sinner must be eternally dying and never dead; for dying is the process of inflicting death. When a man is dead, he has suffered the death penalty; but while dying he is suffering it. Hence the idea of endless misery (the death that never dies,) is an essential element of eternal punishment, as urged by the objector. If the sinner should never be raised from the dead, then eternal death would be the result, not the penalty expressed by the word death. The term, eternal death, is not between the two lids of the Bible.—Harbinger.

HOME.—The road to home happiness lies over small stepping-stones. Slight circumstances are the stumbling-blocks of families. The prick of a pin, says the proverb, is enough to make an empire insipid. The tenderer the feelings, the more painful the wound. A cold, unkind word checks and withers the blossom of the dearest love, as the most delicate rings of the vine are troubled by the faintest breeze. The misery of a life is born of a chance observation. If the true history of quarrels, public and private, were honestly written, it would be silenced by an uproar of derision.

Hygiene.

"This is for your health."—Paul.

For the World's Crisis.

HYGIENE.—NO. 6.

BY IRA A. THAYER, M. D.

EXCESSIVE EXERTION

May be enumerated as a cause of vital depression. The Yankee nation are proverbial for both physical and mental exertion. As a people we over-work. If not behind the plow, in the shop, the counting-room, or the office, it is at some other employment, either legitimate, or otherwise. We are always doing something. The great love of money and fame is ever pushing us on to untiring efforts. From early morn till the sound of the midnight bell, there is a constant stretch of nerve and muscle. Not a day passes, not an hour escapes, but it is employed, either in procuring a sustenance by honest means, or planning to rob our neighbor of his just dues. While one class is struggling to obtain a meagre living for their families, another is devoting the dark hours of midnight to squandering his ill-gotten means. There is no rest. The glittering allurements of the world are constantly urging us to excessive exertion.

The result of this continued stretch of nerve and muscle is an exhausted and effeminate race. Injury from over taxation of the physical powers comes, not so much from continued hard work, as from irregularity in labor, and from exposures. The custom of laboring beyond what the system will allow to be continued, and then ceasing for a time, deranges the system infinitely more than it would to occupy the whole time in accomplishing the same amount of business. There is nothing gained by crowding the system beyond its natural powers of endurance. On the contrary, much is lost; for by this over-exertion the vigor is broken down, the constitution is undermined, and life is curtailed; so that we fail to accomplish the amount which our systems are well calculated to perform, if properly managed, and break down at middle age, leaving half our work undone.

Regularity is of great importance in exercising the physical or mental forces. There should be a certain amount of exertion put forth each day, and at certain periods of the day. The greatest amount of labor is accomplished by a moderate but regular exertion; at no time crowding the former beyond its natural capacity.

But I would call your attention more particularly to excessive mental exertion. What I have said respecting physical, is equally true of mental labor—excess produces debility. Let me say to the ambitious student, beware, lest in your anxiety you undermine your constitution, and, ere graduating day arrives, you find yourself a nervous wreck, unfit for a life of usefulness, a burden to yourself, and a disappointment to your friends. Six hours a day of severe mental exertion, and four of physical labor, is all that the most robust constitution can endure and enjoy good health. And a person of a delicate constitution, and a nervous temperament, should not keep the mind under severe exertion more than three or four hours a day. When the mind becomes accustomed to labor, more can be accomplished in four hours than in ten, provided the remaining time is occupied in moderate physical exercise.

One of the most talented speakers and writers that this country can boast of left home without money, at about the age of twenty, working his way to college, and through it, graduating with the highest honors which Amherst college can confer. He occupied no more time in completing his course than those who performed no labor. While there, he made a living by sawing and carrying wood to the rooms of the sickly, lazy students. He came from college with the contents of his numerous studies indelibly stamped upon his memory, his mind sound and clear, and with a constitutional vigor sufficient to meet all the various duties which would devolve upon him.

Our educational system is very defective, especially the collegiate. It destroys more talent by weakening the body, than it develops by study. The Romans named their schools "Gymnasia," from the physical exercises, which formed a leading feature. Our schools and colleges will be radically defective until remodeled upon the basis of health as a means of learning and talent. Civilization is becoming decidedly too "fast" to acquire any great degree of strength and talent. It would be well for us to go back a few centuries, and there learn the fundamental laws of education. I would particularly warn parents and guardians against the common custom of sending children to school at too early an age. In my opinion, no child should attend our common schools until it has arrived at the age of ten or twelve years. The manner in which our common schools are conducted render them a perfect nuisance to the younger classes. There are many children who manifest a strong mental development at a very early age, who are unnaturally smart, and apt to learn. The fond parent, anxious to advance the child as fast as possible, sends it off to school and there keeps it until its little system is utterly ruined, and death marks it as its victim. Thousands are thus sacrificed to pride and ignorance. Fond parent, have you such a precocious youth, and are you desirous of making it a bright example of moral and intellectual worth? Keep it from school and study until it has acquired a robust physical system. The garden, the cornfield, and the grove are its best school-rooms. First educate its physical system, then you have a foundation for its mental growth. Crowd its mind before this, and you crowd your darling child into a premature grave.

There is another variety of mental exertion to which I would call your attention, as being a cause of disease, of much more importance than is generally supposed. I refer to mental agitation, produced by disappointments, bankruptcy, wickedness, etc. A continued fretting and chafing of the feelings depresses vital action, from nervous exhaustion. It is a well-established fact that will be recognized by all observers, that any thing which produces a cheerful, happy state of the mind, conduces to health, and vice versa. Now, the connection between mind and body is so close, that whatever produces disease in one, produces it in the other; or a disease in one produces it in the other. Hence the immediate cause of disease in one is, at least, a remote cause of disease in the other. Disease I defined to be any deviation from the natural physiological condition. Now, I claim the natural function of the brain is to manifest a healthy, righteous action of mind and feeling. Hence wickedness is the result of mental disease, and as such is the cause of many physical derangements. Besides, the agitation of mind which a guilty conscience produces, operates as a direct cause of nervous disease, and a long catalogue of physical ailments peculiar to the vicious.

DEFICIENT EXERCISE

is productive of muscular weakness and general debility. Were you to suspend your arm in a sling for a number of months, upon removing it you would discover that it was much weaker than the one which had been exercised moderately for the same time. The same effect is produced upon the whole muscular system, by general inactivity. Again, the blood is not enabled to expel the impurities from the blood, which is accomplished by an active circulation induced by exersise. When a reasonable amount of exercise is taken regularly, an increased flow of blood to the part is produced, which removes the inert matter, and supplies an increase of nutriment. This increases the size, strength and tenacity of the organ.

Intellectual inactivity produces the same effect upon the brain and mental manifestations. The most talented men of this, or any other country, are men who have educated themselves by their own industry. Men who prosecute their studies while pursuing a laborious occupation, are those who acquire the finest talents and the most valuable knowledge. Studying gives a relish for muscular exercise, and labor again gives an appetite for study; and while laboring, the matter previously read is more thoroughly digested. Thus, a proper equilibrium is maintained between mind and body, the health of each is promoted, and the acquisition of knowledge is forwarded.

Bristolville, O., Jan., 1865.

BAKING PANS FOR UNLEAVENED BREAD.

As many of our readers are becoming interested in the reform diet, and feel that it is high time to think about eating and drinking to the glory of the Lord, if they would enjoy perfect physical and spiritual health; and have found that unleavened Graham bread is the best that can be made, when prepared in the right manner, we would take this opportunity to give them some information concerning the best pans for baking the bread. Various patterns have been in use, made of tin, sheet, and cast iron. We have made many experiments with these various kinds of pans in the past six years that we have used the unleavened Graham bread, and found none so good as a kind made in Providence, R. I. for baking French rolls, till we saw a similar pattern last week made by "Ford & Co," Concord, N. H., which we most heartily recommend to all who can obtain them. They are cast iron, having twelve cups in each pan, each of which holds enough for a common doughnut. With these pans, good Graham meal, soft water, and a hot oven, can be made the best bread we ever tasted.

We will now tell all how to make it in connection with these baking pans. Put your baking pan in the oven, when you make a fire in the morning, and when the oven and pan are hot enough for baking, take some good Graham meal, coarsely ground, unsifted, (the white winter wheat makes the best Graham meal) wet it up in cold water, thin enough for griddle cakes, then take your baking pan out of the oven, set it on top of the stove, grease the cups a little to prevent the batter from sticking, and then fill the cups in the pan nearly full, and let the pan stand on top of the stove, where it is hot, for about five minutes, then put it back into the oven, which should be a very hot one, and let the bread bake from twenty to thirty minutes. The quicker they are baked the better.

White flour may be made into biscuit in the same way, and will be much nicer than any soda biscuit that can be made. If you wish to have the bread extra nice, put in a little milk when you wet it up.

It will not hurt one to eat the unleavened Graham bread warm; but it is not so with that made of white flour. When the unleavleavened Graham bread is cold, dip it in cold water, put it in the oven and warm it through, and it is as nice as when first made, though it may have been baked several days.

It is truthfully said we think, that there is no other article of food that will give one such power of endurance as the unleavened bread first described. We have scarcely tasted any other for the past six years, and know from happy experience, that it is truly "the staff of life."—EDITOR.

TOE NAILS.—In answer to the inquiry for a remedy for toe nails growing in at the corners, we have received several from different correspondents, giving the same mode of treatment, which we think is a common sense cure, as follows:—"Cut the nails, and scrape them very thin on the top, letting the corners remain, and they will grow up instead of into the flesh."—EDITOR.

ASTHMA.—Ipecac is a cure for Asthma. Get twelve cents' worth of Ipecac; make up half of it into small pills; roll them in flour; take them three times a day. If no relief is obtained, then take the other half for an emetic, and relief is sure. Groats are also good as a medicine and for food. Put a pint in a two-quart pail. Fill it with water; set it in a vessel of boiling water; let it boil two hours. Eaten with milk or molasses.

POLYPUS.—Yellow snuff is a remedy for polypus in the nose. WM. L. CARROLL.

Woburn, Mass.

CURE FOR ASTHMA.—Take camphor, dissolved in very strong alcohol, and wet a cloth with it the bigness of your two hands, double the same, lay it on the pillow near the nose and mouth, and inhale as much as you can. It is the best thing I ever tried, and many have been cured wholly.

Yours, J. A. COLE.

HOW TO DISCOVER AND CURE THE SMALL POX.—The Eclectic Journal says concerning this matter:—

"Now we offer this secret to the profession,—as soon as the eruptions appear, by pressing with the point of the finger there may be distinctly felt the small, hard substance, precisely as if a small fine shot had been placed under the cuticle of the skin. This peculiar appearance belongs to no other disease. We have applied the term secret, here; for whilst it is, and has been known to a few physicians it is not mentioned in any of the standard authorities; nor does the writer claim the credit of the discovery. After this all works upon practice will add this unfailing diagnostic symptom."

The treatment of the small pox in the State Almshouse of Massachusetts, where the disease has prevailed during the last three months, has been singularly successful. Out of about sixty cases, but one fatal result has occurred, and that was the case of a man who was taken to the house from a neighboring town, in the last stage of the disease. The remedy used was a tea made from a plant known in the Materia Medica as Garracenia Purpura, familiarly called Ladies' Saddle, or water cup, the medicinal virtues of which lie in the root. The effect of the remedy, which has been newly discovered, and found remarkably efficient whenever tried, is to allay the fever and irritation caused by the formation of pustules, which are rapidly dried up, leaving but slight, if any trace of the malady."

CURE FOR ERYSIPELAS.—Take the common yellow carrot, scrape or grate it fine, and apply as a poultice. It is a sure cure. The same for croup in children: apply to the neck and breast; change the poultice when it becomes dryish.—Ex.

A GOOD DISINFECTANT.—Green copperas, dissolved in water, will effectually dissipate and destroy the foulest smells. Sprinkled about, it will. in a brief space of time, purify the atmosphere.

The World's Crisis

AND SECOND ADVENT MESSENGER.

TERMS:

If paid in advance,—	One year	$2.50
	Six months	$1.25
If not paid within six months,—	One year	$3.00
	Six months	$1.50
Five copies, to one address, six months		$5.60
—same rate for any larger number under ten.
Ten copies, to one address, six months		$10.00
—same rate for any number over ten.

CLUB PRICES PAYABLE ALWAYS IN ADVANCE.

POSTAGE.—The postage, in the United States, on each single copy of the Crisis, is 20 cents a year, payable quarterly, in advance, at the office of delivery.

RULES FOR CORRESPONDENTS.—Over all matters not intended for publication, write PRIVATE.

Over all business matters, write BUSINESS.

Over all articles for the paper, write FOR THE CRISIS.

All articles should be accompanied by the writer's name, for the Editor's information, even if it is not published.

When the names of new subscribers are sent, please say they are new, and it will save us much labor.

PRIVATE LETTERS.—Those wishing to address the Editor on matters not connected with the office, will please write the word PRIVATE on the outside of the envelope.

Please put the business matters and appointments on a piece of paper separate from other communications.

All persons writing to the office should give DISTINCTLY and PLAINLY the Post Office, County and State at which they wish to be addressed; and all orders, subscriptions, communications and remittances, should be plainly directed to MILES GRANT, BOSTON, MASS.

PUBLISHED ALSO AT THE SAME OFFICE,

Semi-monthly:

THE YOUNG PILGRIM:

An Illustrated Sunday School Paper,

FOR CHILDREN AND YOUTH.

TERMS:

[illegible]

Payable always in advance.

POSTAGE.—[illegible]

CLUBS.—[illegible]

CANADA SUBSCRIBERS [illegible]

ALL COMMUNICATIONS [illegible]

The World's Crisis

AND SECOND ADVENT MESSENGER.

"BEHOLD, I COME QUICKLY; AND MY REWARD IS WITH ME."

WHOLE NO. 493. BOSTON, TUESDAY, MARCH 14, 1865. VOL. XX.—NO. 26.

The World's Crisis

AND SECOND ADVENT MESSENGER,

Issued every Tuesday Afternoon, at

167 HANOVER STREET, BOSTON.

MILES GRANT, EDITOR.

EDITORIAL COMMITTEE:
S. G. MATHEWSON, I. C. WELLCOME,
H. F. CARPENTER.

PUBLISHING COMMITTEE:
C. F. HUDSON, H. V. DAVIS,
S. S. BREWER, J. G. HAMBLIN,
D. MATHEWSON.

GEORGE T. ADAMS,
TREASURER AND BUSINESS AGENT.

☞ THE CRISIS is devoted to the exposition of all Bible truth; especially the doctrine of the immediate, personal coming and reign of Christ on the earth; holiness of heart; the unconscious state of the dead; their literal resurrection, and final destruction of the wicked.

For the World's Crisis.

GLAD TIDINGS.

TUNE.—"Blue-eyed Mary."

How blest is my condition,
What joyous words I hear;
The thrilling proclamation,
That tells redemption near.
My Savior soon is coming,
He will not long delay,
To end his children's sighing,
And wipe their tears away.

In clouds of dazzling brightness,
In glory he'll descend,
And change us to his likeness,
While angels shall attend;
And bear us up to meet him,
From grief take us away;
Lo, then the saints shall greet him,
And with him ever stay.

The groaning of creation,
Her fearful throes of pain,
Shall share the great salvation
When Jesus comes to reign;
And earth he shall deliver
From sin's destructive sway,
And fill with glory ever,
And ever on it stay.

Haste then, dear Lord, thy coming,
No more remain away,
While prophecy fulfilling,
Proclaims the coming day.
Oh let us all be waiting,
To hear the solemn cry,
"Behold the Bridegroom cometh,"
And full redemption's nigh.

The dead ones shall awaken,
To hear the Savior's voice;
And hades, now forsaken,
Shall hear them loud rejoice;
Oh praise the Lamb forever,
We live, we live again;
Our Captain did deliver,
And with him we shall reign.

Stanbridge, C. E. C. P. DOW.

For the World's Crisis.

THE RESURRECTION.—No. 2.

INFERENCES.

"If the dead rise not at all."

1. The gospel professedly brings "life and immortality to light." This it does by teaching a resurrection from the dead to eternal life of those asleep in the dust of the earth, and in their graves, and in the sea. That future life has been illustrated by Jesus Christ, who in his own person has "abolished death," and by the declaration he made, "I am the Resurrection and the Life," and the proof he gave of the fact in the resurrection of persons from death, as Lazarus and others. But if the gospel prove a failure, as it must, "if the dead rise not," then we are thrown back under the light of heathenism, which teaches the immortality of the soul, and bases future existence upon an inherent immortality in man. But that light is darkness. It has been said that nature, reason, philosophy, and revelation, all teach the doctrine of the soul's immortality and that it survives the death of the body and lives eternal ages. I affirm that neither nature, reason, philosophy, nor revelation, teach such a doctrine, and challenge the proof. If the doctrine of the soul's immortality be the light on future existence, why was the gospel preached? Why was St Paul made an apostle to the Gentiles and sent over into Athens in Greece to preach such "foolishness," to be "mocked" at while he contended for the resurrection of the dead? (Acts 17: 32) and that "death" would be "swallowed up in victory," only "when the dead" should "be raised incorruptible,"—and "this mortal—put on immortality?"

2. The future resurrection of the dead is predicated and based upon the past resurrection of Christ. If, therefore, it can be proved that "the dead rise not at all," then it can also be demonstrated that Christ is not risen. Then the world has no living Savior—the church no living Advocate and Redeemer; and christianity is dead! Its doom is sealed! It must inevitably become extinct; and its dupes be miserably disappointed! Never was there a greater humbug or heresy—never more deceived men than those who have believed in it. The foundation of their faith has been that a dead man, executed on the cross as a malefactor, was the Son of God from heaven, the Judge and King of men, and is alive, and alive forevermore. All which is untrue "if the dead rise not at all."

3. The apostles and the five hundred witnesses (1 Cor. 15: 5–9) testified to the resurrection of Christ after he suffered, and through him preached and witnessed the resurrection of the dead. Acts 4: 2. If their witness is not true they are guilty of perjury—of the crime of disturbing the public peace wherever they went, against public authority, and "turning the world upside down" with their pernicious doctrine—of a suicidal course in respect to themselves, in courting obloquy, hate, reproach, loss of comfort, and ease, and quiet, of property and estates, and even a martyr's death! Of the same toward their families and kindred, causing millions to do the same, through their preaching and writings, in the vain hope of reaping eternal rewards for their faith, and testimony, and suffering! Can it be possible there is such wickedness, and false-heartedness, and foolhardiness, and obstinacy? and that these men, otherwise of such high moral and intellectual qualities, should be guilty of such things? And yet such is the case, "if the dead rise not at all."

4. The christian faith consists in the belief and confession of the death of Christ for our justification; and accordingly the promise of a future life by a resurrection from the dead. If "it is vain," which is true "if the dead rise not at all," then it will ultimately come to nought; for a denial of this fundamental truth of christian doctrine "overthrows the faith;" and "eats as doth a canker,"—2 Tim. 2: 17, 18—(gangrene) or dreadful cancer on the very vitals of christian faith and doctrine! We may know the reason why enlightened christendom, all abroad over the earth, have nearly made shipwreck of faith, and overthrowing the little faith the world has in christianity itself—they deny "the foundation," the doctrine of the resurrection; or do not contend earnestly for it.

5. Jesus' death on the cross was the atoning sin offering. "Behold the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world!" If, however, he is "not raised," there is no justification; and "if the dead rise not, then is not Christ raised; and if Christ be not raised we "are yet in our sins." Then the world is lost! It is doomed to certain destruction for its sin. God has not provided in the universe, nor within our reach a substitute offering satisfactory for sin. World, weep on! Let tears fall like rain! Earth, groan under the accumulated load till all thy corners be filled with the slain in the guilt of sin! Then shall the fires consume thee with the unsaved wicked dead and living! and divine justice shatter and scatter thy ashes through the universe. O, where is one mighty to save?

6. Baptism is a rite to commemorate and foreshadow the resurrection of the dead; of Christ and his people. But "if the dead rise not at all," the ordinance is a vain observance, and they are weak-minded and silly who observe it.

7. Future life and existence in immortality with rewards, is dependent upon the fact that "the dead shall be raised incorruptible," "at the last day," and "at the sound of the last trump." But "if the dead rise not at all," the infidel's faith is true—"Death, an eternal sleep." Let us adopt their motto and carnal sentiment also, and whirl away our time and days in "the pleasures of "sin for a season." "Let us eat and drink; for to-morrow we die." "Behold joy and gladness, slaying oxen, and killing sheep, eating flesh, and drinking wine; let us eat and drink; for to-morrow we die."—1 Cor. 15: 32; Isa. 22: 13.

While we have spoken of the seven absurdities, we have now given the seven inferences that follow the faith of the non-resurrection of the dead, into which error some of the Corinthian church had fallen.—1 Cor. 15: 29.

By contrast, how much better is the faith and hope of the apostle. "But now is Christ risen from the dead, and become the first fruits of them that slept."—v. 20. This is like the rising of the sun, the glorious orb of day, after a dark and gloomy night of sadness, doubt, and terror. And may "the Sun of Righteousness arise with healing in his wings," and dispel the midnight of the grave, and awake the dead to life everlasting.

Sandy Hill, N. Y. O. R. FASSETT.

For the World's Crisis

THE PUSHING OF THE RAM.
Dan. 8: 4.

Many of the gravest errors into which people are led, are the result of some little misinterpretation or misapplication, which, like a keystone in an arch, is quickly slipped into its place, which we are asked to believe, or grant, or take for granted; and when this is once admitted it vitiates the whole subsequent result, no matter how correct, how accurate, or how logical all its consequent positions may be.

The minister thought it rather too bad that every body who rode in his wagon should pay more attention to one broken spoke in his wagon wheel than they did to all the rest of the wagon put together. They were perfectly right in doing so. That broken spoke made the whole wagon unsafe, and in going over a hard road, or down a high hill, the broken spoke would make a broken wheel, and the broken wheel would make a broken wagon, and the broken wagon would make a broken neck, and all this because the minister thought they ought to use that part of the wagon that was sound, and never mind one broken spoke. So for want of a nail the shoe was lost, for want of a shoe the horse was lost, and for want of a horse the traveler was lost, being overtaken and slain by the enemy.

In my early days while working in the "logging school," before I was advanced to the "saw-mill college," I learned that the strength of a log chain was just the strength of the weakest link in it. One broken link made the whole a broken chain.

Riding in the cars, when the train stops in some important depot, I hear the chink of a workman's hammer trying the iron wheels. And when he does it he does not strike one wheel at each end of the train, and then judge of the rest by that, but he gets under the car and strikes each wheel in the train. And if they give a clear metallic ring, the train can go on. But if his practised ear detects the dull sound of fractured iron, the brakeman comes to the door—"Passengers in this car will pass forward." "What for? Do you change cars here?" "Broken wheel,—this car can not go on," is the reply. But suppose some would-be-conductor of a long train should object to such folly as the rejecting of a whole car because one wheel was cracked? Suppose he should have his way, and the whole train should move on at thirty miles an hour. Presently that crack makes a break, that break makes a crash, and the result lies down at the bottom of an embankment in piles of bloody kindling-wood, and rows of mangled, groaning, dying passengers, whose lives pay the penalty of riding in a train of cars one of which had one broken wheel.

There was one big train started out some twenty or twenty-five years ago, with a noble freight, a new time table, and the road all in order; and the conductors were perfectly confident that they should run through on time. Some objected to the time table, and some thought that the cars were not safe; but the conductor sung out, "All right," swung his lantern, the whistle blew, the bell rung, and the train started. Going around a sharp curve somewhere about 1844, there was a terrible crash; firemen were plenty, but brakemen seemed rather scarce, and finally the train was pretty much piled up in a heap. Some of the passengers got their heads hurt, some got partly addled, some got their family relations mixed up, some got dazed in spiritual notions, some run off on a side track to the Shaker kingdom, some run after visions and dreams, some went one way and some another. The precise cause of the crash a good many have never learned. Some think too much steam; some say it was a special arrangement of the Almighty, and so no one is to blame in the least; while others suspect that there was a broken spoke or a broken wheel somewhere about the train.

The train, however, got broken up into four or five smaller trains, and they have never got hitched together yet. Some of them have been mostly managed by firemen, and some by brakemen; some run by one time table and some by another.

About a dozen years ago another pretty large train started, which had new conductors, engines, time tables, etc., and was to make the Grand Depot by 1854. I was confident that some of the wheels in this train were cracked; they did n't have the clear ring about them, to my ear; but then all was hurly burly, no time to wait, passengers piling in, and all in a rush; and there was no chance to mend wheels, and there were no spare cars, and time was up, and they sung out, "All aboard,"

"We're going home to die no more,
We're going home in FIFTY-FOUR."

I thought I would n't get aboard; and so concluded, with a few others, to stick to our old hand car, and try to go safe if we did n't go quite so fast.

Well, the train started off and went, I should say, about forty miles an hour, more or less, and run well for a season. By and by it got a little disabled, did n't get into the depot in time, and we found after awhile that the old hand car run about as swiftly as anything on the road, take it year in and out, if we deducted the time used by lightning trains in repairing damages. The cause of the delay of this train has never really been explained. Some say it was another of the Lord's foreordained arrangements to fulfill the Scriptures; others say that the time tables were wrong; but for my part I am inclined to believe it might have been one of those broken spokes that they had n't time to stop and mend, or else a broken wheel. One thing is certain, some of the engineers, firemen, or hands on the train, got injured some how, so that they haven't done much work since the accident, and some have started on other trains and gone—where, we cannot tell till we see them stop.

Well, the bell rings, and the steam is up again, and this time with a new conductor, new time table, and every thing lovely; and some of the same persons who told us we would get in at 1844 and 1854 tell us now we are certain to reach the Grand Junction, where we take the "up train for Glory," in 1868. Well, I hope we shall by that time, if not before; for I think that may be about as long, if not a little longer, than a decent man will want to live in this world, if it "progresses" at the present rates in the interim. "Cars ready!—all———aboard." But hold on; have the wheels been tried? "Yes, the wheels are all right. Get aboard!" But hold on. The inspector says that "astronomical car" must go out of the train. "Never mind the 'astronomical car'; any boy can fix that; and we don't put any dependence on it, any way; the rest of the train is all right. All aboard!" Well, but wait. This "historical car" is coupled on to "the astronomical," and so if one goes out the other does. "Well, never mind the 'historical car'; the 'Scriptural car' is big enough to hold the whole load,—all aboard!" But wait; even in your "Scriptural car" I am afraid there is a broken spoke. "Never mind a broken spoke. You seem to think more of one broken spoke than you do of the whole car besides. We don't pretend to endorse all the expositions used, but the time table is right. Time's up!—all aboard!"

But you must excuse me, my good friends, engineers, firemen, conductors, and all. I am in great haste to get through, but I never like to ride fast in broken wagons or cars with spokes out of order. I think I may go safer in a hand car, and I hate to have to stop to repair damages so often. Get the train all right; unhitch your broken cars, and put better ones in, and I am ready to ride as fast as you can run; but not over broken spokes or cracked wheels.

After so much by way of general remark and illustration, I wish to call attention to a point of some importance. In the new time theory the following positions are claimed, if I remember rightly.

1. The 2300 days measure the length of the vision in Daniel 8th.

2. They date from the time when "the ram" pushed "westward and northward and southward."

3. This pushing westward, and northward, and southward, was against Daniel's people.

4. The pushing thus described began when Ahasuerus issued a decree to slay all the Jews "westward and northward and southward"; and the reason why the ram did not push eastward was, there were no Jews that way.

5. Therefore when the new chronology fixes the date of Ahasuerus' reign, by astronomy, by calculation, or by any other means, the beginning of the 2300 days is fixed, and then all is plain and harmonious.

But there are some doubtful points here.

1. It is not quite certain that the date of this attempt to kill the Jews is correctly stated in the new chronology. A mistake here is fatal to the theory, and this, with the rest of Mr. Thurman's dates, depends UPON HIS ASTRONOMY, and he HIMSELF in his book expressly admits that his ASTRONOMY tests the BOOK; "THE TRUTH-TESTING POWERS OF ASTRONOMY" being his favorite phrase.

2 The character of the "ram" government, representing Media and Persia, is thus given: 1. It has two high horns. 2. The higher came up last. 3. It pushed westward, and northward, and southward. 4. No beasts or living creatures could stand before him, or hinder or resist him. 5. None could deliver out of his hand. 6. He did according to his will. 7. He became great. 8. He was smitten, trampled upon, and slain, by the Grecian "rough goat."

Now it does not appear that this pushing of "the ram" was confined to pushing "against Daniel's people," or the Jews. At this time the Jews were not a separate government, but were in the body of the Persian monarchy. The queen was a Jewess; Mordecai, Daniel, Nehemiah, Ezra, and others, were in official positions in the Persian government; they were, for the time, a part of "the ram" power.

Now, the pushing of the ram, so that no living thing could withstand him, must be pushing at other powers outside of himself, and so could not be at the Jews, as is quietly assumed in the new argument. Besides the general attitude of the Persians towards the Jews was protective instead of offensive. The Persians conquered Babylon, which had oppressed the Jews. They honored eminent Jews, and exalted them to high positions. They, by several imperial decrees, as well as by pecuniary aid, assisted them to return and rebuild the city of Jerusalem. Their only oppressive acts towards the Jews which I remember were (1.) casting Daniel into a lion's den, and (2.) the plot of Haman to kill the Jews. Both of the decrees in these cases were obtained from the Persian monarchs by fraud and misrepresentation, both were regretted by the kings, and both were overruled to the deliverance of Israel and the destruction of those very persons who sought their hurt.

Is it not, then, absurd to date the 2300 days from the days of Haman's plot, on the ground that then the ram pushed westward, northward, and southward "against Daniel's people"? Besides, when the ram pushed, no living thing or no beast could stand before him, but the Jews did "stand for their life" by the decree of this same pushing power, and they stood so firmly that "they smote all their enemies with the stroke of the sword, and slaughter, and destruction, and did what they would unto those that hated them."—Esther 9.

Further, when the ram pushed, none could "deliver" out of his hand. But where this new theory locates the "pushing," Mordecai said "enlargement and DELIVERANCE" shall "arise to the Jews" (Esther 4: 14), and when the trial came "all the rulers of the provinces, and the lieutenants, and the deputies, and the officers of the king HELPED the JEWS; because the fear of Mordecai fell upon them." Esther 9: 3. "And the Jews had light, gladness and honor, . . . and many of the PEOPLE OF THE LAND BECAME JEWS." Esther 8: 16, 17.

Is this the result of the ram pushing against the Jews, when none could deliver, and none could withstand? And is such a position strong enough to hang a chain of dates upon, which shall fix or settle the location of the day of judgment, provided the period mentioned reaches to that day? And is this the style of argument upon which thinking Bible students are expected to rest their faith?

It appears to me that the usual view of expositors on this point is more worthy of credence. In this view the "pushing" of "the ram" describes the conquests of the Medo-Persian power, particularly after the ascendency of the Persian or higher "horn" which came up east.

1. The Persians "pushed" "westward," starting from their territory between the Euphrates and the Indus, overrunning Armenia, Babylonia, Syria, Cilicia, Capadocia, Bythinia, Phrygia, Lycia, and all that part of Asia Minor between the Black Sea and the Mediterranean.

2. "Northward" they "pushed" until they conquered Colchis and touched the limit of Mount Caucasus as their northern boundary between the Black Sea and the Caspian. East of the line of the Caspian, they conquered Aria, the Chorasmi, Bactria, and other regions up the river Indus to Mt. Imaus, and crossing the Oxus subdued the eastern Caspii, Sogdians, and the Sacæ, up to the river Jaxartes on their northern boundary.

3. "Southward" they "pushed" over the territory of the Asiatic Ethiopians, to the Erythræn Sea or Indian Ocean. Passing eastward their line lay along the Persian Gulf, and along the northeastern border of unconquerable Arabia, then southward through Syria, and down into Egypt, following the valley of the Nile, and stretching from the Persian Gulf westward along the southern shore of the Mediterranean, as far as Cyrene.

This "pushing" comprehends, then, the whole history of those invasions with which this resistless Persian "ram" overswept the nationalities of that age and became the great and dominant ruler of the world. He did not push eastward, not because there were no Jews there, but because the Persians were an eastern people, and after they appear in the vision their conquests were in an opposite direction. The great invasion of Greece by Xerxes, with his army of five million, two hundred and eighty-three thousand, warriors and camp followers, was one of the Persians' last and fruitless endeavors at invasion, and it roused the fury of the Grecian "goat," and brought on the ruin of the Persian empire. The pushing forcibly represents the aggressive acts of the Persian government, and this, so far as I know, is the usually accepted interpretation among prophetic students. To limit this whole career of conquest and victory to the mere issuing of a decree "against Daniel's people" in the days of Ahasuerus, is a style of interpretation which is, I think, peculiar to the last new school of prophetic and astronomical students, who can teach school-boys how to calculate ancient eclipses, but whose eclipses when calculated do not seem to agree with the writings of historians or the calculations of other astronomers.

According to the best light I have, the vision cannot be dated from the decree of Ahasuerus to slay the Jews. Whether it can be dated near that time I do not now inquire. I do not enter into the chronological argument; my trouble is with the interpretations and applications of the word of inspiration.

I think this wheel has a broken spoke right here. Better have it mended, or leave the car out of the train. There are other points where I think important scriptures are misunderstood and misapplied.

Writing as I do to day with no book of reference except my Bible, I can say no more at present. But if the cars do not start off and get out of sight too soon, I propose to look and see if there are not other wheels which need new spokes before it is safe to run the train at a very high rate of speed.

Meanwhile, there need be no delay. Men can serve God, spread the truth, give to the poor, do good, and work in the Lord's cause, just as fast as possible, whether this time, or Bro. Stevenson's, or any other is true or not. It would not trouble me very much to see those who are so strong in this theory giving half their goods to feed the poor, or to scatter light and truth "in the regions beyond." I should think salvation had come to their houses, much as it did to the house of Zaccheus of old. But the men who will not be faithful, diligent, or benevolent, except under the pressure of a "definite time" argument, have very little of my fellowship or confidence, I assure you, as an obedient christian.

So if we are christians we shall keep at work serving God, time or no time, and shall do all the good we can, and keep waiting for the Son of God from heaven. May God help us so to do, and guide us in the right way, is the prayer of your Bro. in Christ,

H. L. HASTINGS.

C——, N. H., Feb. 25th, 1865.

For the World's Crisis.

"FEAR NOT! LITTLE FLOCK."

When the sun shall be covered with dark,
And the moon refuses her light,
And the stars from heaven fall thick,
Like the silent dews of night;

When on earth distress of nations,
Pestilence, famine and war;
When the sad sea waves are sounding
With sullen, perpetual war;

When the minds of men are thrilling
With a vague and wild unrest,
And courage fast is failing,
And fear their hearts invest;—

Lift up your heads, ye weeping,
Redemption draweth nigh;
Break into joyful praises
To Him who rules on high.

For lo! with power and glory,
Cometh our King in might,
To take his waiting children
To walk with him in light.

Thank God! we've been victorious,
As always is the right;
We've ended well our warfare,
We've finished our good fight.

L. ELLIOTT.

For the World's Crisis.

QUERIES CONCERNING
The Time, Times, and a Part, and the 1335 Days of Dan. xii.

I. Does not the use of the definite article "the" in the phrase "THE thousand, three hundred and five and thirty days" indicate that this measurement is previously introduced? since otherwise it would have been made proper to have said "A thousand three hundred and five and thirty days" instead of "the," etc.?

II. Then where is this measurement elsewhere brought to view, unless in the seventh verse of the same chapter, by the "time, times, and a part" [margin]. If the latter measurement given to Daniel in this chapter is explanatory of the former, must they not synchronize, and both commence when the Pagan hindering power was "taken out of the way" and the Papal "abomination that maketh desolate set up" in its place in A. D. 533, and both end in 1868?

III. May not the "scattering of the power of the holy people" here referred to as running parallel with this measurement, refer to the Papal persecution mentioned in this connection, instead of the scattering of the Jews? The statement had just been made, "They shall pollute the sanctuary of strength, and shall take away the daily sacrifice, and they shall place the abomination that maketh desolate . . . but the people that do know their God . . . shall fall by the sword and by flame, by captivity, and by spoil, many days."—Dan. 11: 31–33. "How long to the end of these wonders?" [including the deliverance of every one "written in the book"]. Ans. "A time, times, and a part," (or 1335 days, from the setting up the Papal "abomination"), "and when he shall have accomplished to scatter the power of the holy people all these things shall be finished." Daniel "heard but . . understood not" the precise length of this measurement of a "time, times and a part," and inquires, "What shall be (the time to) the end of these things?" that is, from the introduction of the Papal abomination" which was to inflict persecution on the saints by "sword," "flame," "captivity," and "spoil" for "many days." Daniel is told that it is to remain "sealed till the time of the end," when knowledge is to be increased till "the wise shall understand." Then the angel refers him back to the Papal "abomination" before mentioned, and gives a measurement of 1290 days from its setting up to "the time of the end." After this he starts from the same epoch, not with "A thousand three hundred and five and thirty days," but with "THE thousand three hundred and five and thirty days"—reaching to the time Daniel is to stand in his lot—the definite article "THE" indicating allusion to a measurement previously given instead of a new measurement.

IV. Do not the "time, times and a part" in this passage synchronize with the "time, times, and the dividing of time" in Dan. 7: 25, which measures the time of the existence of the Papal horn from its rise till the coming of the Ancient of days? This Papal horn was to rise early enough to "pluck up" three of the ten Roman horns, and as that plucking up process began about A. D. 534, it follows that the Papal horn arose prior to 534, for it could not pluck up others before it existed itself. The "Corrector of heretics" received his diploma A. D. 533; and if "THE 1335 days" synchronize with the "time, times, and a part," and the "time, times, and the dividing of time," reaching to the coming of the Ancient of days, do they not terminate in 1668? The same horn made war with the saints, and prevailed against them UNTIL the Ancient of days came," or as previously stated, a "time, times, and the dividing of time." Does not this measure its existence from 533 to 1868, or till the Ancient of days shall come? W. S.

For the World's Crisis.

THE CRISIS VISIBLY APPROACHING.

BY S. S. BREWER.

We are now nearing the hour when the destiny of over nine hundred millions of human beings will unalterably be fixed. What an overwhelming consideration! But you may be led to inquire, Upon what what basis do you found such an assurance?

First. Consecutive chains of prophecy seem to be converging to a final point in these days.

Second. The symbolic prophecies seem to mark this as the time in which the God of heaven would set up a kingdom which shall never be destroyed.

Third. The chronological prophecies, which are the Almighty's measuring agencies, seem to have laid the last link, so as to have a particular bearing in the days in which we live.

Fourth. The mighty upheavings in the political universe, since the Reign of Terror in France, which broke the iron fetters of Papacy, and prevented the PRIEST KING and tyrannic despot of Rome, with his adulterous spouse, the woman drunk with the blood of saints, and the martyrs of Jesus, from holding the revolutionary elements in abeyance, and has let loose a torrent of ambitious, restless anarchists; hence revolution and counter revolution in France; revolution in China; the Autocrat of Russia ill at ease, and his subjects kept down by the bayonet; South America in a state of anarchy; revolution and anarchy alternately succeeding in rapid succession in Mexico; revolutions in 1848 sweeping over Europe; historic thrones totter, and imperial sceptres snap asunder. On, on, the three Apocalyptic spirits of demons urge their way, fulfilling their presignified missions, "unto the kings of the earth and the whole world." They invade the Italian peninsula. They leap upon the threshold of the Vatican. The mitred Bishop of Rome, who boasted of his infallibility, and, sitting in the chair of St. Peter, the church of the living God, the pillar and ground of truth, against which the gates of hell should not prevail, disguises his hrpocritical dignity, and in the garb of a menial skulks away to Gaeta Di Mola, to his worthy protege, king Bomba, of cannoneering and bombarding fame, for protection from his devout subjects of the Holy Roman Catholic Church. Truly these are evil days, when Pontifical infallibility has to quail and flee at the frog-like croakings of schismatics. The sad reverses in the elements of Roman Catholicism seem to be predicted by Habakkuk:—"Shall they not rise up suddenly that shall bite thee, and awake that shall vex thee, and thou shalt be for booties unto them?"

Not only has the old world been shaken by the uprisings of the past two years, but our own republican America has been shaken from centre to circumference by the unclean frog-spirits that have leaped into our senatorial, congressional, and legislative chambers, and after depositing their dragonic spawn of treason and rebellion, they have gone forth inflated with the spirit of their master, swelling, croaking, and tainting the atmosphere with moral putrefaction; which, in return for our voluntary complicity of the north with the southern Pharaohs, has brought upon the nation a baptism of steel, fire, and blood, till the soil of the oppressor, moistened by the tears, sweat, and lacerated bodies of poor victims streaming with blood, is made gory with the life current of thousands of our dear young men.

When Brn. Miller and Himes proclaimed the terminus of the prophetic dates in 1843, not a few of their opponents gave it as their opinion that those dates could not possibly end till about 1866; and here we are gliding swiftly along to that admitted point; whether true or not a few short months will decide.

Fifth. In our humble opinion, we have entered into moments of serious and should be heartfelt interest, amid unparalleled development of character. I fear a large proportion of those professedly looking for the coming of the "Just One" are so destitute of that principle spoken of in Rev. 3: 8, that they see neither their danger nor the remedy. If they are brought to feel and see, under a powerful presentation of truth, they soon relapse again into the theoretical element, and are ready, as they term it, "to contend earnestly for the faith," and hence you constantly see manifest the Scripture declaration,—"Out of the fulness of the heart the mouth speaketh." I admit the necessity of a truthful theory. But I most affectionately and ardently protest by the love of Jesus against remaining in such a state. It is only a frame without the finish; it is only the sails without the wind; it is only the engine without the steam; it is only the organism without the breath of life; it is the without wings; it is a system without a sun; 'tis a watch without a mainspring.

This indwelling, sealing agent is spoken of in Rom. 5: 5; 2 Cor. 1: 22; Gal. 4: 6; Eph. 1: 13, 14. Will the reader please take his Testament and read carefully the above references; it will doubtless do you much good. And now let me inquire, have you now the indwelling of that sealing agent? If not, let me in the spirit of kindness entreat you to seek it, and hasten to present your body a living sacrifice, holy and acceptable unto God, which is your reasonable service. Amen. If you have it not, and feel but very little concerned in the matter, you are so much the more to be pitied. I pray you awake before it is too late. Will you please read the last clause of Rom. 8: 9?

Sixth. I hear many persons say, It is harder now to keep myself right than I ever found it in all my life. That may be very true, for we are forming our characters for the judgment, and all our tempers must be tested; for the Judge will only reward tested virtue. O how necessary, then, that we heed the words of Jesus—"Watch and pray always, that you may escape those things that are coming upon the earth, and stand before the Son of man."

As I look abroad and see the spirit of slumber stealing almost imperceptibly over many, I am reminded of persons that have watched around the bed of a sick friend, and have for some nights been broken of rest; in such a condition, if they sit down or suspend for a moment physical action, they sink into slumber; in like manner, if we suspend our opportunities at the throne of heavenly grace, we shall sink into a deadly slumber, from which nothing but the summons of the Judge, amid the dissolution of nature, will ever awake us. Remember the words of Jesus,—"WATCH, LEST COMING SUDDENLY HE FIND YOU SLEEPING." Thy Bro., S. S. BREWER.

Ashburnham Depot, Mass.

For the World's Crisis.

WHAT SPIRIT ARE YE OF?

"And why call ye me Lord, Lord, and do not the things which I say?"—LUKE 6: 46.

These words, which were uttered by our Savior, have of late been impressed upon my mind very forcibly, as I have been led to look abroad upon the professed people of God, and especially those that are looking for the coming of the Lord. But I will not pass my judgment upon any one, but just take the words of Jesus.

Jesus says, "A good tree bringeth not forth corrupt fruit; neither doth a corrupt tree bring forth good fruit; for of thorns men do not gather figs, nor of a bramble bush gather they grapes." "A good man out of the good treasure of his heart bringeth forth that which is good; and an evil man out of the evil treasure of his heart bringeth forth that which is evil: for of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh." Then we may know the tree by the fruit it brings forth. If we see a tree which looks fair outwardly, we expect to find good fruit, but many times are disappointed; just so with many that say, "Lord, Lord," and do not the things that are commanded.

Jesus says, "A new commandment I give unto you, that ye love one another"; but many do not bring forth this fruit. I am sorry to say it, there is envy and strife, evil surmisings, and evil speaking, where should be love. There are many, I fear, who know not what spirit they are of.

It seems from the words which Jesus spake that if a man is good, he will not bring forth evil fruit. Now if we are any who are this professing to love the Lord, and love his people also, and cherish a spirit of enmity or ill will in your hearts, which causes you to misjudge or condemn or injure another, are you doing the things which Jesus says? I feel it is time to awake to the importance of not only saying but doing the things of God. Let us get the beams all out of our eyes, and then we shall be able to pull the mote out of our brother's eye.

The Lord is coming, and who will be ready? None but those who have clean hands and a pure heart. For this I am striving.

M. BELDING.

For the World's Crisis.

SYMPATHY.

Are you poor? So am I. Are you weak? So am I. Have you seen those near and dear to you laid away in the grave? So have I. Do those who can dress better than you turn away from you in disdain, or at best treat you coldly? I have felt that, too. Do you suffer pain, unspeakable pain, both of body and mind? So have I. Do you feel that you are alone, with no friend to whom you can unburden your soul? I have felt that many times. But you know who can speak peace to those who are troubled, and I trust you know how to tell Him all your sorrows. To us who have few of the comforts, and many of the sorrows of this life,—to us is JESUS indeed precious. We can truly say he is our ALL, for we have no other treasure. My friends and companions in sorrow, may the blessing of our merciful FATHER rest upon you. F. H. CHAMBERLAIN.

☞ The domestic relations proceed, and, in our present existence, are worth more than all other social ties. They give the first throb to the heart, and unseal the deep fountains of its love. Home is the chief school of human virtue. Its responsibilities, joys, sorrows, smiles, tears, hopes, and solicitudes, form the chief interest of human life.

The World's Crisis

AND SECOND ADVENT MESSENGER.

"BEHOLD, I COME QUICKLY; AND MY REWARD IS WITH ME."

WHOLE NO. 493. BOSTON, TUESDAY, MARCH 14, 1865. VOL. XX.—NO. 26.

The World's Crisis
AND SECOND ADVENT MESSENGER,
Issued every Tuesday Afternoon, at
167 HANOVER STREET, BOSTON.

MILES GRANT, EDITOR.

EDITORIAL COMMITTEE:
S. G. MATHEWSON, I. C. WELLCOME,
H. F. CARPENTER.

PUBLISHING COMMITTEE:
C. F. HUDSON, H. V. DAVIS,
S. S. BREWER, J. G. HAMBLIN,
D. MATHEWSON.

GEORGE T. ADAMS,
TREASURER AND BUSINESS AGENT.

☞ THE CRISIS is devoted to the exposition of all Bible truth; especially the doctrine of the immediate, personal coming and reign of Christ on the earth; holiness of heart; the unconscious state of the dead; their literal resurrection, and final destruction of the wicked.

For the World's Crisis.

GLAD TIDINGS.

TUNE.—"Blue-eyed Mary."

How blest is my condition,
What joyous words I hear;
The thrilling proclamation,
That tells redemption near.
My Savior soon is coming,
He will not long delay,
To end his children's sighing,
And wipe their tears away.

In clouds of dazzling brightness,
In glory he'll descend,
And change us to his likeness,
While angels shall attend;
And bear us up to meet him,
From grief take us away;
Lo, then the saints shall greet him,
And with him ever stay.

The groaning of creation,
Her fearful throes of pain,
Shall share the great salvation
When Jesus comes to reign;
And earth he shall deliver
From sin's destructive sway,
And fill with glory ever,
And ever on it stay.

Haste then, dear Lord, thy coming,
No more remain away,
While prophecy fulfilling,
Proclaims the coming day.
Oh let us all be waiting,
To hear the solemn cry,
"Behold the Bridegroom cometh,"
And full redemption's nigh.

The dead ones shall awaken,
To hear the Savior's voice;
And hades, now forsaken,
Shall hear them loud rejoice;
Oh praise the Lamb forever,
We live, we live again;
Our Captain did deliver,
And with him we shall reign.

Stanbridge, C. E. C. P. Dow.

For the World's Crisis.

THE RESURRECTION.—No. 2.

INFERENCES.

"If the dead rise not at all."

1. The gospel professedly brings "life and immortality to light." This it does by teaching a resurrection from the dead to eternal life of those asleep in the dust of the earth, and in their graves, and in the sea. That future life has been illustrated by Jesus Christ, who in his own person has "abolished death," and by the declaration he made, "I am the Resurrection and the Life," and the proof he gave of the fact in the resurrection of persons from death, as Lazarus and others. But if the gospel prove a failure, as it must, "if the dead rise not," then we are thrown back under the light of heathenism, which teaches the immortality of the soul, and bases future existence upon an inherent immortality in man. But that light is darkness. It has been said that nature, reason, philosophy, and revelation, all teach the doctrine of the soul's immortality and that it survives the death of the body and lives eternal ages. I affirm that neither nature, reason, philosophy, nor revelation, teach such a doctrine, and challenge the proof. If the doctrine of the soul's immortality be the light on future existence, why was the gospel preached? Why was St Paul made an apostle to the Gentiles and sent over into Athens in Greece to preach such "foolishness," to be "mocked" at while he contended for the resurrection of the dead? (Acts 17: 32) and that "death" would be "swallowed up in victory," only "when the dead" should "be raised incorruptible,"—and "this mortal—put on immortality?"

2. The future resurrection of the dead is predicated and based upon the past resurrection of Christ. If, therefore, it can be proved that "the dead rise not at all," then it can also be demonstrated that Christ is not risen. Then the world has no living Savior—the church no living Advocate and Redeemer; and christianity is dead! Its doom is sealed! It must inevitably become extinct; and its dupes be miserably disappointed! Never was there a greater humbug or heresy—never more deceived men than those who have believed in it. The foundation of their faith has been that a dead man, executed on the cross as a malefactor, was the Son of God from heaven, the Judge and King of men, and is alive, and alive forevermore. All which is untrue "if the dead rise not at all."

3. The apostles and the five hundred witnesses (1 Cor. 15: 5–9) testified to the resurrection of Christ after he suffered, and through him preached and witnessed the resurrection of the dead. Acts 4: 2. If their witness is not true they are guilty of perjury—of the crime of disturbing the public peace wherever they went, against public authority, and "turning the world upside down" with their pernicious doctrine—of a suicidal course in respect to themselves, in courting obloquy, hate, reproach, loss of comfort, and ease, and quiet, of property and estates, and even a martyr's death! Of the same toward their families and kindred, causing millions to do the same, through their preaching and writings, in the vain hope of reaping eternal rewards for their faith, and testimony, and suffering! Can it be possible there is such wickedness, and false-heartedness, and foolhardiness, and obstinacy? and that these men, otherwise of such high moral and intellectual qualities, should be guilty of such things? And yet such is the case, "if the dead rise not at all."

4. The christian faith consists in the belief and confession of the death of Christ for our justification; and accordingly the promise of a future life by a resurrection from the dead. If "it is vain," which is true "if the dead rise not at all," then it will ultimately come to nought; for a denial of this fundamental truth of christian doctrine "overthrows the faith;" and "eats as doth a canker,"—2 Tim. 2: 17, 18—(gangrene) or dreadful cancer on the very vitals of christian faith and doctrine! We may know the reason why enlightened christendom, all abroad over the earth, have nearly made shipwreck of faith, and overthrowing the little faith the world has in christianity itself—they deny "the foundation," the doctrine of the resurrection; or do not contend earnestly for it.

5. Jesus' death on the cross was the atoning sin offering. "Behold the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world!" If, however, he is "not raised," there is no justification; and "if the dead rise not, then is not Christ raised; and if Christ be not raised we "are yet in our sins." Then the world is lost! It is doomed to certain destruction for its sin. God has not provided in the universe, nor within our reach a substitute offering satisfactory for sin. World, weep on! Let tears fall like rain! Earth, groan under the accumulated load till all thy corners be filled with the slain in the guilt of sin! Then shall the fires consume thee with the unsaved wicked dead and living! and divine justice shatter and scatter thy ashes through the universe. O, where is one mighty to save?

6. Baptism is a rite to commemorate and foreshadow the resurrection of the dead; of Christ and his people. But "if the dead rise not at all," the ordinance is a vain observance, and they are weak-minded and silly who observe it.

7. Future life and existence in immortality with rewards, is dependent upon the fact that "the dead shall be raised incorruptible," "at the last day," and "at the sound of the last trump." But "if the dead rise not at all," the infidel's faith is true—"Death, an eternal sleep." Let us adopt their motto and carnal sentiment also, and whirl away our time and days in "the pleasures of "sin for a season." "Let us eat and drink; for to-morrow we die." "Behold joy and gladness, slaying oxen, and killing sheep, eating flesh, and drinking wine; let us eat and drink; for to-morrow we die." —1 Cor. 15: 32; Isa. 22: 13.

While we have spoken of the seven absurdities, we have now given the seven inferences that follow the faith of the non-resurrection of the dead, into which error some of the Corinthian church had fallen.—1 Cor. 15: 29.

By contrast, how much better is the faith and hope of the apostle. "But now is Christ risen from the dead, and become the first fruits of them that slept."—v. 20. This is like the rising of the sun, the glorious orb of day, after a dark and gloomy night of sadness, doubt, and terror. And may "the Sun of Righteousness arise with healing in his wings," and dispel the midnight of the grave, and awake the dead to life everlasting.

Sandy Hill, N. Y. O. R. FASSETT.

For the World's Crisis

THE PUSHING OF THE RAM.
Dan. 8: 4.

Many of the gravest errors into which people are led, are the result of some little misinterpretation or misapplication, which, like a keystone in an arch, is quickly slipped into its place, which we are asked to believe, or grant, or take for granted; and when this is once admitted it vitiates the whole subsequent result, no matter how correct, how accurate, or how logical all its consequent positions may be.

The minister thought it rather too bad that every body who rode in his wagon should pay more attention to one broken spoke in his wagon wheel than they did to all the rest of the wagon put together. They were perfectly right in doing so. That broken spoke made the whole wagon unsafe, and in going over a hard road, or down a high hill, the broken spoke would make a broken wheel, and the broken wheel would make a broken wagon, and the broken wagon would make a broken neck, and all this because the minister thought they ought to use that part of the wagon that was sound, and never mind one broken spoke. So for want of a nail the shoe was lost, for want of a shoe the horse was lost, and for want of a horse the traveler was lost, being overtaken and slain by the enemy.

In my early days while working in the "logging school," before I was advanced to the "saw-mill college," I learned that the strength of a log chain was just the strength of the weakest link in it. One broken link made the whole a broken chain.

Riding in the cars, when the train stops in some important depot, I hear the chink of a workman's hammer trying the iron wheels. And when he does it he does not strike one wheel at each end of the train, and then judge of the rest by that, but he gets under the car and strikes each wheel in the train. And if they give a clear metallic ring, the train can go on. But if his practised ear detects the dull sound of fractured iron, the brakeman comes to the door—"Passengers in this car will pass forward." "What for? Do you change cars here?" "Broken wheel,—this car can not go on," is the reply. But suppose some would-be-conductor of a long train should object to such folly as the rejecting of a whole car because one wheel was cracked? Suppose he should have his way, and the whole train should move on at thirty miles an hour. Presently that crack makes a break, that break makes a crash, and the result lies down at the bottom of an embankment in piles of bloody kindling-wood, and rows of mangled, groaning, dying passengers, whose lives pay the penalty of riding in a train of cars one of which had one broken wheel.

There was one big train started out some twenty or twenty-five years ago, with a noble freight, a new time table, and the road all in order; and the conductors were perfectly confident that they should run through on time. Some objected to the time table, and some thought that the cars were not safe; but the conductor sung out, "All right," swung his lantern, the whistle blew, the bell rung, and the train started. Going around a sharp curve somewhere about 1844, there was a terrible crash; firemen were plenty, but brakemen seemed rather scarce, and finally the train was pretty much piled up in a heap. Some of the passengers got their heads hurt, some got partly addled, some got their family relations mixed up, some got dazed in spiritual notions, some run off on a side track to the Shaker kingdom, some run after visions and dreams, some went one way and some another. The precise cause of the crash a good many have never learned. Some think too much steam; some say it was a special arrangement of the Almighty, and so no one is to blame in the least; while others suspect that there was a broken spoke or a broken wheel somewhere about the train.

The train, however, got broken up into four or five smaller trains, and they have never got hitched together yet. Some of them have been mostly managed by firemen, and some by brakemen; some run by one time table and some by another.

About a dozen years ago another pretty large train started, which had new conductors, engines, time tables, etc., and was to make the Grand Depot by 1854. I was confident that some of the wheels in this train were cracked; they didn't have the clear ring about them, to my ear; but then all was hurly burly, no time to wait, passengers piling in, and all in a rush; and there was no chance to mend wheels, and there were no spare cars, and time was up, and they sung out, "All aboard,"

"We're going home to die no more,
We're going home in FIFTY-FOUR."

I thought I would n't get aboard; and so concluded, with a few others, to stick to our old hand car, and try to go safe if we did n't go quite so fast.

Well, the train started off and went, I should say, about forty miles an hour, more or less, and run well for a season. By and by it got a little disabled, did n't get into the depot in time, and we found after awhile that the old hand car run about as swiftly as any thing on the road, take it year in and out, if we deducted the time used by lightning trains in repairing damages. The cause of the delay of this train has never really been explained. Some say it was another of the Lord's fore-ordained arrangements to fulfill the Scriptures; others say that the time tables were wrong; but for my part I am inclined to believe it might have been one of those broken spokes that they hadn't time to stop and mend, or else a broken wheel. One thing is certain, some of the engineers, firemen, or hands on the train, got injured some how, so that they haven't done much work since the accident, and some have started on other trains and gone—where, we cannot tell till we see them stop.

Well, the bell rings, and the steam is up again, and this time with a new conductor, new time table, and every thing lovely; and some of the same persons who told us we would get in at 1844 and 1854 tell us now we are certain to reach the Grand Junction, where we take the "up train for Glory," in 1868. Well, I hope we shall by that time, if not before; for I think that may be about as long, if not a little longer, than a decent man will want to live in this world, if it "progresses" at the present rates in the interim. "Cars ready!—all———aboard." But hold on; have the wheels been tried? "Yes, the wheels are all right. Get aboard!" But hold on. The inspector says that "astronomical car" must go out of the train. "Never mind the 'astronomical car'; any boy can fix that; and we don't put any dependence on it, any way; the rest of the train is all right. All aboard!" Well, but wait. This "historical car" is coupled on to "the astronomical," and so if one goes out the other does. "Well, never mind the 'historical car'; the 'Scriptural car' is big enough to hold the whole load,—all aboard!" But wait; even in your "Scriptural car" I am afraid there is a broken spoke. "Never mind a broken spoke. You seem to think more of one broken spoke than you do of the whole car besides. We don't pretend to endorse all the expositions used, but the time table is right. Time's up!—all aboard!"

But you must excuse me, my good friends, engineers, firemen, conductors, and all. I am in great haste to get through, but I never like to ride fast in broken wagons or cars with spokes out of order. I think I may go safer in a hand car, and I hate to have to stop to repair damages so often. Get the train all right; unhitch your broken cars, and put better ones in, and I am ready to ride as fast as you can run; but not over broken spokes or cracked wheels.

After so much by way of general remark and illustration, I wish to call attention to a point of some importance. In the new time theory the following positions are claimed, if I remember rightly.

1. The 2300 days measure the length of the vision in Daniel 8th.

2. They date from the time when "the ram" pushed "westward and northward and southward."

3. This pushing westward, and northward, and southward, was against Daniel's people.

4. The pushing thus described began when Ahasuerus issued a decree to slay all the Jews "westward and northward and southward"; and the reason why the ram did not push eastward was, there were no Jews that way.

5. Therefore when the new chronology fixes the date of Ahasuerus' reign, by astronomy, by calculation, or by any other means, the beginning of the 2300 days is fixed, and then all is plain and harmonious.

But there are some doubtful points here.

1. It is not quite certain that the date of this attempt to kill the Jews is correctly stated in the new chronology. A mistake here is fatal to the theory, and this, with the rest of Mr. Thurman's dates, depends UPON HIS ASTRONOMY, and he HIMSELF in his book expressly admits that his ASTRONOMY tests the BOOK; "THE TRUTH-TESTING POWERS OF ASTRONOMY" being his favorite phrase.

2 The character of the "ram" government, representing Media and Persia, is thus given: 1. It has two high horns. 2. The higher came up last. 3. It pushed westward, and northward, and southward. 4. No beasts or living creatures could stand before him, or hinder or resist him. 5. None could deliver out of his hand. 6. He did according to his will. 7. He became great. 8. He was smitten, trampled upon, and slain, by the Grecian "rough goat."

Now it does not appear that this pushing of "the ram" was confined to pushing "against Daniel's people," or the Jews. At this time the Jews were not a separate government, but were in the body of the Persian monarchy. The queen was a Jewess; Mordecai, Daniel, Nehemiah, Ezra, and others, were in official positions in the Persian government; they were, for the time, a part of "the ram" power.

Now, the pushing of the ram, so that no living thing could withstand him, must be pushing at other powers outside of himself, and so could not be at the Jews, as is quietly assumed in the new argument. Besides the general attitude of the Persians towards the Jews was protective instead of offensive. The Persians conquered Babylon, which had oppressed the Jews. They honored eminent Jews, and exalted them to high positions. They, by several imperial decrees, as well as by pecuniary aid, assisted them to return and rebuild the city of Jerusalem. Their only oppressive acts towards the Jews which I remember were (1.) casting Daniel into a lion's den, and (2) the plot of Haman to kill the Jews. Both of the decrees in these cases were obtained from the Persian monarchs by fraud and misrepresentation, both were regretted by the kings, and both were overruled to the deliverance of Israel and the destruction of those very persons who sought their hurt.

Is it not, then, absurd to date the 2300 days from the days of Haman's plot, on the ground that then the ram pushed westward, northward, and southward "against Daniel's people"? Besides, when the ram pushed, no living thing or no beast could stand before him, but the Jews did "stand for their life" by the decree of this same pushing power, and they stood so firmly that "they smote all their enemies with the stroke of the sword, and slaughter, and destruction, and did what they would unto those that hated them."—Esther 9.

Further, when the ram pushed, none could "deliver" out of his hand. But where this new theory locates the "pushing," Mordecai said "enlargement and DELIVERANCE" shall "arise to the Jews" (Esther 4: 14), and when the trial came "all the rulers of the provinces, and the lieutenants, and the deputies, and the officers of the king HELPED the JEWS; because the fear of Mordecai fell upon them." Esther 9: 3. "And the Jews had light, gladness and honor, . . . and many of the PEOPLE OF THE LAND BECAME JEWS." Esther 8: 16, 17.

Is this the result of the ram pushing against the Jews, when none could deliver, and none could withstand? And is such a position strong enough to hang a chain of dates upon, which shall fix or settle the location of the day of judgment, provided the period mentioned reaches to that day? And is this the style of argument upon which thinking Bible students are expected to rest their faith?

It appears to me that the usual view of expositors on this point is more worthy of credence. In this view the "pushing" of "the ram" describes the conquests of the Medo-Persian power, particularly after the ascendency of the Persian or higher "horn" which came up east.

1. The Persians "pushed" "westward," starting from their territory between the Euphrates and the Indus, overrunning Armenia, Babylonia, Syria, Cilicia, Capadocia, Bythinia, Phrygia, Lycia, and all that part of Asia Minor between the Black Sea and the Mediterranean.

2. "Northward" they "pushed" until they conquered Colchis and touched the limit of Mount Caucasus as their northern boundary between the Black Sea and the Caspian. East of the line of the Caspian, they conquered Aria, the Chorasmi, Bactria, and other regions up the river Indus to Mt. Imaus, and crossing the Oxus subdued the eastern Caspii, Sogdiana, and the Sacæ, up to the river Jaxartes on their northern boundary.

3. "Southward" they "pushed" over the territory of the Asiatic Ethiopians, to the Erythræn Sea or Indian Ocean. Passing eastward their line lay along the Persian Gulf, and along the northeastern border of unconquerable Arabia, then southward through Syria, and down into Egypt, following the valley of the Nile, and stretching from the Persian Gulf westward along the southern shore of the Mediterranean, as far as Cyrene.

This "pushing" comprehends, then, the whole history of those invasions with which this resistless Persian "ram" overswept the nationalities of that age and became the great and dominant ruler of the world. He did not push eastward, not because there were no Jews there, but because the Persians were an eastern people, and after they appear in the vision their conquests were in an opposite direction. The great invasion of Greece by Xerxes, with his army of five million, two hundred and eighty-three thousand, warriors and camp followers, was one of the Persians' last and fruitless endeavors at invasion, and it roused the fury of the Grecian "goat," and brought on the ruin of the Persian empire. The pushing forcibly represents the aggressive acts of the Persian government, and this, so far as I know, is the usually accepted interpretation among prophetic students. To limit this whole career of conquest and victory to the mere issuing of a decree "against Daniel's people" in the days of Ahasuerus, is a style of interpretation which is, I think, peculiar to the last new school of prophetic and astronomical students, who can teach school-boys how to calculate ancient eclipses, but whose eclipses when calculated do not seem to agree with the writings of historians or the calculations of other astronomers.

According to the best light I have, the vision cannot be dated from the decree of Ahasuerus to slay the Jews. Whether it can be dated near that time I do not now inquire. I do not enter into the chronological argument; my trouble is with the interpretations and applications of the word of inspiration.

I think this wheel has a broken spoke right here. Better have it mended, or leave the car out of the train. There are other points where I think important scriptures are misunderstood and misapplied.

Writing as I do to day with no book of reference except my Bible, I can say no more at present. But if the cars do not start off and get out of sight too soon, I propose to look and see if there are not other wheels which need new spokes before it is safe to run the train at a very high rate of speed.

Meanwhile, there need be no delay. Men can serve God, spread the truth, give to the poor, do good, and work in the Lord's cause, just as fast as possible, whether this time, or Bro. Stevenson's, or any other is true or not. It would not trouble me very much to see those who are so strong in this theory giving half their goods to feed the poor, or to scatter light and truth "in the regions beyond." I should think salvation had come to their houses, much as it did to the house of Zaccheus of old. But the men who will not be faithful, diligent, or benevolent, except under the pressure of a "definite time" argument, have very little of my fellowship or confidence, I assure you, as an obedient christian.

So if we are christians we shall keep at work serving God, time or no time, and shall do all the good we can, and keep waiting for the Son of God from heaven. May God help us so to do, and guide us in the right way, is the prayer of your Bro. in Christ,

H. L. HASTINGS.

C——, N. H., Feb. 25th, 1865.

For the World's Crisis.

"FEAR NOT! LITTLE FLOCK."

When the sun shall be covered with dark,
And the moon refuses her light,
And the stars from heaven fall thick,
Like the silent dews of night;

When on earth distress of nations,
Pestilence, famine and war;
When the sad sea waves are sounding
With sullen, perpetual war;

When the minds of men are thrilling
With a vague and wild unrest,
And courage fast is failing,
And fear their hearts invest;—

Lift up your heads, ye weeping,
Redemption draweth nigh;
Break into joyful praises
To Him who rules on high.

For lo! with power and glory,
Cometh our King in might,
To take his waiting children
To walk with him in light.

Thank God! we've been victorious,
As always is the right;
We've ended well our warfare,
We've finished our good fight.

L. ELLIOTT.

For the World's Crisis.

QUERIES CONCERNING
The Time, Times, and a Part, and the 1335 Days of Dan. xii.

I. Does not the use of the definite article "the" in the phrase "THE thousand, three hundred and five and thirty days" indicate that this measurement is previously introduced? since otherwise it would have been made proper to have said "A thousand three hundred and five and thirty days" instead of "the," etc.?

II. Then where is this measurement elsewhere brought to view, unless in the seventh verse of the same chapter, by the "time, times, and a part" [margin]. If the latter measurement given to Daniel in this chapter is explanatory of the former, must they not synchronize, and both commence when the Pagan hindering power was "taken out of the way" and the Papal "abomination that maketh desolate set up" in its place in A. D. 533, and both end in 1868?

III. May not the "scattering of the power of the holy people" here referred to as running parallel with this measurement, refer to the Papal persecution mentioned in this connection, instead of the scattering of the Jews? The statement had just been made, "They shall pollute the sanctuary of strength, and shall take away the daily sacrifice, and they shall place the abomination that maketh desolate . . . but the people that do know their God . . . shall fall by the sword and by flame, by captivity, and by spoil, many days."—Dan. 11: 31–33. "How long to the end of these wonders?" [including the deliverance of every one "written in the book"]. Ans. "A time, times, and a part," (or 1335 days, from the setting up the Papal "abomination"), "and when he shall have accomplished to scatter the power of the holy people all these things shall be finished." Daniel "heard but . . understood not" the precise length of this measurement of a "time, times and a part," and inquires, "What shall be (the time to) the end of these things?" that is, from the introduction of the Papal abomination" which was to inflict persecution on the saints by "sword," "flame," "captivity," and "spoil" for "many days." Daniel is told that it is to remain "sealed till the time of the end," when knowledge is to be increased till "the wise shall understand." Then the angel refers him back to the Papal "abomination" before mentioned, and gives a measurement of 1290 days from its setting up to "the time of the end." After this he starts from the same epoch, not with "A thousand three hundred and five and thirty days," but with "THE thousand three hundred and five and thirty days"—reaching to the time Daniel is to stand in his lot—the definite article "THE" indicating allusion to a measurement previously given instead of a new measurement.

IV. Do not the "time, times and a part" in this passage synchronize with the "time, times, and the dividing of time" in Dan. 7: 25, which measures the time of the existence of the Papal horn from its rise till the coming of the Ancient of days? This Papal horn was to rise early enough to "pluck up" three of the ten Roman horns, and as that plucking up process began about A. D. 534, it follows that the Papal horn arose prior to 534, for it could not pluck up others before it existed itself. The "Corrector of heretics" received his diploma A. D. 533; and if "THE 1335 days" synchronize with the "time, times, and a part," and the "time, times, and the dividing of time," reaching to the coming of the Ancient of days, do they not terminate in 1668? The same horn made war with the saints, and prevailed against them UNTIL the Ancient of days came," or as previously stated, a "time, times, and the dividing of time." Does not this measure its existence from 533 to 1868, or till the Ancient of days shall come? W. S.

For the World's Crisis.

THE CRISIS VISIBLY APPROACHING.

BY S. S. BREWER.

We are now nearing the hour when the destiny of over nine hundred millions of human beings will unalterably be fixed. What an overwhelming consideration! But you may be led to inquire, Upon what what basis do you found such an assurance?

First. Consecutive chains of prophecy seem to be converging to a final point in these days.

Second. The symbolic prophecies seem to mark this as the time in which the God of heaven would set up a kingdom which shall never be destroyed.

Third. The chronological prophecies, which are the Almighty's measuring agencies, seem to have laid the last link, so as to have a particular bearing in the days in which we live.

Fourth. The mighty upheavings in the political universe, since the Reign of Terror in France, which broke the iron fetters of Papacy, and prevented the PRIEST KING and tyrannic despot of Rome, with his adulterous spouse, the woman drunk with the blood of saints, and the martyrs of Jesus, from holding the revolutionary elements in abeyance, and has let loose a torrent of ambitious, restless anarchists; hence revolution and counter revolution in France; revolution in China; the Autocrat of Russia ill at ease, and his subjects kept down by the bayonet; South America in a state of anarchy; revolution and anarchy alternately succeeding in rapid succession in Mexico; revolutions in 1848 sweeping over Europe; historic thrones totter, and imperial sceptres snap asunder. On, on, the three Apocalyptic spirits of demons urge their way, fulfilling their presignified missions, "unto the kings of the earth and the whole world." They invade the Italian peninsula. They leap upon the threshold of the Vatican. The mitred Bishop of Rome, who boasted of his infallibility, and, sitting in the chair of St. Peter, the church of the living God, the pillar and ground of truth, against which the gates of hell should not prevail, disguises his hypocritical dignity, and in the garb of a menial skulks away to Gaeta Di Mola, to his worthy protege, king Bomba, of cannoneering and bombarding fame, for protection from his devout subjects of the Holy Roman Catholic Church. Truly these are evil days, when Pontifical infallibility has to quail and flee at the frog-like croakings of schismatics. The sad reverses in the elements of Roman Catholicism seem to be predicted by Habakkuk:—"Shall they not rise up suddenly that shall bite thee, and awake that shall vex thee, and thou shalt be for booties unto them?"

Not only has the old world been shaken by the uprisings of the past two years, but our own republican America has been shaken from centre to circumference by the unclean frog-spirits that have leaped into our senatorial, congressional, and legislative chambers, and after depositing their dragonic spawn of treason and rebellion, they have gone forth inflated with the spirit of their master, swelling, croaking, and tainting the atmosphere with moral putrefaction; which, in return for our voluntary complicity of the north with the southern Pharaohs, has brought upon the nation a baptism of steel, fire, and blood, till the soil of the oppressor, moistened by the tears, sweat, and lacerated bodies of poor victims streaming with blood, is made gory with the life current of thousands of our dear young men.

When Brn. Miller and Himes proclaimed the terminus of the prophetic dates in 1843, not a few of their opponents gave it as their opinion that those dates could not possibly end till about 1866; and here we are gliding swiftly along to that admitted point; whether true or not a few short months will decide.

Fifth. In our humble opinion, we have entered into moments of serious and should be heartfelt interest, amid unparalleled development of character. I fear a large proportion of those professedly looking for the coming of the "Just One" are so destitute of that principle spoken of in Rev. 3: 8, that they see neither their danger nor the remedy. If they are brought to feel and see, under a powerful presentation of truth, they soon relapse again into the theoretical element, and are ready, as they term it, "to contend earnestly for the faith," and hence you constantly see manifest the Scripture declaration,—"Out of the fulness of the heart the mouth speaketh." I admit the necessity of a truthful theory. But I most affectionately and ardently protest by the love of Jesus against remaining in such a state. It is only a frame without the finish; it is only the sails without the wind; it is only the engine without the steam; it is only the organism without the breath of life; it is the without wings; it is a system without a sun; 'tis a watch without a mainspring.

This indwelling, sealing agent is spoken of in Rom. 5: 5; 2 Cor. 1: 22; Gal. 4: 6; Eph. 1: 13, 14. Will the reader please take his Testament and read carefully the above references; it will doubtless do you much good. And now let me inquire, have you now the indwelling of that sealing agent? If not, let me in the spirit of kindness entreat you to seek it, and hasten to present your body a living sacrifice, holy and acceptable unto God, which is your reasonable service. Amen. If you have it not, and feel but very little concerned in the matter, you are so much the more to be pitied. I pray you awake before it is too late. Will you please read the last clause of Rom. 8: 9?

Sixth. I hear many persons say, It is harder now to keep myself right than I ever found it in all my life. That may be very true, for we are forming our characters for the judgment, and all our tempers must be tested; for the Judge will only reward tested virtue. O how necessary, then, that we heed the words of Jesus—"Watch and pray always, that you may escape those things that are coming upon the earth, and stand before the Son of man."

As I look abroad and see the spirit of slumber stealing almost imperceptibly over many, I am reminded of persons that have watched around the bed of a sick friend, and have for some nights been broken of rest; in such a condition, if they sit down or suspend for a moment physical action, they sink into slumber; in like manner, if we suspend our importunities at the throne of heavenly grace, we shall sink into a deadly slumber, from which nothing but the summons of the Judge, amid the dissolution of nature, will ever awake us. Remember the words of Jesus,—"WATCH, LEST COMING SUDDENLY HE FIND YOU SLEEPING." Thy Bro., S. S. BREWER.

Ashburnham Depot, Mass.

For the World's Crisis.

WHAT SPIRIT ARE YE OF?

"And why call ye me Lord, Lord, and do not the things which I say?"—LUKE 6: 46.

These words, which were uttered by our Savior, have of late been impressed upon my mind very forcibly, as I have been led to look abroad upon the professed people of God, and especially those that are looking for the coming of the Lord. But I will not pass my judgment upon any one, but just take the words of Jesus.

Jesus says, "A good tree bringeth not forth corrupt fruit; neither doth a corrupt tree bring forth good fruit; for of thorns men do not gather figs, nor of a bramble bush gather they grapes." "A good man out of the good treasure of his heart bringeth forth that which is good; and an evil man out of the evil treasure of his heart bringeth forth that which is evil: for of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh." Then we may know the tree by the fruit it brings forth. If we see a tree which looks fair outwardly, we expect to find good fruit, but many times are disappointed; just so with many that say, "Lord, Lord," and do not the things that are commanded.

Jesus says, "A new commandment I give unto you, that ye love one another"; but many do not bring forth this fruit. I am sorry to say it, there is envy and strife, evil surmisings, and evil speaking, where should be love. There are many, I fear, who know not what spirit they are of.

It seems from the words which Jesus spake that if a man is good, he will not bring forth evil fruit. Now if there are any who read this professing to love the Lord, and love his people also, and cherish a spirit of enmity or ill will in your hearts, which causes you to misjudge or condemn or injure another, are you doing the things which Jesus says? I feel it is time to awake to the importance of not only saying but doing the things of God. Let us get the beams all out of our eyes, and then we shall be able to pull the mote out of our brother's eye.

The Lord is coming, and who will be ready? None but those who have clean hands and a pure heart. For this I am striving.

M. BELDING.

For the World's Crisis.

SYMPATHY.

Are you poor? So am I. Are you weak? So am I. Have you seen those near and dear to you laid away in the grave? So have I. Do those who can dress better than you turn away from you in disdain, or at best treat you coldly? I have felt that, too. Do you suffer pain, unspeakable pain, both of body and mind? So have I. Do you feel that you are alone, with no friend to whom you can unburden your soul? I have felt that many times. But you know who can speak peace to those who are troubled, and I trust you know how to tell HIM all your sorrows. To us who have few of the comforts, and many of the sorrows of this life,—to us is JESUS indeed precious. We can truly say he is our ALL, for we have no other treasure. My friends and companions in sorrow, may the blessing of our merciful FATHER rest upon you. F. H. CHAMBERLAIN.

☞ The domestic relations precede, and, in our present existence, are worth more than all other social ties. They give the first throb to the heart, and unseal the deep fountains of its love. Home is the chief school of human virtue. Its responsibilities, joys, sorrows, smiles, tears, hopes, and solicitudes, form the chief interest of human life.

For the World's Crisis.

ASTRONOMICAL ITEMS.

Bro. Grant:—On page 34 of "The Sealed Book of Daniel Opened," I mentioned that the moon's latitude at the time of the eclipse of March 8th, B. C. 720, "was north, ascending, and 9 degrees 39 minutes from the node; while at the time of the eclipse of April 25th, B. C. 491, the moon's latitude was north, descending, and her distance from the node was 18 degrees, and 19 minutes." But having omitted to mention that I here meant the opposite node, some do not at first comprehend my meaning. To make this clear, suppose we state it thus:—At the time of the eclipse of March 8th, B. C. 720, the moon's latitude was north ascending, 9 degrees and 39 minutes; while at the time of the eclipse of April 25th, B. C. 491, the moon's latitude was north, descending, and her distance from the node was 5 signs, 18 degrees, and 19 minutes. Then there can be no mistake about the matter.

Now, if to the above 5 signs, 18 degrees, and 19 minutes, we add one degree, we will have 5 signs, 19 degrees, 19 minutes, for the distance from the opposite node; hence one degree nearer the earth's shade in this eclipse; but one degree further from the node at the time of the eclipse, Mar. 8th, B. C. 720. It is therefore clear that all we reduce the moon's distance from the node, to make one eclipse fuller, we add to her distance from the opposite node, at the time of the other eclipse. It is therefore impossible for any astronomical tables, properly arranged, to make all of those eclipses by which chronology is claimed to be so securely sealed.

Among the many other evidences of the incorrectness of Ptolemy's canon, is the eclipse of the moon, as observed at Alexandria, his native place, on the 5th of April, A. D. 125. This being on undisputed ground, it must be made, if the astronomical tables are correct. And if all eclipses under three digits, at that age, are to be set down as invisible, correct tables must eclipse three digits, on the 5th of April, A. D. 125. And since the moon's latitude here was north, descending, and 5 signs, 20 degrees, 20 minutes, no tables thus making the eclipse of April 5th, A. D. 125, can make the one of March the 8th B. C. 720.

"Ye see your calling, brethren, how that not many wise men after the flesh, not many noble, are called." For "the world by wisdom knew not God." And as those persons who, leaning on the wisdom of man, waited to inquire whether "any of the rulers or of the Pharisees believed on him," "perished for lack of knowledge"; should we not, with fear and trembling, "search the Scriptures daily (to see) whether these things are so"? And although we are commanded to call no man "father upon the earth," yet we may thank our heavenly Father for raising up such men as Sir Isaac Newton and James Ferguson, whose combined knowledge and skill have produced the arrangement of astronomical tables on a plan so simple that astronomy is practically brought within the reach of all who wish to test the correctness of our chronology. To Ferguson's plan, which makes eclipses "very near the truth," we have added the later discoveries of modern astronomers, thus reducing his tables to a nicer precision; and having thereby, to the strictest correctness, established a meridian mark by which to regulate our time, we have been enabled to notice with some degree of exactness the beginning, ending and quantity of all the eclipses, both of the sun and moon, which have occurred during the last twelve years. And having thus, by my own personal observation (and not from the opinions of others) learned that my tables make eclipses too near the truth for errors to be discovered by the means within my reach, I can with confidence say that the plan on which they are arranged is is at least correct enough to make all of the eclipses by which our chronology is established, for they were all observed with the naked eye.

Having further examined all of the ancient eclipses that are found on record, we find that our tables make them correspond even to the express language of the historians who saw and spoke of them. Hence it will be impossible for even the most learned astronomers to detect serious errors in our tables until they can produce some new or ancient eclipses recorded by historians of which we now have no knowledge. Since Bro. C. F. Hudson "has obtained the works of Ptolemy, which he is now searching for light in this direction," if any new discoveries or any facts not yet brought to view should be found, we hope he will bring them all to light. Truth is what we want, and nothing but the truth.

Wm. C. Thurman.

Boston, March 1865.

For the World's Crisis.

MEMORIAL.

Resolved, That the Winona Advent Christian Quarterly Conference, in session convened at Utica, Minn., would individually and collectively express our deep sorrow in consequence of the death of our beloved brother and faithful minister, Eld. Charles L. Page, who was one of the first to stand up in the defence of the Advent cause in this State; and who, under God, was one of the main instruments in gathering the Utica and other churches. Eld. Page was a faithful minister and consistent christian. For a few weeks previous to his death, he was engaged heart and hand in a revival of religion at the Raimer's schoolhouse, in Utica, and in his own emphatic words, as he was dying (and away from his home), "he died at his post."

The church, of which he was a member, and the conference to which he belonged, feel that in this dispensation of God's providence, they are suffering an irreparable loss, yet desire to be reconciled to the will of God; and most fervently pray our heavenly Father to sanctify this dispensation of his providence to their present and eternal welfare. The members of this conference, and the church to which he belonged, would tender their heartfelt sympathies to the bereft wife and children, who have been so suddenly and unexpectedly deprived of a well beloved and affectionate husband and father; and we sincerely and prayerfully hope that our sister Mary Page, and her dear children, will be abundantly sustained under this heavy bereavement, by the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ.

Dear Sister Page:—Grace, mercy, and peace, from God our Father, and the Lord Jesus Christ, be and abide with you and your's for ever.

Philip Ramer, Sec.

Utica, Minn.

☞ The brains of a fox will be of little service if you play with the paw of a lion.

The World's Crisis AND SECOND ADVENT MESSENGER.

Boston, Tuesday, March 14, 1865.

CLOSE OF THE VOLUME.

As this is the last number of the present volume, now is the time to pay in advance for the next. Now is a good time also to obtain new subscribers. Let us a make a new effort to spread the light and truth. Our friends have done nobly,—do not get "weary in well-doing." Our time of labor is very short. Let us lose no opportunity for doing good.

We are hoping that "our paper" will increase in interest as we approach the end of this dispensation.

Let it be remembered that those who pay in advance get the paper a half dollar cheaper than if they do not pay till the end of the year. We hope all will pay in advance as far as possible, and it is much better for all concerned.

We hope to be able to make "our paper" just such an one as will benefit every christian reader.

WORCESTER.

We spent Lord's day, March 5th, in Worcester, Mass., and found an increasing interest to hear about the "blessed hope" and its speedy consummation. Their audiences are large and attentive. One was baptized, and others are almost persuaded to be christians; but the fear of man holds them back. How true it is that such fear puts us into a snare of Satan, where we lose our freedom, and become slaves to sin.

THE DISPUTED ECLIPSE.

Our readers will recollect that considerable has been said about the total eclipse of the sun, that happened when Xerxes was about quitting Asia, in his expedition against Greece. Bro. Thurman has put the eclipse in a different place, and at a different time from other writers on chronology and astronomy; and the question is now, who is right? According to Ptolemy's Canon, Xerxes started for Greece, 481–480, B. C., including the winter of 481 and spring of 480. At the time he was ready to march, Herodotus says:—"The sun, quitting his seat in the heavens, disappeared, though there were no clouds, and the air was perfectly serene, and night ensued in the place of day."—Herodotus, B. 7, sec. 37.

According to Ptolemy's canon, the march of Xerxes referred to by Herodotus was, as stated above, B. C. 481–480. He makes the reign of Xerxes begin B. C. 485, and this march in the 4th year of his reign.

The part of the year of B. C. 481, from Jan. 1st to the 19th of July, was in the third year of the 74th Olympiad; hence from July 19th B. C. 481 to July 19th 480, would be the fourth year of the 74th Olympiad; and according to Herodotus, on whom we are dependent for our historic information, Xerxes' march into Greece took place when the Greeks were celebrating their Olympic games; consequently must have been in the fourth year of some olympiad.

As the march of Xerxes is put down by Ptolemy in the year 481, and by Herodotus in the fourth year of the Olympic games, in which year this noted eclipse must happen; then if dates are right in Ptolemy, a total eclipse should be found at Sardis, in B. C. 481, after the 19th July, and before July 19th, B. C. 480.

Bro. Thurman says, "there was no eclipse" of the sun seen at Sardis, in B. C. 481, which will answer the description given by the historian; neither in B. C. 477, which would be the next fourth Olympic year, and that the same is true of 473, 469, and 465, which are all the fourth Olympic years in the reign of Artaxerxes, according to Ptolemy, except B. C. 485, the year in which he began to reign, and in which there was no eclipse at Sardis, corresponding with the historian.

For this reason, Bro. T. claims that Ptolemy's date for the reign of Xerxes must be incorrect, if we rely upon what Herodotus says on a point where he would not be likely to be mistaken;—that the Greeks "were celebrating the Olympic games" the year that Xerxes invaded Greece.—(Herodotus, B. 8, S. 26.) Bro. Thurman's ability to calculate eclipses, and his tables, have been called in question because of his statements concerning this eclipse.

A few days since, we called upon an Astronomical Professor at Harvard, in Cambridge, Mass., and gathered the following information concerning this eclipse mentioned by Herodotus.

It is from a large quarto volume of the "Transactions of the Royal Society of London, in 1853," pp. 198–9.

We will first give the author's translation of Herodotus' description of the eclipse:—

"With spring, the army [of the Persians,] being ready, set out from Sardes on its march to Abydos; and as it was setting out, the sun leaving his seat in heaven was invisible, when there were no clouds, but a perfectly clear sky, and instead of day it became night."

"This account," says the writer, "interpreted as a record of a total eclipse of the sun, has given great trouble to chronologers, and not without reason. The only solar eclipse which it is worth while even to examine is that in the morning of April, B. C. 481."

"If a diagram is constructed to exhibit the path of the shadow in this eclipse over the earth, and if it is remarked that the longitude of Sardes is about twenty-eight degrees east, it will be found that there could not be even a partial eclipse for Sardes, the whole penumbra having entered completely upon the earth before sunrise at Sardes. . . . If the moon's longitude were diminished to make this eclipse possible, it must also be diminished in B. C. 585, and that would make the eclipse of Thales impossible, as the moon would not then have entered upon the sun's disk before sunset."

"Herodotus repeatedly expresses himself doubtful on matters of detail which occurred during the movements of Xerxes on the eastern side of the Ægean Sea."

It "would seem to be much more plausible if we suppose the information received by Herodotus was wrong in one particular, and that the observation in question was an eclipse of the moon, instead of the sun.

Now there was an eclipse of the moon on the morning of the 14th of March, B. C. 479, which answers well to the conditions of the history." "G. B. Airy, Royal Observatory, Greenwich, 1852, Dec. 10th."

From the foregoing, it will be seen that Bro. Thurman is most fully sustained by "Prof. Airy, the astronomer Royale," of the "Royal Observatory, Greenwich," London, when he says, "There was no eclipse" at Sardis, at the time when Ptolemy's canon puts the march of Xerxes. We do not know that we can refer to any higher authority than that just quoted from Prof. Airy.

He says, "The only solar eclipse, which it is worth while even to examine, is that in the morning of the 19th of April, B. C. 481." But this was in the third year of the Olympiad, instead of the fourth as stated by Herodotus; the fourth year not beginning till July; so that if he had found an eclipse there, it would not have answered the historic description. But "the only solar eclipse which it is worth while to examine," to correspond with Ptolemy's canon is "not . . . even a partial eclipse for Sardes." So Bro. Thurman's tables show.

But it seems that after all this, Prof. Airy does not suspect that the fault is in Ptolemy's Canon, but as "Herodotus repeatedly expressed himself doubtful on matters of detail which occurred during the movements of Xerxes on the eastern side of the Ægean sea," it "would seem to be much more plausible . . . that the observation in question was an eclipse of the moon, instead of the sun."

To our mind, it would look "much more plausible," as suggested by Bro. Thurman, that the eclipse took place at Celænæ, in the autumn or winter, where an eclipse of the sun is found, during the march of Xerxes from Asia to Greece. Please read again Herodotus' description of the eclipse: "The sun leaving his seat in the heaven was invisible, when there were no clouds, but a perfectly clear sky; and instead of day it became night.

But even supposing it was an eclipse of the moon, he has to go on to March B. C. 479, which was the first year of the Olympiad, instead of the fourth; hence would neither agree with Herodotus or Ptolemy.

THE ECLIPSE OF B. C. 720.

After reading the article in this paper by Bro. Thurman, headed "Astronomical Items," we took occasion to examine a very able French work on eclipses, by. M. Pingre, of the French Academy of Science. In this work we find a record of the eclipses referred to by Bro. Thurman in his article. The one on the 8th of March, B. C. 720, is put down as only three-fourths of a digit; the one on the 25th of April, B. C. 491, as one digit, and the one in A. D. 125, one digit and a quarter; so that all three of the eclipses amount to only three digits, which is as small as would be noticed. But if the one in A. D. 125 was observed, the moon must have been eclipsed as many as three digits, as shown by Bro. Thurman; and in that case there would be no eclipse on the 8th of March, B. C. 720, as shown by Bro. T. See pp. 32–35 in the "Sealed book of Daniel Opened."

It is very evident that an eclipse of the moon, of only three-fourths of a digit, was not seen at Babylon; but if enough be added to make a visible eclipse as recorded in A. D. 125, there could have been none at all at B. at the time specified.

As the eclipse of the moon, March 8th, B. C. 720, according to Ptolemy's Canon, is said to be one of those "observed" at Babylon, it must have been not less than three digits; whereas it was only about one digit. But if this be increased in size, the undisputed one in A. D. 125, would be so reduced as not to be seen.

THE PROVIDENCE DISCUSSION.

The following candid notice of our discussion in Providence, with Mr. J. G. Fish, is from the "Providence Evening Press" of Feb. 18th.

"The discussion between J. G. Fish of Michigan, Spiritualist, and Elder Miles Grant of Boston, Adventist, closed last evening. The meetings have been very fully attended, and the audiences were deeply interested. The discussion was conducted in excellent temper, there not having been the least jarring or interruption during the entire time. The gentleman chosen to preside, Mr. L. K. Joslin, performed his duties most acceptably to the disputants and the audience. At the close, Elder Grant said the chairman had presided with the utmost fairness and impartiality, and he moved that a vote of thanks be passed; this was seconded by Mr. Fish, and unanimously ratified by the audience.

A report of the debate is not proposed. We can merely state that it took an unexpected turn, Elder Grant admitting the verity and reality of the so-called spiritual manifestations, from the raps on tables to the exhibition of hands in the circles of the Davenport boys, but they were all the work of demons. These beings, fallen angels, frequently mentioned in the Scriptures, and manifesting themselves in all ages, performed all the wonders now imputed to departed and disembodied spirits. Elder Grant denied the possibility of spirit intercourse, there being no such entities as human spirits. When man dies there is no conscious existence; the body goes to decay, and there it sleeps till the resurrection, when a new body is formed, and the man comes forth as he was, only having a purified body. Then follows the general judgment, when the righteous occupy the new Jerusalem and the wicked are burned, utterly destroyed—annihilated. Thus in the belief of Elder Grant, there is no immortality, as such, only immortality as outwrought by life in Christ.

Mr. Fish, on the contrary, affirmed that man was endowed with a soul, mysteriously united with the body, capable of an independent conscious existence, which it assumed at what is called death. In proof of this position he cited various phenomena, and he added as a probable or incidental proof the belief which has prevailed in all ages of the soul's existence. The Scriptures were also appealed to and many things therein noted, cited as evidence of the soul's existence after disservered from the body. He also examined the demon theory, and made a very learned and thorough examination of the word and its uses, claiming that it did not cover the ground assumed by his opponent. This was the general tenor of the debate and the main points brought out."

Since the discussion, our opponent writes us as follows:—

Elder Miles Grant: Dear Sir,—We were both so absorbed by our friends while in Providence, that we had little time for personal acquaintance, which I very much regretted. I was exceedingly pleased with the cordial feeling that prevailed all through the debate; and here allow me to say that in all the debates I have held with those who differ from me in religious belief, I have never met one with whom it was such a pleasure to debate with as yourself. Your candor, your honesty, fairness, acquaintance with history, religion, and philosophy, made it profitable to me."

MESSIAH, OR CHRIST.

Messiah in the Hebrew, and Christ in the Greek language, mean the same thing,—the anointed one. Dr. Clarke says:—

"In the Hebrew language, mashach signifies to anoint; and mashiach, the anointed person. . . . No person ever had the title Mashiach, the anointed one, but Jesus, The Christ. . . . Hence he is called the Messias, a corruption of the word ha-mashiach, the anointed one, in Hebrew, which gave birth to Xristos, ho-Christos, which has precisely the same signification in Greek."—See Clarke on Matt. 1: 16.

In Luke 2: 11, we read the declaration of the angels to the shepherds of Judea, as follows:—"Unto you is born this day, in the city of David, a Savior, which is Christ the Lord," hos este kristos kurios,—which is the anointed Lord. Here is positive proof that he was the anointed one, or the Messiah, when he was born.

A VALUABLE SOAP.

Whenever we meet with any thing that we know would be valuable to our readers, we take pleasure in bringing it to their notice. While in Providence, a few days since, we had a fine opportunity of seeing the "Excelsior Family Soap" tested; and we were surprised at the exhibition of its excellent qualities. It is manufactured in Boston, Mass., by Bro. E. G. Kingsbury.

The soap appears to be the most harmless and effective of any we ever saw. The following are a few of its many recommendations, which are most fully sustained by the experience of those who try it:—

1st. This preparation is free from all deleterious qualities, and perfectly harmless. Its use will not injure the skin, or the most delicate fabrics.

2d. It saves 1–3 of the rubbing required in the use of other soap; washing can be done in about half the time, as the clothes do not require boiling, thus saving fuel and labor that is required by washing with other kinds of soap, and the necessity of having steam in the house.

3d. Flannels and colored goods can be washed with the ease of cotton or linen without fulling or shrinking. Grease spots of any kind are warranted to be perfectly removed in a short time from carpets and woolen goods.

4th. It will instantly remove grease and dirt from paint without any water whatever; protecting windows, carpets and furniture from suds or slops. The worst bilge-water stains removed from paint immediately, by applying the soap with a sponge.

5th. For cleansing, softening or healing the skin, or to prevent chapped hands, it is unequaled.

6th. It is acknowledged by all who have tested its superior qualities, to be one of the greatest improvements of the age, and its use is indispensable to the comfort of every family, and the convenience of every hotel, ship, steamboat, or laundry.

Manufactured and sold by E. G Kingsbury, No. 167 Hanover Street, Boston. Address as above. All cash orders will be promptly attended to. Price, $7.00 for 100 lbs.—less quantity at the rate of $8.00.

After thoroughly testing the article, we are fully satisfied that it is the best family soap of which we have any knowledge. Our readers need not be afraid to purchase the article of the agents.

SUNLIGHT.

But few are aware of the importance of sunlight in their dwellings. We all know that plants droop, become sickly and pale, when deprived of the light of the sun and fresh air. Sunlight is as essential for the vigorous growth of man as it is for vegetation. Many a one is wasting away merely because they spend their time in rooms deprived of sunlight. Many seem to think more of saving the colors of their carpets than in their faces. Such is poor economy.

The following from Mrs. Harriet Beecher Stowe, is to the point:—

"Let anybody travel, as I did last year, through the valley of the Connecticut, and observe the houses. All clean and white and neat and well-to-do, with their turfy yards and their breezy great elms—but all shut up from basement to attic, as if the inmates had all sold out and gone to China. Not a window blind open above or below. Is the house inhabited? No—yes—there is a faint stream of blue smoke from the kitchen-chimney, and half a window-blind open in some distant back part of the house. They are living there in the dim shadows, bleaching like potato-sprouts in the cellar.

'Our house' shall be set on a south-east line, so that there shall not be a sunless room in it, and windows shall be so arranged that it can be traversed and transpierced through and through with those bright shafts of light which come straight from God.

'Our house' shall not be blockaded with a dank, dripping mass of shrubbery set plumb against the windows, keeping out light and air. There shall be room all around it for breezes to sweep, and sunshine to sweeten and dry and vivify; and I would warn all good souls who begin life by setting out two little evergreen-trees within a foot of each of their front-windows, that these trees will grow and increase till their front-rooms will be brooded over by a sombre, stifling shadow fit only for ravens to croak in.

One would think, by the way some people hasten to convert a very narrow front-yard into a dismal jungle, that the only danger of our New England climate was sunstroke. Ah, in those drizzling months which form at least one-half of our life here, what sullen, censorious, uncomfortable, unhealthy thoughts are bred of living in dark, chilly rooms, behind such dripping thickets! Our neighbors' faults assume a deeper hue,—life seems a dismal thing,—our very religion grows mouldy.

My idea of a house is, that, as far as is consistent with shelter and reasonable privacy, it should give you on first entering an open, breezy, out-door freshness of sensation. Every window should be a picture; sun and trees and clouds and green grass should seem never to be far from us. 'Our house' may shade, but not darken us. 'Our house' shall have bow-windows, many, sunny, and airy—not for the purpose of being cleaned and shut up, but to be open and enjoyed. There shall be long verandas above and below, where invalids may walk dry-shod, and enjoy open-air recreation in wettest weather. In short, I will try to have 'our house' combine as far as possible the sunny, joyous, fresh life of a gypsy in the fields and woods, with the quiet and neatness and comfort and shelter of a roof, rooms, floors, and carpets."

THE NEW $2000 TRACT FUND.

We, the undersigned, agree to give the sums affixed to our names, for the purpose of raising two thousand dollars to aid the Christian Publication Society in the gratuitous distribution of tracts.

Previous donations	$692.34
S. C. Johnson	.25
B. Perham	1.00
A sister	2.00
J. M. Stetler	10.00
J. Converse	.50
J. E. Phelps	2.50
J. D.	10.00
—— Hall	7.00
Mrs. R. B. D.	1.25

The Little Tract Preachers.

A brother writes from Vermont:—

"I am sending them to ministers and people of different denominations in New Hampshire and Vermont; and I hope the brethren and sisters who are able will send on money to the New Tract Fund, so that the truth may be sent out broadcast in every direction,—and also to the Bank of the Lord's Poor, so that they may have the Crisis without embarrassment to the office. I am a poor man, yet here is $1.00 for another small share in the Bank of the Lord's Poor, and $1.00 for another small share in the New Tract Fund. Yours looking for Jesus, the dear and lovely Redeemer, who will soon come and reward us a thousand fold for all we do for him and for his dear saints." B. Perham.

Vernon, Vt.

A Hint to Business Men.

A brother writes from Iowa:—

"If you will send me some tracts, I will see that they are distributed where they will do some good. I have just returned from a trip on business, and find I can attend to my business affairs and scatter tracts too. I had some with me, and gave them away. I am going again soon, and would like to have some more to take with me. Please send me something to show to a perishing world that they are not immortal; for I verily believe that immortal-soul-ism is the devil's stronghold. If we can remove that belief from the minds of a dying world, Spiritualism, and all other isms, fall to the ground." J. W. Burroughs.

Floyd, Iowa.

POOR FUND DONATIONS.

To pay for Papers sent to the Poor.

Whole number sent free 800. Amount $2000.00.

Previous donations	$821.73
L. C. Johnson	.50
J. R. Hall	.50
B. Perham	1.00
A Sister	2.50
J. M. Stetler	10.00
L. Bullard	.75
C. C. Bragg	.50
A. M. Barnes	1.00
Sue K. (two ear rings and one finger ring)	2.75
S. W. W. (one plain gold ring)	1.25

A sister in Maine writes:—

"I am a widow with four small children to take care of, and have to work hard for a living; and I know how to pity the widow and the fatherless. You will therefore, after paying my subscription, apply the balance of the money enclosed to some one who is too poor to pay for themselves." L. B.

Golden Offerings.

Still they come, blessing both giver and receiver. Two ear rings and a finger ring, from a sister in Skippack, Pa., for one of the Lord's poor.

"Please sell the enclosed rings, and credit the proceeds to the poor sister in Mina, N. Y., (Crisis, Feb. 14,) and send her the paper as long as the jewelry will pay. [Sold for $2.75.] I have not worn such useless ornaments for some years, and never intend to any more. In hope of the kingdom, Sue K.

A good resolution. Keep it, sister; and, having that inward adorning of the heart, which is precious in His sight, you shall, ere long, shine as the sun in the kingdom of your Father.

Here comes another from North Bennington, Vt. It is a plain gold ring, which a brother sends for his wife:

"We are poor in this world's goods, yet we want to help the good cause, and aid in sending the paper to the poor. So we send you a gold ring, which we have had about fifteen years, unworn since 1854, the worth of which I wish to go for the help of the poor." s. w. w.

We have put it into the Lord's Bank. Some one of his poor will be blessed by it, and pray for blessings on the giver.

Another from South Poland, Me. A sister there has read the articles on Gold Rings, and thinks she can put the one she has to a better use, where it will do more good:—

"I have but little money, but I have a gold ring that was given to me, which I do not value as highly as I should a few tracts, to read and give away. Please dispose of it, and send me tracts for whatever it brings." Mrs. D.

It sold for $1.25, for which we send you 100 different tracts. The ring never did anybody any good. The tracts will. When you have read, and got from them all the food you can, you may lend them to a hundred different persons, and they to a hundred more, and so on from one to another, who shall each, perhaps, get from them, as from so many inexhaustible cruses, as much life-giving food as you did. And when you stand at last before the throne, how great will be your joy to behold by your side, brought there, it may be, by means of your converted ring, a hundred happy souls, shining in glory forever, gems in your crown of rejoicing. w. b. h.

Our Volunteer Agents.

Report for week ending March 11th.

Whole number of new subscribers in the week, 50. By the efforts of the following brethren, 30:—

One each—By L. Bodtell, Rachel Call, J. Carr, A. Findlay, B. Grosvener, G. L. Humphreyville, W. M. Ingham, D F Leavitt, E Phelps, C Robinson, C F Sweet, Susie L Smith, J Sawyer, J M Stetler, L Webster, B C Winsby.
Two each—By H K Flagg, G G Godfrey, G W Stetson.
Three—By J. G. Hook.
Five—By W. Deverell and S. H. Dearborn.
Total new, 50.

Change of Price.

The prices of the following works, for sale at this office, have been advanced by the publishers as follows:—

Bible Student's Library (for the set),
By mail—cloth, $5.00; paper, $2.50.
By express—cloth, $4.00; paper, $2.00.
Dept and Grace, post paid, $1.50.
Christ our Life, post paid, cloth, 75c; paper, 45c.
Hudson's Tracts, 5 cents each, postage 2 cts.
Christian Lyre, 80c; by mail, 85c.
Social Hymns, 15 cts; eight for $1.00.
Cook Book, 15 cts; postage 2c.
Diphtheria, 10 cts; postage 2c.

For the World's Crisis.

BRO. WALTER PRATT.

The friends of Bro. Walter Pratt will regret to learn that he is prostrate on a bed of sickness. I visited him this morning, and learned that his physicians have very little hope of his recovery; but if he does, it will take a long time. He is so low that he is unable to speak, except in the faintest whisper. I would ask those with whom and for whom he has labored in days past, when he was in the enjoyment of health, to remember him at a throne of grace, and also to remember that he is poor and needs help.

Now, brethren, please turn and read Matt. 25th chap., commencing with the 34th verse, to the end of the chapter, then just write a few lines of comfort and encouragement, and in the letter enclose the amount that duty demands, and send it to him.

Direct Eld. W. Pratt, No. 4 Poplar Place, Boston, Mass. C. Goodrich.

Boston, Mar. 11th.

P. S.—I insert this in the Crisis, with Bro. Grant's permission, without consulting Bro. Pratt. c. g.

For the World's Crisis.

CONFERENCE REPORT.

The conference at Cornville, Me., commenced Dec. 15th, at ten A. M. Prayer and social meeting through the day. Very interesting. Sermon in the evening by Bro. L. L. Howard, from Luke 17: 32.

Saturday morning, prayer meeting at nine o'clock, which continued until twelve. Afternoon, sermon by Bro. N. J. Loughborough, from Joel 2: 18, 19. Evening, sermon by the same, from Matt. 5: 5.

Sunday morning, prayer and social meeting. Sermon at half past ten by Bro. D. Hanscomb, from 1 Pet. 1: 3–5. Afternoon, sermon by L. L. Howard, from John 3: 16. Evening, interesting prayer and social meeting.

The conference was one of interest, leaving good and lasting impressions on our minds. The truth is on the advance in this place.

Chas. Stratton, Clerk pro tem.

For the World's Crisis.

HOW TO SILENCE A BATTERY.

When a Spiritualist, or one having one of those seducing spirits, in order to teach you the doctrine of devils, speaks great swelling words, and pretends to get the spirit of some deceased friend to come and put out the lights, tip up the table, knock down the book case, and then heal several of your acquaintances, just ask him to be good enough to do one more thing,—see if he will attempt to heal one case of malady in the name of Jesus Christ of Nazareth. Show him Acts 19: 15 in connection with Mark 9: 39. S. B. Colton.

Hartford, Ct.

Correspondence.

From Bro. H. K. Flagg.

Bro. Grant:—I send another subscriber for the Crisis, will send more soon. Since the meetings commenced at Natick, about fifty have been blest, including backsliders and many who for the first time have started in the service of the Lord. The meetings continue about every other evening. Bro. Benjamin Roberts is laboring with them to good acceptance, and I hear that others are still coming out. I am laboring alone with the church here at River Point, other duties having called Bro. Bellows away. My health is very poor indeed. Many days I feel as though I could hardly drag one foot before the other. But O! when I think of the years I remained in Egypt, and the short time we have to labor in the vineyard of the Lord, I cannot find time to rest. Sometimes when I get through at one place, I think I will now rest. But then the Macedonian cry forbids it. I want an abundant entrance into the kingdom of God. I must improve the talent given me. There is a crown for me, if faithful, only a little from this. And O! shall I ever be found worthy to obtain it? And will it glitter with some stars, for some poor souls saved through my humble efforts? God knows. I love him, I know I do. I love his truth, and all who love it, too. And e'er the close of '68 I expect to stand with Daniel, and all the redeemed in the holy city. But how many poor souls are slumbering and sleeping in the dark, lights out, oil gone, and they don't know it.

I cannot rest. I cannot sleep. It is the last effort. Hope gives strength. The work is not done, it still goes on, and almost every evening is made glad with shouts of new ones just from the highways and hedges. Glory to God! It does cheer my heart. Although I feel sad, worn out and weary, I have strength and a will yet to shout, sing and praise God for his goodness and faithful promises. How many are the sad hours and weepings of a poor preacher who is waiting to take his life in his hand, and go out among the poor to labor for the salvation of sinners, in highways and hedges. It is a very nice thing sometimes to go and preach to old churches when you can meet with friends who are glad to see you and take an interest in your welfare; but how few there are even among Advent preachers, who are willing to go and preach among the poor of the flock, when there is only now and then one who seems glad to see you, or has a spare bed for your weary limbs, or would even give you a crust of bread when hungry.

> But, then, when darkest we can hope,
> And look for coming dawn;
> The darkest night must fade away
> Before the light of morn.

Times and things change. By-and-by the enemy's walls begin to show weakness and fall before the truth of God, his guns become silent, and deserters come over on Zion's side. Hearts open, tables are spread, beds are plenty, the fatted calf killed, and shouts are heard throughout the camp. And the prayers, songs of praise and exhortations of the little ones, together with the rout of the enemy, are tokens of joy to the preacher, that his humble efforts in the Lord may not have been in vain.

The church here has been dwindling away for some time. Some had moved away, and others had backslidden; and there was but a small remnant left to work for God. The meetings have continued here but one week, and already there are signs of a good work. There were a few good souls who were willing to work for the salvation of sinners. Some have already started. Conviction seems to deepen every evening, and the meetings grow more solemn and attentive. One arose and requested prayers last evening, who has been a Spiritualist, and also a medium. She made an excellent confession, resolving to live only for the Lord. When I can see one of the Spiritual mediums come over, it looks like taking one of the enemy's generals. But then in our warfare we make no exchange of prisoners, so we rank all alike. Pray for me and us, ye praying ones. H. K. Flagg.

From Eld. Wm. Sweet.

Bro. Grant:—I left home, with my wife and second daughter, the last of December, for Iowa, a distance of seventy miles, on a visit, to see an aged mother-in-law, feeble in health, not long to live. I preached once, and heard a minister try hard to prove in a sermon that the infant race were conceived and born in sin, totally depraved. I thought that Jesus taught a different doctrine when he took them up in his arms and blessed them, and said, "of such is the kingdom of God." We are to be like them in innocence, to enter the kingdom. After a short visit we left for Hesper, on the State line in Iowa, where I preached four times to some kind and warm friends in the Lord. The young people gave the best of attention. I think some good impressions were made on tender minds. I then left for Canton, Minn., some eight miles, where I preached twice to a full house of attentive hearers. The Brn. Barsels were there. They are trying to serve the Lord, and make their way into the coming kingdom. We have some good brethren there. Duty called me to leave them, in the Lord's care, for home. On reaching home, learned Eld. C. S. Page had commenced a series of meetings at the Raimer school-house in Utica. I went by his request, to aid him in carrying on these meetings. The Freewill Baptist minister, Eld. Kelly, is a liberal man. We all united for a revival of God's work in that place. The Lord heard prayer, and the saints were revived, and some backsliders reclaimed, and numbers of penitent sinners were converted to God. I thought they had plenty of help, so I left about the 15th of January, with my wife, for Ottowa, La Sœur Co., Minn., a distance of about one hundred and thirty miles. We drove through to Bro. Meeker's in three days, then to Ottowa twelve miles; so after waiting two days for others to fill their appointments, I commenced a series of meetings in Ottowa village, for eleven days, and notwithstanding our time was limited, and the war spirit prevailed, and some opposition from the E. P. Methodists, and some singing schools, and spelling schools in the place during the time, and stormy weather, all things considered we had most of the time good attendance by the church of about twenty members. They are trying to live through opposition. The ruling Elder, Bro. Scott, is their pastor. He is generally loved and respected by all; his health being rather poor, he is not able to devote his time to the work of the ministry. They expect Eld. P. S. Deyo to come and preach with them for the year to come. There is a large field for gospel labor in that region, extending some thirty-three miles west to Garden City. I had not time to go there as I expected. Most of the outsiders are friendly to us, and attended our meetings all through. I think the word took deep root in some minds, and the fruit will be seen hereafter. I was in hopes some would come forward that did not move during our meetings there. I gave way for E. P. Methodists to commence their protracted meetings. So I reluctantly left for home, after commending them to God in prayer and the word of his grace.

I reached home in three days, Feb. 11th. I preached the funeral sermon of Bro. Briggs, who died the 24th of last July at Ottowa. He died in hope of life in the resurrection from the dead only through Christ. The church chose a new Clerk, and I admisistered communion to them before I left. But to our grief, on our return home we heard of the sudden death of our much beloved Eld C. S. Page. He had preached his last sermon the evening after I left at the Raimer school-house, and on Greenwood Prairie the Sunday following he preached his last sermon, some fourteen miles from home. He was taken sick so suddenly, and so severe was the attack, he did not get home, but died on his way home, some six miles from his children; his dear wife only got there one day before his death, to comfort him in his last dying hours. His son came in time to speak a few words to his father, and hear his dying advice. I was glad to learn by Sr. Leonard, that Eld. Page died a true christian, strong in the true faith he preached to others, saying he should sleep in death, but a little while, till Jesus comes to raise the dead to life. He prayed for all his family, the ministry, and church. Eld. Page was the first minister of our faith to back me up in this State. I feel that my right hand man is gone. My prayer is, Lord, help! for the godly man ceaseth! Sleep on, brother, till the great Lifegiver comes. Even so come, Lord Jesus, come quickly. Amen.

Jefferson, Minn. Eld. Wm. Sweet.

From Bro. R. E. Ladd.

Bro. Grant:—I wish to give notice through the Crisis, to brethren and sisters who have always been heartily welcomed at our house in West Springfield, that we have sold our place, and taken rooms for boarding in the city; and shall not be able, as heretofore, to accommodate the brethren when passing. I give this notice to save such as might not know the fact a journey "over the river" to what was once our home, and the home of pilgrims. We are getting near our final home.

Springfield, Mass., Mar. 10th, 1865.

From Bro. C. F. Sweet.

Bro. Grant:—Our Master has well and truly said, "In the world ye shall have tribulation." In vain do men try to change the truth. I have been at my own home with my family but four days since last November. Spent the month of February in Pennsylvania, and expected to stay longer with the brethren in that State; but on Wednesday last received a telegram stating my oldest son was drafted. I immediately came to his assistance. But how the thing will turn I know not. I hope I shall be able to raise means to clear him, but I am in a hard place for a "noncombatant" father. Money will deliver him, but the poor man has to suffer often for the want thereof.

I have been laboring this winter for the spread of truth, and the salvation of men. Have had some blessed meetings. Organized one church of some dozen members at Jackson, Pa. Expect to spend a week with them in July next, if the Lord will; also at Chatham Valley. My labors have been, are, and I expect will be, constant and untiring, while my life and health are continued. My trust is in God. He holds "the winds in his fist." He is my Shepherd. My foes shall not triumph over me forever, nor the Gentile governments oppress my poverty; for "a King shall reign in righteousness, and princes rule in judgment." Then shall He make wars to cease to the ends of the earth.

Dear brethren and sisters all, who love to pray, remember your unworthy and afflicted brother and family, and ask the Lord to direct, and overrule for our salvation and his glory. I feel willing to suffer with Jesus, so that I may be glorified with him.

Albion, March 3, 1865. C. F. SWEET.

From a Campbellite Brother in Illinois.

He calls for a package of Advent tracts, and says:—"For the last nine years I have been reading and meditating upon the Scriptures of divine truth, and have had serious doubts and misgivings as to the many phantasies and notions taught for truth by a majority of the so called ministers of the gospel. I have been, by association, a Campbellite; but at this time I am almost disconnected with that sect. You are aware what that denomination teaches in regard to the kingdom, sketched at by the old prophets and talked of by the Savior and his apostles. This, I do not now understand to be the case. The future and everlasting kingdom of God and the above named Campbellite kingdom can no more run together than can two parallel lines, and bear no resemblance to each other whatever. It was not until lately that I had an opportunity to hear a more reasonable doctrine taught, by the Advent brethren and by the Crisis, your noble paper, to which I am a subscriber, and shall continue to be while I regard the truth, and for which I shall try this coming summer to get subscribers. I am living in a town where there are no Advent brethren. They are known here only as a hiss and a by-word. But, nevertheless, after a careful and, I trust, a prayerful investigation of your doctrines, I have dissented from the old school of popular heathenism,—that a dead man can be alive. Pray for me, that I may be led into all truth, that God may have the praise. In hope of eternal life, yours fraternally, R. HUDSPETH.

Bro. Sweet writes from Bourbon, Ind.:—

"I had occasion to come into the swamps of Indiana, where I have got acquainted with some of the inhabitants. I fetched some of the tracts you sent me some eight or nine months ago, which I have distributed among them. A great many believe strongly in the new doctrine, as they call it. I lend my paper as often as it comes, and they are greatly taken up with it, and say they will subscribe for it. If you have any more tracts for the poor, I think here is the place where they are needed. Many come to my camp every Sabbath for information on the subject, which I give as far as I am able. The truth is taking deep root."

BRO. G. G. GODFREY writes from Exeter, Wis.: "We have recently organized as a church of Christ, with (at present) thirty members. Preaching every two weeks by Bro. N. A. Hitchcock. Though scattered, we meet for prayer and exhortation, and I trust are of that number who strive to give heed to the admonition of the Savior, to have our loins girded about and lights burning, like unto men that wait for their Lord, knowing that when he shall appear this corruptible, groaning condition shall be changed for one of eternal joy."

BRO. P. S. W. DEYO writes from New Hartford, Iowa: "I have been at this place a little over two weeks. The Lord has blessed us. Praise his name. Fifteen have been baptized, more to follow, and quite a number of backsliders reclaimed. Such crowds to hear, I have not seen for a long time. They fill the house as soon as sundown, so as to get seats."

Obituaries.

JOHN CLAY.

Died in Piermont, N. H., Feb. 23d, 1865, of apoplexy, Bro. John Clay, aged sixty-seven years.

Our brother embraced Christ when about nineteen years of age, and united with the Freewill Baptists. In 1843 he embraced the doctrine of the literal coming of Christ. Since that time he has never, as he said, doubted the truthfulness of that doctrine. He often said, "I hope the Lord will soon come." His death was very sudden, living only six hours after he was taken. He leaves a wife and ten children to mourn their loss. The funeral was attended by the writer, at the meeting-house near by, where he years before had invested some five hundred dollars for a place to worship God in; where a large collection of friends showed their respect for one that had so long lived in their midst. May this death be sanctified to the good of surviving friends. J. G. SMITH.

A. E. MARTINDALE.

Died in South Ashburnham, Mass., Dec. 20th, 1864, Addie E. Martindale, daughter of Henry and Elizabeth Martindale, aged five years, one month, and seventeen days.

She said to her mother when first taken sick, "I want to sleep with my brothers and sister." "What, my dear; do you want to leave me?" She then replied, "It wont make eny difference; we shall meet again." May the blessing of God rest upon these afflicted parents, who have laid away their last darling, and prepare them to meet the dear ones, when they shall "come again from the land of the enemy."

The funeral was attended by the writer, setting forth the origin, nature, and remedy for death.

S. S. BREWER.

MARTHA A. HORN.

Died in Athens, Me., Jan. 19th, 1865, Martha A., wife of David Horn, aged thirty-seven years.

By this bereavement the husband has lost a kind and faithful companion, the children a very dear mother, and a large circle of friends one whom they loved. About two years ago our sister made a public confession of her faith, and has lived and died looking for the soon coming of Christ. May the God of all grace comfort the mourning friends here, and gather them to Mount Zion when Jesus comes. Sermon by the writer, from Eccl. 9: 10.

CHARLES STRATTON.

MARY PEACOCK.

Died in Gardiner, Me., March 1st, 1865, Sr. Mary, wife of Bro. George Peacock, aged fifty-one years and ten months.

Sr. Peacock was a kind and affectionate wife and mother, and her companion and children sorrow deeply, but not as others who have no hope, for they believe that she is

"Asleep in Jesus, blessed sleep,
From which none ever wake to weep."

May the Lord comfort and sustain them in this time of affliction. H. D. REED.

JAMES M. GASPER.

Died in Baltimore, in the U. S. General Hospital, James M. Gasper, of Surry, Me., of Co. C, 1st Me. Vol., Nov. 27th, 1864, aged thirty-eight years and one month.

He leaves a wife, seven children, father and mother, with several brothers and sisters. Friend Gasper was a dutiful son, an affectionate husband, a fond parent, kind and active neighbor, and a loyal citizen. His hope took hold on Jesus and the resurrection. THOMAS SMITH.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

Liverpool Feb. 25th, Queenstown 26th.
News unimportant.

The Suez canal, which has been six years in constructing, is completed. It connects the Mediterranean and Red seas, and is ninety miles long, forty feet wide and four feet deep; but it is expected in due time to reach a width at the surface of 330 feet, and to attain a depth of twenty feet.

The Russian government is making large appropriations for organizing schools and colleges for the instruction of the emancipated serfs. Books are to be purchased for the poorer peasants, and other steps taken to diffuse the blessings of education.

THREE DAYS LATER.

Napoleon's preface to his "Life of Julius Cæsar" is published in all the London journals. The Pope has ordered its immediate examination when published.

ITALY.

The King has signed an amnesty for all acts connected with the Turin riots.

DOMESTIC.

Washington, March 7. Letters from the Army of the Potomac, received here to-night, say the reported capture of Early and his force at Charlottesville is untrue. A battle took place at that point between Sheridan and Early, which resulted in the rebels being driven from the town with the loss of some prisoners, but that the main body of the rebels, along with their commander, succeeded in getting off. Sheridan, when last heard from, according to the statement of deserters, held the place with a small force, while the main body of his cavalry were moving on Lynchburg.

New York, March 9. The revocation of the passport order by Secretary Seward, so far as it relates to Canada, has removed all restrictions on through travel via the Suspension Bridge and Detroit, and unrestricted travel via the Great Western Railway is now fully resumed.

Washington, March 12. Full files of Richmond papers of Friday last have been received. The Examiner of March 10 says: "The following dispatch was received yesterday announcing a victory to our arms in North Carolina:"

HEADQUARTERS, &c., March 9.
To Hon. J. C. Breckinridge, Secretary of War:

Gen. Bragg reports that he attacked the enemy yesterday four miles in front of Kingston, and drove him from his position. He disputed the ground obstinately, and took up a new line three miles from his first. We captured three pieces of artillery and fifteen hundred prisoners. The number of the enemy's dead and wounded left on the field was large; ours comparatively small. The troops behaved most handsomely, and Major General Shilleshoke exhibited his usual zeal and energy. (Signed) R. E. LEE.

New York, March 12. The Washington Republican of yesterday afternoon contains the following: "Maj. Gen. Thomas telegraphs the Government that one of his scouts had come in with the information that the rebel generals Lee and Cheatham had been sent from Alabama against Sherman, but Lee was subsequently recalled to defend Selma. Cheatham proceeded, intending to form a junction with Hardee from Charleston, but scouts report that the rebels have information that before the junction was formed Sherman hurled a few of his veteran brigades back upon Cheatham's column, completely crushing it. Hardee was not up to time, and report does not say that he gave battle to all, but that Johnston was supposed to have attacked Sherman in front and got awfully whipped."

The Repuclican says there is every reason to believe the above to be true.

New York. March 13. The World's Washington dispatch says the War Department attaches very little importance to Bragg's reported success in North Carolina, as the force captured must have been only a construction party accompanied by a small force as guard. They were reopening the Atlantic and North Carolina railroad.

War Department,
Washington, March 13—10 A. M.

Maj. Gen. Dix:

The following report of Gen. Sheridan's operations has been received by this Department:

EDWIN M. STANTON, Secretary of War.

City Point, Va., March 12, 1865—7 P. M.

Hon. Edwin M. Stanton, Secretary of War:

The following dispatch has just been received:

U. S. GRANT, Lieutenant-General.

Headquarters, Middle Military Division,
Columbia, Va., Friday, March 10, 1865.

Lieut. Gen. U. S. Grant, Commanding Armies of the United States:

General:—In my last dispatch, dated Waynesboro,' I gave a brief account of the defeat of Early by Custar's division. The same night this division was pushed across the Blue Ridge, and entered Charlottesville at 2 P. M.

The next day the Mayor of the city and the principal inhabitants came out and delivered up the keys of the public buildings. I had to remain at Charlottesville two days. This time was consumed in bringing over from Waynesboro' our ammunition and pontoon trains.

PRINCE NAPOLEON IN THE PRIVY COUNCIL.—The nomination of the Prince Napoleon as a member and the Vice President of the French Privy Council is regarded in Paris, by all parties, as a blow at the Pope. M. Guerolt, the editor of the Opinion Nationale, remarks on this appointment:

"Public opinion will not mistake the important signification of this appointment. In placing at the head of the Privy Council a prince whose great faculties have never ceased to serve the cause of liberty in France and Europe, the Emperor not only secures the daily co-operation of a devoted relation, but at the same time characterizes his policy. Under present circumstances it may be truly said that no nomination can be at once more significant or more opportune."

JEWS.—English papers comment on the avidity for learning displayed by the modern Jews. Many Jewish youths are in the English universities. In the London University a large proportion of the prizes, far greater than the comparative number would warrant, have been taken by Jewish scholars, and four of the professors' chairs are now filled by Jews.

MAPLE SUGAR.—An old sugar maker informs the Maine Farmer that he always shovels away the snow from the trees before he taps them. He says that it makes a very great difference in the flow of sap.

Married.

In Dover, N. H., Feb. 26th, 1865, by C. S. Emerson, Bro. WILLIAM SIMES, of Milton, N. H., and Sr. AMANDA VICKERY, of Dover, N. H.

Notices.

New Hampshire Quarterly Conference.

The second quarterly session of the New Hampshire State Conference will be held in Concord, N. H., commencing Thursday evening, March 16th, and continue over the following Sunday. We hope to see a large gathering, both of preachers belonging to this conference, and of brethren and sisters Come in the spirit and meekness of Christ, prepared to labor for the salvation of souls, that great good may be done. A. W. SIBLEY, Secretary.

Notice.

The letter written to me to come and preach has no town, post-office, or State on it. John Leighton is the name, and I do not know where he lives. He tells me he will meet me at the depot, but does not tell what one. I only know the State postmark on the envelope. Why can't people be more careful? Date your letters the first thing.

HIRAM MUNGER.

R. I. and E. Conn. Quar. Conference.

This conference will hold its next session with the church in Abington, Ct., commencing Wednesday, April 5th. Preachers and brethren from abroad are invited to attend. All churches connected with this conference are requested to report by letter at this meeting. Direct to the Clerk, at West Killingly, Conn., Box 87.

WM. H. CHAPMAN, Clerk.

Iowa Christian Conference.

The second quarterly meeting of the Iowa Christian Conference will be held at Boylair's Grove, Butler Co., Iowa, March 24th, and continue over Lord's day. PETER S. W. DEYO, Conference Clerk.

Notice.

The meetings still continue at River Point, R. I., every evening and will continue through another week and Sabbath. Excellent times; God is with us. Come, brethren and sisters, from surrounding villages, next Lord's day. More anon.

H. K. FLAGG.

Appointments.

We would say to our preaching Brethren that it is necessary we should receive their appointments as early as TUESDAY MORNING, as our paper goes to press about noon; otherwise they will not be inserted till the week following.

LOWELL STREET CHAPEL, BOSTON, CORNER OF CAUSEWAY AND LOWELL STREETS. Meetings are held regularly three times every Sunday, and Tuesday and Friday evenings. Seats free.

Westboro, Mass. .... Saturday evening, March 18th and Sunday, 19th.
Cordaville, Mass. .... Saturday evening, March 25th
Lord's day .... March 26th
M. GRANT.

Portsmouth, N. H. .... Sunday, March 12th
Lowell, Mass .... March 26th
WM. C. THURMAN.

East Boston .... Sunday, March 19th
C. GOODRICH.

Worcester, Mass .... Sundays, March 19th and 26th
S. S. BREWER.

Dover, N. H .... March 26th
C. S. EMERSON.

North Searsport, Me., (school-house) Sunday, March 19th
Lincolnville Center, (meeting-house) Sunday, March 26th
THOMAS SMITH.

Poland Hill .... March 15th
Mayberry Hill .... March 17th
South Poland .... March 18th and 19th
Greenwood City .... March 25th and 26th
North Norway .... April 2d
Stoneham, (as Bro. J. Howe may appoint), April 8th and 9th. C. M. CURRIER.

Southington, Ct. .... Sunday, March 19th
O. D. WOODRUFF.

Dixfield Center .... March 19th
D. M. HANSCOMB.

Bradford, N. H., (Pond meeting-house), Sunday, March 26th, and remain in the vicinity as long as the interest may demand. JOSEPH W. WHITE.

Belgrade Mills, Me. .... Saturday evening, March 18th and Sunday, 19th. O. G. GOODWIN. H. B. SEVEY.

East Holderness, N. H .... Sunday, March 19th
Meredith Village .... March 26th
A. MUSSEY.

Holden, Mass .... Sundays, March 26th and April 2d
A. SIMPSON.

Meredith Village, N. H. .... April 9th
A. ROSS.

Melvin Village .... March 26th
Tamworth, (Birch Interval) .... April 2d
Sandwich, (where Bro. A. B. Hoyt may appoint) April 9th
T. W. PIPER.

New Bedford .... March 19th
Plymouth .... April 2d
J. S. WHITE.

West Abington, Mass .... Sunday, March 19th
C. C. RAMSAY.

Portsmouth, N. H. .... Sundays, April 9th and 16th
GEORGE CHAMPLIN.

North Canton, Conn .... Sunday, March 19th
Wallingford Farms, Conn. .... March 26th
B. HITCHCOCK.

Northville, Newport, N. H. .... Sunday, March 19th
WM. W. SUTHERLAND.

Lovely Street, (School-house) .... Sunday, April 2d
WM. RIPLEY.

Norwalk, Ohio, (all day) .... Sabbath, March 19th
J. V. HIMES.

Agawam, Mass .... Sunday, March 19th
West Stafford, Ct. .... Sunday, March 26th
I. B. POTTER.

Exeter, N. H .... Sunday, March 26th
THOS. M. LUTHUM.

Vernon, Vt .... Sundays, March 19th and 26th
L. BOUTELL.

Lynn, Mass .... March 19th and 26th
J. K. BELLOWS.

Lovely Street, Ct. .... Sunday, March 19th
H. ROCKWELL.

Loudon Ridge, N. H. .... March 19th
Lawrence, Mass .... March 26th
J. COUCH.

South Farmington, (school-house near Esq. Ricker's), March 19th. J. PINKHAM. J. H. F. VARNEY.

Bristol, Ct .... March 26th
At liberty in April. H. MUNGER.

Goshen .... Sundays, March 19th, 26th, and April 2nd
H. PRATT.

East Otis, Mass .... Sunday, March 19th
GEORGE L. TEEPLE.

Business.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

J. M. Stetler—It was received. Many thanks.
R. C. Winsley—Yours and W. West's were both acknowledged and credited—his paying to No. 536.
L. Webster—Will send as soon as another edition can be had.
F. Schellinger—Received, acknowledged, and paid to No. 530.
H. H. Corbin—To No 530.
A. M. Bancroft—Acknowledged in No. 483.
D. Thayer—Sent March 4th.
F. Burr—All right. H. M. Laughlin is credited on book to No. 536.
W. Wright—Paid to No. 562.
R. N. Chaffee—The first dollar paid to No. 463 (not 489); the $1.46 to 494, as noted.
Geo. Smith—The two copies will be paid for to No. 547.

LETTERS RECEIVED.

A M Barnes, M F Eldredge, L F Cole, M. D. W., F. H Burbank, C F Sweet, F H Chamberlain, H Young, S R Chaplin, N Hoyt, J G Hook, B Perham, B Spaulding, T M Preble, M C Allen, L Boutell, C. F. Hudson, S S Brewer, J M Stetler, B Mathewson, Dr. A Decker G F Locke, A C Judson.

BOOKS AND TRACTS SENT.

BY MAIL—Amos Storer, Luther M Smith, W C Gage, J S Carter, A C Taylor, Laura M Stratton, H H Fuller, Elizabeth Hughast, Ellen E. Ingalls, A. M. Bancroft, Amos Hawks, T M Redhead, I E Peirce, C H Bartlet, A P Moore, I Kulp, G S Flint, P Tandy, J Sawyer, S H Dearborn, Zalmon Snow, L Jackmans, E D Hanson, A Cook, D McMillan, M W Corlin, J Demarest, J F Trescatt, E H Shaw, L Ross, W Mitchell, J M M Gernard, Mrs. E M Davis, Mrs. H Robinson, R H Hines, R T Chatfield, A H Cassel, J H Luttenton, D M Kinter.

BY EXPRESS—E G Higgins, W H Chapman, F H Burbank, H Gibbs, S G Mathewson, J M Bell.

BOOKS FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

THE EMPHATIC DIAGLOTT: containing the Original Greek Text of the New Testament, according to the Recension of Dr. J. J. Griesbach, with an Interlinear Word-for-Word English Translation, based on the renderings of eminent critics, and on the various readings of the Vatican Manuscript (No. 1209) in the Vatican Library; with Notes, References, and an Appendix. 880pp. 12mo. Price, plain leather, $4.00; extra, gilt, $4.50; Turkey morocco, $5.00. Postage, 16 cents.

THE NEW TESTAMENT of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ; with brief Notes and Instructions; containing the references and marginal readings of the Polyglott Bible; also the Psalms, Maps, and Harmony of the Gospels. Published by the American Tract Society. For family use. $1.75; by mail, $1.90.

DICTIONARY OF THE HOLY BIBLE, for general use in the study of the Scriptures, with Engravings, Maps, and Tables. Published by the Amer. Tract Society. This is one of the best. Cloth, $1.50; by mail, $1.75. Sheep, $2.00; by mail, $2.25.

CANON OF THE HOLY SCRIPTURES examined in the light of History. By Prof. L. Gaussen, of Geneva, Switzerland. Translated from the French, and abridged by Edward N. Kirk, D. D. $1.75. By mail, $2.00.

CRUDEN'S COMPLETE CONCORDANCE to the Holy Scriptures. New and condensed edition. Edited by John Eadie, D. D., LL.D. Cloth, $1.50; by mail, $1.80. Sheep, 2.00; by mail, $2.30.

THURMAN'S BIBLE CHRONOLOGY, or, The Sealed Book of Daniel Opened. A work for every Bible Student. $1.50; by mail, $1.75.

WHY THE SHOE PINCHES. A useful little work, with cuts, showing the conditions of a healthy foot, the causes of deformities, and how to avoid those troublesome diseases and malformations, such as chilblains, corns, bunions, flat-foot, bent-up toes, grown-in nails, etc. Price, 30 cents.

THE SCRIPTURAL QUESTION BOOK. "Sanctify them through thy truth: thy word is truth." A valuable help to Sunday School and family instruction. 127 pp. Price, 15 cts.; postage 4 cts. $1.50 per dozen; postage 8 cts. on every three copies.

THE TAKING OF HUMAN LIFE incompatible with Christianity; with remarks on the present crisis. By T. F. Tukesbury. Price, 8 cts.; postage 2 cts. A tract for the times.

THE SYRIAC NEW TESTAMENT. A literal translation from the Syriac Peshito Version. By James Murdock, D. D. Price $2.50. Postage 36 cts.

NON-RESISTANCE; or, the Spirit of Christianity restored. By W. C. Thurman. Price 20 cts.; postage 4 cts.

CHLOE LANKTON; or, Light beyond the Clouds. A Story of Real Life. 75 cents. By mail, 87 cts.

MULLER'S LIFE OF TRUST. A Narration of the Lord's dealings with George Muller, written by himself. $1.75; by mail, $2.00.

DIPHTHERIA: its Causes, Treatment, and Cure. By James C. Jackson, M. D. Price, 10 cts.; by mail, 12 cts.

INDEX TO VOLUME XX.

MISCELLANEOUS.

A vision ... 2
A word about my books ... 2
A reverie on our last two campmeetings ... 4
Ashamed of Jesus ... 4
Admirable reply ... 8
Able and willing ... 8
Angels don't smoke ... 8
A new commandment ... 12
Acts 24: 15 ... 14
Action! ... 14
A wanderer returned ... 18
A ray of light ... 18
A prayer worth sixty dollars ... 20
A word to mothers ... 20
A watchword for the household ... 21
A good cook stove ... 22
A new move ... 22
A dialogue ... 24
A good pastor ... 24
A birth-day reflection ... 25
A voice from the sick room ... 25
A greenback well invested ... 26
A review of the times ... 29
A short sermon ... 33
An untenable position abandoned ... 34
Advice to a contributor ... 36
A word for the Crisis ... 38
A word to parents ... 40
Am I ready? ... 40
A soldier's visit to the battle field ... 41
An eastern tour ... 42
Ahasuerus ... 45
Athenians—Acts 17: 24 ... 48
All for the glory of God ... 48
A terrible picture ... 48
Absurdities, contradictions, etc. ... 49
A risen Savior ... 52
A new wheel with one broken spoke ... 54
An appeal to christians ... 57
A happy new year! ... 61
A field unoccupied ... 62
An incident in the cars ... 62
A letter for you ... 64
A response ... 64
A new effort ... 66
A word or two ... 66
A note from my diary ... 66
A sign of the times ... 68
Are the entire Scriptures given, etc. ... 72
A virtue needed in America ... 72
A new style of religion ... 72
Are we ready to meet the Lord? ... 73
A name to live ... 74, 82
A fragment ... 76
Advice of an old lady ... 76
A blessed hope ... 78
A fearful death-charge ... 78
A gentleman ... 80
A ministerial association ... 82
A gold ring ... 82
A good time coming ... 86
Asthma ... 86
A way to do good ... 90
A donation visit ... 92
A better refuge than that of "Celesta" ... 92
A lawyer on preaching ... 92
A sign of greatness ... 92
An epistle to the saints ... 91
A bad practice ... 96
Another voice from Celesta ... 100
Astronomical items ... 102
A hint to business men ... 102
A happy new year ... 104
A warlike world ... 104
A durable paint ... 104
Bank of the Lord's Poor ... 22, 30, 34, 38, 42, 46, 50, 58, 62, 70, 78, 82
Brevity ... 21
Books on baptism ... 22
Be something ... 28
Boiling water ... 28
Be a man of your word ... 28
Business report of the Me. Ad. annual conf. ... 30, 70
"Be of good cheer"! ... 36, 80
Be kind to the aged ... 36
Brother, please explain ... 54
Bro. Brewer's works again ... 62, 50
Begging ... 62
Bible time ... 65
Be still and know that I am God" ... 66
Breaking oxen ... 68
Bad memory ... 72
Beecher and blasphemy ... 84
Be short ... 88
"Buy the truth and sell it not" ... 89
Birth-day meditations ... 89
Buy only what you need ... 88
Bro. Walter Pratt ... 102
Church duties ... 9
Church organization ... 13
Consistency ... 17
Christ at the helm ... 17
Christian sympathy ... 21
Cooking without fire ... 23
Celesta and its probable fate ... 24
Conference report ... 30, 78, 82, 86, 102
Christian union ... 33, 65, 81, 86, 97
Chloe Lankton ... 34
Condition of the Jews ... 36
Care of dahlia roots ... 36
Correct speaking ... 36
"Christ our life" ... 37
Coming events cast their shadows before ... 37
Caution about Celesta ... 38
Can a christian vote ... 47
Canon of Ptolemy ... 49
Characteristics of the last days ... 53
Chloe ... 54
Christian controversy ... 57
Communion with God and his church ... 69
Celesta ... 76
Caterpillar ... 80
Christ our Passover ... 88
Christ's coming a necessity ... 93
Campmeeting fund ... 42
Conference at Norwalk ... 104
Composition to stop leakage ... 104
Day of judgment ... 5
Duty of visiting the aged ... 12
Directions for christians, etc. ... 13
"Death is an eternal sleep" ... 25
Do good ... 26
Distribute tracts ... 42
Don't profess holiness ... 45
Despotism of a bad heart ... 64
Daniel's 69 and 62 weeks of years ... 73
Dark omens ... 73
Denying worldly lusts ... 75
Discord healed ... 76
Death in the pot ... 80
Damage from soda in washing ... 80
Death the christian's friend ... 86
Diminution of crime ... 86
Do ye well to be united with the world? ... 89
Definite time and its dangers ... 57
Do you pray for him? ... 104
Exhortation ... 17
Example better than precept ... 33
Eternal life ... 37
Elder D. A. Jones ... 52
"Everlasting punishment" ... 64
Eastern marriage custom ... 68
Eleven reasons for not accepting an invitation, etc. ... 76
Emptiness of the world ... 80
Enemies getting subscribers ... 82
Experience ... 84, 88, 96
Essentials ... 85
Enlighten others ... 94
Encouraging ... 98
Forsaking all for Christ ... 4
Faith in Christ's coming ... 21
Frankness ... 32, 104
Fire and brimstone ... 62
From a tract distributor ... 66
Female piety ... 82
"Follow me" ... 88
Fashion and women ... 60
"Feed my lambs" ... 53
Fasting ... 89
Father ... 97
From a Campbellite brother in Ill. ... 103
God's mercy to man ... 1
"Get the best" ... 26
Good advice ... 52, 80
Gentle hints ... 53
Gems of piety ... 56, 5
Good results from Savoy campmeeting ... 58
Garibaldi ... 60
German conference ... 72
Good children a blessing ... 76
Good news from Missouri ... 78
Give us the light ... 81
Gravel and lime for fowls ... 81
Good philosophy ... 81
Giving ... 84
"God will take care of baby" ... 12
Golden offerings ... 102
How to get rid of musquitoes ... 4
How to clean knives ... 4
How to cut glass with a piece of iron ... 4
Hooks and velvet, or poison claws ... 9
How shall it be raised? ... 10
Home religion ... 14
Heirs of the world to come ... 17
Heavenly pity ... 28
Heart cheering ... 48
How Paul and Peter looked ... 48
Heaven, earth and hell (a poem) ... 54
Hints to parents ... 60
How to be cheerful ... 65
Holy revivals ... 73
How to be miserable ... 80
Holiness ... 81
How large is the New Jerusalem? ... 88
How to make hens lay ... 88
Holiness of heart and life ... 96
How I first saw the truth ... 98
Home ... 100
How to silence a battery ... 102
How to make it much ... 104
How to preserve milk ... 104
Important to subscribers in British provinces ... 6, 14, 18
I'm weary ... 9
Is it so? Are we under the law? ... 21
I like the paper ... 22
Inward and outward view of misery and happiness ... 28
"I am sick, Aunt Mary" ... 32
Is it midday in the morning? ... 38
Invitation ... 38
Importance of self-knowledge ... 41
"I have no money" ... 42
Inconsistent words ... 4
Infidelity ... 57
Is it right? ... 57
Information wanted ... 60
Italy, Napoleon and the Pope ... 68
Information ... 88
Interest in Maine ... 90
Improprieties in churches ... 92
Instrumental music in worship ... 96
In a tight place ... 104
Indecent papers ... 104
Jephthah and his daughter ... 1
Jesus the guest ... 76
James Ferguson ... 104
Kingdom of Italy ... 50
Kind words ... 76
Kerosene lamp wicks ... 84
Little savings and little wastings ... 24
Love ... 40
Locke's paraphrase of 1 Cor. 15: 1-48 ... 48
Let us work ... 64
Little kindness ... 68
Living identity ... 74
Lend your paper ... 82, 88
Letters illustrative of christian experience ... 84, 88, 96
Lovable christians ... 88
Lessons in astronomy ... 90
Missionary meetings ... 8
Mr. Baxter in Ireland ... 14
Money making church goers ... 17
My Father's riches ... 20
Minister to Jesus ... 24
Man is mortal ... 25
My western tour ... 28
Mich. and northern Ia. quar. conf. ... 32
Morning prayer ... 36
Making soap without grease ... 40
Man's way versus God's way ... 41
Murmuring ... 48
Mr. Baxter ... 50
Merchant's story ... 56
Meetings for holiness ... 61
My new year's wish for 1865 ... 66
"My wife is the cause of it" ... 68
Meditation ... 76
Meteoric phenomenon ... 84
Mother's last prayer ... 88
Mind a result of organization ... 89
More gold rings ... 94
My experience ... 96
Memorial ... 102
"None of these things move me" ... 5
Nearer home ... 12
Notes by the way ... 18, 16, 42, 60, 94
New Testament Sabbath ... 28
Not so expensive ... 30
New Hampshire ... 42
Napoleon III ... 44
Never get angry ... 68
New subscribers in Jan. ... 82
News by letters ... 66
Our free list ... 2
Our position ... 45
Old clothes ... 47
Obscure proverb explained ... 50
On the raising of the dead ... 65
Odd origins ... 76
Our volunteer agents ... 78, 82, 90, 102
Our times ... 78
Old and new style ... 81
Opinionated folks ... 41
Pray for your preachers ... 1
Please read ... 4
Pen pictures of Bible scenes ... 4, 12, 20, 44, 76, 92
Perilous times ... 12, 16
Prepare to meet thy God ... 21
Poor fund donations ... 26
Parables ... 29
Pope's power at Jerusalem ... 30
Peter Cartwright ... 32
Plain preaching ... 37
Pray for the backslider ... 38
Points and queries ... 41
Preaching ... 44, 56
Powerful disinfectants ... 44
Prayer meetings yet alive ... 52
Prayer ... 54
Preparation for the coming of the Lord ... 57
Pure religion ... 64
Pray for the Spirit ... 72
Power of the cross of Christ ... 72
"Promise of the Father" ... 73, 77, 81, 85
"Pulling them out of the fire" ... 76
Poor fund donations ... 78, 82, 94
Perdition near ... 80
Pride ... 80
Polished boots ... 80
Pauper slips ... 81
Peace ... 92
Plea for the poor ... 96
Potatoe pudding ... 62
2 Peter 1: 14, 15 ... 57
Patience and peace ... 72
Ptolemy the heathen ... 97
Power from on high ... 97
Query ... 34
Queries concerning the time, times, etc. ... 101
Restraint for the young ... 20
Report of the R. I. and E. Conn. quar. conf. ... 28, 84
Redemption ... 29
Reward of the righteous ... 36
Religion at home ... 36
Restoring potatoes ... 36
Report of Me. Second Advent Min. Conf. ... 40
Report of Me. western central quar. conf. ... 40
Report of N. H. State quar conf. ... 51
Religion in the U. S. ... 63
Right and wrong ... 68
Rest for the weary ... 72
Rev. 21: 1-7 ... 80
"Read this I pray thee" ... 81
Repentance ... 88
Resurrection ... 89
Russian catechism ... 64
Sanctification ... 1
Spiritualism and the word of God ... 2
Social parties ... 4
Something to rejoice or ... 5
Sect of Adventists ... 16
"Sum of villanies" ... 16
Sawyer's translation ... 17
Setting up the kingdom ... 21
Spurious testimony ... 21
Scattered truths ... 24
Shaving the beard ... 24
Shall we know the time ... 25
Simplicity in style ... 32
Shunning the yoke ... 34
Spiritualism—what is it? ... 36
Spring or fall to plant deciduous trees ... 36
Spiritualism ... 44
Supposed fulfillment of prophecy ... 44
Sealing wax for fruit cans ... 44
Suffering and patience ... 48
Save your influence ... 52
Silkie's Poke ... 56
Sympathy ... 62
Sectarianism ... 69
Save the minutes ... 76
Sabbath schools ... 56
Short sermon ... 57
Save your cobwebs ... 64
Selah ... 70
Signs of the present time ... 77
Scatter tracts ... 78
Spreading manure in the fall ... 88
Sighing for home ... 89
Straight paths ... 92
Speaking well of others ... 92
Six important rules ... 93
Selfishness ... 96
Searching the Scriptures successfully ... 97
Sympathy ... 101
The church in the world: or, Christ and Belial ... 1, 8
" end ... 1
" King of Kings ... 4
" scoffer silenced ... 4
" Lord at hand ... 5, 9
" saint's abode ... 5
" Italian mission ... 6, 4, 10, 18, 22, 26, 38, 62, 78, 94
" Danish question ... 6
" Young Pilgrim ... 6
" Lord is coming ... 6
" N. H. State conf. ... 6
" best side out ... 8
" two horned beast of Rev. 13 ... 8
" contrast ... 9
" new work ... 10
" Voice of the Church ... 10
" Darien meeting ... 12
" one sided question ... 13
" Spirit ... 13
" higher life—its effects ... 13
" tendency of the age ... 13
" sleep of the dead ... 19
" man of sin ... 20
" word hell ... 20
" church and the world ... 20
" versatility of Paul ... 20
" virgin bride and the harlot woman ... 21
" hand ... 24
" old man ... 24
" work for the times ... 26
" money order system ... 28
" world's conversion ... 29
" time question ... 23, 32, 37, 48, 52, 56, 62, 72, 77
Treatment of hens ... 4
True literalism—what is it? ... 13
Truth or tradition ... 16
To the Brn. and Srs. in the State of N. Y. ... 38
To ascertain if eggs are fresh ... 40
Thanksgiving ... 42
Take heed what you hear ... 25
Too much war ... 26
The new chronology ... 33
" fall ... 33
" contrast ... 33
" model family ... 36
" New Preston tent meeting ... 38
" 144,000 ... 40
" reward of the righteous ... 40, 44
" ivory needle ... 40
" days in which we live ... 41, 45
" power, wisdom, and goodness of God ... 44
Toilet for gentlemen ... 44
The prophets ... 45
" commonwealth of Israel ... 45
" condition of the world, etc. ... 45
" kingdom of God in Pa. ... 45
" spirits of devils which go forth ... 46
To Eastern friends ... 46
The last kiss ... 48
" word without the blow ... 48
" interval ... 48
" spirit of Christ and the spirit of war ... 49
Tract distribution ... 50, 82
Talk about common things ... 52
" inheritance ... 52
" decalogue ... 53
" sky kingdom ... 53
" merchantman ... 53
" Sabbath—new and old ... 53
" seal broken ... 55
" religion of the day ... 56
" warfare of sects ... 60
" decay of conversation ... 60
" gentleman ... 60
" saint's inheritance ... 61
" importance of watching ... 64
" New Jerusalem ... 65
" tree of life and tree of death ... 68
" great latter day fable ... 69
" sealed book ... 69
" seven times ... 69
" Canadian passport system ... 75
" first newspaper in the U. S. ... 75
To Dame Tattle ... 54
Terrible fire ... 55
To thaw out frozen pumps ... 60
Thurman's Chronology ... 63, 70
Thurman's astronomical tables ... 74
The Sabbath ... 77
" 1335 days, etc. ... 77
" year of the Messiah's birth, etc. ... 78
" promises ... 80
" critics and the Bible ... 80
" great family umbrella ... 80
" punctual man ... 80
To prevent cattle from jumping ... 80
To subscribers for the coming struggle ... 80
The 2300 days ... 84
" power of goodness ... 85
" Sabbath question ... 85
" restitution ... 85
" immortal soul located ... 85
Two literal resurrections ... 85
The christian's fight ... 86
" convention ... 86
" spirits humbugged ... 86
" signs of the times ... 86
" reason why ... 88
" 70 weeks and 2300 days ... 88
" precious Savior ... 89
" armies of the Bible ... 90
" bread of life ... 92
" voice of historians ... 93, 97
" penalty of the law of God ... 93, 100
Thurman's Astronomy ... 93
Thoughts and apothegms ... 70
Temperance tracts ... 96
The resurrection ... 97, 101
" angels that steal babies ... 100
" degree of Cyrus ... 100
" pushing of the ram.—Dan. 8: 4 ... 101
" crisis visibly approaching ... 101
" little tract preachers ... 102
" cheerful voice ... 104
Testimonies on baptism ... 104
To prevent prints from fading ... 104
To get rid of insects ... 104
To destroy stumps ... 104
Unpleasant odors ... 24
Union in the church ... 84
Voices from the poor ... 10, 14, 18, 22, 26, 30, 38, 42, 46, 50, 54, 58, 62, 66, 70, 74, 78, 82, 86
Veracity ... 28
Vain philosophy ... 76
Will God raise the dead to life? ... 1
Who is a christian? ... 16
Will there be slaves when the Lord comes? ... 18
Winter campaign ... 22
What will become of the wicked? ... 25
What makes a bushel ... 28
Washington's great victory ... 32
Winter covering ... 40
Warlike state of the world ... 40
When did the eclipse occur? ... 45
Will the times and seasons ever be definitely known? ... 49, 61, 65, 69, 74, 81, 85, 94, 97
Which dies? the law or the sinner? ... 53, 60
Warning from "Celesta" ... 54
White lies and black lies ... 56
Want of punctuality ... 57
Who are the blessed? ... 57
Who is our neighbor? ... 60
Watchman, tell us of the night ... 61
Wresting history ... 64
Who is responsible? ... 68
What is wanted ... 68
Words from the workers ... 74
What constitutes a christian ... 79
What do ye more than others? ... 80
Want of decision ... 84
Water proof boot soles ... 96
What spirit are ye of? ... 101
What an evil! what an evil! ... 104
You are a sectarian ... 9
"Zion—Celesta" ... 48

EDITORIAL.

A good example ... 14
A wrong impression ... 22
A request ... 26
An inquirer ... 34
A strange conclusion ... 46
Affairs in Italy ... 50
Ahasuerus ... 54
A donation ... 66
Angry with the wicked ... 70
A strange appointment ... 74
A warning ... 82
An approaching storm ... 86
A valuable soap ... 102
Bro. Stevenson's Chronology ... 30
Bath ... 38
Bank of the Lord's Poor ... 66
Book notices ... 78
Commencement of the prophetic periods ... 14
Chronology ... 30
Commencement of the 2300 days ... 38
Can demons foretell events? ... 54
Clean lips ... 54
Call for preaching ... 58
Celesta movement ... 58
Come to the point ... 58
Can't do any thing ... 70
Chronology and Astronomy ... 74
Calculation of eclipses ... 90
Close of the volume ... 102
Delinquents ... 6, 2
"Danger in the north" ... 26
Doubtful information ... 38
Do not judge ... 42
Dying rich ... 42
Date of the crucifixion ... 46
Date of our paper ... 58
Death of Herod ... 94
Dr. Zech's eclipse B. C. 477 ... 66
End of the 69 weeks ... 30
Fearful hearts ... 10
Further inquiries ... 34
Fairs and festivals ... 54
Facts about Celesta ... 58
From Bro. G. L. Hart ... 58
From Bro. Wm. Kirby ... 62
"France, Russia and Rome" ... 86
General western conference ... 58
Gog and Magog ... 86
Herald of Health, etc. ... 82
Inquiries ... 6
Infidelity ... 50
Inquiries ... 62
Increase of crime ... 82
"I and my Father are one" ... 90
In affliction ... 14
Inquiries and answers ... 18
Information ... 18
Italian news ... 22
"Information wanted" ... 30
Kind words ... 70, 82
Living soul ... 42
Lowell ... 54
Light wanted ... 54
Live better this year ... 66
Light reading ... 78
Lowell ... 82
Lend a helping hand ... 34
Moses Hull ... 21
Messiah the Prince ... 22
Messiah, or Christ ... 102
New volume ... 2
Non-resistance ... 26
New Year's gifts ... 58
"None understood it" ... 62
Napoleon advancing ... 78
Our free subscribers ... 62
One for the King of kings ... 14
Old reading ... 38
Old and new year ... 58
One night's work ... 70
Obituaries ... 74
Our Bible class ... 82
Our position ... 98
Prophecy of the spirits ... 14
Pride and extravagance ... 26
Pittsfield ... 30
Public morals ... 74
Postal money orders ... 74
Ptolemy's canon ... 94
Preaching wanted ... 94
Questions ... 50
Quoting of Scripture ... 54
Right and wrong ... 34
Secret societies ... 38
"Seal the book" ... 38
Sundown at noon ... 38
Scripture readings ... 50
Spread of Spiritualism ... 54
Signification of the jubilees ... 70
State of Europe ... 74
Seventy weeks ... 86
Spirits in prison ... 90
Sign your name ... 98
Sunlight ... 102
"The hope of the world" ... 6
"The prophetic periods" ... 6, 26
The Tract Fund ... 10
Thurman's Chronology ... 10, 14
To whom it may concern ... 10
"The last Ism" ... 14
The sealed book ... 14
" 69 weeks of Dan. 9: 25 ... 18
" first kings of Persia ... 22
" way to kill ministers ... 26
"The age of virtue" ... 26
The Bible chronology ... 30
" prospect ... 30
" 2300 days ... 34
Teaching of demons ... 42
The national fair ... 46
"Ten eclipses" ... 50
The right spirit ... 50
" vatican ... 50
" Suez canal ... 50
Tract Fund ... 58
Things we do know ... 58
The jubilees ... 70
" gold fever ... 74
" World's Crisis—what they think of it ... 74
" chronological discussion ... 78
" inauguration ball ... 78
" draft ... 82
" south in earnest ... 86
" Pope's encyclical ... 86
" Providence discussion ... 90
" 70 weeks in Dan. 9: 24 ... 90
"The sealed book" ... 98
To preachers ... 98
The eclipse of B. C. 720 ... 102
" disputed eclipse ... 102
" Providence discussion ... 102
Visit to Dubuque, Iowa ... 10
Visit to Conn. ... 46
Ventilation ... 50
Voices from Celesta ... 58
Wayside incidents ... 2
"Watchman, what of the night"? ... 2
Work of Spiritualism ... 2
Wisconsin campmeeting ... 6
Write at once ... 14
Western visit ... 18
Write plainly ... 58
Westboro ... 66
What others think of us ... 66
Works of demons ... 82
Why it was not published ... 86
Worcester ... 102

POETRY.

Aspirations ... 1
Advent hymn ... 17
All hail ... 17
A better day ... 33
A land of peace ... 56
A grand old poem ... 93
A petition ... 104
Busybody ... 8
Belshazzar ... 95
Come and reign ... 25
Christian's voyage ... 25
Christ was poor ... 32
Come, go to the show ... 96
Dare to do right ... 21
Final retribution ... 4
"Fear not! little flock." ... 101
Glad tidings ... 101
Hymn ... 20, 21, 36, 53
Hour of devotion ... 33
He shall sit as a refiner and purifier of silver ... 56
Her glory is departed ... 104
In memory ... 5
I will come again ... 44
Invocation ... 61
In the furnace ... 100
I want to rest ... 104
Joy to the world ... 13
Keep hold of my hand ... 4
Look to Jesus ... 9
"Let us pray ... 12
Look higher ... 37
Looking unto Jesus ... 41
Lines ... 49
Light ahead ... 89
Mother ... 8
Morning ... 48
My Savior lives ... 65
My hope ... 73
Morning dawns ... 77
Messiah's reign ... 84
Memorium ... 81
O will he come ... 77
Press on ... 16
Paraphrase—Ps. 23 ... 72
Past, present and future ... 81
Prayer not pleasant to hear ... 96
Pathway to glory ... 64
Paraphrase of Isaiah thirty-fifth ... 97
Resurrection ... 45
Supplication ... 60
See how these christians love one another ... 69
Sowing and reaping ... 85
Song ... 28
The christian's song ... 9
" christian army ... 20
" city of God ... 28
" sacrifice ... 32
" Bible ... 36
" Lord's coming ... 37
" beautiful land ... 41
" past ... 52
" christian walk ... 57
" jubilee is coming! ... 60
" temperance cause ... 80
" whole armor ... 80
" world to come ... 85
" soldier's cry ... 88
" phenomena in Va. ... 92
To J. T. Dixon ... 12
To Katie ... 40
To him that overcometh ... 48
To Mrs. H. Sloan ... 52
To my sister Sophia ... 55
To a friend ... 57
Theological ... 68
Times of restitution ... 72
Thanks to T. A., etc ... 76
Things requisite ... 93
The inauguration ball ... 100
When this pilgrimage is over ... 24
What of the night? ... 29
Waiting for Christ ... 36
Watch and pray ... 44
What is this world? ... 64
Why must we love? ... 69
Wait ... 76
Will you be there? ... 84
Words of cheer ... 92
Victory ahead ... 68
Voices from the clouds ... 88

LETTERS.

O. R. Fassett 2, D. M. Kinter 2, 23; B. Spaulding 2, 19, 30, 51, 43, 79, 95; S. P. Green 3, J. R. Ainsworth 3, P A Smith 3, 27, 59; C H Sweet 3, N Colburn 7, 18; C N Buzzell 7, Wm. C Lambert 7, J. W. Taylor 7, I. C. Wellcome 10, S & L W Bragg 11, 15, 91; T L Wall 11, W A Sawin 11, S B Teeple 11, J Watkins 11, T W Piper 11, T W Smith 11, M E Streeter 15, S H Dunn 15, I K Lombard 15, F L Bradford 15, J B McClellan 19, P P Clay 19, L P Hastings 19, L M Collins 23, I Stevens 23, B Newton 23, S M Shade 27, J Somes 27, A Methodist minister 27, A Methodist brother 27, A Baptist brother 27, J B Cook 27, A. Ames 27, E Woodruff 30, B Perham 30, P H Lawrence 30, W E Deverell 31, A. E McEllister 34, J R Preston 35, F A Guard 35, M A Starr 35, F Douglass 35, A minister in Ill. 34, W Kay 34, From a new subscriber 38, M M Weaver 39, S Bowers 39, J T Rice 39, D W Taylor 39, G Smith 39, A Sister from Conn. 39, H Rockwell 43, W Sheldon 43, S. Curry 47, S Hart 47, F Platt 47, W H Mitchell 47, L. Dammon 47, Sr. L. (Oswego, N. Y.) 47, G. A. Streeter 31, 55; T M Preble 31, L P Cole 51, O D Woodruff 51, E Hill 55, W Rowarth 55, A Dole 55, I Young 55, N F Hodges 55, Eld. T Tripp 55, C Croney 55, A Dennen 55, J Blain, D. R. & M. S. Mansfield 59, A Smith 59, J T Dixon 59, O N Morse 59, D Kinney 59, J C Shorey 59, C Daggett 63, F Treat 63, N F Nason 63, J W Taylor 67, J K Bellows 67, C F Sweet 67, S Bradbury 67, J C Rice 67, E W Osborne 67, G W Stetson 70, A Smith 71, J V Himes 71, J M Genness 71, S Woodruff 74, C I Deyo 74, E Remick 74, A P Gray 74, B S Jackson 75, Geo. Wells 75, J Knowles 75, G H Fisher 75, I W Covey 75, L Wetherbee 75, C Brown 79, L Laskey 79, M C Whittaker 79, L Davis 79, G Alkire 79, C Twombly 79, C E Gierlow 82, M H Morrison 82, M. M. Weaver 82, L B Weaver 82, L M Collins 82, H H Janes 82, A E Smith 87, 95; A Strauss 87, M S Rogers 87, F. W. Baptist brother 87, D R Mansfield 87, A Shields 87, L T Cunningham 91, H. K. Flagg 91, A German Baptist 91, W McClellan 95, H Pratt 95, W E Moss 95, W McCullock 98, N Wheeler 98, S B Colton 99, L Boutell 99, C L Low 99, Mrs. R B Dockum 99, P Mitson 99, H H Hendrix 99, W Morphy 99, S. A. S—— 99, H K Flagg 102, Eld. Wm. Sweet 102, C F Sweet 102, R E Ladd 102.

OBITUARIES.

Dr. Geo. Pierce 3, J W Clark 3, A T Gillespie 3, David Leighton 3, Mark Pierson 3, E J Marsh 7, A Thorpe 7, W Emmerson 7, E R Tanner 7, R. O. E., A. G., and L D Hunt 7, C Austin 7, M Reynolds 11, F K Parsons 11, C Fogg 11, E Bates 11, F Boothby 11, A Delano 11, E G Curtiss 11, I. Potter 11, H. N. Higgins 15, M. R. Hook 15, P Pfeil 15, S Barton 15, J M Spriggs 15, E A Sinclair 19, D Sparks 19, S R Butman 19, E. M. Matthews 19, F Tripp 19, E. P. Potter 19, E Dodge 23, F Tewksbury 23, R A Crowell 23, J. L. Churchill 23, Ira Burgess 23, S Wilson 23, I A Hackett 23, Z A Norris and B W Turner 23, I J P Lester 27, L Maime 27, G E Cyphers 27, W. S., M. E., L. E., and H. S. Pratt 27, A A Hathorn 27, L A Wakefield 27, W. E. Locke 27, J. Bowers 27, D D Merrick 27, M Moulton 27, E Reed 31, S. J. Holt 21, Charles Densmore 31, D. Pierce 35, Sr. Pierce 35, L P Sanborn 35, M Couch 35, W H and C J Fairbanks 35, I A Lawton 35, M A Watson 35, C. M. Lanfair 35, W Draper 35, Sr. Wescott 35, E F Flanders 35, G Riely 35, H P Young 35, I E Polley 35, M Patterson 39, D Manderville 39, A A Lloyd 39, M M Gilman 39, A F White 43, L Wilkins 43, P Washburn 47, S Gay 47, E T Campbell 47, C H Robinson 47, A Crowninshield 47, J Goodrich 47, N A Whitier 47, B Croul 47, E D Brazie 47, S J Jewett 51, A Blagden 51, A E Loomiss 51, M Tew 51, R A Thompson 59, C B Horne 59, S Churchill 59, L Morrin 59, L E Sanders 59, E Wetherell 63, L V Houghtaling 63, R N Fields 63, E. J. and L. Fairbrother 63, J A Waldron 63, Mrs. A Whittaker 63, B F Blaisdell 67, S Blanchard 67, W Bartlett 67, P Bartlett 67, D P Hill 67, C A Walden 67, G Poland 67, G T Mahan 67, E Nelson 67, C B Jackman 71, L R Woodruff 71, M J Rowell 71, S Ware 71, P Ovialt 71, E Davis 75, P Hawkins 75, L E Sinclair 75, S. Putnam 79, J. Ellis 79, L Ellis 79, L Kinsman 79, F E Plummer 79, D Libbey 83, F. M. and L. Wilcox 83, F D Johnston 83, E Claflin 83, C Stone 83, L S Cole 87, G B Arnold 87, H Messer 87, J P Wiswell 87, A McNeil 91, H Jackson 91, L W Hamilton 91, F. Thomas 91, N. Chamberlain 91, Eld. C L Page 95, Dr. Young 95, B. Jones 95, M. Ketsebuck 95, A Churchill 95, J Crawford 95, F T Davis 99, J Mann 99, M Stratton 99, A Hough 99, D Moulton 99, John Clay 103, A E Martindale 103, Martha A Horn 103, Mary Peacock 103, Edgar L. Tenant 103, Phebe Durfee 103, James M Gasper 103.

HYGIENE.

An appeal to a poor man to give up tobacco ... 76
Asthma ... 100
A good disinfectant ... 100
Babies ... 20
Baking pans for unleavened bread ... 100
Colds ... 20
Cancer ... 68
Confessions of a tobacco chewer ... 68
Cold cream ... 84
Cold feet—hot head—how to regulate them ... 92
Checking perspiration ... 92
Cure for asthma ... 100
Cure for erysipelas ... 100
Drinking ... 28
Effects of saleratus, etc. ... 12
Eating and drinking ... 52
Eating fast ... 84
Facts about eating ... 4
Food for children ... 84
How to get up ... 12
Husks vs. feathers ... 36
Headache ... 44
Hygiene ... 60, 68, 76, 84, 92, 100
How to discover and cure the small pox ... 100
Infants and air ... 28
Liniment to relieve pain ... 4
Nature and effects of alcohol ... 4
New method of making bread ... 4
Our chairs ... 4
Phthisic herb ... 92
Polypus ... 100
Quit it ... 76
Remedy for diphtheria ... 68
Round shoulders ... 84
Sensible talk ... 36
The science of cooking ... 28
To my dyspeptic friends ... 36
The use of tobacco ... 36
The hair ... 28, 44
The Indian weed ... 52
Tormented with kindness ... 68
Tobacco ... 76
To the afflicted ... 92
Toe nails ... 100
Wearing spectacles ... 84

CHILDREN.

A warning to children ... 16
A story for the little folks ... 24
Anna's paper ... 64
A thoughtless boy punished ... 72
A compass to steer by ... 72
A sewed-up mouth ... 104
Boys, do right ... 72
"Don't tell mother" ... 16
Don't tattle ... 72
Etta and her pets ... 24
Forgetting self ... 56
Fibbing ... 80
Good manners ... 56
God bless you, kind girls ... 88
Hoping for a hope! ... 6
Hot coals; or, how Fritz was conquered ... 32
Harry the honest boy ... 88
Idle words ... 48
"I wouldn't work Sundays" ... 104
John Handson's night work ... 56
"Just going to" ... 80
Letter for the children's corner ... 8
Love words ... 16
Lesson for parents ... 40
Love your parents ... 88
On the death of F. D. Boothby ... 48
One brick laid wrong ... 72
Practical ... 72
Pull it up by the roots ... 72
Polite children ... 96
Pride of dress ... 96
Rosalie and her cake ... 96
The hard way ... 8
The boy who conquered ... 8
The power of one good boy ... 16
Two apprentices ... 40
The ragged garment ... 48
To my young friends ... 64
The hard way ... 80
Table rules for little folks ... 88
The little folks ... 96
That's the difference ... 96
Too certain ... 104
The trusty children ... 104
The penitent son ... 104
Verbal vices ... 56
Which is the noblest? ... 16
Why robin redbreast sung his song ... 72

THE GREAT SYMBOLIC CHART of the Times of Daniel and John, in which the most important features of chronological prophecy are "made plain upon tables, that he may run that readeth." Sent by [illegible]

For the World's Crisis.

HER GLORY IS DEPARTED.

Well may thy servants mourn, my God,
The church's desolation;
The state of Zion calls aloud
For grief and lamentation.
Once she was all alive to Thee,
And thousands were converted,
But now a sad reverse we see,
Her glory is departed.

Her pastors love to live at ease,
They covet wealth and honor;
And while they seek such things as these,
They bring reproach upon her.
Such worthless objects they pursue,
Warmly and undiverted,
The church they lead and ruin too,
Her glory is departed.

Her private members walk no more
As Jesus Christ has taught them;
Riches and fashion they adore,
With these the world has bought them.
The christian name they still retain,
Absurdly and false-hearted,
And while they in the church remain,
Her glory is departed.

And has religion left the church
Without a trace behind her?
Where shall I go, where shall I search,
That I once more may find her?
Adieu, ye proud, ye light and gay,
I'll seek the broken-hearted,
Who weep when they of Zion say
Her glory is departed.

Some few like good Elijah stand,
While thousands have revolted;
In earnest for the heavenly land,
They never yet have halted:
With such religion doth remain,
For they are not perverted;
Oh! may they all through them regain
The glory that's departed.

Otto, Ills. CHARLES BUNNELL.

For the World's Crisis.

TESTIMONIES ON BAPTISM.

GATHERED BY I. K. L.

Prof. Stewart says: "The words bapto and baptizo mean to dip, plunge, or immerse into anything liquid," and that "all lexicographers and critics of any note are agreed in this."

Dr. Campbell (Presbyterian commentator), —"The word baptism, both in sacred authors and in classical, signifies to dip, plunge, or immerse. Had baptizo been employed in the sense of raino, to sprinkle, (which as far as I know it never is in any use, sacred or classical), the expression would doubtless have been, I indeed baptize water upon you."

Beza says: "Neither does the word baptizo signify to wash, unless consequently, for it properly signifies to plunge into for the sake of tinging or dyeing."

John Calvin says: "The very word baptizo signifies to immerse, and it is certain that immersion was the practice of the ancient church."

Luther says: "The term baptizo is Greek, and may be rendered dipping, as when we dip anything in water, so that it is covered all over."

Melancthon,—"Baptism is an entire action,—to wit, a dipping."

Dr. Whitby,—"Baptism by immersion is suitable, both to the institution of our Lord and his apostles; and was by them ordained to represent our burial with Christ, and so our dying unto sin, and our conformity to his resurrection by newness of life."

Parkhurst,—Baptizo primarily means to dip, immerse, or plunge in water."

Donegan,—Baptizo, to immerse repeatedly into a liquid, to submerge."

Greenfield,—"Baptizo means to immerse, immerge, to sink."

Liddell and Scott,—"To dip repeatedly, to dip under."

Prof. Anthon,—"Bapto, to dip, to plunge, to immerse; hence to dye.

Dr. Jones (England),—"Baptizo, to plunge in water, dip, bury, overwhelm."

Rev. Mr. Remmington says, in his "Reasons for becoming a Baptist," "I obtained the testimony of no less than twenty-three, (Greek Lexicographers), all of whom agree that its primary meaning is 'to immerse, plunge, dip, overwhelm;' and a few of them give as a remote meaning, 'to wash, lave, or tinge;' this, however, as a consequence, or by implication, because a thing washed, whatever may be its process, must be as wet as if immersed. Hence Alstedius says, 'It means not to wash, except by consequence.'"

Dr. Barclay (Quaker) says, "The Greek word baptizo signifies immergo—that is, to plunge and dip."

Malcolm's Bible Dict.,—"Baptizo is used in both Testaments in the sense of immersion, but never in the sense of sprinkling."

TESTIMONY OF THE PRIMITIVE FATHERS.

Tertullian says, "We die symbolically in baptism." On these words Rigaltius remarks, "We are immersed, as if we suffered death, and rise up out of the water, as reviving again." He (Tertullian) further says, "It is all one whether we are washed in the sea or in a pond, in a fountain or in a river, in standing or running water."

Chrysostom says: "To be dipped and plunged into water, and then to rise up out of it again, is a symbol of our descent into the grave, and our ascent out of it."

Barnabas says: "We go down into the water full of sins and pollution, but come up again bringing forth fruit in our hearts."

Basil, Archbishop of Cesærea, puts the following questions in his Lent sermon to the chatechumens before their baptism: "How can we be placed in a condition of likeness to his death? Ans.: By being buried with him by baptism. How are we to go down with him into the grave? By imitating the burial of christian baptism, for the bodies of the baptized are in a sense buried in water."

Grotius says: "That this rite was performed by immersion, and not by affusion, appears both by the propriety of the word and the places chosen for its administration."

PRACTICE OF THE PRIMITIVE CHURCHES.

Gregory says: "Baptism in the primitive times was administered by immersion."

Moshiem says (page 105): "In this (first) century baptism was administered by immersing the candidate in water." Again (p. 167), "The candidates for it were immersed wholly in water." Of the second century he says, "Those adult persons that desired to be baptized, received the sacrament of baptism according to the ancient and primitive manner of celebrating that institution, even by immersion."

Waddington,—"The ceremony of immersion (the oldest form of baptism) was performed in the name of the three persons of the Trinity."—p. 27.

Wesley on Rom. 6: 4, 5,—"The language was alluding to the ancient manner of baptizing by immersion."

Adam Clarke says on Col. 2: 12,—"Alluding to the immersions practiced in the case of adults, when the person appeared to be buried under the water as Christ was buried in the heart of the earth. His rising again the third day, and their emerging from the water was an emblem of the resurrection of the body and in them of a total change of life." On Rom. 6: 5, he says,—"It is probable that the apostle here alluded to the mode of administering baptism by immersion, the whole body being put under the water, which seemed to say the man is drowned, is dead, and when he came up out of the water he seemed to have a resurrection to life."

The Enc. Americana,—"In the times of the apostles the form of baptism was very simple. The person to be baptized was dipped in a river or vessel, with the words which Christ had ordered, (Matt. 28: 19), and to express more fully his change of character, generally adopted a new name. The immersion of the whole body was omitted only in the case of the sick who could not leave their beds. In this case sprinkling was substituted, which was called cline baptism. The Greek church as well as the schismatics of the East retained the custom of immersing the whole body, but the Western church (Catholic) adopted in the 13th century, the mode of baptism by sprinkling."—Art. Baptism.

F. Brenner, a Catholic writer, states "that thirteen hundred years was baptism generally and ordinarily performed by the immersion of a man under water; and only on extraordinary occasions was sprinkling or affusion permitted. These latter methods of baptism were called in question, and even prohibited."—Stuart, p. 361.

Says the Enc. of Rel. Knowledge,—"In the Greek church it is well known the practice of immersion is continued without variation to the present day."—Art. Baptism. "In the English Episcopal church, immersion was practised until the beginning of the seventeenth century. In many old houses of worship large baptistries now exist, which were once used in baptism. The first liturgy, in 1547, enjoins a true immersion, in case the child is not sickly. The present liturgy permits, though it does not require, immersion." —Ibid.

Says Robinson,—"The administration of baptism by sprinkling was first invented in Africa, in the third century, in favor of the clinics or bed-ridden people."—Eccl. History, p. 402.

Says Prof. Stewart, "But enough. 'It is,' says Augusti, 'a thing made out,' viz.: the ancient practice of immersion. So indeed all the writers who have thoroughly investigated the subject conclude. I know of no one usage of ancient times, which seems to be more clearly and certainly made out. I cannot see how it is possible for any candid man who examines the subject to deny this."—p. 359.

For the World's Crisis.

WHAT AN EVIL! WHAT AN EVIL!

What a nuisance, what a plague—what a leprosy it is, to have a smoking man or woman about the house or in the house. It's smoke in the morning, smoke at noon—smoke at night. It's smoke rising up, lying down, going out, coming in—it's smoke, smoke, all the time! Everything is smoked up. The kitchen is smoked up, the parlors, the bedrooms, the cellars, the garrets, the out-houses, the wardrobe—every particle of costume and furniture is more or less impregnated by this abominable Indian weed! God's pure atmosphere is poisoned and stenchified! Every family and every member in the family is compelled to inhale the poisonous effluvia, to gratify this accursed lust of the flesh! Tobacco penetrates every nook and corner. It's one of the most powerful, baneful, penetrating narcotics that ever visited God's earth. Then look at the dingy, dumpish, stupid sottishness of the smoker—with his rotten, gummed up, stenchified pipe or cigar in his mouth day and night—puffing his very soul out, regardless of consequences, to gratify an unnatural, depraved appetite! offending the whole community! Behold the man, his mouth, his lips, his teeth, his whole contour, his sallow, dumpish, baconised appearance! And oh! oh! what a breath,—what a breath! tell it not, write it not. Run! run for your life! Friend, smoking friend, have mercy, do—if you have no mercy on yourself—if you are determined to smoke your life out, sear your conscience harder than the nether millstone, go down to the grave a sot—do have pity on your neighbors. Paul said he would not even eat meat while the world stood, if it caused his brother to offend. Not so with tobacco chewers and smokers.

"With impudence they oft presume
To vex all persons in the room
Who can't endure tobacco fume—
And they must bear this wretched doom."

Do not excuse yourself by saying that some great and good men use tobacco. The great and good men who do so are in danger of sinking into very little and very wicked men, before they die.

Tobacco and rum! What twin brothers! What mighty agents of Satan! What a large share of the American people they are destroying! I love my children; and because I love them, I had rather bury them, than see them defile themselves with rum or tobacco.

As Paul said to Timothy, so say I to you: "Keep thyself pure." Be clean in your person, and be clean in your heart. But, depend upon it, you can be neither, if you use tobacco.

It costs more than education or religion, the army or navy. It costs England and America a sum sufficient to support 50,000 ministers with a salary of $1000; or more than 100,000 missionaries. The students in one college pay more than $6000 for cigars yearly. It tends to idleness, poverty, strong drink, and the whole family of vices. It tends to debility, dyspepsia, palsy, cancers, insanity, delirium tremens, and sudden deaths. It weaves a winding sheet around 20,000 in our land every year!

D. F. NEWTON, Author of Home Thrusts.

For the World's Crisis.

DO YOU PRAY FOR HIM?

When husband leaves you, dearly loved wife, to go among men and women that watch for evil, criticise with cruelty, tempt with impudence, or flatter with praise, may be, do you ask God to keep him from evil? When he stands "between the living and the dead," are you, his nearest earthly friend, praying Christ to quicken those that hear, and to speak through the lips of your dear one words that shall glorify God and benefit humanity? And when he is surrounded by unbelieving scoffers, persecuted for his faith in God's precious promises, when he is afar from you, longing for your words of sympathy, bearing the battle alone, does his courage rise as he thinks "my dear wife is at home, but she prays for me?" And is your life such that he can believe your prayers will be heard by Him who has said, "If ye abide in me and my words abide in you, ye shall ask what ye will and it shall be done unto you!"

Dear sisters, we have something to do in our Master's service aside from feeling sad when our husbands have a "hard time," and rejoice when they have "liberty in speaking." Something to think of besides the great or little remuneration he receives. Something to meditate on except the liability of our coming short of "food and raiment." The Lord calls us to labor in his vineyard. We are not to let our husbands lift the whole burden, and we sit sighing over the lot of a minister's wife. Let us work. Let us pray for each other, and for our companions, that they may be kept from vanity or discouragements, made useful in the hands of the Lord. And when God works through them, and the church grows under their labors, may we watch our female hearts lest we become proud, and consequently unfitted for our places. God give us grace, wisdom, and much patience. Amen. M. MATHEWS WEAVER.

Danville, C. E.

A PETITION.

Father, in this dark hour
Thine arm alone hath power
To succor me:
I fly to thee.

Beneath Thy sheltering wing,
For safety I would cling,
Until the blast
Be overpast.

O, ever faithful Friend!
Wisdom and patience lend
To guide me right
Through this dark night.

In Thee is all my trust,
Thou who alone art just,—
Who only can
My motives scan.

This heavy load of care
Dear Savior, help me bear;
Sustained by thee,
'T will lighter be.

Help me my faults to see,
And seeing help me flee:
O! make me pure,
In Thee secure.

And when my work is done,
My race on earth is run,
Among the blest
I may find rest.

Selected by S. M. T.

For the World's Crisis.

A HAPPY NEW YEAR.

I do heartily wish a happy new year to the World's Crisis, and all its attentive readers. A happy new year to our able editor, and all our friends connected with him in the office. May God abundantly bless every one of you with health and strength, divine grace and heavenly wisdom to perform your arduous duties in the fear of God. A happy new year to all the saints scattered abroad. Yes, we wish you might experience a happier year, this year, than you ever did before.

To this end, 1st, we must have pure hearts. Jesus says, "Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God." 2nd. We must have clean hands, and a clean mouth too. As father Paul says to his Corinthian brethren: "Dearly beloved, let us cleanse ourselves from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit, perfecting holiness in the fear of God." Can we be happy or very useful in the world while we are slaves of a perverted appetite? Every sensible person will readily answer, Nay. Then let no one be a slave to opium, tobacco, intoxicating drink, strong tea or coffee, or anything worse. Jesus says again: "If any man will come after me, let him deny himself and take up his cross and follow me." N. B. We do not believe the Holy Spirit has any affinity with physical or moral pollution (as "filthiness of the flesh or spirit.") The apostle says plainly, "Without holiness no man can see the Lord.' Holiness of heart and life is perfect rectitude. 3d. If you want a happy new year you must "submit yourself to God and resist the devil." No one is able to keep himself, without help from God. The Lord is in good earnest with us; we ought to be so with him. If we do not wish to lose our treasure in heaven, we must not hide our talents in the earth. 4th. If you wish to be happy, do good to others, even if they do not thank you for it. "Preach the word; be instant in season, out of season; reprove, rebuke, exhort, with all long suffering and doctrine." "For the time will come when they will not endure sound doctrine (and that time has come, now!); but after their own lusts shall they heap to themselves teachers, having itching ears; and they shall turn away their ears from the truth, and shall be turned unto fables." And let us say to the elders of the church, "Flee at the appearance of evil"; "and watch thou in all things, endure afflictions, do the work of an evangelist, make full proof of thy ministry." "Fight the good fight of faith"; "Fear God and keep his commandments";—and I pledge my word and honor, upon the word of God, that you will have a happy new year in the Lord.

P. S.—I am one of those that cannot believe that God approbates the common, intemperate, and unnecessary use of any thing that intoxicates, weakens the nerves, or in any way injures the system, or renders it unfit for the service of the Lord. The word of the Lord says, "Whether ye eat or drink, or whatsoever ye do, do all to the glory of God." If we do this, we shall have a home in the everlasting kingdom of our God.

Yours waiting for redemption at the second advent of Christ, P. TANDY.

Jan. 1st, 1865.

For the World's Crisis.

CONFERENCE AT NORWALK.

BRO. GRANT:—Our conference, that met at this place on the 1st inst., was not numerously attended, yet our meeting was a success, and has resulted in one of the most blessed revivals I ever witnessed. The ministering brethren present were—Brn. Mansfield and Babcock of Mich., Bro. Jonas Wendell of Edenborough, Pa., and Bro. Stetson of Olena, O. Before the meeting closed, there were marked indications of the gracious presence of God in our midst, commending the truth to the understanding and conscience of the sinner and the backslider. Quite a number came forward for prayers, and declared their purpose to be christians.

These tokens being so marked, it was deemed expedient to continue the meetings through the ensuing week, which was done under the labors of Brn. Mansfield and Wendell, with an increased interest from evening to evening. The Sunday following five happy souls came forward for baptism, and were planted with Christ in the likeness of his death, and raised in the likeness of his resurrection to a new life. The day was boisterous and severely cold; yet they hesitated not, and were joyful in obeying in this blessed ordinance.

At the close of the meeting in the evening of that day it was determined to continue on as long as these glorious manifestations were visible, and, thanks be to God, there is not yet a diminution of interest, but rather an increase. On the third Sunday of our meeting six more were baptized, and last Sunday a still larger number were prepared to go forward, but were hindered in consequence of our baptismal stream being flooded with water and floating ice; and now as many as twenty are waiting an opportunity of confessing their faith in this form of doctrine. I do not know the whole number that have come forward, and risen for prayers, but think it can not be less than from seventy to eighty; and still the work is progressing. Truly this is the Lord's doings, and it is marvelous in our eyes; and to him be all the glory.

The preaching has been both doctrinal and practical, and to the point. The understanding of the people has been enlightened concerning God's revealed purposes of salvation connected with an approaching judgment, and the truth has found its way to the hearts of this people in a manner never before witnessed, and has resulted in the conversion of many precious souls, and also in reclaiming a goodly number of backsliders. At the close of our Sunday evening meeting, the solemnity appeared even greater than at any time since our commencement.

Many deeply interesting cases of God's willingness to hear and answer prayer have occurred, and the result thus far demonstrates this fact, that whenever God's people will humble themselves before his mighty hand, and take their proper place, and will work unitedly in harmony with his revealed purposes, he will hear and pour out his Spirit in all the fulness they are prepared to receive it. Yes, beloved in the Lord, his ear is not heavy, that he cannot hear, neither his arm shortened, that he cannot save; therefore let all be encouraged to take hold of that Almighty Arm, in the full assurance of faith, and go to work, and do what we can, and we shall see the work prospering on all sides, the name of the Lord will be glorified, and the cry of "leanness" will no more be heard in our borders. The Lord is truly on the giving hand, and as a church we most earnestly implore the prayers of all christians in our behalf.

At the close of the second week, our much esteemed Sr. Mansfield (who was prevented from coming at the beginning with her husband, on account of injury received from a fall on the icy sidewalk sometime previous) came amongst us, but was not able to participate in our meetings on account of her illness. After some ten days, she with her husband returned home to Michigan, leaving the burthen of conducting the meeting wholly upon our good Bro. Wendell, (assisted by Bro. Hoyt and the church), who is still with us, and the Lord accepts his labors of love, and continues to bless his efforts. The church has extended to him a united invitation to come amongst us, and occupy this open field now all white for the harvest, as long as the providence of God may direct.

The meeting was preceded by a season of much fervent prayer, coupled with a deep feeling of assurance that the Lord had in store a rich blessing for us, ready to be conferred as soon as we were ready for its reception. O! let us be not faithless, but believing, keep humble at the foot of the cross, and then we shall at all times be ready to wage an appropriate war against the powers of darkness, and our hearts will be made glad by seeing sinners converted to God. Amen.

P. ALLING.

IN A TIGHT PLACE.

The Rev. Moses Hull, a great Spiritualist of Michigan, having said that he can perform the wonderful works attributed to Jesus, the Chicago New Covenant puts him in a tight place in the following conclusive manner:—

"We should be glad to see Mr. Hull and his theory tried by his own tests. Spiritualists, he claims, are 'true believers,' and 'can accomplish what Jesus said should attend the true believer.' This is Mr. Hull's language, and he adds that christian 'churches cannot produce one of the evidences that they are believers.' The charge, he admits, is a serious one, and he is therefore willing to test the matter. It is not necessary to call a World's Convention, as he proposes. Call together a few hundred of the people of Kalamazoo and vicinity, and test the matter as far as he is concerned. We admit that 'our church' cannot do the things referred to, as we limit the works to the apostolic age. As far as we are concerned, we give it up; but as Mr. Hull claims that he and other Spiritualists can do the works—that they are 'true believers,' and can accomplish what Jesus said should attend the true believer,' we propose that he be put on trial. He claims what we do not, and it is fair that he be tried by his own test. This would be entirely satisfactory, and we do not see how he can object to his own rule. What then could the true believer do: 'These signs shall follow them that believe? in my name shall they cast out devils; they shall take up serpents; and if they drink any deadly thing, it shall not hurt them; they shall lay hands on the sick, and they shall recover.'—Mark 15: 17, 18.

"Now, Mr. Hull, set the time when you will do all these things, and make good your claim that you are a 'true believer!' Can you cast out devils? If you can do this, you can go to the asylum in Kalamazoo and cure the poor lunatic. Jesus did this. Go there and restore the insane to their right minds! Let us see by your works that you are a 'true believer.' Or, go and play with the poisonous fangs of the serpent; let the rattle-snake bite your hand, and see if no ill effects are produced! Take a dose of strychnine or Prussic acid and see if it does not harm you. The test is—'If they drink any deadly thing, it shall not hurt them.' Is Moses Hull willing to accept his own challenge?

"Mr. Hull says again:—'But if Spiritualists prove themselves to be the true believers, by the inspired rule—'He that believeth on me, the works that I do, shall he do also,' we ask the church and clergy to acknowledge it,' etc.

"That's fair; and for one we say, that we will. Only do the works that Jesus did, and we will concede all that you claim. Jesus healed the sick, restored sight to the blind, hearing to the deaf, and speech to the dumb, cured the lunatic, stilled the raging sea, walked upon the waters, raised the dead, fed thousands of people, (besides women and children,) with five loaves and two small fishes, and did many other wonderful works, according to the history. Now, if Moses Hull can do these things, we shall admit that he is a 'true believer,' as he claims. Can he walk upon the water? Can he calm the waves of the sea by his word? Can he raise the dead? Jesus did these things; and, Mr. Hull tells us that he is willing to be tried by the inspired rule of Jesus. 'The works that I do, shall he do also.' Give us the evidence, Mr. Hull, that you are a 'true believer,' according to your own test, and we will at once admit your claim. Until then, we shall be constrained to think that your pretensions are mere 'sound and fury, signifying nothing.'"—Exchange.

THE CHEERFUL VOICE.

The comfort and happiness of home and home intercourse, let me here say, depend very much on the kindly and affectionate training of the voice. Trouble, and care, and vexation will and must, of course, come; but let them not creep into our voices. Let only our kindly and happier feelings be vocal in our home. Let them be so, if for no other reason, for the children's sake. These sensitive little beings are exceedingly susceptible to the tones. Let us have consideration for them. They hear so much that we have forgotten to hear. For as we advance in years, our life becomes more inferior. We are abstracted from outward scenes and sounds. We think, we reflect, we begin gradually to to deal with the past as we have formerly vividly lived in the present. Our ear grows dull to external sound; it is turned inward, and listens chiefly to the echoes of past voices. We catch no more the merry laughter of children. We hear no more the note of the morning bird. The brook, that used to prattle so gayly to us, rushes by unheeded—we have forgotten to hear such things. But little children, remember, sensitively hear them all. Mark how, at every sound, the young child starts, and turns, and listens! And thus, with equal sensitiveness, does it catch the tones of human voices. How were it possible that the sharp and hasty word, the fretful and complaining tone, should not startle and pain, even depress, the sensitive little being whose harp of life so newly and delicately strung, vibrating even to the gentle breeze, and thrill sensitively ever to the tones of such voices as sweep across it? Let us be kind and cheerful-spoken, then, in our homes.

For the World's Crisis.

I WANT TO REST.

I'm weary of my pain;
When shall I be at rest?
I long that blessed rest to gain,
And join with all the blest.

How sweet rest looks to me;
O! shall I ever dwell
Where all the good I hope to see,
And songs eternal swell?

Oh! how I sigh for home,
Where the weary are at rest;
O Savior, quickly come,
And let us there be blest.

LUTHERA B. WEAVER.

HOW TO MAKE IT MUCH.

A shoemaker being asked how he contrived to give so much, replied that it was easily done by obeying St. Paul's precept in 1 Cor. 16: 2: "Upon the first day of the week let every one of you lay by him in store, as God hath prospered him." "I earn," says he, "one day with another, about one dollar a day, and I can, without inconvenience to myself or family, lay up five cents of this sum for charitable purposes; the amount is thirty cents a week. My wife takes in sewing and washing, and earns something like two dollars a week, and she lays by ten cents of that. My children each of them earn a shilling or two, and are glad to contribute their penny, so that altogether we lay by us in store forty cents a week. And if we have been unusually prospered, we contribute something more. The weekly amount is deposited every Sunday morning in a box kept for that purpose, and reserved for future use. Thus, by these small earnings, we have learned that it is more blessed to give than to receive. The yearly amount saved in this way is about twenty-five dollars, and I distribute this among the various benevolent societies, according to the best of my judgment."

INDECENT PAPERS.

Yes, they are indecent, and not only indecent, but corrupting and demoralizing. Look upon the numerous book and paper stands in our city, into very many book stores—what do you see? Snakes in the grass, heaps on heaps, serpents that bite with a deadly venom. So exceeningly vile are many of these publications, that even one of our dailies that caters to a corrupt taste, is induced to cry out, thus: "We wish to call the attention of the public, and more especially that of the general superintendent of the police, to the vulgar papers that are sold at many of the newspaper stands, and hawked about the streets, in defiance of law and decency. Any argument in regard to the propriety of putting a stop to such business would be useless, since there are few persons to be found so vile as to openly advocate the sale of these papers. It is a disgrace to the city that individuals who are so devoid of self-respect as to print the suggestions of a foul imagination, should be allowed to reside elsewhere than at Sing Sing."—"Home Thrusts."

A WARLIKE WORLD.—The Opinion Nationale, of a recent date, gives this dismal picture of the present belligerent condition of the world:

If there be a dead calm in politics, as well as business, among us, it is not the same in all parts of the little planet we inhabit. Three quarters of humanity, in fact, are living in the barbarous state of war.

There is war in Poland, war in Algeria, war in Tunis, war in Mexico, war in the United States, war in Peru, war in New Zealand, war in China and Kashgar, war in Japan, war in Afghanistan, war in twenty countries in Africa.

This is, unfortunately, enough to discourage the friends of universal peace, and who can say they will not meet with still greater disappointment next year? Italy, Hungary, Poland, Denmark, and the Slavonian population of Turkey, are not, it must be confessed, in the most pacific humor, and, to those who study the general situation of our continent, it is quite evident that instead of getting better, goes on from day to day getting more and more complicated.

JAMES FERGUSON, the celebrated writer on astronomy, is one of the most remarkable instances of self-education which the literary world has seen. His father was a day laborer. At the age of seven or eight young Ferguson actually discovered two of the most important truths in mechanics, the lever and the wheel and axle. He afterwards hit upon others without teacher or book, and with no tool but a simple turning lathe and a little knife. While he was feeding his flock, in the employment of a neighboring farmer, he used to busy himself in making models of mills, spinning wheels, etc., during the day and in studying the stars at night. Before his death he was elected a fellow of the Royal Society; the usual fees being remitted as had been done in the cases of Newton and Thomas Simpson. George III., who when a boy was occasionally among the auditors of his public lectures, gave him a pension of fifty pounds.

FRANKNESS.—Be frank with the world. Frankness is the child of honesty and courage. If a friend ask you a favor, you should grant it if it is reasonable; if it is not, tell him plainly why you cannot. You will wrong him and wrong yourself by equivocation of any kind. Never do a wrong thing to make a friend, or to keep one. The man who requires you to do so is dearly purchased, and at a sacrifice. Deal kindly and firmly with all men, and you will find it the policy which wears the best. Above all, do not appear to others what you are not.

☞ Avoid argument with a person if he is directly opposite to you; if he has a mind of his own he cannot be convinced; and if he has no mind he is a poor convert; it is not only a loss of time but often of friendship.

☞ Filthy people are generally ill-natured.

COMPOSITION TO STOP LEAKAGE.—A correspondent of the Lynn News gives a recipe for a cheap composition with which leaks in roofs may be effectually stopped. Having a leaky "L," he says: "I made a composition of four pounds of resin, one pint of linseed oil, and one ounce of red lead, and applied it hot with a brush to the part where the 'L' was joined to the main house. It has never leaked since. I then recommended the composition to my neighbor, who had a dormer window which leaked badly. He applied it, and the leak was stopped. I made my water cask tight by this composition, and have recommended it for chimneys, windows, etc., and it has always proved a cure for a leak."

TO PREVENT PRINTS FROM FADING.—The dress should be washed in lather, and not by applying the soap in the usual way direct upon the muslin. Make a lather by boiling soap and water together; let it stand until it is sufficiently cool for use, and previously to putting the dress into it, throw in a handful of salt; rinse the dress without wringing it, in clear cold water, into which a little salt has been thrown; remove it and rinse it in a fresh supply of salt and water. Then wring the dress in a cloth and hang it to dry immediately, spreading as open as possible, so as to prevent one part lying over another. Should there be any white in the pattern, mix a little blue in the water.

TO GET RID OF INSECTS.—Insects are immediately suffocated by benzoin. It has been employed very successfully in banishing the insects which infest domestic animals. It has also been accidently discovered that pepperwort powerfully attracts bugs. Dried fragments of it have been placed in a chamber which was infested with these troublesome insects and found covered with them. Nearly all of them were dead; the remainder were in such a state of torpor, that they could easily be destroyed.

TO DESTROY STUMPS.—A correspondent of the Rural Register writes that Mr. John Barnes, of Baltimore, removed a troublesome stump from near his house in the following manner: "Last fall, with an inch auger, he bored a hole in the center of the stump ten inches deep, and into it put about half a pound of oil of vitrol, and corked the hole up tight. This spring, the whole stump and roots extending through all their ramifications, were so rotten that they were easily eradicated."

A DURABLE PAINT.—To a quantity of charcoal add a quantity of litharge as a drier, to be well levigated with linseed oil, and when used to be thinned with good boiled linseed oil. The above forms a good black paint, and by adding yellow ochre, an excellent green is produced, which is preferable to the bright green frequently used on out-of-door work, as it does not fade with the sun.—French paper.

How to preserve Milk.—A spoonful of scraped horse radish put into a pan of milk, will preserve the milk sweet for several days, even in the hottest weather.—Prairie Farmer.

The Children's Corner.

PLEDGE OF THE TRY COMPANY.

We, the Undersigned, hereby pledge ourselves to abstain from Tea, Coffee, Tobacco, and all Intoxicating Drinks as a Beverage.

TOO CERTAIN.

"Father, I am tired of reading the Bible. I have read it so often, that I know every thing in it."

"Every thing, my son? Do you think you could not find one chapter that would contain something you have never yet noticed?"

"Yes, father, I think so. I am sure I know all that is in the historical parts of the Bible."

"Well, let me try you. When were a large number of men fed with a few loaves of bread, and a supply left when they had done eating?"

"Why, father, surely I remember Christ's feeding several thousand persons at two different times with a few loaves and fishes."

"Very well: those are two instances. Now tell me a third."

"There is no other in the Bible."

"You are perfectly sure of that? Suppose you reflect a little before you answer again."

"Yes, father; I have thought, and I am certain there is no other miracle of the kind mentioned in the Bible.

"Well, my son, open your Bible at the fourth chapter of the Fourth Book of Kings."

"The fourth Book of Kings! Father, there is no such book."

"Hand me the Bible. What does this title say?"

"It is 'The Second Book of the Kings, commonly called the Fourth Book of the Kings.'"

"Well, there is one thing learned by the boy that knew the Bible so well. Now turn to the fourth chapter, and read from the forty-second verse."

"Here it is sir: 'And there came a man from Baal-shalisha, and brought the man of God.'"

"Who was that man of God?"

"I must look. It was the prophet Elisha."

"Now proceed."

"And brought the man of God bread of the first fruits, twenty loaves of barley, and full ears of corn in the husk thereof. And he said, Give unto the people, that they may eat. And his servitor said, What should I set this before a hundred men? He said again, give the people, that they may eat; for thus saith the Lord, They shall eat, and shall leave thereof. So he set it before them, and they did eat, and left thereof, according to the word of the Lord.'"

"That will do for this time, my son. I have never wished to make the reading of the Scriptures tedious by requiring you to read them continually, without giving you other books to read. But I wanted to convince you how mistaken young people are apt to be in their ideas of their own knowledge. There are thousands of children—yes, and of men and women too—who would read with interest many passages of the Bible, if they found them in a fresh and beautiful volume which they believed to contain nothing but what is published for the first time. Remember this, and let me advise you to read the four books of Kings, and to make a list of all the passages you will find there, which, like the one you have just read, are as new to you as if you had never heard nor read them."—The Gem.

THE TRUSTY CHILDREN.

Fanny and Tommy were left one day by their mother in charge of her fish-stall.

"Take care, children," said the mother, "that you don't leave it for a minute; and stay here till I come back from seeing to father's dinner."

The children both promised to remain by the stall; for they loved their kind mother dearly, and liked to do all they could to help her

Presently a great number of people came running down the street near which Fanny and Tommy were standing. They saw the people, and heard a band of music playing.

"Oh! come along, Tommy," said a little boy who at that moment caught sight of him, come along, and see the show: there are ever so many animals being taken through the town, and a band of music playing. Do come; we shall have such fun!"

"No, thank you," said the little boy and girl, "we can't come away now, for mother has gone home to get father's dinner, and she told us to stay here till she came back."

"Oh! never mind," said Jimmy, who, I am sorry to say, never cared to obey his mother; "you won't be away five minutes; and I am sure no one will run off with your fish in that time; and you can get back again before your mother comes. She will never know you have been away; and you need not tell her."

"No, no," said both the good children; "we won't do that; mother could never trust us again; and we should not like to disobey her." So off ran Jimmy after the show, laughing at Tommy and Fanny, and calling them "silly" for not having a bit of fun.

He had not been gone many minutes when Fanny's mother was seen coming down the street as fast as she could walk. "Good children," she said, "for staying by the stall as I bid you. Now you may run after the show; and you will catch it in a minute or two; and here is a penny for each of you to buy an orange, because you have been trusty and obedient." The children took the money, and off they ran, feeling so glad that they had not listened to naughty Jimmy, and disobeyed their dear mother.

My dear little readers, remember that trusty, obedient conduct is sure to bring its own reward. You will have a happy conscience, and that is better than thousands of gold and silver.—Children's Friend.

"I WOULDN'T WORK SUNDAYS."

"Well, my boy, how much do you earn a week?" I inquired of a smart little fellow one day.

"Two dollars."

"Well, how much is that a day?" I queried.

"Thirty-three and one-third cents."

"Ah! are you not a little mistaken in your arithmetic?" again I inquired.

"Why, three times thirty-three and one-third is one dollar, and twice that is two dollars."

"So you reckon but six days in a week; I thought that there were seven."

"Why, I don't work Sundays! I go to Sabbath school," he said with a look of surprise.

"Oh, yes! I see. But your mother would let you work if you didn't go to Sabbath school?"

"I wouldn't work Sundays unless she made me; and I know she wouldn't do that!" was his noble answer.

Telling him always to "regard the Sabbath, and be prompt at Sabbath School," I slipped a fifty-cent currency into his hand.

"What is this for?" he inquired with surprise.

"For your mother," was the reply.

"Oh, thank you!" he said; and I left him at his word as happy and busy as a bee.—S. S. Advocate.

THE PENITENT SON.

The son of a minister had by some means excited the displeasure of his father. His father thought it right to be reserved for an hour or two, and when asked a question about the business of the day he was very short in his answer to his son. An hour or two elapsed. The time had nearly arrived when the youth was to repeat his lesson. He came to his father's study and said:

"Papa, I cannot learn my lesson unless you are reconciled. I am sorry I have offended you. I hope you will forgive me. I think I shall never offend you again."

His father replied, "All I wish is to make you sensible of your fault. When you acknowledge it, you know all is easily reconciled with me."

"Then, papa," said he, "give me the token of reconciliation, and seal it with a kiss."

The hand was given and the seal most heartily exchanged on each side.

"Now," exclaimed the dear boy, "I will learn Latin and Greek with any boy," and fled to his little study.

"Stop, stop!" said his father; "have you not a heavenly Father? If what you have done be evil, he is displeased, and you must apply to him for forgiveness."

With tears starting in his eyes, he said, "Papa, I went to him first. I knew except he was reconciled I could do nothing." And with tears now fast rolling he said, "I hope—I hope he has forgiven me; and now I am happy."

His father never had occasion to look at him with a shade of disapprobation from that time to his death.

A SEWED-UP MOUTH.

It is said that in the country of Siam, if one is found guilty of lying, the law dooms him to have his mouth sewed up! A sad punishment, truly.

Now, suppose that everybody who told a lie in this country was sure to have his mouth sewed up with an invisible thread, by an invisible needle, how many open mouths should we see in the streets? I wonder how many boys and girls who read this, would have sewed-up mouths? Many would have open mouths, for I believe many of you have never told a lie, and I hope you never will; but, alas! some of you have, and if you are ever sent to Siam, and tried for lying, your mouths will be sewed up.

Let those who have never told a lie, cleave to their love of truth. Let those who have, repent, and do so no more. Let all remember that "lying lips are an abomination to the Lord; but they that deal truly are his delight."—N. Y. Observer.

The World's Crisis

AND SECOND ADVENT MESSENGER.

TERMS:

If paid in advance,— One year..........$2.50
Six months........$1.25

If not paid within six months,— One year.....$3.00
Six months...$1.50

Five copies, to one address, six months..........$5.60
—same rate for any larger number under ten.

Ten copies, to one address, six months..........$10.00
—same rate for any number over ten.

CLUB PRICES PAYABLE ALWAYS IN ADVANCE.

POSTAGE.—The postage, in the United States, on each single copy of the Crisis, is 20 cents a year, payable quarterly, in advance, at the office of delivery.

RULES FOR CORRESPONDENTS.—Over all matters not intended for publication, write PRIVATE.
Over all business matters, write BUSINESS.
Over all articles for the paper, write FOR THE CRISIS.
All articles should be accompanied by the writer's name, for the Editor's information, even if it is not published.
When the names of new subscribers are sent, please say they are new, and it will save us much labor.

PRIVATE LETTERS.—Those wishing to address the Editor on matters not connected with the office, will please write the word PRIVATE on the outside of the envelope.
Please put the business matters and appointments on a piece of paper separate from other communications.
All persons writing to the office should give DISTINCTLY and PLAINLY the Post Office, County and State at which they wish to be addressed; and all orders, subscriptions, communications and remittances, should be plainly directed to MILES GRANT, BOSTON, MASS.

PUBLISHED ALSO AT THE SAME OFFICE,
Semi-monthly:

THE YOUNG PILGRIM:
An Illustrated Sunday School Paper,
FOR CHILDREN AND YOUTH.

TERMS:

Single copy, 30 cents a year; and at the same rate for any number of copies under ten. [illegible]

Payable always in advance.

POSTAGE.—[illegible]

CLUBS.—[illegible]

CANADA SUBSCRIBERS [illegible]

[illegible]

ALL COMMUNICATIONS, orders, and remittances, should be addressed to THE YOUNG PILGRIM, Boston, Mass.

The World's Crisis

AND SECOND ADVENT MESSENGER

"BEHOLD, I COME QUICKLY; AND MY REWARD IS WITH ME."

WHOLE NO. 494. BOSTON, TUESDAY, MARCH 21, 1865. VOL. XXI.—NO. 1.

The World's Crisis

AND SECOND ADVENT MESSENGER,

Issued every Tuesday Afternoon, at

167 HANOVER STREET, BOSTON.

MILES GRANT, EDITOR.

EDITORIAL COMMITTEE:
S. G. MATHEWSON, I. C. WELLCOME,
H. P. CARPENTER.

PUBLISHING COMMITTEE:
C. F. HUDSON, H. V. DAVIS,
S. S. BREWER, J. G. HAMBLIN,
D. MATHEWSON.

GEORGE T. ADAMS,
TREASURER AND BUSINESS AGENT.

☞ THE CRISIS is devoted to the exposition of all Bible truth; especially the doctrine of the immediate, personal coming and reign of Christ on the earth; holiness of heart; the unconscious state of the dead; their literal resurrection, and final destruction of the wicked.

For the World's Crisis.

GLAD VOICES.

BY D. T. TAYLOR.

Lift your glad voices in triumph on high;
Shout, for the day of redemption is nigh!
Sing, for the Lord will appear in his glory;
Mountains and valleys, repeat the glad story.
Tune every lyre,
Lift the strain higher,
Far o'er the ocean the tidings shall fly.

Lift your glad voices, ye nations, and sing;
Let the high anthem re-echo and ring.
Sing, for the bright One that slept in the manger
Comes; and the earth that once pillowed the stranger,
In rich adorning,
Hails the glad morning,
Blossoms to Eden and welcomes her King.

Lift your glad voices, He conquered the grave,
Jesus, Immanuel, almighty to save.
Shout to the tyrant, "Thy chains are all broken";
Sing, for the voice of Jehovah hath spoken.
Open the portal,
Ransomed, immortal;
Life shall endure with Eternity's wave.

Lift your glad voices, your banners unfurl,
Sin, Death and Hell shall to ruin be hurled.
Christ shall come down in his chariot of fire,
Bethlehem's Beauty, and Israel's Messiah;
Prince ever glorious,
Strong and victorious,
Lion of Judah, and King of the world.

Lift your glad voices, He cometh again;
Sound out the tidings o'er earth and o'er main!
Sing, for the dark days of evil are ending;
Shout to the Bridegroom with angels descending!
Bride of Jehovah,
Welcome thy lover;
Sing, for He cometh, He cometh to reign.

Lift your glad voices wide under the sun,
Sing of His power who the victory has won.
Strong is that arm that the strengthless defended,
Saved us from hell and the warfare hath ended.
Hallelujah again;
Hallelujah, Amen!
Shout! for the work of Redemption is done.

Rouses Point, N. Y., March, 1865.

THE TIME QUESTION.

BY DR. ALEXANDER DECKER.

Do any of the prophetic periods reach to and point out the time of the second Advent of Christ? This question I regard to be one of much importance; for if the time of the second coming of Christ is revealed in the word of God, then most certainly God had some important purpose to accomplish by it; and that purpose can only be accomplished by its being understood; otherwise it would simply serve to distract the brains and break the hearts of honest searchers after truth. But this is not the character of the God of the Bible. He has given his word to be understood, by which means to accomplish certain important purposes; and it is therefore clearly our duty to search it out.

That one at least of the prophetic periods (the 1335 days) reaches to the second advent, I think there is nothing more susceptible of proof in the Bible. In Daniel 12: 1, 2, certain wonders are brought to view—the standing up of Michael—time of trouble—deliverance of Daniel's people; every one found written in the book; and the awaking of many of that sleep in the dust, etc. It will be seen that the resurrection is here mentioned among the wonders, and the last one too in the category. I wish this fact to be particularly noticed. Therefore, in whatever light the standing up of Michael may be seen, it is certain that the coming of Christ must be embraced in the wonders, since the resurrection cannot take place prior to his advent. Therefore, when the angel, as recorded in verse 6, asks, "How long to the end of these wonders?" he virtually asks, how long to the resurrection, as that is the last wonder mentioned. This question was asked by an angel of God sent to Daniel for this purpose; and, therefore, the question is a pertinent one, and the answer must be as definite as the question—must reach to the end of the wonders—to the resurrection and coming of Christ. Therefore it is the resurrection that is definitely pointed out by the 1335 days. That this view of the case is correct is further proved by the fact, that Daniel is to rest and stand in his lot at the end of the days, which necessarily involves a resurrection.

"At the end of the days." This phrase, where it stands in connection with prophetic periods, has always been definitely fulfilled; or, in other words, all events marking the termination of prophetic periods have always been fulfilled in the last day or year of those periods. The children of Israel left Egypt on the self same day that the 430 years ended. They also crossed over Jordan five days before the forty years of their wandering in the wilderness was out; and the king of Babylon was killed in the seventieth year of the captivity, etc. This I regard as quite sufficient to establish the fact, that the resurrection will take place near the close of the last year of 1335.

But it is objected that none of the prophetic periods point out the time of the coming of Christ, from the fact that our Lord said, as recorded in Mark 13: 33, "But of that day and hour knoweth no man, no not the angels which are in heaven, neither the Son, but the Father only." Therefore, it is objected that if the time of the second advent was revealed in any of the numbers of Daniel, some man, or angel, or the Son, must have revealed it, and therefore must have understood it.

This may seem quite plausible at first sight to some; but it will not bear investigation. For instance, suppose Christ and the angels did know that when the 1335 days ended, the resurrection would be fulfilled, how, I ask, could they know from anything revealed when they would end, since there was nothing in the prophecies that showed when the abomination of desolation would be set up? and yet, without this knowledge, they certainly could not tell when they would end. There was no period running either from the angel's time, or from Christ down to that event. Therefore, as they could not know from anything revealed, when the abomination of desolation would be set up, they could not know when the 1335 days would end, notwithstanding the angels were the agents in making the revelation. Furthermore, it does not follow that because the angels were made the agents to reveal certain facts to Daniel, and through him to us, that therefore they understood perfectly what they revealed, and especially so, since those things were sealed up to the time of the end. . . .

The 1335 days, therefore, is the only period that clearly runs to and points out the time of the Savior's coming.

But when this latter period would end, neither Christ or the angels had any means of knowing in their day, unless they knew it from some revelation direct to them, that is not contained in Daniel's prophecies; for, as before said, there is nothing there by the understanding of which they could know when the abomination of desolation would be set up, and therefore they could not know when the 1335 days would end.

But again. If the Savior's language refers to all future time, then it precludes himself and the angels from knowing a single day or hour before he makes his appearance in the world as certainly as it does the waiting church; and who, I ask, is ready to take such a position? Are we to believe that Christ will not know the time of his coming a single day or hour beforehand? I am satisfied that no man, in his right mind, can believe anything so monstrously absurd.

That the Savior had reference to present time, is further proved from the fact, that after he declared that no man, angel, neither the Son, knew the day or hour, he says: "But as the days of Noah were," etc; thus showing the contrast. Well, how was it in the days of Noah? Answer. The flood came and took them all away. Who did it take away? Answer. All who knew it not. Who did it not take away? Answer. Those who knew it. Will it be so when the Son of man is revealed? Answer. Jesus says it will. Did Jesus endorse definite time in the 24th of Matthew? He did; for he commands us to read and understand when the abomination of desolation stood in the "holy place;" and he knew that to understand this, was to understand when the 1335 days would end.

Again, Mark 13; 33, "Take heed, watch and pray, for ye know not when the time is." This verse is supposed by many to be positive evidence against knowing the time. But I object, that if the church could never know the time, then why watch? Is there anything to be gained by watching? The following verse shows that the idea of watching is to know when the "master of the house cometh." But if those who are commanded to watch can never know "when the time is," then there is no use of watching; for the only sense in which the term watch is here used, is to watch for the approach of the master; and the plain import of the Savior's injunction is to watch until ye do know when the time is. This position, I think, is clearly proved by the Savior's language in Revelation. Hear him. "If therefore thou shalt not watch, I will come on thee as a thief; and thou shalt not know what hour I will be upon thee." This passage shows unmistakably what is to be gained by watching—knowledge of the hour that Christ will come. It further shows what is meant by his coming as a thief: that it is his coming at an hour unknown by those upon whom he thus comes.

As a further proof of this, I refer to the Savior's threatening against the "evil servant," in Matt 24: 50. "The Lord of that servant shall come in a day when he looketh not for him, and in an hour he is not aware of, and shalt cut him asunder," etc. All can see, I think, the force of this passage—that if the Lord is thus coming on the evil servant because he is evil, that he will not thus come on the good or wise servant. Therefore he will come to the wise servant the day he is looking for it, and the hour he is aware of it. Thus it was in the days of Noah and Lot, and thus the Savior says it will be when the Son of man is revealed.

I think I have now shown what the Savior means by watching, and the benefit to be derived by so doing—a knowledge of the time of his coming. I have omitted much in the foregoing that might be said on this subject. There is one thing more, however, which I will here mention in short.

In Daniel 12: 7, the angel with uplifted hands to heaven, in answer to the question "How long to the end of these wonders?" swears that it shall be for "a time, times, and a half." What was it that Daniel heard but understood not? Answer. The oath of the angel on time. What was it, or what were the words that were closed up and sealed to the time of the end? Answer. The words or oath of the angel on time. What was it then that the angel declared the wise should understand? Answer. The words closed up and sealed to the time of the end. And what were these words? Answer. What the angel swore to, which was to time.

Yes, dear reader, the word of God, by the mouth of his angel, declares that the wise shall understand the time; and the time reaches to the end of the wonders—to the end of the resurrection, whoever may say to the contrary. If there was nothing else in the word of God to prove that the time of Christ's coming would be understood, this one declaration of the angel, standing in the connection that it does, is quite sufficient.

For want of time and space, I now come to the close of what I have to say on this subject for the present, hoping that the foregoing will be sufficient to convince the readers of the Herald of Life, that the design of God in giving the prophetic periods was that they should be understood, and thus accomplish the important purpose of showing his waiting church the time of their deliverance, and thereby securing her readiness for the coming of the Son of God from heaven.—Herald of Life.

For the World's Crisis.

LAST DAY SCOFFERS.

In the days that immediately precede the second coming of our glorious Lord and Savior, we are to look for scoffers at our blessed hope. And now we find ourselves surrounded by just such beings as were to exist in the last days:—"Heady, high minded, lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God." "Scoffers, walking after their own lusts, saying, Where is the promise of his coming?" "A wicked and perverse generation, whose end is to be burned."

This is the generation
We read of in God's word:
Like vipers, full of venom,
They do not fear the Lord.
Their throats are open sepulchers,
With their tongues they use deceit;
The poison of asps is on their lips,
Their doom they'll surely meet.

We see these filthy beings
Exulting in their sin,
And scoffing at the christian,
Whose heart is clean within.
They follow their great leader,
Apollyon is his name;
And they, like raging billows,
Are foaming out their shame.

Their end will be destruction,
Because they wont repent;
With hypocrites and devils
They'll into hell be sent.
With vile abominations
They're filling up their cup,
And in the fiery furnace
They soon will all burn up.

B. B.

For the World's Crisis.

"THE GLORIOUS APPEARING" OF CHRIST.

When Jesus went away from his church, all eyes were turned towards his future "coming in the clouds of heaven with power and great glory" to "be admired in his saints." All hearts were aglow with internal ecstasy and intense delight when this event was referred to. It was this with which they were wont to "comfort one another." Then it was no mean thing to "love his appearing." Then this event was spoken of as the "glorious appearing" of the Savior. Then, when men were turned to God, they were taught to "wait for his Son from heaven." Then they joyfully acquiesced in the apostle's affirmation, "Unto them that look for him shall he appear the second time without sin unto salvation." Then they believed the statement of the apostle, "When Christ who is our life shall appear, then shall ye also appear with him in glory." Then they gladly hoped "for the grace that should be brought unto them at the revelation of Jesus Christ." Then their "conversation was in heaven from whence they looked for the Savior." Then they could pray with fervent hearts, "Come, Lord Jesus." Then they could exclaim, "It doth not yet appear what we shall be, but we know that when he shall appear we shall be like him." Then they admonished each other to faithfulness, with the stimulating assurance, "The coming of the Lord draweth nigh."

But how is it now? Instead of being comforted, the nominal church is annoyed whenever they hear anything about the Savior's coming, and the less they hear about it, the better they are suited. Instead of loving this event, they absolutely abhor it, and would gladly put a padlock on the lips of all those who love to mention it. Instead of regarding it as a "glorious" event, they have imbibed a theory which invalidates it, and makes it an unnecessary event. Instead of instructing men to "wait for God's Son from heaven," they imagine they are going there themselves. Instead of looking for his "second" mission to earth to complete the scheme of salvation, they fancy that death will usher them into the broad haven of salvation. Instead of expecting to appear in glory when Christ shall appear, they fancy they are entitled to glory independent of his coming, and prior thereto. Instead of waiting for the recompense to be "brought at the revelation of Jesus Christ," they have imbibed the impression that they are going after the reward.

Thus modern theology has robbed this "glorious" event of all its lovely robes, and thrown them around that "enemy"—death—and palmed him off on christendom as the christian's friend, to escort him to glory, without having the Savior "come again to receive us unto himself,"—thus the resurrection and the judgment become obsolete or useless appendages.

Should the apostles be verily raised from the dead, and again go forth proclaiming the truths that they formerly made so prominent, they would be counted as heretics, shut out of the fashionable places of worship, and derisively denounced as "Millerites," and accused of meddling with the secrets of Jehovah. But, thank God, there are a few scattered ones who fervently "love" this "glorious" event, and will talk about it, and have learned that it is now at the doors, and are bold to proclaim it. W. SHELDON.

For the World's Crisis.

THE VOICE OF HISTORIANS.

"The Lord's Day"—The True Christian Sabbath.

From Eusebius' Eccl. Hist., pp. 111-113, 159-160.

NUMBER THREE.

"MENANDER THE IMPOSTER.

"Menander, who succeeded Simon Magus, exhibited himself in his conduct an instrument of diabolical wickedness, not inferior to the former. He, also, was a Samaritan, and having made no less progress in his impostures than his master, rebelled in still more arrogant pretensions to miracles; saying that he was in truth the Savior, once sent from the invisible worlds for the salvation of men; teaching, also, that no one could overcome even the very angels that formed the heavens in any other way than by being first initiated into the magic discipline imparted by him, and by the baptism conferred by him for this purpose. Of which, those who were deemed worthy would obtain perpetual immortality in this very life, being no more subject to death, but, continuing here the same, would be exempt from old age, and be in fact immortal.

"This account may be easily confirmed from Irenæus; but Justin, in the same place where he mentions Simon, also adds the narrative respecting this one as follows: 'But we know that Menander, who was a Samaritan of the village Caparathæa, becoming a disciple of Simon, and likewise stimulated by the dæmons, came to Antioch, and deceived many by his magic arts. He persuaded those that followed him that they should never die. And there are now some of his followers that make a profession of the same thing.' It was, indeed, a diabolical artifice, by means of such imposters assuming the title of christians, to evince so much zeal in defaming the great mystery of piety by magic arts, and to rend asunder by these means the doctrines of the church respecting the immortality of the soul and the resurrection of the dead. Those, however, who called these their Saviors, fell away from solid hope.

"THE HERESY OF THE EBIONITES.

"The spirit of wickedness, however, being unable to shake some in their love to Christ, and yet finding them susceptible of his impressions in other respects, brought them over to his purposes. These are properly called Ebionites by the ancients, as those who cherished low and mean opinions of Christ. For they considered him a plain and common man, and justified only by his advances in virtue, and that he was born of the Virgin Mary by natural generation. With them the observance of the law was altogether necessary, as if they could not be saved only by faith in Christ and a corresponding life. Others, however, besides these, but of the same name, indeed avoided the absurdity of the opinions maintained by the former, not denying that the Lord was born of the Virgin by the Holy Ghost, and yet, in like manner, not acknowledging his pre-existence, though he was God, the word and wisdom, they turned aside into the same irreligion. As with the former, they evinced great zeal to observe the ritual service of the law. These, indeed, thought on the one hand that all the epistles of the apostles ought to be rejected, calling him an apostate from the law, but on the other, only using the gospel according to the Hebrews, they esteem the others as but of little value. They also observe the Sabbath and other discipline of the Jews just like them, but, on the other hand, they also celebrate the LORD'S DAYS very much like us, in commemoration of his resurrection. Whence, in consequence of such a course, they have also received their epithet, the name of Ebionites, exhibiting the poverty of their intellect. For it is thus that the Hebrews call a poor man. . . .

"Dionysius, the Areopagite, who was converted to the faith by Paul the apostle, according to the statement in the Acts of the Apostles, first obtained the episcopate of the church at Athens. . . . In an epistle to the church of Gartyna, and to the other churches in Crete, he commends their bishop, Philip, for the numerous instances of fortitude that the church evinced under him, according to the testimony of all, whilst he cautions them against the perversions of the heretics. . . .

"There is yet another epistle ascribed to Dionysius, to the Romans, and addressed to Soter, the bishop of that city, from which we may also subjoin some extracts, viz: from that part where he commends a practice of the Romans retained even to the persecution in our day, and writes as follows:—'For this practice has prevailed with you from the very beginning, to do good to all the brethren in every way, and to send contributions to many churches in every city. Thus refreshing the needy in their want, and furnishing to the brethren condemned to the mines what was necessary, by these contributions which ye have been accustomed to send from the beginning, you preserve, as Romans, the practices of your ancestors, the Romans;—which was not only observed by your bishop Soter, but also increased, as he not only furnished great supplies to the saints, but also encouraged the brethren that came from abroad, as a loving father his children, with consolatory words.'

"In this same letter he mentions that of Clement to the Corinthians, showing that it was the practice to read it in the churches, even from the earliest times. 'To-day,' says he, 'we have passed the Lord's holy day, in which we have read your epistle. In reading which we shall always have our minds stored with admonition, as we shall, also, from that written to us before by Clement.' Besides this, the same author writes respecting his own epistles as having been corrupted:—'As the brethren,' says he, 'desired me to write epistles, I wrote them, and these the apostles of the devil have filled with tares, exchanging some things, and adding others, for whom there is a wo reserved.' It is not, therefore, a matter of wonder if some have also attempted to adulterate the sacred writings of the Lord, since they have attempted the same in other works that are not to be compared with these.'" T. M. PREBLE.

East Weare, N. H.

For the World's Crisis.

ON THE DEATH OF D. A. J., OF DANIELSONVILLE, CT.

BY S. S. BREWER.

The clouds look dreary in the sky,
I'm lonely in my room;
The mournful tear drops from my eye,
And nature hangs in gloom;
As memory wakes the wreck of years,
And clings to those departed,
I sigh as their loved forms appear,
The kind and tender hearted.

Ah! mourn with me the loss of those
In manhood's early prime,
Who blest with gifts that God bestows
Where kindness is enshrined;
Whose acts bespeak the love within,
A kind and tender heart,
And sensitive to pride and sin,—
I grieve with such to part.

Dear Daniel, thou art gone to rest;
Naught can thy fears alarm;
Sleep sweetly then in Jesus blest,
No foe can do thee harm.
A gloom hangs o'er that little cot,
Thy stricken family
And wife and offspring mourn their loss,
So happy once with thee.

But let us lift our hearts to God,
For lo! Redemption's nigh;
Although you feel the chast'ning rod,
There's light upon the sky.
Soon shall the dead in Christ awake
And greet their friends again,
Soon Life's eternal Day shall break,
And saints with Christ shall reign.

Farewell, until the Almighty's voice
Creation's centre shake;
'T will make the waiting saints rejoice,
And those that sleep awake.
Then like a shrivel'd parchment scroll,
In that decisive day,
The crashing heavens afar shall roll,
The mountains flee away.

Ashburnham Depot, Mass.

For the World's Crisis.

"DELIVER US FROM EVIL."

This is the closing petition of that prayer taught us by our blessed MASTER; and who can tell all that is comprehended in it? We repeat those words very often, but we do not realize their full meaning. The word evil seems to include every bad thing. All the snares of Satan, all the works of the flesh, all the consequences of sin, in short, everything that can in any way injure us or give trouble, seems to be expressed in that one word, evil.

"Deliver us from evil." Do we pray thus? And is our prayer answered? Are we entirely free from all sin? Do we find anything in us at any time that is not in harmony with the spirit of CHRIST? Then let us pray in earnest, "deliver us from evil."

However busy we may be, or how closely soever we are confined to our daily task, we can find time to lift our heart in prayer while we say, "Deliver us from evil." I would not confine you to this form alone,—no, pray always with "all prayer," but many of us can well take this for our constant petition, "DELIVER US FROM EVIL."

F. H. CHAMBERLAIN.

For the World's Crisis.

OUR NEEDS: WHAT ARE THEY?

In the Crisis of Feb. 28th, a good brother says, "As a people, we have never been in a worse state than we are to-day. But we have never believed time without making us better, and our best days were when we believed in time."

Another says, "Of one thing I feel confident, that unless there is more vital godliness amongst many who boast of being 'Adventists,' the Lord will be here before they are ready to see him;" but thinks we do not need a "time move."

Now I cannot say whether we need a "time move" or not, nor whether it would benefit us as a people or not. But of one thing I am confident, and that is, that we do need a greater and deeper earnestness with regard to those precious truths which we are endeavoring by the help of God to hold up, in an age like this, before a perishing world, as their and our only hope.

After a quarter of a century of careful and close study of the word of God, which in many cases has consumed the midnight oil, I feel confident that we have the truths of the gospel. Now the doctrines of the gospel constitute the reasons for its precepts, and the motive to obey them; and hence when we do obey them, "we walk by faith;" that is, our conduct is controlled by the truths we believe, and surely the truths that we as a people believe should awake in us that deep and tender earnestness which Paul expressed when he said, "Brethren, my heart's desire and prayer to God for Israel is, that they may be saved."

We need more of that earnestness manifested by Paul which constrained Agrippa to cry out, "Almost thou persuadest me to be a christian." Felix had never trembled under the reasoning of Paul, if the depths of his feeling had not corresponded with the strength and point of his argument. We need that deep earnestness that enabled Paul, "not alone at Ephesus, but almost throughout all Asia, to persuade, and turn away much people from their gods made with hands." The silversmith's craft would have been in but little danger had Paul delivered his messages without animation, or emotion, as the school boy recites an uninteresting lesson.

It is not the earnestness of an ardent temperament that I would portray, neither is it that apparent earnestness which is the result of an artificial style; but it is that rational feeling which corresponds with our obligations, and the interests involved, which will always make both style and manner simple and natural.

It is the earnestness of an embassador of the Most High God, bearing to men a most momentous message, and expecting to give account of his work.

It is the earnestness we feel when our neighbor's house is on fire, which prompts us to quench the flames, and save, if possible, his dwelling and his goods. In such a case the heart feels strongly, which will cause the intellect to work vigorously in devising the best and surest means for the accomplishment of the end. In a word, it is the earnestness of one who under the influence of the Holy Spirit feels the power of the truths he would have others feel.

Brethren, are we not defective on this point? And does not this defect greatly hinder, if not destroy, our efficiency, to-day? We are living in an age when the minds of men under the stirring events that surround us are unusually excited. The faith we profess, the interests involved in the subject we advocate, and the age in which we live, alike demand that we awake to greater earnestness with regard to the responsibility of our position.

C. BOND.

For the World's Crisis.

HAPPINESS AND MISERY.

No sooner are the eyes of our understanding opened upon the world around us, than an infinite variety of scenes are presented to our view, which cannot fail to interest the imagination and engage the attention of every admirer of creation. God has placed before us here in this life many things of a prosperous and interesting nature, to make us happy.

But when we look on the other hand—the dark side—we find that sin has entered the world, and by reason of sin and tranrgression, we have fallen short of those joys and blessings that were intended for our happiness. Yea, by reason of sin, sorrow and misery have beset us on every side. But God, through his infinite goodness and wisdom, while we are wandering through the changing and trying scenes of life, has given us the Scriptures of divine truth to guide, protect and deliver us from all those grievances that press so heavily upon us, and also to assuage our sorrows, by lifting our minds from earth, and placing our thoughts on those joys that never die. Therefore it is our highest interest to put our trust in God, to be reconciled to the allotment of Providence and trust in his goodness.

It is well to trust in him, because there are times when we are cast down with sorrow and anguish, and need something to sustain us which man cannot give; neither can it be found in the gay world, with all its boasted promises; we need the help of Him who "tempers the wind to the shorn lamb," and unless we have help from him, we shall fall, and be filled with sorrow and despair. In times of prosperity, however, when all is sunshine and gladness, we may feel, perhaps, that we have all that heart can wish. We look around us, and behold all things beautiful. The fields are green and the odor of sweet flowers is wafted on every gale.

But it will not always be so; our days are not all days of gladness, but there are those when sorrow comes, when threatening clouds and frosty winds gather and blight every green thing; and the glory of summer will pass away. Her green leaves will fade and fall, her flowers wither and die, and the cheerful smile which now greets us on every hand, will be ours no longer.

It seems to be the lot of all to meet with adversity, as well as prosperity, and perhaps it is better that it is so; for we are too apt to become careless and forgetful of Him who made us,—him who has set so many blessings before us; and if the ocean of life was always calm, if we never had sickness and sorrow, we might become heedless and more unthankful, even, than we are now; I say we might forget the one who gave us every good and perfect gift. If we met with no adverse winds and storms, we should at all times feel perfectly safe, and should not rely upon him who is mighty to save.

It would be much better for all if they would live in communion with God at all times; for in the days of prosperity, as well as of adversity, it will add much to their happiness; in fact, we cannot be truly happy, unless we do thus live; we cannot have that peace which passeth all understanding, which the world can neither give nor take away; but when trials come, when sickness makes her unwelcome visit, when death snatches one away we dearly love, then we feel how good it is to trust in God; then we realize how blessed is the consolation of the gospel of peace; for by the gospel we are enabled to look beyond the Jordan of death, and behold there life and immortality, with faith to believe that our friends who now sleep in death shall not always sleep, but shall rise from the dead at the resurrection of the just, and be crowned with glory and endless bliss, and that we, ere long, will meet them in a better world.

We are too often forgetful in reference to these things; we do not study the word of God half enough, nor reflect upon his goodness as we ought. Religion, which is our chief concern, or should be, is with many a secondary matter, and when adversity comes they are not prepared to meet it, and when death comes they are overwhelmed with terror. But happy are those who are wise concerning these things, for they are ever prepared for life or death, and their trust is in Him who is able and willing to save. Such will outride the most furious storms, for those who trust in God, need fear no evil. J. ELKINS.

Fisherville, N. H.

☞ Be avaricious of time; do not give any moment without receiving it in value; only allow the hours to go from you with as much regret as you would give to your gold; do not allow a single day to pass without increasing the treasure of your knowledge and virtue. The use of time is a debt we contract from birth, and it should only be paid with the interest that our life has accumulated.

SIGNS AND DAYS OF TRIBULATION.

"And Jesus said unto them, See you not all these things? Verily I say unto you, There shall not be left here one stone upon another, that shall not be thrown down. And they said unto him, Tell us, when shall these things be? and what shall be the sign of thy coming, and of the end of the world?"—MATT. 24: 2, 3.

Here are at least two questions propounded to the Savior, and we most assuredly believe that he answered them correctly. The first question is, when shall this temple and city be destroyed, or what are the signs of their overthrow? Ans. "When you therefore shall see the abomination of desolation, spoken of by Daniel the prophet, stand in the holy place, then let them which be in Judea flee into the mountains; for then shall be great tribulation, such as was not since the beginning of the world to this time, no, nor ever shall be." Matt. 24: 15, 21. Now the question arises, upon what people is to be this great tribulation? and what is the abomination that shall stand in the holy place? Ans. "And when you shall see Jerusalem compassed with armies, then know that the desolation thereof is nigh." Luke 21: 20. "For there shall be great distress in the land, and wrath upon this people" (the Jews), ver. 23. From these testimonies, it is conclusive that the Roman legion was the abominated and desolating power that was to, and has destroyed and laid in ruins, God's ancient temple; for, according to history, they even plowed the ground on which it stood; as sure evidence that there was not one stone left upon another, this desolating power not only destroyed the ancient temple of God, but it also destroyed the nationality of God's ancient people, and carried them away captive, and scattered and dispersed them among all nations, where they are to remain a stripped and peeled people, until Gentile times are filled full. One thing to me is conclusive: that the Jews as a nation, are never again to experience the like tribulation; for Jesus declares this great tribulation and wrath upon this people (the Jews) should never be again. The Savior gave to his disciples the desired information concerning the destruction of Jesusalem, and the temple, in order that they might escape the tribulation; which, according to history, they understood, and fled as directed, so that not a christian perished in the siege.

But of the day and hour of his coming, he said he did not know; neither the angels; therefore, said he, "watch, and pray, for you know not when the time is." Mark 13: 32, 33. But this know ye, "they (the Jews) shall fall by the edge of the sword, and shall be led away captive into all nations; and Jerusalem shall be trodden down of the Gentiles, until the times of the Gentiles shall be fulfilled."—Luke 21: 24, 26. Now, let it be distinctly understood that this saying of Jesus to his disciples brings us down to the close of Gentile times. And now, what shall be the signs of thy coming, and of the end of the world? Ans. "And there shall be signs in the sun, and in the moon, and in the stars; and upon the earth distress of nations, with perplexity; the sea and the waves roaring; men's hearts failing them for fear, and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth; for the powers of the heavens shall be shaken. And then shall they see the Son of man coming in a cloud with power and great glory. And when these things begin to come to pass, then look up, and lift up your heads, for your redemption draweth nigh." Luke 21: 25-28. "So likewise, when you shall see all these things come to pass, know ye, that the kingdom of God is nigh at hand," ver. 31.

Query. Are the fulfillment of these signs in the future, or have they had their fulfillment in the past? Brethren, I claim not infallibility; I speak according to the light I have; if you have superior light, please let it be forthcoming. I say then, some of those signs must be in the future; for when all are fulfilled the Son of man will have come. But I think some of the signs are fulfilling, so that the christian can with confidence begin to lift up his head, and know that his redemption draweth nigh. "And upon the earth distress of nations, with perplexity." I ask, when was there a time, as far back as we have any historic account, when the nations of the earth, universally, in both hemispheres, were so sorely distressed and perplexed as they are at the present time? "The sea and the waves roaring;" representing the unsettled state of nations, multitudes, tongues, and peoples; "for the waters which thou (John) sawest, are peoples, and multitudes, and nations, and tongues." Rev. 17: 15. All in commotion, all in confusion; like the troubled sea, all are perplexed. "Men's hearts begin to fail them for fear, and for looking after those things that are coming on the earth." The greatest statesmen are confounded. They are crying out, where are we drifting? to what crisis are we approaching? The whole world, they say, is just upon the eve of a crisis, such as the whole habitable world never saw!

These signs, dear reader, are being fulfilled before our eyes in a most unmistakable and vivid manner. "And because iniquity shall abound, the love of many (christians) shall WAX COLD"! Never was there a prediction uttered by the Son of God more correctly and accurately fulfilled to the letter than this one is now, in this very year 1865! He was not speaking of the love among Methodists, Quakers, or Campbelites; but of his own disciples! Iniquity, nationally, politically, ecclesiastically, has become scientific; and the atmosphere in which we live has become so tainted, the influences with which we are surrounded are so strong and captivating, that the zeal of christians for God's immutable truth, and love for one another, has become cold; "but he that endureth to the end, shall be saved." But I understand that there is no sign, (but the sounding of the last trumpet, spoken of by the Savior,) that intervenes between this, and the time that the saints will be caught away to meet the Lord, in order to a preparation to descend with him to the Mount of Olives.—Gospel Banner.

For the World's Crisis.

GOOD NEWS.

Bro. F. H. Burbank writes from Philadelphia: "My heart has been cheered by the gracious intelligence of the wonderful workings of the Spirit of God upon the hearts of sinners, through the instrumentality of our people, and to add to the cup of joy and thanksgiving, I will pour in some gospel tidings from the city of "brotherly love."

About six weeks ago, God directed my steps to a meeting held in a little room in an alley in the lower part of this city. There I found two Advent sisters, Reeves and Helgerson, laboring for the salvation of souls. I found that souls had been converted, but they needed help. I was impressed to hold a protracted meeting, and told them my feelings. They rejoiced, and our protracted effort commenced immediately. Soon the little room was too small, and a small hall was secured. Several turned missionaries, and we went out after lost ones. Visiting lanes, courts, and alleys, cellars, dark, dingy rooms, garrets, sheds, shops, rumholes, houses of prostitution, and the bedsides of the sick and dying. We talked and prayed with these poor colored people, administering to their temporal wants, thus far about sixty have been hopefully converted to God. "The love of God," "the speedy coming of Christ," and "the signs of the times," are our themes.

Still the work goes on. We are in the vilest, most degraded, and most dangerous part of the city. The revival is confined chiefly to colored people. There is a pestilence doing its awful work. Scores have been swept away. Army, typhoid, typhus, spotted, and other fevers prevail in this section. We are in the midst of it, and see some scenes that would make stout hearts quail. Many families have lost two, three, four, and more. So fearful has been the destruction, that the papers of the city caution citizens from going in that portion of the place. Two watchmen of the city had the fever and died, which caused more alarm. Yet God preserves me and the others. We have visited scores who have been thus afflicted. Surely God is preparing a people for the coming of his Son from heaven, and is sending us into the highways and hedges to compel them to come in. The Lord is sending clothing to cover the half naked children and ragged men and women. How their eyes sparkle when the little ones get into their neat little clothes. The tears and "God bress yous" from the older ones pay well, praise the Lord.

Our meetings are characterized by a deep solemnity, and the Spirit of God does its searching work. Every night from three to twelve come forward for prayers. They go to work in earnest, and call on the name of the Lord, and some are converted in every meeting nearly, the exceptions being very few. I might fill a large space in the columns of the Crisis, with interesting facts connected with this work, but shall have to omit them to give others a chance to speak.

Last Thursday night we gave a feast to the poor ones. Hired two small halls for the purpose, in the building where our meetings are held. Then we called in one hundred of the poor, lame, maimed, halt and blind. The first of the evening we had a love feast, and continued it for two hours, and as Bro. Munger says, "then we shut down under a full head of steam." About ninety took part in the exercises, one-half being converts. Such a scene I never witnessed. In came testimony upon testimony, all giving glory to our Heavenly Father and Jesus. There was weeping, shouting, walking, leaping and praising God. Husbands and wives, daughters and mothers, parents and children, all joining in the praise of God.

The hymn,

"In the gettin' up mornin', when the general roll is called,
I'll be there,"

brought nearly all to their feet. It seemed as if they all wanted Christ to come at that moment. Then came the gospel feast of corned beef, water crackers, cream biscuit, cakes, doughnuts, cheese, apples, bread and coffee. All were well fed, and had a clean table to eat at. Many places we visit, they have no bed, chair, table, or furniture of any kind, but sleep on, sit on, and eat from the floor. Sickness and poverty does this. After they had eaten, we packed up a lot of provision for "the little honeys at home," and old and infirm ones who could not attend the feast, thus adding fifty or sixty more to the number fed. After that we had another little meeting, thanked the Lord, and then went home.

We have all along been distributing flour, loaves of bread, and money amongst them. Some want to know how I get so much money. I tell them that "I have a shovel, and the Lord has one." That explains it.

We have good helpers. The Advent societies here stand by one nobly. The brethren, four of them, preach occasionally. Quite a company of brethren and sisters assisted at the gospel feast. They all feel that the work has been of the Lord, and that he still carries it on. By-and-by I may make a flying visit Eastward, then I can give farther information. We are to organize a church on the gospel plan, establish a Sunday school, a day school, and perhaps an evening school, missions, etc. The Lord is with us. Pray for us, that the Lord may bless us yet more and more. Yours looking for Jesus,

F. H. Burbank.

Philadelphia, March 9, 1865.

For the World's Crisis.

PROCRUSTES.

Have you not felt many times that God is more merciful than man? Many good men have too much of the disposition to make others conform entirely to their standard; or subscribe to every article of their creed. Like the ancient man of the iron bedstead, they cut off all who are too long for their measure, and all who are too short must be stretched out to the proper length. Now when we read the writings or listen to the remarks of such men (however good they may be), we find our sensitive nature wounded in a manner that we never experienced when reading the Bible. The Maker of man knows how to lead him better than these sharp men, even though they may have themselves been taught how to walk in the right way. They seem to forget that they may be in error on some points; and do not make allowance for the influence of circumstances which render it impossible for all men to see all things alike in this life. The best must admit that we now "see through a glass darkly."

May God help us all to be filled with that charity which will enable us to restore the erring in the spirit of meekness.

F. H. Chamberlain.

The World's Crisis
AND SECOND ADVENT MESSENGER.

Boston, Tuesday, March 21, 1865.

Please Remember.

All letters, communications and remittances, should be addressed to the Editor, Miles Grant.

All drafts, or bank checks, should be made payable to the Treasurer and Business Agent, Geo. T. Adams. Otherwise they cannot be used in the absence of the Editor.

NEW VOLUME.

As this is the first number of a new volume, we would remind our readers that this is the time to send the advance pay for six months or a year to come. We hope all will attend to this matter at once. Come, now is the best time. Have it out of the way, and off from your mind, by just sending your address, and the money inclosed.

We purpose to spare no pains to make the Crisis a welcome visitor to all your dwellings. Pray for us, that we may have special wisdom given us by the Lord, to conduct the paper entirely to his glory. None but those who have been in the business know the trials of an editor, and his need of divine aid.

LOWELL.

Things look encouraging for the church in Lowell, Mass. Their congregations are large and attentive, and the interest is increasing. Four were baptized March 9th, and others purpose to observe the same ordinance soon. The importance of a preparation to meet our coming Lord is being more and more deeply felt. Many begin to see that unless their lives correspond with the Bible standard for christianity, they have no reason to hope. They also see the necessity of being at peace with all mankind, as well as with God, if they would enjoy religion, and be ready to meet Jesus. None need have fear of being too particular on this point; for it is utterly impossible to be free in Christ and have hard feelings, or "variance" towards any one; no matter how badly they may have treated us. We must return good for evil, if we would be Jesus' disciples.

"GLAD VOICES."

Do not fail to read the poetry in this number from Bro. D. T. Taylor, entitled "Glad Voices." It is too good to be left where it is. Cannot some one of our readers either compose or find an appropriate tune for the hymn, and forward the notes to the Crisis? If we can get a tune as good as the poetry, we will have it inserted in "our paper."

BOSTON DISCUSSION.

Our discussion in Boston, with Bro. R. Wendell, on the subject of the resurrection of the wicked, is doing well, we think; and is to be continued from two to four evenings from Tuesday evening, March 22nd. We are having a candid hearing from an intelligent audience.

DISCUSSION IN WORCESTER.

We have consented to have a discussion in the City Hall, in Worcester, Mass., with Mr. J. G. Fish, of Michigan, on the subject of Spirit Manifestations, commencing March 27th, to continue four or five evenings.

Bro. Walter Pratt.—We are glad to be able to inform our readers that it is hoped that Bro. Walter Pratt is a little better; but is yet very feeble. Pray for him.

DISORDER IN THE HEAVENS.

It is well known to many of our readers that astronomers claim that the motion of the planets around the sun, and of the satellites, or moons, around them, are somewhat disorderly; for which reason we cannot calculate ancient eclipses to any great degree of certainty. But it should also be observed that artronomers are not agreed in their conclusions in this matter. Their efforts to show this disorder at a given time do not correspond with their observations and calculations at another; hence they are in confusion among themselves; and we are inclined to think that the want of harmony is in them, rather than in the celestial machinery.

One reason why we think so is based on the following well attested facts.

It has been shown by Dr Halley and Mr. Ferguson, that once in "577 years, 21 days, 18 hours, 11 minutes, 51 seconds, in which there are exactly 6890 mean lunations, the conjunction or opposition coincides so nearly with the node, as not to be distant more than eleven seconds."

Now we would inquire why is this, if the motions of the heavenly bodies are so widely different now from what they were in the days of Ptolemy?

It is further stated in connection with this point that, "If, therefore, to the mean time of any solar or lunar eclipse, we add this period, and make the proper allowance for the intercalary days, we shall have the mean time of the return of the same eclipse. This period is so very near, that in 6000 years it will vary no more from the truth than eight and one-fourth minutes of a degree."—Gregory's Astronomy, chap. xix.

We find the foregoing statements verified in a work now before us, in which is a list of all the eclipses in every year, from B. C. one thousand to A. D. two thousand,—a period of three thousand years. Are we not warranted, then, as claimed by Bro. Thurman, in believing that the motions of the heavenly bodies are governed by the same laws now that they were in the days of Ptolemy, or the kings of Babylon? and that correct astronomical tables will make the undisputed eclipses that occurred before Christ, as well as those that have been seen since, and at the present time?

We are inclined to the belief that the "disorder" is more in the astronomers, than in the movements of the heavenly bodies. If astronomers can find but eleven seconds variation in a period of over 557 years, during which there are 6890 changes of the moon, perhaps, when they have made nicer calculations, they will not find, even in 6000 years, eleven seconds variation in the great celestial clock of the Lord.

Bro. J. French writes from McCleansboro, Ill., that there are some of our faith in his vicinity, and invites any preaching brother who can come with recommendations to call and preach for them, promising to help them on their way after a godly sort. He lives three and a half miles northeast of McCleansboro.

"DESTINY OF THE WICKED."

The following is an editorial article published in the Voice of the West, Feb, 7th, 1865. We rejoice that Bro, Himes sees the clear light on this very important portion of the word of the Lord. May he be blessed with much courage in its proclamation:

But the destiny of the wicked is also involved in this discussion. What is to be the nature of future punishment? Are the wicked to be destroyed; "punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord" (2 Thess. 2: 9,) or are they to live in end less misery? Are they to suffer indescribable pain and anguish, in some place called Hell, without the least ray of hope that they will ever be delivered? These are the two views to be looked at. Which is true? We take the position of Paul, they will be punished with destruction! They will suffer the second death in the lake of fire, and cease both to suffer and to live. "And death and hell were cast into the lake of fire. This is the second death; and whosoever was not found written in the book of life was cast into the lake of fire." (Rev. 20: 14, 15.) This will take place after their resurrection, or when they live again (Rev. 20: 13.) And the lake of fire into which they are cast will be on this earth, and exist in connection with the judgment. "And fire came down from heaven and devoured them. And the devil that deceived them was cast into the lake of fire and brimstone where the beast and the false prophet are, and shall be tormented day and night forever. (Rev. 20: 10.)

Here three things are associated. The devil, the beast and the false prophet. They have a common doom; the lake of fire. Let us inquire into the character and destiny of each.

And first, of the devil. He is doomed to destruction, with all his works. Paul says, "For inasmuch as the children are partakers of flesh and blood, he also himself likewise took part of the same; that through death he might destroy him that had the power of death"—that is, the devil. (Heb. 2: 14.) His works also go with him. "For this purpose was the Son of God manifested, that he might destroy the works of the devil." (1 John 3: 8.) These are positive declarations of the Holy Spirit, and will be literally fulfilled.

Secondly, the beast. This is a symbol of the papal power. The church and state united. It is the abomination set up in A. D. 533 by the decree of Justinian. It is the man of sin, spoken of by Paul (2 Thess. 2: 3–8,) who is to be destroyed by the brightness of Christ's coming. The beast represents a government combining two powers, the ecclesiastical and the civil. This power should perish, go into perdition, or the lake of fire. (Rev. 19: 19, 20.) The governments of earth and apostate Christendom go together into the lake of fire, and are destroyed.

Third, the false prophet, represents the papal hierarchy, and not an individual. It is the papal system symbolized by a false prophet: because their system is false. It was antichristian. This hierarchy is to go into perdition (2 Thess. 2: 3,) with the kingdoms of the world (Dan. 2: 44,) when the stone becomes a great mountain, and fills the whole earth.

The devil is said to be cast into the lake (Rev. 20: 10) where the beast and false prophet are; by which we are to understand they were executed before the arch-fiend—or they were destroyed before he was. Let us seek the true or the scriptural meaning of this judgment of Satan, said to consist of torment in the lake of fire, forever and ever. In order to do this, we will compare Rev. 14: 9–12 with Rev. 20: 10. "If any man worship the beast and his image, the same shall drink of the wine of the wrath of God, which is poured out without mixture into the cup of his indignation; and he shall be tormented with fire and brimstone in the presence of the holy angels, and in the presence of the Lamb; and the smoke of their torment ascendeth up forever and ever: and they have no rest day nor night, who worship the beast and his image, and whosoever receiveth the mark of his name."

There is nothing more clear than that this passage predicts the overthrow and the punishment of the anti-christian powers. The seven last plagues are poured out upon them for their punishment and overthrow, as given in the sixteenth of Revelation. The strong expressions, such as torment, drinking the wine of the wrath of God, fire and brimstone, and the smoke of their torment ascendeth up forever and ever, can have no reference to a future state in which men, women, and children are tormented in fire, burning and writhing in inextinguishable flames for endless ages, as some expositors teach. And on the same principle, the tenth verse of Rev. 20 cannot refer to a place of torment, for the following reasons:

1. The lake of fire is on this earth. The beast, false prophet, and the devil all have their punishment in it. When Christ comes he cleanses the sanctuary, and nothing is to hurt or destroy in all his holy mountain. The heavens and the earth are to be renewed, and filled with the glory of God. There cannot be a lake, or a place in any nook or corner of it, where there will be sinful beings; for the wicked will be rooted out of all the earth (Ps. 37,) and the righteous only will inhabit it (2 Pet. 2: 13.)

2. And it will follow, secondly, that no lake of fire and brimstone can exist on the earth after the restitution. So there can be no eternal torment on the earth, for the earth is to be cleansed in the reign of Christ, and at that time all sin and suffering must cease on the globe. (Rev. 5: 13.)

If, then, there is a place of endless torment for the wicked, it is not upon this globe, or within it. But the word of God assures us that the righteous shall be recompensed in the earth, much more the wicked and the sinner. (Prov. 11: 31.) And as the recompense of the righteous is in the new earth, the renewed earth, and they are to inhabit it forever, it follows that the wicked are recompensed, and destroyed first; and this will be seen more clearly in considering the song of the redeemed.

"And they sung a new song, saying, Thou hast made us unto our God kings and priests; and we shall reign on the earth. And every creature which is in heaven, and on the earth, and under the earth, and such as are in the sea; and all that are in them, heard I saying Blessing, and honor, and glory, and power, be unto him that sitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb, forever and ever." (Rev. 5: 9–13.)

There can be no such thing as a lake of fire in the earth at this time. Neither can there be any intelligent creature who does not join in the "new song." Any exposition that contradicts these passages must be unscriptural.

Now a careful comparison of the two classes of passages, as given above, will show that the strong language relating to the punishment of apostate nations, and of Satan, may have a fulfillment in their final overthrow, and the earth be cleansed afterwards, and Christ with his people possess it, and reign forever without the curse. There is no nook or corner of the universe from which the wail of the lost is heard. The wicked being rooted out of the earth, the meek shall inhabit it forever.

Now our exposition of the thirteenth verse of the fifth of Revelation is, on all hands, more probable than the exposition of Rev. 20: 10 by the advocates of eternal torment. That, with other passages may be expounded and applied to things of time, in harmony with similar expressions and phrases:

"And the streams thereof shall be turned into pitch, and the dust thereof into brimstone, and the land thereof shall become burning pitch. It shall not be quenched night nor day; the smoke thereof shall go up forever and ever: from generation to generation it shall lie waste; none shall pass through it forever and ever." (Isa 34: 9, 10.)

"And the third angel followed them, saying with a loud voice, If any man worship the beast and his image, and receive his mark in his forehead, or in his hand, the same shall drink of the wine of the wrath of God, which is poured out without mixture into the cup of his indignation; and he shall be tormented with fire and brimstone in the presence of the Lamb: and the smoke of their torment ascendeth up forever and ever: and they have no rest day nor night, who worship the beast and his image, and whosoever receiveth the mark of his name." (Rev. 14: 9–11.)

But Rev. 5: 13 cannot be harmonized with the doctrine of endless torment in the lake of fire. Both cannot be true.

Which shall we choose? A world in which there shall be a union of the songs of the redeemed, with the endless wailings of the damned? Perhaps your father, or mother, or child is there to wail eternally! Can we choose an exposition that is of a doubtful character to sustain such a position? We said of doubtful character; for there can be no lake of fire in the earth renewed, and we have shown that the devil and his works are both to be destroyed. It is the more reasonable view to suppose from a comparison of all the texts, that sin and suffering will cease in the restitution. (Acts 3: 21.)

Though we may differ from Bro. Chapman and other dear friends on this subject, we do not love them the less; nor shall we, though they earnestly oppose our views.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

We learn from the Windham County Transcript that an interesting revival is in progress in Putnam, Ct. The following is from the Transcript of Feb. 16th:—

"The great religious revival in this place is still the predominant subject of thought and discussion by the people of the community, and from its commencement a few weeks since to the present time there has been a steadily increasing interest manifested in spiritual concerns. The preaching of Rev. Mr. Parker in the Congregational church has attracted large audiences every afternoon and evening during the past week, requiring, at times, extra seats to accommodate all who assemble. Many come from adjoining towns, some of whom are almost constant attendants.

The general plan pursued is to have a short season of prayer, and a sermon in the afternoon, and in the evening an inquiry meeting is held in the vestry and at the same time there is a prayer meeting in the room above, after which there is a sermon which is followed by a general conference meeting. At the inquiry meeting there is personal conversation and such instruction imparted as seems adapted to individual cases. The sermons are clear and forcible presentations of truth, and abound in happy illustrations of doctrine and duty. The many excuses and subterfuges which are adduced for neglecting religion are made to appear puerile and insignificant to many who have offered them. There are no extravagant expressions or harsh epithets. The preacher seems moved by an overwhelming love for the souls of his fellow men, and to promote their salvation is his sole desire; and he devotes powers acquired by familiarity with the Scriptures, a large experience and long and careful study of human nature, with a success, by the blessing of God, rarely paralleled.

The conference meetings excel in interest anything of the kind ever attended by any among us. One hundred 'short sermons' from as many preachers are sometimes heard at those gatherings. Those who thus 'stand up for Jesus,' are of all ages, from the child of ten to the parent of fifty. Sometimes three or four rise to speak at once. Each one is brief but earnest and to the point. Some seekers wish prayers; some rejoice at their recent conversion; some lament short comings and resolve to do better; some express wonder and joy at the wonderful manifestations of God's grace,—all testify to the paramount importance of the religion of Christ. The songs interspersed give a thrilling interest to the exercises and conspire to make the gatherings foretastes of the great gathering to be beyond the vail.

It is estimated that there have been one hundred conversions in this town within three or four weeks, and many more are seriously and candidly considering their duty in the matter. Many who have been familiar with revival scenes testify that they have never seen such evidence of divine presence and power as is here exhibited. In view of the changes effected in the minds and hearts of some, many exclaim, 'This is the Lord's doings, and it is marvelous in our eyes.' While there is some opposition to the work, the reforming influence as manifested in some instances in this community in a measure disarms the opposition, on the part of some, although they may stand aloof from the work. An evil tree will not bring forth such fruit.

Mr. Parker will continue his meetings during the present week, and over next Sabbath, when he goes to Thompson to labor for a season."

SCRIPTURE READING.

The following is the reading of Dan. 9: 21–27, in the "Bishop's Bible," translated by Myles Coverdale in A. D. 1535:—

"While I was yet speaking in prayer, behold, the man Gabriel (whom I had seen afore in the vision) came flying to me, and touched me about the offering time in the evening. He informed me, and spake unto me: O Daniel (said he) I am now come to make thee understand it; for as soon as thou beganest to make thy prayer, it was so devised, and therefore am I come to show thee. And why? for thou art a man greatly beloved.

Wherefore, ponder the matter well, that thou mayest learn to understand the vision. Seventy weeks are determined over thy people, and over thy holy city; that wickedness may be consumed, that the sin may have an end, that the offence may be reconciled, and to bring in everlasting righteousness, to fulfill the visions of the prophets, and to anoint the most holy one. Understand this then, and mark it well; that from the time it shall be concluded to go and repair Jerusalem again, unto Christ, (or the anointed) prince, there shall be seven weeks. Then shall the streets and walls be builded again sixty-two weeks, but with hard troublous time. After these sixty-two weeks shall Christ be slain, and they shall have no pleasure in him. Then shall there come a people with the prince, and destroy the city and the sanctuary; and his end shall come as the water flood. But the desolation shall continue till the end of the battle.

He shall make a strong bond with many, for the space of a week; and when the week is half gone, he shall put down the slain and meat-offering. And in the temple there shall be an abominable desolation, till it have destroyed all. And it is concluded that this wasting shall continue unto the end."

THE NEW $2000 TRACT FUND.

We, the undersigned, agree to give the sums affixed to our names, for the purpose of raising two thousand dollars to aid the Christian Publication Society in the gratuitous distribution of tracts.

Previous donations	$725.59
Eliza Apthorp	1.94
Daniel Q. Kent	5.00
Sophronia Smith	1.00
Olive Smith	1.00
A. Rennie	1.00
Mary F. Taylor	1.00
Mrs. S. G. Bradbury	.50

Pledges Paid.—Bro. W. Hill.

More Bible in them than he thought.

A sister in Wisconsin, sending money for more tracts, writes:—

"The package I had I have given all away, and more are wanted. I gave our Free-will Baptist minister some, with our papers, to read. When he had read them, he said:—'There is more Bible in those little messengers than I had any idea of.' He likes the Crisis, and is seeking for truth. Another family here, who have found Jesus precious to their souls, want tracts to read. They were once great novel readers, but now they say there is more goodness in those little tracts than in all the novels they ever read, and they want more tracts." R. H. H.

A brother writes from Indiana:—

"The Crisis is about the only true preaching that I get, except what I get from those tracts and pamphlets which you sent me; and I wish to say, if you have any more to send me, and are willing to wait till the day of judgment for your pay, I will distribute them in my neighborhood. I have been scattering those that I bought of you. Some begin to see the light; others shake their heads, yet they still love to read."

POOR FUND DONATIONS.

To pay for Papers sent to the Poor.

Whole number sent free 800. Amount $2000.00.

Previous donations	$838.48
A brother	1.00
Eliza Apthorp	1.95
Daniel Q. Kent	5.00
D. Palmer	2.50
Mrs. S. A. A. Pray	1.13
A. Rennie	.50
S. T. W. Sleeper	.50

A brother writes from Hawleyville, Iowa:—

"I see that the Poor Fund donations fall far short of the $2000, and thought it might be duty for me, as God has prospered me, to help send the paper to the poor, and aid in spreading the truth by scattering tracts. I therefore send you $10.00; five for the Poor Fund, and five for the Tract Fund, and $2.00 more for tracts to scatter. I have scattered some, and want more to send them out preaching. I don't know where they are needed more than here in the West, where we have no Advent preaching. May the Lord send forth more laborers to gather in the already ripe harvest." D. Q. K.

THE ITALIAN MISSION.

Previous donations	$356.54
D. Hogarth	.50
C. & H. Smith	1.00
C. K.	.50
Mary	1.00
Edward Williams	5.00
J. M. Stetler	10.00
A friend	10.00
A friend to missions	5.00
Mrs. S. A. A. Pray	1.12
A. L.	1.00
A. Rennie	1.00

Our Volunteer Agents.

Report for week ending March 18th.

Whole number of new subscribers in the week, 59. By the efforts of the following brethren, 41:—

One each—By M. Brown, B. Butler, S. Bassford, S. W. Bartlett, H. Bailey, S. P. Clark, C. M. Currier, H. K. Flagg, H. Gibbs, L. M. Goodyear, W. Ingham, W. Kidney, O. King, C. H. Leverton, M. R. Miles, E. W. Potter, E. S. Robbins, J. E. Roberts, N. Sleger, Thos. Smith, G. L. Teeple, M. Young.
Two each—By Agigail Mussey, A. W. Sibley.
Three each—By M. Grant, S. Mayberry.
Nine—By John Hyde.

Strong Reasons.

"Miles Grant, Esq.:—Sir,—Please discontinue to forward me the World's Crisis. Have no faith in abolition, or female preaching. 'By their fruits,' etc. I remain yours,

W. R. P."

For the World's Crisis.

LET "BOTH SIDES" BE CIRCULATED.

Bro. Grant:—Please publish in the Crisis the following, which I clip from the Advent Review of Feb. 21st. It will speak for itself. It needs no comment.

I like the heading of the article—"Truth will prevail." The reason why I think best to have this article published, is because it will more extensively give notice of my work on The Sabbath, which is in successful preparation for the press, and will be published in due time, by the continued blessing of God. If I do not misjudge, the more "Both Sides" is circulated and read, the wider will be the field for the spread of my book. Let it then be circulated by the thousands, and when the reader shall see the other side, he can better judge whether I am an "enemy of God's law," or whether others are charging me with words and sentiments which never fell from my lips or pen.

T. M. Preble.

East Weare, N. H.

TRUTH WILL PREVAIL.

"Both Sides, on the Sabbath" is doing a noble work. It is the pioneer to the "History of the Sabbath." Persons who are not interested enough, or are too prejudiced to read the direct testimony on the subject, will readily purchase and read "Both Sides." Here they feel safe to put themselves under the protection of the Sunday advocate. They become interested in the argument, see the utter failure of their side, prejudice gives way, and they are then ready to read, or listen to, the truth. We are personally acquainted with several who are now keeping the Sabbath just through the influence of this book. The enemy of God's law missed the mark when he started that work. One man, a school teacher, being asked his opinion of "Both Sides," said that he believed Eld. Preble to be a seventh-day man, who was writing against it just to make a show of opposition, and give Bro. Smith an opportunity of showing up his side of the question!! This illustrates the weakness of Eld. P.'s arguments. No wonder that he wishes to revise it. Brethren and sisters, scatter this work among your friends, relatives, and neighbors. Let them see the difference between light and darkness, truth and error, God's word and tradition.

D. M. Canright.
Alma, Mich. I. D. Van Horn.

For the World's Crisis.

LESSONS IN ASTRONOMY.

HOW TABLES ARE MADE.

I have told of the acceleration of the moon's motion, as a fact generally accepted by astronomers, while Eld. Thurman, partly on the authority of a text in the Apocrapha, discards the doctrine. I will now show the importance of this fact, supposing it to be such, and then say something about the making of astronomical tables.

I stand at a window, and wish to lodge a penny on the ground at the opposite side of the street. There are two ways of doing it. I can throw it horizontally so it will fall there, or, I can extemporize an inclined plane and let it slide to its place. But the two routes will be quite different. In the latter case the penny falls uniformly, so many inches in moving so many feet; in the former case it starts without falling, and falls rapidly just before it strikes the ground. These two routes of the penny—not of the penny post—may illustrate the contending theories of the moon's motion. The first named represents the moon as moving now just as it did 2500 years ago. If so, and if Mr. Ferguson's tables are found not to make the ancient eclipses, it corrects them, so much for each year or each hundred years; and if then they make the eclipses of 2500 years ago, they may also make the eclipses of 1500 years ago, or of 6000 years ago, just as well. This correction of the tables answers to the inclined plane—so many seconds for so many years, all along the route.

But the astronomers generally say this wont do. They have found that tables based on modern observations, and giving the eclipses admirably for modern times, are at fault if applied to the oldest eclipses; and when they are corrected to make the oldest eclipses, they fail again to make the eclipses half way back to the oldest. Hence their suspicion that the moon's rate was not uniform, and that the line which represents the speed will be, not a straight line, but a curve, like that made by the penny when thrown. That line will touch points which the inclined plane will not reach.

Now about the tables. How are they made at the outset? Let me name some of the difficulties of making them accurate, even to be good for a hundred years.

If the moon moved uniformly around the earth, and the earth around the sun, and each in a circle, a bright school boy could make tables. But neither earth nor moon move in a circle. The orbit of each is an ellipse, in which the motion is now faster and now slower. That is the reason why a good clock is sometimes behind the sun, and sometimes before it. But this is only the beginning of the astronomer's labor. If the sun and moon moved uniformly in each course through the ellipse, there would be little trouble in graduating the time tables to their "up grades" and "down grades." But they have neighbors, that must receive due neighborly respect. Mercury, Venus, Mars, Jupiter, Saturn, Herschel, are all in their turn sometimes before the earth, pulling it along faster, or behind it, holding it back. These are some of the perturbations which the astronomers can get rid of only by calculating their effects. And these effects are so considerable that they led to the detection, a few years ago, of that new planet, Le Verrier, that had been skulking in his ring outside of and beyond all the rest. Herschel, his nearest neighbor, was actually caught signaling to him, and "putting down the brakes" a little when he came near,—though he was even then nearly two billions of miles away;—and this ended his concealment.

Besides this shoal of perturbations, it is known that the moon is sometimes above the plane in which the earth moves around the sun, and sometimes below it. And eclipses can occur only when the moon is near this plane. The point where the moon's orbit crosses this plane is called the node, and eclipses can happen only within a certain distance of the node. But the node itself is veering round; and more than that, the moon's plane is not always inclined just so much to the earth's plane. That is, when all other things are equal, this varying inclination may still change the distance at which an eclipse may occur, and its dimensions when it does occur.

The result of all these causes of difference and disturbance is this: the actual course of the moon, its varying distance from the earth, its latitude, and its longitude, must be settled by an immense number of observations. Astronomers, accordingly, are in the habit of taking observations on the heavenly bodies, regularly, unless a cloudy sky prevents, week after week and year after year. The record of these observations is called the ephemeris; and every well manned observatory is expected to furnish an ephemeris, more or less extensive, for the aid of astronomers generally. The observations made at Greenwich form a quarto volume of about 500 pages annually. The British Nautical Almanac, an annual volume of about 500 octavo pages, is aided more or less by these observations. And when our own Government, at the breaking out of the rebellion, thought it might save the $10.000 that had been appropriated for astronomical observation and other work, those who understood the case soon showed that to withhold this money was very bad economy.

It is upon such observations, made year after year and generation after generation, properly digested, and the "perturbations" computed by laborious mathematical processes,—that astronomical tables are based. The very ancient observations, of eclipses and the like, have of course a special value if they are accurately made and reliably reported. It was only by comparing ancient and modern observations that the "acceleration" I have spoken of could have been first suspected. And tables are more or less valuable, according as they have been made from a greater or less number of observations, and with greater or less ability and labor.

Tables for the computation of eclipses are tables of the "places" of the sun and moon, day after day and year after year. Small tables can of course give very little account of the perturbations and anomalies, and they will be comparatively incorrect or inadequate for the computation especially of distant eclipses. I shall say something of the different volumes of tables that have been used within the present generation, or are now used, when I report the computations that have been made of Ptolemy's eclipses. But I would here name two sets of tables, which are the largest and the smallest that I know of. The smallest are Ferguson's, upon which Eld. Thurman's are based, with corrections of which I shall speak hereafter. Ferguson's tables, both of the sun and moon, make 18 duodecimo pages in one edition of his work and 24 pages in another. Hansen's tables, of the moon alone, make a volume of 511 quarto pages, of which 75 pages are introductory. Allowing half of Ferguson's tables to be of the moon's places, and supposing one of Hansen's pages to contain four times as much as one of Ferguson's, we shall find their ratio to be 12 to 1744, or that Hansen's are about 145 times as extensive as Ferguson's. Hansen's tables are regarded as the best for the moon's places, and Hansen's and Olufsen's the best for the sun's places. Other tables are indeed used, but with such criticism as I shall note in the sequel. I should here say of Ferguson's tables that they were made over a hundred years ago, and are so much out of date that astronomers hardly know them now. They were doubtless a very creditable performance in their day, and sufficiently accurate for what was expected of them. But when no other of the more recent tables are at all consulted, I do not see the logic of calling Mr. Ferguson "the great astronomer." C. F. H.

For the World's Crisis.

Tour in Connecticut.

At Warehouse Point I found a few
Who're in the faith, both good and true;
With them I found it good to meet,
And preach the truth to us so sweet.
At Hartford, the old battle field,
I found them armed with sword and shield;
With the old veterans we had a talk,
And surely they by faith can walk.
The enemy has done his best
To crush the flock, disturb their rest;
The preachers come and oft advise,
But sometimes this is not so wise.
They should be wise and harmless too;
Good fruits should follow all they do;
The flock in Christ may all be free,
If all the truth they do not see.
The faithful ones will love the light,
And all are one in this good fight;
The saints of God must all be one,
Who love to pray, "Thy kingdom come."
Sunday I came to Cheshire Street,
Where sheep and lambs together meet;
And really it is "meet" indeed
To stand by faith the flock to feed;
At venture I did draw the bow,
And very soon the tears would flow.
In the afternoon we thought it best
To point them to their promised rest;
And hearts were light and of good cheer,
To know redemption was so near.
The careless sinner, too, was there,
And in these glories wished to share;
Repent, believe, and look away
To Christ, who is the living way.
At Yalesville in the evening meet,
A gathering large of chaff and wheat;
Of new recruits here are a few,
Inquiring some, what shall I do?
They were pointed to the Mercy Seat,
To Jesus Christ, the sure "retreat,"
To run for life, and pay the cost,
Or very soon they would be lost.
The soldiers joyfully look for peace,
And hope that soon they'll get release.
In lanes and hedges to compel,
It is our work "good news" to tell.

More anon. L. Boutell.

Yalesville, Ct., March 7th, 1865.

THE "ONE WEEK"—WHO CONFIRMED THE COVENANT?

"And he shall confirm the covenant with many for one week: and in the midst of the week he shall cause the sacrifice and oblation to cease."—Dan. 9: 27.

We are informed that Christ is the personage here mentioned, and that he confirmed the covenant. To this we object: because, first, the context shows that reference is made to a certain "Prince" that should "come" against Jerusalem and destroy it; and, secondly, it is not true that Christ confirmed any covenant for a prophetic week, or seven years, —neither the old or new covenant. Observe the following facts:

1. Christ did not confirm the old covenant seven years, as his ministry lasted less than four years.

2. Christ could not have confirmed the new covenant at all before his death: because, "Where a testament [diathekee—covenant] is, there must also of necessity be the death of the testator. For a testament [covenant] is of force after men are dead: otherwise, it is of no strength at all while the testator liveth."—Heb. 9: 16, 17. Hence, the fact is plain that the new covenant did not come into force till the death of Christ, and consequently could not have been confirmed previously. "Covenant" and "testament" both come from the same original term. Even if Christ had confirmed the new covenant during his ministry, he could have confirmed it only three or four years instead of seven; but, as we have already discovered, the new covenant did not come into force till the death of Christ, and, therefore, could not have been confirmed before the cross.

3. The same personage who was to confirm a certain covenant for "one week," was also to "cause the sacrifice and oblation to cease," even "in the midst of the week." Christ did not do this: to insist he did is to give the lie to history and the Bible. (See Heb. 8: 4.) That they should have ceased to offer them is obvious, but that they did is not true.

4. If the position should be taken that Christ confirmed the new covenant for one week after he ascended to heaven, we reply, if this be so, he has, on the same principle, confirmed it 1800 years; besides, with this view, how could he "cause the sacrifice and oblation to cease in the midst of the week"?

5. It will not do to claim that Christ confirmed the old covenant one-half of the week, and the new covenant the other half, for this would not be confirming the covenant, but the covenants; nor will it do to claim that the new covenant was confirmed half a week before its inauguration, and half a week subsequently; for before being confirmed it must be a covenant in force, which was not the case till the death of Christ.

6. "He [the Roman 'Prince'—not Christ] shall confirm the covenant with many for one week: and in the midst of the week he [the Roman 'Prince'—not Christ] shall cause the sacrifice and oblation to cease."—Dan. 9: 27.

Some suppose that allusion is made to the covenant that existed between the Jews and Romans, by virtue of which the Jews were made tributary to the Romans, which covenant the Jews were trying to break; others suppose that the threatened "curses of the covenant" were to be inflicted upon that people who had broken the covenant made with them in Moses' day, and thereby incurred a stroke from the Roman "rod of God's anger." With either view its duration was seven years.

W. Sheldon.—Voice of the West.

For the World's Crisis.

BRINGING REPROACH.

Every member of the church of Christ, whether minister or layman, should be very careful not to bring reproach upon His cause. Many have done so, not because they have designed it, but because they have not considered their ways. They think they mean well, and no doubt they do; yet they forget to look at things in all their bearings, and overlook the Apostle's injunction, "Edify one another." In their zeal to combat error, and defend what they consider truth, they lose the spirit of Christ, and thus many ministers and writers for books and papers do more harm than good. C. C. B.

For the World's Crisis.

GOOD NEWS.

Bro. F. H. Burbank writes from Philadelphia: "My heart has been cheered by the gracious intelligence of the wonderful workings of the Spirit of God upon the hearts of sinners, through the instrumentality of our people, and to add to the cup of joy and thanksgiving, I will pour in some gospel tidings from the city of 'brotherly love.'

About six weeks ago, God directed my steps to a meeting held in a little room in an alley in the lower part of this city. There I found two Advent sisters, Reeves and Helgerson, laboring for the salvation of souls. I found that souls had been converted, but they needed help. I was impressed to hold a protracted meeting, and told them my feelings. They rejoiced, and our protracted effort commenced immediately. Soon the little room was too small, and a small hall was secured. Several turned missionaries, and we went out after lost ones. Visiting lanes, courts, and alleys, cellars, dark, dingy rooms, garrets, sheds, shops, rumholes, houses of prostitution, and the bedsides of the sick and dying. We talked and prayed with these poor colored people, administering to their temporal wants, thus far about sixty have been hopefully converted to God. "The love of God," "the speedy coming of Christ," and "the signs of the times," are our themes.

Still the work goes on. We are in the vilest, most degraded, and most dangerous part of the city. The revival is confined chiefly to colored people. There is a pestilence doing its awful work. Scores have been swept away. Army, typhoid, typhus, spotted, and other fevers prevail in this section. We are in the midst of it, and see some scenes that would make stout hearts quail. Many families have lost two, three, four, and more. So fearful has been the destruction, that the papers of the city caution citizens from going in that portion of the place. Two watchmen of the city had the fever and died, which caused more alarm. Yet God preserves me and the others. We have visited scores who have been thus afflicted. Surely God is preparing a people for the coming of his Son from heaven, and is sending us into the highways and hedges to compel them to come in. The Lord is sending me clothing to cover the half naked children and ragged men and women. How their eyes sparkle when the little ones get into their neat little clothes. The tears and "God bress yous" from the older ones pay well, praise the Lord.

Our meetings are characterized by a deep solemnity, and the Spirit of God does its searching work. Every night from three to twelve come forward for prayers. They go to work in earnest, and call on the name of the Lord, and some are converted in every meeting nearly, the exceptions being very few. I might fill a large space in the columns of the Crisis, with interesting facts connected with this work, but shall have to omit them to give others a chance to speak.

Last Thursday night we gave a feast to the poor ones. Hired two small halls for the purpose, in the building where our meetings are held. Then we called in one hundred of the poor, lame, maimed, halt and blind. The first of the evening we had a love feast, and continued it for two hours, and as Bro. Munger says, "then we shut down under a full head of steam." About ninety took part in the exercises, one-half being converts. Such a scene I never witnessed. In came testimony upon testimony, all giving glory to our Heavenly Father and Jesus. There was weeping, shouting, walking, leaping and praising God. Husbands and wives, daughters and mothers, parents and children, all joining in the praise of God.

The hymn,

"In the gettin' up mornin', when the general roll is called,
I'll be there,"

brought nearly all to their feet. It seemed as if they all wanted Christ to come at that moment. Then came the gospel feast of corned beef, water crackers, cream biscuit, cakes, doughnuts, cheese, apples, bread and coffee. All were well fed, and had a clean table to eat at. Many places we visit, they have no bed, chair, table, or furniture of any kind, but sleep on, sit on, and eat from the floor. Sickness and poverty does this. After they had eaten, we packed up a lot of provision for "the little honeys at home," and old and infirm ones who could not attend the feast, thus adding fifty or sixty more to the number fed. After that we had another little meeting, thanked the Lord, and then went home.

We have all along been distributing flour, loaves of bread, and money amongst them. Some want to know how I get so much money. I tell them that "I have a shovel, and the Lord has one." That explains it.

We have good helpers. The Advent societies here stand by one nobly. The brethren, four of them, preach occasionally. Quite a company of brethren and sisters assisted at the gospel feast. They all feel that the work has been of the Lord, and that he still carries it on. By-and-by I may make a flying visit Eastward, then I can give farther information. We are to organize a church on the gospel plan, establish a Sunday school, a day school, and perhaps an evening school, missions, etc. The Lord is with us. Pray for us, that the Lord may bless us yet more and more. Yours looking for Jesus,

F. H. BURBANK.

Philadelphia, March 9, 1865.

For the World's Crisis.

PROCRUSTES.

Have you not felt many times that God is more merciful than man? Many good men have too much of the disposition to make others conform entirely to their standard; or subscribe to every article of their creed. Like the ancient man of the iron bedstead, they cut off all who are too long for their measure, and all who are too short must be stretched out to the proper length. Now when we read the writings or listen to the remarks of such men (however good they may be), we find our sensitive nature wounded in a manner that we never experienced when reading the Bible. The Maker of man knows how to lead him better than these sharp men, even though they may have themselves been taught how to walk in the right way. They seem to forget that they may be in error on some points; and do not make allowance for the influence of circumstances which render it impossible for all men to see all things alike in this life. The best must admit that we now "see through a glass darkly."

May God help us all to be filled with that charity which will enable us to restore the erring in the spirit of meekness.

F. H. CHAMBERLAIN.

The World's Crisis
AND SECOND ADVENT MESSENGER.
Boston, Tuesday, March 21, 1865.

Please Remember.

All letters, communications and remittances, should be addressed to the Editor, MILES GRANT.

All drafts, or bank checks, should be made payable to the Treasurer and Business Agent, GEO. T. ADAMS. Otherwise they cannot be used in the absence of the Editor.

NEW VOLUME.

As this is the first number of a new volume, we would remind our readers that this is the time to send the advance pay for six months or a year to come. We hope all will attend to this matter at once. Come, now is the best time. Have it out of the way, and off from your mind, by just sending your address, and the money inclosed.

We purpose to spare no pains to make the Crisis a welcome visitor to all your dwellings. Pray for us, that we may have special wisdom given us by the Lord, to conduct the paper entirely to his glory. None but those who have been in the business know the trials of an editor, and his need of divine aid.

LOWELL.

Things look encouraging for the church in Lowell, Mass. Their congregations are large and attentive, and the interest is increasing. Four were baptized March 9th, and others purpose to observe the same ordinance soon. The importance of a preparation to meet our coming Lord is being more and more deeply felt. Many begin to see that unless their lives correspond with the Bible standard for christianity, they have no reason to hope. They also see the necessity of being at peace with all mankind, as well as with God, if they would enjoy religion, and be ready to meet Jesus. None need have fear of being too particular on this point; for it is utterly impossible to be free in Christ and have hard feelings, or "variance" towards any one; no matter how badly they may have treated us. We must return good for evil, if we would be Jesus' disciples.

"GLAD VOICES."

Do not fail to read the poetry in this number from Bro. D. T. Taylor, entitled "Glad Voices." It is too good to be left where it is. Cannot some one of our readers either compose or find an appropriate tune for the hymn, and forward the notes to the Crisis? If we can get a tune as good as the poetry, we will have it inserted in "our paper."

BOSTON DISCUSSION.

Our discussion in Boston, with Bro. R. Wendell, on the subject of the resurrection of the wicked, is doing well, we think; and is to be continued from two to four evenings from Tuesday evening, March 22nd. We are having a candid hearing from an intelligent audience.

DISCUSSION IN WORCESTER.

We have consented to have a discussion in the City Hall, in Worcester, Mass., with Mr. J. G. Fish, of Michigan, on the subject of Spirit Manifestations, commencing March 27th, to continue four or five evenings.

BRO. WALTER PRATT.—We are glad to be able to inform our readers that it is hoped that Bro. Walter Pratt is a little better; but is yet very feeble. Pray for him.

DISORDER IN THE HEAVENS.

It is well known to many of our readers that astronomers claim that the motion of the planets around the sun, and of the satellites, or moons, around them, are somewhat disorderly; for which reason we cannot calculate ancient eclipses to any great degree of certainty. But it should also be observed that astronomers are not agreed in their conclusions in this matter. Their efforts to show this disorder at a given time do not correspond with their observations and calculations at another; hence they are in confusion among themselves; and we are inclined to think that the want of harmony is in them, rather than in the celestial machinery.

One reason why we think so is based on the following well attested facts.

It has been shown by Dr Halley and Mr. Ferguson, that once in "577 years, 21 days, 18 hours, 11 minutes, 51 seconds, in which there are exactly 6890 mean lunations, the conjunction or opposition coincides so nearly with the node, as not to be distant more than eleven seconds."

Now we would inquire why is this, if the motions of the heavenly bodies are so widely different now from what they were in the days of Ptolemy?

It is further stated in connection with this point that, "If, therefore, to the mean time of any solar or lunar eclipse, we add this period, and make the proper allowance for the intercalary days, we shall have the mean time of the return of the same eclipse. This period is so very near, that in 6000 years it will vary no more from the truth than eight and one-fourth minutes of a degree."—Gregory's Astronomy, chap. xix.

We find the foregoing statements verified in a work now before us, in which is a list of all the eclipses in every year, from B. C. one thousand to A. D. two thousand,—a period of three thousand years. Are we not warranted, then, as claimed by Bro. Thurman, in believing that the motions of the heavenly bodies are governed by the same laws now that they were in the days of Ptolemy, or the kings of Babylon? and that correct astronomical tables will make the undisputed eclipses that occurred before Christ, as well as those that have been seen since, and at the present time?

We are inclined to the belief that the "disorder" is more in the astronomers, than in the movements of the heavenly bodies. If astronomers can find but eleven seconds variation in a period of over 557 years, during which there are 6890 changes of the moon, perhaps, when they have made nicer calculations, they will not find, even in 6000 years, eleven seconds variation in the great celestial clock of the Lord.

Bro. J. French writes from McCleansboro, Ill., that there are some of our faith in his vicinity, and invites any preaching brother who can come with recommendations to call and preach for them, promising to help them on their way after a godly sort. He lives three and a half miles northeast of McCleansboro.

"DESTINY OF THE WICKED."

The following is an editorial article published in the Voice of the West, Feb, 7th, 1865. We rejoice that Bro, Himes sees the clear light on this very important portion of the word of the Lord. May he be blessed with much courage in its proclamation:

But the destiny of the wicked is also involved in this discussion. What is to be the nature of future punishment? Are the wicked to be destroyed; "punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord" (2 Thess. 2: 9,) or are they to live in endless misery? Are they to suffer indescribable pain and anguish, in some place called Hell, without the least ray of hope that they will ever be delivered? These are the two views to be looked at. Which is true? We take the position of Paul, they will be punished with destruction! They will suffer the second death in the lake of fire, and cease both to suffer and to live. "And death and hell were cast into the lake of fire. This is the second death; and whosoever was not found written in the book of life was cast into the lake of fire." (Rev. 20: 14, 15.) This will take place after their resurrection, or when they live again (Rev. 20: 13.) And the lake of fire into which they are cast will be on this earth, and exist in connection with the judgment. "And fire came down from heaven and devoured them. And the devil that deceived them was cast into the lake of fire and brimstone where the beast and the false prophet are, and shall be tormented day and night forever. (Rev. 20: 10.)

Here three things are associated. The devil, the beast and the false prophet. They have a common doom; the lake of fire. Let us inquire into the character and destiny of each.

And first, of the devil. He is doomed to destruction, with all his works. Paul says, "For inasmuch as the children are partakers of flesh and blood, he also himself likewise took part of the same; that through death he might destroy him that had the power of death"—that is, the devil. (Heb. 2: 14.) His works also go with him. "For this purpose was the Son of God manifested, that he might destroy the works of the devil." (1 John 3: 8.) These are positive declarations of the Holy Spirit, and will be literally fulfilled.

Secondly, the beast. This is a symbol of the papal power. The church and state united. It is the abomination set up in A. D. 533 by the decree of Justinian. It is the man of sin, spoken of by Paul (2 Thess. 2: 3–8,) who is to be destroyed by the brightness of Christ's coming. The beast represents a government combining two powers, the ecclesiastical and the civil. This power should perish, go into perdition, or the lake of fire. (Rev. 19: 19, 20.) The governments of earth and apostate Christendom go together into the lake of fire, and are destroyed.

Third, the false prophet, represents the papal hierarchy, and not an individual. It is the papal system symbolized by a false prophet: because their system is false. It was anti-christian. This hierarchy is to go into perdition (2 Thess. 2: 3,) with the kingdoms of the world (Dan. 2: 44,) when the stone becomes a great mountain, and fills the whole earth.

The devil is said to be cast into the lake (Rev. 20: 10) where the beast and false prophet are; by which we are to understand they were executed before the arch-fiend—or they were destroyed before he was. Let us seek the true or the scriptural meaning of this judgment of Satan, said to consist of torment in the lake of fire, forever and ever. In order to do this, we will compare Rev. 14: 9–12 with Rev. 20: 10. "If any man worship the beast and his image, the same shall drink of the wine of the wrath of God, which is poured out without mixture into the cup of his indignation; and he shall be tormented with fire and brimstone in the presence of the holy angels, and in the presence of the Lamb; and the smoke of their torment ascendeth up forever and ever: and they have no rest day nor night, who worship the beast and his image, and whosoever receiveth the mark of his name."

There is nothing more clear than that this passage predicts the overthrow and the punishment of the anti-christian powers. The seven last plagues are poured out upon them for their punishment and overthrow, as given in the sixteenth of Revelation. The strong expressions, such as torment, drinking the wine of the wrath of God, fire and brimstone, and the smoke of their torment ascendeth up forever and ever, can have no reference to a future state in which men, women, and children are tormented in fire, burning and writhing in inextinguishable flames for endless ages, as some expositors teach. And on the same principle, the tenth verse of Rev. 20 cannot refer to a place of torment, for the following reasons:

1. The lake of fire is on this earth. The beast, false prophet, and the devil all have their punishment in it. When Christ comes he cleanses the sanctuary, and nothing is to hurt or destroy in all his holy mountain. The heavens and the earth are to be renewed, and filled with the glory of God. There cannot be a lake, or a place in any nook or corner of it, where there will be sinful beings; for the wicked will be rooted out of all the earth (Ps. 37,) and the righteous only will inhabit it (2 Pet. 2: 13.)

2. And it will follow, secondly, that no lake of fire and brimstone can exist on the earth after the restitution. So there can be no eternal torment on the earth, for the earth is to be cleansed in the reign of Christ, and at that time all sin and suffering must cease on the globe. (Rev. 5: 13.)

If, then, there is a place of endless torment for the wicked, it is not upon this globe, or within it. But the word of God assures us that the righteous shall be recompensed in the earth, much more the wicked and the sinner. (Prov. 11: 31.) And as the recompense of the righteous is in the new earth, the renewed earth, and they are to inhabit it forever, it follows that the wicked are recompensed, and destroyed first; and this will be seen more clearly in considering the song of the redeemed.

"And they sung a new song, saying, Thou hast made us unto our God kings and priests; and we shall reign on the earth. And every creature which is in heaven, and on the earth, and under the earth, and such as are in the sea; and all that are in them, heard I saying Blessing, and honor, and glory, and power, be unto him that sitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb, forever and ever." (Rev. 5: 9–13.)

There can be no such thing as a lake of fire in the earth at this time. Neither can there be any intelligent creature who does not join in the "new song." Any exposition that contradicts these passages must be unscriptural.

Now a careful comparison of the two classes of passages, as given above, will show that the strong language relating to the punishment of apostate nations, and of Satan, may have a fulfillment in their final overthrow, and the earth be cleansed afterwards, and Christ with his people possess it, and reign forever without the curse. There is no nook or corner of the universe from which the wail of the lost is heard. The wicked being rooted out of the earth, the meek shall inhabit it forever.

Now our exposition of the thirteenth verse of the fifth of Revelation is, on all hands, more probable than the exposition of Rev. 20: 10 by the advocates of eternal torment. That, with other passages may be expounded and applied to things of time, in harmony with similar expressions and phrases:

"And the streams thereof shall be turned into pitch, and the dust thereof into brimstone, and the land thereof shall become burning pitch. It shall not be quenched night nor day; the smoke thereof shall go up forever and ever: from generation to generation it shall lie waste; none shall pass through it forever and ever." (Isa 34: 9, 10.)

"And the third angel followed them, saying with a loud voice, If any man worship the beast and his image, and receive his mark in his forehead, or in his hand, the same shall drink of the wine of the wrath of God, which is poured out without mixture into the cup of his indignation; and he shall be tormented with fire and brimstone in the presence of the Lamb: and the smoke of their torment ascendeth up forever and ever: and they have no rest day nor night, who worship the beast and his image, and whosoever receiveth the mark of his name." (Rev. 14: 9–11.)

But Rev. 5: 13 cannot be harmonized with the doctrine of endless torment in the lake of fire. Both cannot be true.

Which shall we choose? A world in which there shall be a union of the songs of the redeemed, with the endless wailings of the damned? Perhaps your father, or mother, or child is there to wail eternally! Can we choose an exposition that is of a doubtful character to sustain such a position? We said of doubtful character; for there can be no lake of fire in the earth renewed, and we have shown that the devil and his works are both to be destroyed. It is the more reasonable view to suppose from a comparison of all the texts, that sin and suffering will cease in the restitution. (Acts 3: 21.)

Though we may differ from Bro. Chapman and other dear friends on this subject, we do not love them the less; nor shall we, though they earnestly oppose our views.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

We learn from the Windham County Transcript that an interesting revival is in progress in Putnam, Ct. The following is from the Transcript of Feb. 16th:—

"The great religious revival in this place is still the predominant subject of thought and discussion by the people of the community, and from its commencement a few weeks since to the present time there has been a steadily increasing interest manifested in spiritual concerns. The preaching of Rev. Mr. Parker in the Congregational church has attracted large audiences every afternoon and evening during the past week, requiring, at times, extra seats to accommodate all who assemble. Many come from adjoining towns, some of whom are almost constant attendants.

The general plan pursued is to have a short season of prayer, and a sermon in the afternoon, and in the evening an inquiry meeting is held in the vestry and at the same time there is a prayer meeting in the room above, after which there is a sermon which is followed by a general conference meeting. At the inquiry meeting there is personal conversation and such instruction imparted as seems adapted to individual cases. The sermons are clear and forcible presentations of truth, and abound in happy illustrations of doctrine and duty. The many excuses and subterfuges which are adduced for neglecting religion are made to appear puerile and insignificant to many who have offered them. There are no extravagant expressions or harsh epithets. The preacher seems moved by an overwhelming love for the souls of his fellow men, and to promote their salvation is his sole desire; and he devotes powers acquired by familiarity with the Scriptures, a large experience and long and careful study of human nature, with a success, by the blessing of God, rarely paralleled.

The conference meetings excel in interest anything of the kind ever attended by any among us. One hundred 'short sermons' from as many preachers are sometimes heard at those gatherings. Those who thus 'stand up for Jesus,' are of all ages, from the child of ten to the parent of fifty. Sometimes three or four rise to speak at once. Each one is brief but earnest and to the point. Some seekers wish prayers; some rejoice at their recent conversion; some lament short comings and resolve to do better; some express wonder and joy at the wonderful manifestations of God's grace,—all testify to the paramount importance of the religion of Christ. The songs interspersed give a thrilling interest to the exercises and conspire to make the gatherings foretastes of the great gathering to be beyond the vail.

It is estimated that there have been one hundred conversions in this town within three or four weeks, and many more are seriously and candidly considering their duty in the matter. Many who have been familiar with revival scenes testify that they have never seen such evidence of divine presence and power as is here exhibited. In view of the changes effected in the minds and hearts of some, many exclaim, 'This is the Lord's doings, and it is marvelous in our eyes.' While there is some opposition to the work, the reforming influence as manifested in some instances in this community in a measure disarms the opposition, on the part of some, although they may stand aloof from the work. An evil tree will not bring forth such fruit.

Mr. Parker will continue his meetings during the present week, and over next Sabbath, when he goes to Thompson to labor for a season."

SCRIPTURE READING.

The following is the reading of Dan. 9: 21–27, in the "Bishop's Bible," translated by Myles Coverdale in A. D. 1535:—

"While I was yet speaking in prayer, behold, the man Gabriel (whom I had seen afore in the vision) came flying to me, and touched me about the offering time in the evening. He informed me, and spake unto me: O Daniel (said he) I am now come to make thee understand it; for as soon as thou beganest to make thy prayer, it was so devised, and therefore am I come to show thee. And why? for thou art a man greatly beloved.

Wherefore, ponder the matter well, that thou mayest learn to understand the vision. Seventy weeks are determined over thy people, and over thy holy city; that wickedness may be consumed, that the sin may have an end, that the offence may be reconciled, and to bring in everlasting righteousness, to fulfill the visions of the prophets, and to anoint the most holy one. Understand this then, and mark it well; that from the time it shall be concluded to go and repair Jerusalem again, unto Christ, (or the anointed) prince, there shall be seven weeks. Then shall the streets and walls be builded again sixty-two weeks, but with hard troublous time. After these sixty-two weeks shall Christ be slain, and they shall have no pleasure in him. Then shall there come a people with the prince, and destroy the city and the sanctuary; and his end shall come as the water flood. But the desolation shall continue till the end of the battle.

He shall make a strong bond with many, for the space of a week; and when the week is half gone, he shall put down the slain and meat-offering. And in the temple there shall be an abominable desolation, till it have destroyed all. And it is concluded that this wasting shall continue unto the end."

THE NEW $2000 TRACT FUND.

We, the undersigned, agree to give the sums affixed to our names, for the purpose of raising TWO THOUSAND DOLLARS to aid the Christian Publication Society in the gratuitous distribution of tracts.

Previous donations	$725.59
Eliza Apthorp	1.94
Daniel Q. Kent	5.00
Sophronia Smith	1.00
Olive Smith	1.00
A. Rennie	1.00
Mary F. Taylor	1.00
Mrs. S. G. Bradbury	.50

PLEDGES PAID.—Bro. W. Hill.

More Bible in them than he thought.

A sister in Wisconsin, sending money for more tracts, writes:—

"The package I had I have given all away, and more are wanted. I gave our Free-will Baptist minister some, with our papers, to read. When he had read them, he said:—'There is more Bible in those little messengers than I had any idea of.' He likes the Crisis, and is seeking for truth. Another family here, who have found Jesus precious to their souls, want tracts to read. They were once great novel readers, but now they say there is more goodness in those little tracts than in all the novels they ever read, and they want more tracts." R. H. H.

A brother writes from Indiana:—

"The Crisis is about the only true preaching that I get, except what I get from those tracts and pamphlets which you sent me; and I wish to say, if you have any more to send me, and are willing to wait till the day of judgment for your pay, I will distribute them in my neighborhood. I have been scattering those that I bought of you. Some begin to see the light; others shake their heads, yet they still love to read."

POOR FUND DONATIONS.

To pay for Papers sent to the Poor.

Whole number sent free 800. Amount $2000.00.

Previous donations	$838.48
A brother	1.00
Eliza Apthorp	1.95
Daniel Q. Kent	5.00
D. Palmer	2.50
Mrs. S. A. A. Pray	1.13
A. Rennie	.50
S. T. W. Sleeper	.50

A brother writes from Hawleyville, Iowa:—

"I see that the Poor Fund donations fall far short of the $2000, and thought it might be duty for me, as God has prospered me, to help send the paper to the poor, and aid in spreading the truth by scattering tracts. I therefore send you $10.00; five for the Poor Fund, and five for the Tract Fund, and $2.00 more for tracts to scatter. I have scattered some, and want more to send them out preaching. I don't know where they are needed more than here in the West, where we have no Advent preaching. May the Lord send forth more laborers to gather in the already ripe harvest." D. Q. K.

THE ITALIAN MISSION.

Previous donations	$356.54
D. Hogarth	.50
C. & H. Smith	1.00
C. K.	.50
Mary	1.00
Edward Williams	5.00
J. M. Stetler	10.00
A friend	10.00
A friend to missions	5.00
Mrs. S. A. A. Pray	1.12
A. L.	1.00
A. Rennie	1.00

Our Volunteer Agents.

REPORT FOR WEEK ENDING MARCH 18TH.

Whole number of new subscribers in the week, 59. By the efforts of the following brethren, 41:—

ONE EACH—By M. Brown, B. Butler, S. Bassford, S. W. Bartlett, H. Bailey, S. P. Clark, C. M. Currier, H. K. Flagg, H. Gibbs, L. M. Goodyear, W. Ingham, W. Kidney, O. King, C. H. Leverton, M. R. Miles, E. W. Potter, E. S. Robbins, J. E. Roberts, N. Sleger, Thos. Smith, G. L. Teeple, M. Young.
TWO EACH—By Agigail Mussey, A. W. Sibley.
THREE EACH—By M. Grant, S. Mayberry.
NINE—By John Hyde.

Strong Reasons.

"Miles Grant, Esq.:—Sir,—Please discontinue to forward me the World's Crisis. Have no faith in abolition, or female preaching. 'By their fruits,' etc. I remain yours,

W. R. P."

For the World's Crisis.

LET "BOTH SIDES" BE CIRCULATED.

BRO. GRANT:—Please publish in the Crisis the following, which I clip from the Advent Review of Feb. 21st. It will speak for itself. It needs no comment.

I like the heading of the article—"Truth will prevail." The reason why I think best to have this article published, is because it will more extensively give notice of my work on The Sabbath, which is in successful preparation for the press, and will be published in due time, by the continued blessing of God. If I do not misjudge, the more "Both Sides" is circulated and read, the wider will be the field for the spread of my book. Let it then be circulated by the thousands, and when the reader shall see the other side, he can better judge whether I am an "enemy of God's law," or whether others are charging me with words and sentiments which never fell from my lips or pen.

T. M. PREBLE.

East Weare, N. H.

TRUTH WILL PREVAIL.

"Both Sides, on the Sabbath" is doing a noble work. It is the pioneer to the "History of the Sabbath." Persons who are not interested enough, or are too prejudiced to read the direct testimony on the subject, will readily purchase and read "Both Sides." Here they feel safe to put themselves under the protection of the Sunday advocate. They become interested in the argument, see the utter failure of their side, prejudice gives way, and they are then ready to read, or listen to, the truth. We are personally acquainted with several who are now keeping the Sabbath just through the influence of this book. The enemy of God's law missed the mark when he started that work. One man, a school teacher, being asked his opinion of "Both Sides," said that he believed Eld. Preble to be a seventh-day man, who was writing against it just to make a show of opposition, and give Bro. Smith an opportunity of showing up his side of the question!! This illustrates the weakness of Eld. P.'s arguments. No wonder that he wishes to revise it. Brethren and sisters, scatter this work among your friends, relatives, and neighbors. Let them see the difference between light and darkness, truth and error, God's word and tradition.

D. M. CANRIGHT.
Alma, Mich. I. D. VAN HORN.

For the World's Crisis.

LESSONS IN ASTRONOMY.

HOW TABLES ARE MADE.

I have told of the acceleration of the moon's motion, as a fact generally accepted by astronomers, while Eld. Thurman, partly on the authority of a text in the Apocrapha, discards the doctrine. I will now show the importance of this fact, supposing it to be such, and then say something about the making of astronomical tables.

I stand at a window, and wish to lodge a penny on the ground at the opposite side of the street. There are two ways of doing it. I can throw it horizontally so it will fall there, or, I can extemporize an inclined plane and let it slide to its place. But the two routes will be quite different. In the latter case the penny falls uniformly, so many inches in moving so many feet; in the former case it starts without falling, and falls rapidly just before it strikes the ground. These two routes of the penny—not of the penny post—may illustrate the contending theories of the moon's motion. The first named represents the moon as moving now just as it did 2500 years ago. If so, and if Mr. Ferguson's tables are found not to make the ancient eclipses, it corrects them, so much for each year or each hundred years; and if then they make the eclipses of 2500 years ago, they may also make the eclipses of 1500 years ago, or of 6000 years ago, just as well. This correction of the tables answers to the inclined plane—so many seconds for so many years, all along the route.

But the astronomers generally say this wont do. They have found that tables based on modern observations, and giving the eclipses admirably for modern times, are at fault if applied to the oldest eclipses; and when they are corrected to make the oldest eclipses, they fail again to make the eclipses half way back to the oldest. Hence their suspicion that the moon's rate was not uniform, and that the line which represents the speed will be, not a straight line, but a curve, like that made by the penny when thrown. That line will touch points which the inclined plane will not reach.

Now about the tables. How are they made at the outset? Let me name some of the difficulties of making them accurate, even to be good for a hundred years.

If the moon moved uniformly around the earth, and the earth around the sun, and each in a circle, a bright school boy could make tables. But neither earth nor moon move in a circle. The orbit of each is an ellipse, in which the motion is now faster and now slower. That is the reason why a good clock is sometimes behind the sun, and sometimes before it. But this is only the beginning of the astronomer's labor. If the sun and moon moved uniformly in each course through the ellipse, there would be little trouble in graduating the time tables to their "up grades" and "down grades." But they have neighbors, that must receive due neighborly respect. Mercury, Venus, Mars, Jupiter, Saturn, Herschel, are all in their turn sometimes before the earth, pulling it along faster, or behind it, holding it back. These are some of the perturbations which the astronomers can get rid of only by calculating their effects. And these effects are so considerable that they led to the detection, a few years ago, of that new planet, Le Verrier, that had been skulking in his ring outside of and beyond all the rest. Herschel, his nearest neighbor, was actually caught signaling to him, and "putting down the brakes" a little when he came near,—though he was even then nearly two billions of miles away;—and this ended his concealment.

Besides this shoal of perturbations, it is known that the moon is sometimes above the plane in which the earth moves around the sun, and sometimes below it. And eclipses can occur only when the moon is near this plane. The point where the moon's orbit crosses this plane is called the node, and eclipses can happen only within a certain distance of the node. But the node itself is veering round; and more than that, the moon's plane is not always inclined just so much to the earth's plane. That is, when all other things are equal, this varying inclination may still change the distance at which an eclipse may occur, and its dimensions when it does occur.

The result of all these causes of difference and disturbance is this: the actual course of the moon, its varying distance from the earth, its latitude, and its longitude, must be settled by an immense number of observations. Astronomers, accordingly, are in the habit of taking observations on the heavenly bodies, regularly, unless a cloudy sky prevents, week after week and year after year. The record of these observations is called the ephemeris; and every well manned observatory is expected to furnish an ephemeris, more or less extensive, for the aid of astronomers generally. The observations made at Greenwich form a quarto volume of about 500 pages annually. The British Nautical Almanac, an annual volume of about 500 octavo pages, is aided more or less by these observations. And when our own Government, at the breaking out of the rebellion, thought it might save the $10.000 that had been appropriated for astronomical observation and other work, those who understood the case soon showed that to withhold this money was very bad economy.

It is upon such observations, made year after year and generation after generation, properly digested, and the "perturbations" computed by laborious mathematical processes,—that astronomical tables are based. The very ancient observations, of eclipses and the like, have of course a special value if they are accurately made and reliably reported. It was only by comparing ancient and modern observations that the "acceleration" I have spoken of could have been first suspected. And tables are more or less valuable, according as they have been made from a greater or less number of observations, and with greater or less ability and labor.

Tables for the computation of eclipses are tables of the "places" of the sun and moon, day after day and year after year. Small tables can of course give very little account of the perturbations and anomalies, and they will be comparatively incorrect or inadequate for the computation especially of distant eclipses. I shall say something of the different volumes of tables that have been used within the present generation, or are now used, when I report the computations that have been made of Ptolemy's eclipses. But I would here name two sets of tables, which are the largest and the smallest that I know of. The smallest are Ferguson's, upon which Eld. Thurman's are based, with corrections of which I shall speak hereafter. Ferguson's tables, both of the sun and moon, make 18 duodecimo pages in one edition of his work, and 24 pages in another. Hansen's tables, of the moon alone, make a volume of 511 quarto pages, of which 75 pages are introductory. Allowing half of Ferguson's tables to be of the moon's places, and supposing one of Hansen's pages to contain four times as much as one of Ferguson's, we shall find their ratio to be 12 to 1744, or that Hansen's are about 145 times as extensive as Ferguson's. Hansen's tables are regarded as the best for the moon's places, and Hansen's and Olufsen's the best for the sun's places. Other tables are indeed used, but with such criticism as I shall note in the sequel. I should here say of Ferguson's tables that they were made over a hundred years ago, and are so much out of date that astronomers hardly know them now. They were doubtless a very creditable performance in their day, and sufficiently accurate for what was expected of them. But when no other of the more recent tables are at all consulted, I do not see the logic of calling Mr. Ferguson "the great astronomer." C. F. H.

For the World's Crisis.

Tour in Connecticut.

At Warehouse Point I found a few
Who're in the faith, both good and true;
With them I found it good to meet,
And preach the truth to us so sweet.
At Hartford, the old battle field,
I found them armed with sword and shield;
With the old veterans we had a talk,
And surely they by faith can walk.
The enemy has done his best
To crush the flock, disturb their rest;
The preachers come and oft advise,
But sometimes this is not so wise.
They should be wise and harmless too;
Good fruits should follow all they do;
The flock in Christ may all be free,
If all the truth they do not see.
The faithful ones will love the light,
And all are one in this good fight;
The saints of God must all be one,
Who love to pray, "Thy kingdom come."
Sunday I came to Cheshire Street,
Where sheep and lambs together meet;
And really it is "meet" indeed
To stand by faith the flock to feed;
At venture I did draw the bow,
And very soon the tears would flow.
In the afternoon we thought it best
To point them to their promised rest;
And hearts were light and of good cheer,
To know redemption was so near.
The careless sinner, too, was there,
And in these glories wished to share;
Repent, believe, and look away
To Christ, who is the living way.
At Yalesville in the evening meet,
A gathering large of chaff and wheat;
Of new recruits here are a few,
Inquiring some, what shall I do?
They were pointed to the Mercy Seat,
To Jesus Christ, the sure "retreat,"
To run for life, and pay the cost,
Or very soon they would be lost.
The soldiers joyfully look for peace,
And hope that soon they'll get release.
In lanes and hedges to compel,
It is our work "good news" to tell.

More anon. L. BOUTELL.

Yalesville, Ct., March 7th, 1865.

THE "ONE WEEK"—WHO CONFIRMED THE COVENANT?

"And he shall confirm the covenant with many for one week: and in the midst of the week he shall cause the sacrifice and oblation to cease."—DAN. 9: 27.

We are informed that Christ is the personage here mentioned, and that he confirmed the covenant. To this we object: because, first, the context shows that reference is made to a certain "Prince" that should "come" against Jerusalem and destroy it; and, secondly, it is not true that Christ confirmed any covenant for a prophetic week, or seven years,—neither the old or new covenant. Observe the following facts:

1. Christ did not confirm the old covenant seven years, as his ministry lasted less than four years.

2. Christ could not have confirmed the new covenant at all before his death: because, "Where a testament [diatheekee—COVENANT] is, there must also of necessity be the death of the testator. For a testament [covenant] is of force after men are dead: otherwise, it is of no strength at all while the testator liveth."—Heb. 9: 16, 17. Hence, the fact is plain that the new covenant did not come into force till the death of Christ, and consequently could not have been confirmed previously. "Covenant" and "testament" both come from the same original term. Even if Christ had confirmed the new covenant during his ministry, he could have confirmed it only three or four years instead of seven; but, as we have already discovered, the new covenant did not come into force till the death of Christ, and, therefore, could not have been confirmed before the cross.

3. The same personage who was to confirm a certain covenant for "one week," was also to "cause the sacrifice and oblation to cease," even "in the midst of the week." Christ did not do this: to insist he did is to give the lie to history and the Bible. (See Heb. 8: 4.) That they should have ceased to offer them is obvious, but that they did is not true.

4. If the position should be taken that Christ confirmed the new covenant for one week after he ascended to heaven, we reply, if this be so, he has, on the same principle, confirmed it 1800 years; besides, with this view, how could he "cause the sacrifice and oblation to cease in the midst of the week"?

5. It will not do to claim that Christ confirmed the old covenant one-half of the week, and the new covenant the other half, for this would not be confirming the covenant, but the covenants; nor will it do to claim that the new covenant was confirmed half a week before its inauguration, and half a week subsequently; for before being confirmed it must be a covenant in force, which was not the case till the death of Christ.

6. "He [the Roman 'Prince'—not Christ] shall confirm the covenant with many for one week: and in the midst of the week he [the Roman 'Prince'—not Christ] shall cause the sacrifice and oblation to cease."—Dan. 9: 27.

Some suppose that allusion is made to the covenant that existed between the Jews and Romans, by virtue of which the Jews were made tributary to the Romans, which covenant the Jews were trying to break; others suppose that the threatened "curses of the covenant" were to be inflicted upon that people who had broken the covenant made with them in Moses' day, and thereby incurred a stroke from the Roman "rod of God's anger." With either view its duration was seven years.

W. SHELDON.—Voice of the West.

For the World's Crisis.

BRINGING REPROACH.

Every member of the church of Christ, whether minister or layman, should be very careful not to bring reproach upon His cause. Many have done so, not because they have designed it, but because they have not considered their ways. They think they mean well, and no doubt they do; yet they forget to look at things in all their bearings, and overlook the Apostle's injunction, "Edify one another." In their zeal to combat error, and defend what they consider truth, they lose the spirit of Christ, and thus many ministers and writers for books and papers do more harm than good. O. C. B.

Correspondence.

From Bro. B. Spaulding.

Bro. Grant:—I am once more at home, having spent eight weeks this winter in Connecticut. My last visits were at Cheshire Street and Wallingford, where I was well received and hospitably used, and helped on my way after a godly sort. Brethren in Connecticut generally understand that the ox that treadeth out the corn should not be muzzled. In this particular duty they have done well; not that I desire a gift, but I do desire fruit that may abound to their account. The good Lord bless them, and reward them an hundred-fold in this life, and in the world to come with eternal life.

I spent one Sunday in Wilbraham, where the Lord has been doing wonders in the conversion of sinners, under the labors of Brn. Higgins and Butler. The day was so very rainy, we did not have any meeting until evening, which was a blessed season. Last Sunday I visited Westford. Found them in much better state than they had been. Some stirred up, and all seemed agreed to lay aside divisions, contentions, and strife about words, or ideas, and to think and let others think, and speak and let others speak, act and let others act. This is as it should be. They have seen the evil of making a test of any particular truth, which one understands and another does not. I have seen much of this evil among the Advent brethren, and I have long ago determined not to press or make a test of any particular truth. We should all do well to open our minds to conviction, be willing to hear on any subject which may be presented, claiming to have Bible for proof, and if fairly convicted receive, but if not, why then let it stand on its own merits, not rise in opposition, and spend our breath in trying to put down what some other good brother thinks is the truth. We are all fallible, and if we would keep this in mind, we should say, I may be wrong, yet I am honest, or my brother may be honest, when he is wrong; perhaps neither are exactly right, the truth may lie between. O then let us put on forbearance, love and kindness, and be courteous to each other, though we differ in opinion.

We should not come to the conclusion that we have the whole truth, but that more truth is still before us, and will be daily coming forth. There are many things in the prophecies, which remain to be understood; they are not of private interpretation, and therefore may and will be understood. They are profitable, too; but in order to be so must be understood. The good Lord help us to search and see what God hath spoken by the mouth and pen of his holy prophets, for not one jot or tittle will fail, but all will be fulfilled.

Yours, B. Spaulding.

Chelmsford, Mass.

From Bro. G. W. Gillespie.

Bro. Grant:—I am still loving the Lord, and can testify that it is good to serve him. In Christ my Savior I feel safe amid the perils of these last days. My hope is like an anchor, reaching to that within the vale, the kingdom of God. My faith is often tried, but I cling the more closely to the Rock as the billows roll high. But tried we must be. The Lord will have a peculiar people, zealous of good works. Grace will "purify," the precious blood of Christ will make "white," and in the crucible we must be "tried," that we may come forth more precious than "fine gold." Then, again, the Lord wants good tools to work with, rightly tempered, sharp and keen; so into the fire we're put till hot, then on the anvil and hammered into shape; then comes the rasp and file, and finally the polishing wheel, which finishes us, and—then to work.

Good tools work well, so do good christians; and the Lord will have and has them. O that all professors of religion would only yield themselves as "instruments" in the hands of God, that he might use them to his glory, and thus gain an abundant entrance into his everlasting kingdom.

Dear Bro., let us not be weary in well doing, but work the harder as '68 draws near. May the Lord direct you to fill the Crisis with the choicest of "meat in due season." O for one more "grand movement" upon the enemy's works, and then victory! Praise the Lord, O my soul, we're almost home. Yours, waiting for the kingdom, G. W. Gillespie.

From Bro. J. G. Hook.

Bro. Grant:—I am still trying to obey the good Lord of life and glory. I think he is mindful of me, and does bless me, as I journey on to the land of rest.

I am doing what I can to publish Christ's gospel. It is indeed good news and glad tidings, to know that Jesus, who died for us all, and rose from the dead for our justification, who ascended to the Father, and is now our great High Priest, will soon come again to bless the waiting ones with everlasting life and a home in his kingdom. Some are hearing this gospel and rejoicing in hope of the glory of God. I am glad to see some in the various places I visit from week to week inquiring the way to the heavenly land.

I feel more and more the responsibility that rests on us as a people, who have been blessed of God with the precious truth contained in his word, pertaining to the end of this age, and the establishment of God's everlasting kingdom. We must let the light shine, or we shall be condemned in that day when Jesus appears in his glory.

I send the names of three more subscribers for our excellent paper, the World's Crisis. Hope to send more soon. Your Bro. in the vineyard, John G. Hook.

Concord, N. H.

From a Methodist Sister.

Writing from Rochester, N. H., she shows her interest in the Crisis by subscribing herself and sending us three new subscribers, with $6,63, and says: "You may be surprised that I, a stranger, and a Methodist of thirty-eight years' standing, should want your paper, and be interested in your reading matter, as I have been ever since Alton Bay campmeeting. But your tracts have helped me much. I cannot yet see all clear as I wish; but I thank God I can say, like one of old, I see men as trees walking. I expect to see more and more. I feel you are God's people." B. W. S.

Mrs. T. M. Goddard writes from Three Oaks, Mich.: "The Crisis is all the preaching we have, and I prize it very much. I sometimes feel lonely and almost discouraged; but when my paper comes, and I read the many good letters from my brothers and sisters, it gives me new courage, and oh! how I long to meet with them.

Mrs. J. D. E. writes from Caledonia, Co., Vt.: "The truths you advocate were entirely new to me six months ago. I can say in my heart I love them, and I desire others should know and love them, too. Please send the Crisis, for the enclosed money, to Rev. ——, also a package of tracts. I would be glad also for a few for free distribution. The field is large, and work to be done.

J. W. Taylor, Chatham Valley, Pa., writes: "I must confess the Crisis is the best paper I receive, and the only one I will recommend. I admire the manner in which it is conducted. I mean what I say."

Obituaries.

Elizabeth Chapman.

Died in Reading, Mich., Feb. 28, 1865, Sr. Elizabeth, wife of H. B. Chapman, aged forty-five years, three months and twenty-four days.

Some eleven years since she, together with her husband, embraced the faith and hope of the gospel of the soon coming kingdom, and has maintained her integrity to the last. She was a faithful companion, and a devoted mother. Scarcely any could have been more so. She sleeps in hope of a world of blessedness beyond the sorrows of this life, and her husband and ten children mourn not as those who have no hope; for all believe she died a christian. Her funeral services were attended by a large concourse of relatives and sympathizing friends, in the Methodist church, at Reading. The writer endeavored to render consolation to the weeping family, from Rev. 14: 3.

A. N. Seymour.

"Voice of the West" please copy.

E. I. Cole.

Died in Hartford, Me., Feb. 20, 1865, of dropsy on the brain, Estella Isabell, only child of Virgil and Lizzie S. Cole, aged one year and eight months.

"She was the music of our home,
A day that knew no night,
The fragrance of our garden bower,
A thing all smiles and light.

Each flutter of the pulse we marked,
Each quiver of the eye;
To the dear lips our ear we laid,
To catch the last low sigh.

At last the fluttering pulse stood still,
The death-frost through her clay
Stole slowly; and as morn came up,
Our sweet flower passed away.

But we shall clasp that hand again,
And kiss those lips once more;
Estella, we will meet you there,
Safe on the other shore."

Frances D. Haggett.

Harley P. Fletcher.

Died in Stafford, Feb. 17th, 1865, Harley P. Fletcher, aged four years and sixteen days.

Little Harley was spared just long enough to become interesting, as well as lovely, to his fond and doting parents. The blasting winds of disease and the wintry frost of death nipped the bud,—it faded and died; but the blessed hope of the coming spring of immortality and life-giving power of the Sun of righteousness, which is to arise with healing in his wings, and speak the dead to life, cheers the hearts of the bereaved and mourning parents.

Word of comfort were spoken on the funeral occasion from 1 Thess. 4, by the writer.

A. M. Higgins.

M. Harmon.

Died in Standish, Me., March 1, 1865, Mehetable, wife of Wm. Harmon, aged seventy-nine years, four months and fourteen days.

She loved the truths of the Bible, and was cheered on her journey by the blessed hope of eternal life at Jesus' coming. She leaves a large circle of friends to mourn her loss.

E. M. Haggett.

George Garland.

Died in the Baptist Church Hospital, at Fredericksburg, Va., May 23d, 1864, George, son of James and Elizabeth Garland, aged twenty years and eleven months.

He was wounded May 8th, by a rifle ball, passing into his right lung. George was a kind and affectionate child, possessed with a cheerful disposition. Elisabeth Garland.

Mary E. Gavit.

Died, in South Kingston, R. I., Feb. 25th, 1865, of consumption, Sr. Mary E. Gavit.

She was a great sufferer during her sickness, but died in hope of a better resurrection. Sermon by the writer, from words chosen by her, Amos 4: 12,—"Prepare to meet thy God." P. C Rodman.

Phebe Durfee.

Died, in Mohegan, R. I., Oct. 30th, 1864, Phebe P., daughter of Eld. A. and Phebe A. Durfee, aged four years and eight months.

Edgar L. Tenant.

Died, at Natick, R. I., March 4th, 1865, Edgar L., only son of Daniel R. and Sybel E. Tenant, aged six years and two months.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

Liverpool March 5th, Queenstown 6th.

Parliamentary proceedings were unimportant.

Queen Victoria had temporarily emerged from her seclusion by receiving the foreign Ambassadors, members of the Legations, etc., at Buckingham palace. Mr. Adams and secretaries were present, but Mrs. Adams was unavoidably absent. The Queen will hold another court soon, limited to select circles of the English nobility.

The great exhibition in Dublin has been inaugurated by the Prince of Wales with the same ceremonial as by the Queen in person.

The opening of the telegraph to India has been favorably announced, causing considerable sensation. A private message from Calcutta had reached Constantinople in six hours and another message from the same place had reached London in eight and a half hours.

A rebellion is going on in Abyssinia which threatens the throne and life of King Theodore, who has imprisoned his own son on suspicion of participation in it. At latest dates a great and decisive battle was expected.

TURKEY.

The difficulty between Turkey and Persia is growing more serious. A diplomatic rupture is expected.

Terrible Snow Storms in Scotland.—Scotland is snowed under; such a winter has not been seen since 1837. A correspondent writing from Banffshire, says:

"We are now in the seventh week of this protracted and increasing snow storm, without the faintest indication of a favorable change. On the contrary, new falls of snow are almost of daily occurrence, along with keen and severe frost. Trade of all kinds is suffering a depression more or less, and the prosecution of out-door works is entirely out of the question. Deer and all sorts of game continue to suffer, after all the extreme care and watchfulness by which they are tended by the gamekeepers of the respective forests. The deer, especially after receiving even more care and attention than a provident farmer bestows upon his stock, are daily getting more and more reduced and emaciated, although large quantities of hay and other provender are laid out at every available place in the forest for their maintenance. A powerful stag, the other day, took possession of a bundle of hay, upon which he lived for some three or four days, none of his weaker and starving brethren daring to approach him while the food lasted. Hares, rabbits, crows, and other vermin are everywhere actually starving, and the result of a few weeks' continuance of this dreadful weather would be awful to contemplate."

Canadian Affairs.—Quebec, March 15. Parliament last night voted $1,000,000 for the permanent defense of Canada; also $350,000 for expenses of volunteers on the frontier.

The finance minister, in a speech, said that the Canadian government were of the opinion that so long as the American war lasted we must have a force on the frontier in the shape of police and militia to support the civil authorities and fulfill the obligations we are under to act the part of good neighbors toward the United States.

☞ The population of Paris is 1,667,841 souls, exclusive of a garrison of 28,300 men.

DOMESTIC.

New York, March 15. The Herald's Newbern correspondence of the 11th says the rebels suffered dreadfully on Friday in their repeated charges upon our works. They came up a dozen times with a bravery worthy of a better cause, but our men had the advantage and repulsed them with terrible slaughter. That night and the next morning Gen. Couch's forces came up and the rebels began to fall back across the river into Kingston. Our forces followed them up vigorously and will cross the river as soon as the bridge can be repaired.

A letter from Gen. Schofield's headquarters, Newbern, March 11th, says Hoke this morning attempted to break our lines, but was repulsed with terrible slaughter. Our loss is not more than 300 or 400 killed, wounded and prisoners. The rebel loss in killed, wounded and prisoners must be at least eight times greater. We have the field with all the rebel killed and wounded.

Sanitary supplies are abundant at the front.

The special Times' dispatch from Washington states that Senator Sumner has expressed it as his firm opinion, based on the best of reasons, that we may look for peace in six months.

The editor of the Waynesboro' (S. C.) News gives an account of the occupation of that place by Sherman, after leaving Columbia. He says the main army was preceded by a body of bummers, who rode into the city helter-skelter and proceeded to ransack public and private property.

On the arrival of the main body, however, all this was stopped, no disorderly proceedings being permitted. The business portion of the place was, however burned.

New York, March 18. The following dispatch has been received at the War Department at Washington, and a copy forwarded to Gen. Dix:

Fayetteville, March 10. To-day we have added Fayetteville to the list of cities that have fallen into our hands. Hardee, said to have 20,000 men, withdrew across the river yesterday and last night, and is reported to be en route to Raleigh.

The rebels skirmished in the town and fired artillery upon the houses occupied by women and children. They burned a bridge at this place and removed all the public stores by railroad that they could. Gen. Sherman is here and well. Many of the men are wanting shoes and clothing, but the army was never in better condition.

(Signed) O. O. Howard, Maj. General.

New York, March 18. The Times' Army of the Potomac dispatch of the 15th says during the greater part of the 14th active operations on the most extensive scale could be discovered within the limits of the rebel army. Camps were struck, and large and heavy masses of troops were seen in line of battle. Besides, three columns of men were seen moving to and fro within their interior lines. Orders were at once issued to our troops to be in instant readiness to move.

It is believed that the enemy have mined our works in the centre of the line, near the Appomattox. Our engineers are investigating the matter.

During the best portion of the night of the 14th trains and wagons were in active motion, while sutlers were ordered to the rear.

There is every indication of a speedy movement, and appearances look like a fight.

The correspondents of both the Herald and the Tribune corroborate these reports of activity within the lines of both armies, and the indications of an early collision. So far as our army is concerned, its movement depends only upon the weather.

Important Order by Gen. Grant—Revocation of Trade Permits.—The Washington dispatch of the Advertiser contains the following highly important order by General Grant, which sweeps away the whole brood of cotton, tobacco, tar and turpentine speculators, setting aside alike the permits of special agents, Cabinet ministers, and even of the President himself. Official records show that it will affect jobs covering over half a million bales of cotton, sixteen thousand barrels of turpentine, five thousand barrels of tar, two thousand barrels of resin, and one hundred thousand boxes of tobacco:

"Headquarters Armies of the U. States, City Point, Va., March 10, 1865. [Special Orders No. 48.]

The operations on all Treasury trade permits, and all other trade permits and licenses to trade, by whomsoever granted, within the State of Virginia, except that portion known as the Eastern Shore, and within the States of North Carolina, and South Carolina, and that portion of the State of Georgia immediately bordering on the Atlantic, including the city of Savannah, are hereby suspended until further orders.

All contracts and agreements made under or by virtue of any trade permit or license, within any of said States or parts of States, during the existence of this order, will be deemed void, and the subject of such contracts or agreements will be seized by the military authorities for the benefit of the government, whether the same is at the time of such contracts or agreements within their reach, or at any time thereafter comes within their reach, either by the operations of war or by the acts of the contracting parties or their agents.

The delivery of all goods contracted for and not delivered before the publication of this order is prohibited. Supplies of all kinds are prohibited from passing into any of said States or parts of States, except such as are absolutely necessary for the wants of those living within the lines of actual military occupation, and under no circumstances will military commanders allow them to pass beyond the lines they actually hold.

By command of Lieut. Gen. Grant.
T. S. Bowers, Ass't. Adjt. General."

Accounts of the Flood.

Rochester, N. Y., March 19. The great flood is abating. The damage done is estimated at a million dollars. The railroad bridges above the Falls and south of the city were carried away. About 2000 feet of the railroad track were also carried away, and the banks of the canal burst in several places, newspaper press rooms were submerged and their issue suspended.

Syracuse, N. Y., March 19. Many bridges, dams, and some houses were carried away in this vicinity by the flood. The salt works were damaged to the amount of $150,000. Loss by the flood in this county is not less than $500,000.

Harrisburg, Pa., March 18. The flood in the Susquehanna is unprecedented. The river is thirty inches higher than in the destructive freshet of 1846. Thousands of timber logs, with millions of feet of sawed lumber, have already passed this point, swept away by the flood.

Intelligence from the north and west of us indicate the most frightful destruction of property ever known in the State. The public property on streams emptying into the Susquehanna has suffered tremendously. Bridges have been swept away with dwelling houses, barns, etc.

This morning the bridges at Northumberland and Duncan's Island, and part of the bridges of the Pennsylvania Railroad above this city, were carried away. A bridge, said to be from Juniatta River, is being borne with fearful violence down stream. The Cumberland Valley Railroad bridge is in imminent danger, several spans being two feet under water.

The river still continues to rise and it is impossible to resist the force of the flood.

No trains have passed through Harrisburg from Pittsburg or Philadelphia for twelve hours.

The lower part of this city is completely under water. Much suffering has been created among many poor families at Middletown and all along the shore to Columbia.

The destruction of private property and the suffering among individuals is immense. The fires in several furnaces in this city have been extinguished. All the lumber stocked at Marietta, Columbia and Middletown has been swept away. Some of the streets in the lower parts, which were not approached by the great flood in 1846, are in great danger of being overflowed. Millions of dollars will not cover the loss already sustained.

Pittsburg, Pa., March 20. Telegraphic communication with Oil City not yet being established, we can get but meagre details of the losses by the great flood. The total loss is immense, being moderately estimated at over $2,000,000. Oil City is completely flooded, and many of the business offices have been carried away by the water, which rose with unprecedented rapidity. All the bottom lands above Oil City are submerged, and the McClintock and Oil City bridge over Oil creek, and the Franklin bridge over French creek, have been carried away. Derricks and tanks containing large quantities of oil have come down, and the river is black with floating barrels, most of them filled with oil. Many Pittsburg firms suffer heavily. Along the banks are sad evidences of wreck. Houses are gone and families are camping out in the open air. All the towns along the Alleghany river are inundated. A considerable quantity of oil in barrels will be recovered, having floated into eddies below this city and been left aground by the receding waters. At the mouth of Sewickly creek it is estimated that property to the amount of $100,000 has been washed ashore. A large field at Manchester is entirely covered with oil barrels, and one piece of bottom land a short distance below, about twenty-one acres in extent, is covered with a confused mass of oil barrels and lumber.

Freshet in New Hampshire.—Concord, N. H., March 18. There is a great freshet in the Merrimac River, and the water is rising fast. Railroad trains to the north are all delayed, and the track in many places submerged. Much damage to railroad and public property is feared.

The Great Flood in Pennsylvania.—Danville, Pa., March 18. The most destructive flood ever known in these parts is now raging on the north-west branch of the Susquehanna River. The railroad is submerged and all travel suspended.

All the bridges on the west branch as far as Williamsport are gone. The Lackawana and Bloomsburg road is under water in some places ten feet.

The canal in many places is completely destroyed. Half of Danville is under water, and the river is still rising.

Great Flood in Western New York.—New York, March 18. Dispatches from the western part of the State say the greatest flood for years is prevailing. All the lower part of Albany is submerged.

The Central Railroad west is broken in many places and the telegraph lines are down. At Utica and Rochester the water was never so high. The Hudson River Railroad is submerged near Albany and the track carried away.

Amnesty to Deserters.

BY THE PRESIDENT OF THE U. S. OF AMERICA.

A Proclamation.

Whereas, the twenty-first section of the act of Congress, approved on the 3d inst. entitled, "an act to amend the several acts heretofore passed to provide for enrolling and calling out the National forces, and for other purposes," requires that in addition to other lawful penalties of the crime of desertion from the military or naval service, "all persons who have deserted from the military or naval service of the United States who shall not return to said service, or report themselves to a Provost Marshal, within sixty days after the proclamation hereinafter mentioned, shall be deemed and taken to have voluntarily relinquished and forfeited their rights to citizenship and rights to become citizens, and such deserters shall be forever incapable of holding any office of trust and profit under the United States, or of exercising any rights of citizens thereof. And all persons who shall hereafter desert the military or naval service, and all persons who, being duly enrolled, shall depart the jurisdiction of the district in which he is enrolled, or go beyond the limits of the United States with intent to avoid any draft into the military or naval service duly ordered, shall be liable to the penalties of this section. And the President is hereby authorized and required forthwith, on the passage of this act, to issue his proclamation, setting forth the provisions of the section, in which proclamation the President is requested to notify all deserters returning within sixty days as aforesaid, that they shall be pardoned on condition of returning to their regiments and companies, or to such other organizations as they may be assigned to until they shall have served for a period of time equal to their original term of enlistment."

Now, therefore, be it known, that I, Abraham Lincoln, President of the United States, do issue this, my proclamation, as required by said act, ordering and requiring all deserters to return to their proper posts. And I do hereby notify them that all deserters who shall within sixty days from the date of this proclamation, viz., on or before the 10th day of May, 1865, return to service or report themselves to a Provost Marshal, shall be pardoned on condition that they return to their regiments and companies, or to such other organizations as they may be assigned to, and serve the remainder of their original terms of enlistment, and in addition thereto a period equal to the time lost by desertion.

In testimony whereof I hereunto set my hand and cause the seal of the United States to be affixed.

Done at the city of Washington, this 11th day of March, in the year of our Lord, 1865, and of the Independence of the United States the eighty-ninth. Abraham Lincoln.

By the President.
Wm. H. Seward, Secretary of State.

Letter from "Carleton."

Charleston, Feb. 24, 1865.

To the Editor of the Boston Journal:

THE FREEDMEN.

It is impossible for me to give a complete representation of the joy of the freedmen of this city over the arrival of the Yankees. On Monday morning last, when the steamer W. W. Coit, with Gen. Gillmore's flag at the fore and the Stars and Stripes at the stern, steamed up the harbor, with the band playing "Hail, Columbia," there was a sudden gathering of colored people upon the wharves. They were full of ecstasy. Springing upon the pier before the lines were thrown out, I met a gray-bearded old man, who touched his hat, bowed himself to the ground and said: "Good morning, massa."

"We are Yankees, uncle. Are you not afraid of us?" I said.

"God bless you! no, massa. I've prayed for you to come, and God has heard me," he said, grasping my hand. He threw his old battered hat upon the ground, looked upward, and poured out his gratitude from an overflowing heart.

"Are you a slave?"

"Yes, massa."

"Well, you are a slave no longer. You are as free as I am."

"Is it so, massa?" he asked, with indescribable earnestness; and again raising his eyes toward heaven, he gave thanks to God, with an emotion such as I never before witnessed.

ROSA'S MOTHER.

Two years ago, when I was at Hilton Head, my laundress was Rosa, a colored young woman, who escaped from Charleston in 1862, with her husband and four other persons, in a small boat. On that occasion Rosa dressed herself in men's clothes, and the whole party rowed past Sumter and made for the gunboats.

"If you go to Charleston I wish you would see if my mother is there," said Rosa, on Sunday last. "Gov. Aiken's head man knows where she lives." Accompanied by a correspondent of the New York Tribune, I went up King Street to Gov. Aiken's. We found his head [illegible] man in the yard—a courteous black, who, as soon as he learned that we were Yankees, and [illegible] had a message from Rosa to her mother, dropped all work and started with us, eager to do anything for a Yankee. A walk to John Street, an entrance through a yard to the rear of a dwelling-house, brought us to the mother, in a little dingy room, cluttered with pots, kettles, tables and chairs. The old woman was sitting on a stool before the fire, cooking her scanty breakfast of corn cake. She had a little rice meal in a bag, given her by a rebel officer. She must be past sixty years of age—a large, strong woman, with a wide, high forehead and intellectual features. She was clothed in a skirt of dingy negro cloth, a sack of old red carpeting, and poor, thin canvas shoes of her own make. Never had I such an introduction.

"Here comes de great Messiah, wid news of Rosa!" said my introducer, with an indescribable dramatic flourish. The mother sprang from the stool with a cry of joy. "From Rosa? From Rosa? O, thank the Lord." She took hold of my hands, looked at me with an intensity of feeling—an earnestness, joy, and yet with a shade of doubt as if it could not be true.

"From Rosa?"

"Yes, aunty."

I shall not attempt to give her language. She looked up into heaven—yes, into heaven! She saw not us, but God and Jesus. The tears rolled from her eyes. She recounted in prayer all the long years of slavery, the suffering, the unrequited toil, the heart achings, the prayers of the past, and now God had heard her. I have seen great dramatists upon the stage, and have been moved to tears by preachers and orators, but never have I heard such an outpouring of soul as by that poor slave woman. It was a conversation between herself and the Savior. She told him the story of her life, of all its sorrows, of his goodness, and kindness, and love, the tears rolling down her cheeks the while and falling in great drops upon the floor. She pressed my hands again and again, and when I told her I must go, she kneeled upon the floor and asked for God's best blessings and for Jesus' love to follow me. It was a prayer from her heart. We had carried to her the news that she was free and that her Rosa was still alive. It was the long-looked for jubilee morning to her, and we were God's angels. It was one of the most thrilling moments I ever experienced, or that I expect to experience. "Berwick" stood a sympathetic statue, unable to control his emotion. This woman had been a slave—she had been sold, she had been exposed to insult, she had no rights which a white man was bound to respect. So the Chief Justice of the United States said! So Rev. Dr. Thornwell, the great South Carolina theologian, said. Slavery is a divine institution, said the Southern Presbyteries. Remembering these things, I went out from that humble dwelling with my convictions deepened that this is God's war, that he is on the side of the meek and lowly, the poor, the despised and oppressed, and that this nation is passing through the fire to cleanse it from sin, and to meet with retribution for its crimes.

☞ There is a man in Chicago who is doing a large business in healing the diseased by simply touching them. The hall in which he manipulates is daily crowded by hundreds afflicted by all the ills that flesh is heir to. His patients profess to believe themselves cured.

☞ Of the 1,000,000 inhabitants in New York, 500,000 live in tenement houses, and 15,000 in cellars.

☞ Elihu Burritt has been appointed United States Consul at Birmingham.

Notices.

Notice.

As I believe time is very short, and it behooves us to be up and doing, and as I have found many females that feel God has called them to labor in the vineyard of the Lord, but because of the prejudice of the church in its present cold and backslidden state, they are kept back from laboring as they feel God has called them to do; and as I believe that we are living in the day when God will pour out his spirit upon his handmaids, I therefore give this notice to all the women of America, independent of denomination or color, who feel that they have been called of God to preach, exhort, pray, or to write, on the subject of his speedy coming, and a preparation for that coming, to open a correspondence with me in reference to holding a convention of women, which will be held in the Poultney church, at Poultney, Vt., commencing Wednesday, June 7th, and continuing one week. All brethren are invited to meet with us. This convention shall be for the promulgation of all Bible truths; but no hobbies.

Now, sisters, let this be a missionary movement. Remember Jesus is at the door, and wickedness is abounding, and the love of many is waxing cold. Let us be up and doing, so that he may say to us, "Well done, good and faithful servant, . . . Enter into the joy of thy Lord." Let all who feel interested in this great work, make it a subject of special prayer at the hour of twelve o'clock, every day, that God may bless the effort that we may put forth to his honor and glory.

All brethren who are favorable to this convention are invited to assist us by advice, by kind words of encouragement. Address,

Mrs. Anna E. Smith,
No. 128 East 27th St., New York City.

R. I. and E. Conn. Quar. Conference.

This conference will hold its next session with the church in Abington, Ct., commencing Wednesday, April 5th. Preachers and brethren from abroad are invited to attend. All churches connected with this conference are requested to report by letter at this meeting. Direct to the Clerk, at West Killingly, Conn., Box 87.

Wm. H. Chapman, Clerk.

Iowa Christian Conference.

The second quarterly meeting of the Iowa Christian Conference will be held at Boylair's Grove, Butler Co., Iowa, March 24th, and continue over Lord's day. Peter S. W. Deyo, Conference Clerk.

Maine Second Advent Tract Society.

S. K. Partridge, R. R. York, I. C. Wellcome, Board of Managers.

I. C. Wellcome, Secretary and Business Agent.

Isaac Wight, Treasurer.

It was voted that all orders for tracts and books for distribution by this Society be addressed to the Agent, I. C. Wellcome, Yarmouth, Me., who will supply them as fast as the means are furnished.

All our ministers will receive subscriptions for the Tract Fund, and they purpose to raise $200, or more, for free distribution in Maine this year.

I. C. Wellcome, Agent.

Agency for Maine.

Having been solicited to take the agency for Maine of Bro. Himes' "New Chart of Daniel and John," I would say to any and all in Maine who wish it, I am prepared to furnish it at the regular retail price, $5.00, and to preachers (or others who wish them to sell) at a liberal discount. Address orders to I. C. Wellcome, Yarmouth, Me.

Notice.

Elder Thomas Smith, Bangor, Me., has on hand for sale H. L. Hastings' "Signs of the Times," with an assortment of his various Tracts; also, the Tracts by Miles Grant, on "The Soul," "The Spirit, and "What is Man?" and other Advent tracts.

Appointments.

We would say to our preaching Brethren that it is necessary we should receive their appointments as early as Tuesday Morning, as our paper goes to press about noon; otherwise they will not be inserted till the week following.

Lowell Street Chapel, Boston, corner of Causeway and Lowell Streets. Meetings are held regularly three times every Sunday, and Tuesday and Friday evenings. Seats free.

Cordaville, Mass. ....Saturday evening, March 25th
Lord's day ....March 26th
Worcester, Mass. ....Sunday, April 2d
M. [illegible]ANT.

East Boston, Mass. ....Sunday, March 26th
C. E. Piper.

Lowell, Mass ....March 26th
Wm. C. Thurman.

South Ashburnham, Mass. .. Friday evening, March 31st
Danielsonville, Ct. ....Sunday, April 2d
Abington, Ct., at the conference ....April 5th to 8th
H. F. Carpenter.

Worcester, Mass. ....Sunday, March 26th
S. S. Brewer.

New Bedford ....March 26th
Plymouth ....April 2d
Carver ....April 9th
J. S. White.

Cheshire Street, Ct. ....Sunday, April 2d
South Windsor ....Sunday, April 9th
Pine Swamp, Ct. ....Sunday, April 16th
C. Goodrich.

Northfield, (at Bro. Gage's) ....Sunday, March 26th
H. K. Flagg.

Southington, Ct. ....Sunday, March 26th
[illegible] O. D. Woodruff.

[illegible] ....March 26th
Meredith Village, N. H. ....Sunday, [illegible] 31st
North Sutton, (at Bro. I. Andrew's) ....March [illegible]
Sutton Mill Village, (where Bro. Bean may appoint), Sunday, April 2d. A. Mussey.

Canton Street, Ct. ....Sunday, March 26th
S. Woodruff.

Valley Falls, R. I. ....Sunday, March 26th
West Mansfield, Mass ....Sunday, April 2d
J. N. Sherman.

West Abington, Mass ....March 26th
C. C. Ramsay.

Pleasant Valley ....Friday evening, March 24th and over the following Sabbath. A. Ross.

Southbridge, Mass ....April 2d
Westford, Ct., (at Bro. G. F. Chapman's) ....April 4th
Intend to be at the conference at Abington, Ct.
Holden, Mass ....April 16th
Geo. A. Streeter.

Warehouse Point, Ct. ....Sunday, March 26th
Westfield Farms ....Saturday evening, April 1st
Montgomery ....Sunday, April 2d
Walbridge ....Sunday, April 9th
P. S. Butler.

Bangor, Me. ....Sunday, April 2d
Commence a protracted meeting at West Levant, (White school-house), Friday, April 7th, at 2 o'clock P. M., and continue over Lord's day. Preaching brethren are invited to come. Will Bro. Morill be with me there, and others if convenient? Brethren around are invited to come and help us. Israel Damman.

Dover, N. H. ....March 26th
C. S. Emerson.

Lincolnville Center, (meeting-house) Sunday, March 26th
Thomas Smith.

Greenwood City ....March 25th and 26th
North Norway ....April 2d
Stoneham, (as Bro. J. Howe may appoint), April 8th and 9th. C. M. Currier.

Lovely Street, (School-house) ....Sunday, April 2d
Wm. Ripley.

West Stafford, Ct. ....Sunday, March 26th
I. B. Potter.

Exeter, N. H. ....Sunday, March 26th
Thos. M. Lutrum.

Vernon, Vt. ....Sunday, March 26th
L. Boutell.

Lynn, Mass ....March 26th
J. K. Bellows.

Lawrence, Mass ....March 26th
J. Couch.

Bristol, Ct. ....March 26th
At liberty in April. H. Munger.

Goshen ....Sundays, March 26th, and April 2nd
H. Pratt.

Bradford, N. H., (Pond meeting-house), Sunday, March 26th, and remain in the vicinity as long as the interest may demand. Joseph W. White.

Meredith Village ....March 26th
A. Mussey.

Holden, Mass ....Sundays, March 26th and April 2d
A. Simpson.

Meredith Village, N. H. ....April 9th
A. Ross.

Melvin Village ....March 26th
Tamworth, (Birch Interval) ....April 2d
Sandwich, (where Bro. A. B. Hoyt may appoint) April 9th
T. W. Piper.

Wallingford Farms, Conn. ....March 26th
B. Hitchcock.

Business.

Gold Falling.

Gold has fallen rapidly in the last few weeks. It was quoted yesterday at $1.67. Some think it will not decline lower than this, yet not a few intelligent dealers predict, as the result of military operations yet to be heard from, that it will take another run downwards, from which it will not again recover.

Our friends in the British Provinces who are still in arrears on Crisis and book accounts, will do well to take note of this, and act accordingly. For every dollar in Canadian bills, or in gold or silver, at the present rates of premium, we give credit for its full value here, which is now from $1.60 to $1.67; but how much below that it may be in a few weeks from this time it is hard to tell.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

Bro. D. Palmer—In answer to your inquiry about the tract, we would say the matter would probably make about eight pages. If it was not stereotyped, 500 copies would cost somewhere in the neighborhood of $10.

N. F. Nason—Six for $19.20.

C. B. Turner—You did not give his post office in your order, and as your letter was dated "Syracuse," we supposed that was it, and sent it there. We have changed it to South Butler.

CASH RECEIPTS FOR THE CRISIS.

To find how your account stands.

The present No. of the Crisis is 494. The No. which follows your name is the No. to which you have paid.

If the No. paid to, is greater than the present No., the difference shows how many weeks you have paid for in advance. If the No. paid to, is less than the present No., the difference shows for how many weeks you owe. For every week of indebtedness before No. 468, charge (at the old rate) four cents; and, for every week of indebtedness since No. 468, charge (at the new rate) five cents,—and you have the amount due the office. (This, however, will give a trifle more than the amount due. To make it exact, deduct four cents for every dollar due before No. 468, and five cents for every dollar due since No. 468.)

$1.00 each.—B. Pilcher 486, J. Clewley 507, C. Barns 510, B Bemis 504, J Nason 505, L A Vaunce 539, H S Moore 505, W F Higgins 477, M Stockwell 392, D Kellam 514, Mrs. C. Smith 510, W. Mitchell 473, Mrs. J. Perkins 499, S Corwin 479, A Stout 506, Jas. Smith 3d 499, D Rowell 499, T R V Bradley 440, D H Squier 498, R P Bean 447, W A Silvernail 501, M A St. Clair 520, J S Sherman 576, M R Miles 522, C Mead 514, H P Van Kirk 564, J Elkins 532, E Witherell 484, S W Foss 365.

$1.25 each.—E. C. Swain 520, G. R. Griffeth 515, R. Knight 517, Mrs. S Murray 517, S. Spinney 517, T. S. Case 517, L. M. Smith 516, L C Johnson 520, P Blanchard 501, N. Clark 513, C. H. Nowell 494, I. Quimbly 494, S Tucker 520, M C Tucker 518, A T Wiggins 518, E A Titcomb 518, L G Smith 518, C Carter 518, A Eaton 520, S N Lewis 519, M E Aldrich 519, C H Osgood 519, N B Davis 519, B P Straight 579, L Bullard 520, E D Hanson 518, Z Snow 519, S F Whitcom 519, N Lazelle 494, A Owen 495, R I Radcliff 519, E Tompkins 494, L Mead 500, F S Lathrop 491, W S Chandler 519, J. W. Marden 495, C Watler 519, A Richardson 519, A S Lull 520, I Cobb 520, T W Davis 520, W Lester 513, S Bassford 516, C M Chapman 518, G D Stewart 520, Mrs. B Deming 520, Mrs. A S Whitney 520, S T Fones 520, M Hyde 520, L Tuttle 519, J H Young 519, S A Paine 516, A McClure 518, S W Bartlett 520, M. Kenyon 520, B. Whitmore 520, S Mayberry 520, Mrs. E Collins 520, E F Rowand 512, R Williams 520, J M Churchill 520, H Packard 520, Mrs. E Garland 520, P B Hoyt 519, C Hyde 520, J McDowell 519, J E Marsh 514, S. Payson 519, J. Curtiss 520.

$1.50 each.—R Allen 519, J Odell 524, H Brock 525.

$2.00 each.—N. Hoyt 507, J. Conklin 472, W. Ward 522, B B Hill 519, E A Marsh 523, W G Ruggles 501, A Boothby 447, Mrs. S M Goddard 503, M C Stetson 533, T D Johnson 494, D A Martin 494, F J Stevens 536, Dr. A. Decker ($1.86 on old acct, 14c. on new) 452, S. Caverly 517, G Albright 532, D Churchill 536, J E Roberts 512, A Martin 533, J Coolbroth 535, L G (A. M. ?) Humphreyville 551, H Fellows 513, I P Knapp 535.

$2.50 each.—L T Allen 583, N P Wiggin 543, N. T. Thompson 520, G S Harwood 543, W B Lang 546, S P Grant 539, J Doe 503, Mary Jones 547, H Crippen 547, E P Philbeck 565, M L Willard 522, W T Fulton 549, G. G. Godfrey 549, H. Cushman 544, O. P. Stowell 544, J. Salisbury 544, A. Webster 544, E. R. Maxwell 544, C. Howard 519, K A Hunt 545, E. Whitford 545, E Hughast 545, A H Cutler 499, W A Viets 545, J. Richardson 520, M Smith 557, J. E. Phelps 538, S. A. Bailey 520, E B Young 535, E P Robinson 548, S French 542, M. C. Allen 598, W. Wright 562, Mrs. C. C. Bragg 522, N Turner 545, A McKenzie 534, T Sproul 534, W Holliday 545, L Ross 521, J B Richardson 545, S Munroe 546, W Woodard 540, W Gilman 511, T H Knowles 520, J Berley 546, A Hunt 536, L. Lyon 550, A. Lucas 536, N Warner 530, C M Mathews 520, Mrs. S L Marks 535, A Smith 545, D Palmer 496, S. A. Pray 520, C L Dale 545, J C Tibbetts 535, M E Bather 517, W Jackson 556, Z Fairfield 539, N W Chapman 522, E R Wormwood 592, G B Keach 539, Mrs. B Weston 547, G. W. Hunt 536, S M Wadlin 546, D Smith 542, A Smith 540, Mrs. G Toles 547, N Swain 544, B. M. Kent 520, J. D. Smith 545, N. Sleeper 499, Mrs. M. J. Barton 545, D. Veazie 2nd 546, A Hennie 541, Mrs. H Sawyer 545, C M Sweet 522.

$3.00 each.—H. Stratton 552, H. H. Corbin 530, L. Wheeler 535, J Nichols 550, W E Desper 556, Mrs. S E Clough 546, T Apthorp 547, D Taylor 557, J Chapman 538, J McCammon 531, J French 541, A Philbrook 562, A F Quimby 490.

$5.00 each.—Mrs. A L Gould 504, J M Brown 500, J Fitzgerald 543, C Robinson 607.

Various Sums.—Mrs. S Woodruff 20c, 477; Mrs. R E Cole 22c, 497; A J Taylor 50c, 501; J Stephens $1.17, 494; B W Tibbetts 36c, 516; Mrs. S Dow 85c, 489; M Crabtree $1.50, 515; D S Randall 65c, 495; G F Clough $1.50, 520; H. Sisson $1.04, old acct.; P. Boardman $1.04, old acct.; G Wrightman 42c, 493; L Drew $4.26, 439; H. Drew $2.26, 439; H. Saplin $2.26, 439; J. D. Hoyt $2.26, 439; T. McNeal $2.26, 439; H. Lewis 45c, C. Purdy $1.30, 490; Mrs. J. Ford 75c, 465; Mrs. L. McLanathan $1.58, 494; B H Couch 53c, 493; S Copeland 63c, 490; Mrs. A Amour $3.88, 550; J D Waldron $1.50, 524; J. Demarest $3.25, 549; W. H. Hacking $1.80, 421; G. Lyon 62c, 494; J. T. Peaslee $2.75, 523; J Crowley $1.31, 507; S. Gilland $1.85, 486; B Cheney 63c, 507; Mrs. H Davis 50c, 421; S. F. Mathews $3.95, 546; S Hawkins 15c, 497; J T Fry $2.90, 519; W York $5.00, 531; H H Bailey $3.80, 520; A S Sheldon $1.60, 494; E. S. Morgan 75c, 496; S. R. Gladding $1.68, 494; A. S. Sheldon 45c, 489; P. S. Peckham $1.75, 520; A. Macomber $1.75, 520; C Copwell $3.52, 494; W Angell $4.77, 520; L V Kenicum $4.39, 520; J Hyde 82c, 494; J. Hyde (8 copies) $8.96, 520; E. Smith $1.16, 494; C. E Burke 78c, 533; Mrs. R. P. Nutting $1.40, 4.3; N. S. Tuck $2.72, 520; J B Fitch $3.26, 546; W. P. Richardson $2.36, 520; M. A. Baker $1.65, 527; R. Aird 62c; J McGregor $3.50, 566; T. J. Hill $1.70, 537; J Hopkins 30c, 494.

FOR BOOKS AND TRACTS.

Mrs. R B Dockum $1.00, J Wheeler $3.17, S Boynton $5.00, J Stephens 8c, D M Kinter $3.00, L M Stratton 75c, W D Cook 22c, L Jackman $1.35, A C Taylor 63c, J S Carter $2.00, L M Smith 75c, A Storer $2.00, G B Smith 20c, W C Gage $1.10, J Peirce 75c, T Smith 25c, A Hawks $4.20, H H Fuller 50c, E E Ingalls 83c, A M Bancroft $1.00, C H Bartlett $5.10, T. M. Redherd 55c, S H Dearborn $2.00, H Gibbs $3.00, W H Chapman $5.00, P Tandy 20c, E D Hanson $2.03, Z Snow 75c, J Sawyer 50c, A Cook 30c, D McMillan $2.00, J. P. Prescott 20c, W Mitchell $1.00, C N Harvey $5.17, M. [illegible]erlin $2.00, J Demarest $1.75, E H Shaw 40c, L. W Colling [illegible] Robinson $3.40, A Lewis $1.55, R H Ross 50c, Mrs. [illegible] Cassell $1.00, T. Apthorpe $3.11, Hines $1.00, A. H. [illegible] B Hitchcock $2.30, Mrs. J Bartlett 30c, E S Hall $1.00, [illegible] Thomas $1.00, J M Taylor $1.20, M A Weaver 60c, J W [illegible] B. N S Tuck 28c, C L Dale 50c, J. E. Marsh $1.70, [illegible] Fitch $4.34, A Dalzill $1.82, S W Worthington $3.00, J French $2.00, S J Buswell $1.25, G W Gillespie $1.00, I Rowley $1.85, D Q Kent $2.00, S Hawkins 85c, W G Wright 25c, C. E. Burke 34c, J. A. Cleaveland $1.50, J S Morgan $1.70, L L Lord 88c, F. S. Pond 45c, J. W. Towne 35c.

BOOKS AND TRACTS SENT.

By Mail—G W Gillespie, M J Bartlett, I Rowley, S J Buswell, J French, M A Weaver, C E Burke, I B Potter, J B Fitch, A Dalzill, J S Morgan, J S Moulton, S Hawkins, Edmund S Hale, J W Thomas, B Hitchcock, D Q Kent, J M Taylor, J A Cleaveland, C L Dale, L L Lord, J E Marsh, F L Pond, I Kulp.

LETTERS RECEIVED.

L B Weaver, G A Streeter, J Elkins, G W Gillespie, J Taylor, M A Weaver, D T Taylor, I B Luther, F H Chamberlain, J J Perkins, G W Hurd, N D Babcock, J E Barnes, H P Kirk, W H Silvernail, J W Taylor, C H Williams, W H Hacking, H L Bradley, H Bailey.

POST OFFICE ADDRESS.

H. K. Flagg—For the next two weeks, Holliston, Mass.
C. Goodrich—West Winsted, Ct.

ENGLISH BIBLES FOR SALE.

We can fill no more orders for English Bibles except for the following: Diamond, fine print, marginal references, at the following prices:

Morocco, $1.75; postage 12 cents. Calf, one copy, $1.40; postage 12 cts. Roan, gilt, $1.10; postage 12c.

Address Miles Grant, Boston, Mass.

BOOKS FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

The Emphatic Diaglott: containing the Original Greek Text of the New Testament, according to the Recension of Dr. J. J. Griesbach, with an Interlinear Word-for-Word English Translation, based on the renderings of eminent critics, and on the various readings of the Vatican Manuscript (No. 1209) in the Vatican Library; with Notes, References, and an Appendix. 880pp. 12mo. Price, plain leather, $4.00; extra, gilt, $4.50; Turkey morocco, $5.00. Postage, 16 cents.

The New Testament of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ; with brief Notes and Instructions; containing the references and marginal readings of the Polyglott Bible; also the Psalms, Maps, and Harmony of the Gospels. Published by the American Tract Society. For family use. $1.75; by mail, $1.90.

Dictionary of the Holy Bible, for general use in the study of the Scriptures, with Engravings, Maps, and Tables. Published by the Amer. Tract Society. This is one of the best. Cloth, $1.50; by mail, $1.75. Sheep, $2.00; by mail, $2.25.

Canon of the Holy Scriptures examined in the light of History. By Prof. L. Gaussen, of Geneva, Switzerland. Translated from the French, and abridged by Edward N. Kirk, D. D. $1.75. By mail, $2.00.

Cruden's Complete Concordance to the Holy Scriptures. New and condensed edition. Edited by John Eadie, D. D., LL.D. Cloth, $1.50; by mail, $1.80. Sheep, 2.00; by mail, $2.30.

Thurman's Bible Chronology, or, The Sealed Book of Daniel Opened. A work for every Bible Student. $1.50; by mail, $1.75.

Why the Shoe Pinches. A useful little work, with cuts, showing the conditions of a healthy foot, the causes of deformities, and how to avoid those troublesome diseases and malformations, such as chilblains, corns, bunions, flat-foot, bent-up toes, grown-in nails, etc. Price, 30 cents.

BOOKS AND TRACTS.

[illegible]

All orders for any of the following works must be addressed to

MILES GRANT,
Boston, Mass.

MILES GRANT'S WORKS.

Resurrection of the Wicked. Discussion with Jno. T. Curry. [illegible]

Eternal Suffering. Discussion with Dr. J. Litch. [illegible]

State of the Dead. Discussion with W. W. Clayton, "On the State of the Dead and the Punishment of the Wicked." [illegible]

Miles Grant's Tracts. 32 pages each. Price 3 cents single, [illegible]

What is Man? A Bible view of his creation; The meaning of Soul, Spirit, Death, and Hell.

The Soul, What is it? Or a careful examination of all the uses of the words nephesh and psuche as employed in the old and new Testaments.

The Spirit, What is it? Or a careful examination of all the uses of the words ruach and pneuma as found in the old and new Testaments.

The Rich Man and Lazarus. Thief on the Cross; Souls under the Altar; [illegible]

EXPOSITORY WORKS ON PROPHECY. BY S. S. BREWER.

1. The Days in which we Live. This is a concise [illegible]

2. An Exposition of the Seven Seals. History [illegible]

3. The Slaying of the Witnesses. Showing that [illegible]

4. A Treatise on Revelation XIII, in Two Parts. [illegible]

5. The Kingdom of God and Signs of the Times. [illegible]

6. The Last Day Tokens. No. 1. This is an argument [illegible]

7. Last Day Tokens. No. 2 is an answer to the question, [illegible]

8. Last Day Tokens. No. 3. This is a phenomenal compend, [illegible]

9. The Great Image soon to be dashed to pieces. [illegible]

10. The History of an Immortal Soul. Mythology and Theology vs. Bible; [illegible]

11. Rich Man and Lazarus. New edition, [illegible]

MISCELLANEOUS.

Cruden's Condensed Concordance, by which any passage of Scripture, of which only a single word is remembered, [illegible]

The Life of Trust. An account of the Lord's Dealings with George Müller, [illegible]

A Treatise on the 24th and 25th chapters of Matthew, [illegible] By I. C. Wellcome. [illegible]

Should Christians Fight? A pamphlet on War, [illegible] By I. C. Wellcome. [illegible]

The Bible from Heaven, or a dissertation on the Evidences of Christianity. [illegible]

America in Prophecy. Exposition of the 18th chap. of Isaiah, [illegible]

The Celestial Railroad, or Modern Pilgrim's Progress. [illegible]

The Three Kingdoms, or the Kingdom of God the Father, [illegible] By T. M. Preble. [illegible]

The Ten Virgins, or Wisdom and Folly contrasted. By T. M. Preble. [illegible]

The Two Adams. By T. M. Preble. An interesting tract. [illegible]

Messiah's Mission, or an exposition of the Gospel Covenant, [illegible]

The Excellency of the Lord's Anointed, or Christ the promised Messiah. By Mrs. Mary A. Seymour. [illegible]

Everybody's Book. The Bible View of the personality of God. The Devil; his origin, personality, power, and doom. [illegible]

Cook Book. By Dr. F. W. Hurd. This book gives instructions for preparing all the articles of food used at Dr. Jackson's celebrated health institution, denominated "Our Home," Dansville, N. Y. [illegible]

Premature Decay of American Youth. By Dr. A. Stone. This is a valuable work, and should be read by all the young. [illegible]

The Saint's Harvest, or an exposition of Matt. 24: 13, in connection with Dan. 12: 11-13. By H. K. Flagg. [illegible]

The Old and New Covenant. Superiority of the New. By A. W. Sibley. [illegible]

The Christian Lyre. A collection of Hymns and Tunes for Worship. [illegible]

A Disquisition on the Prophecies. By F. H. Berick. [illegible]

An Appeal to Pious Trinitarians. By H. Grew. [illegible]

THE BIBLE STUDENT'S LIBRARY.

A Series of Volumes Edited and Published by

H. L. HASTINGS,
167 Hanover St., Boston, Mass.

[illegible] uniformly bound in Each vol. contains over 400 pages, [illegible] Cloth and in Paper Covers. Sold separately or in sets. Single volumes sent post-paid on receipt of the price.

IMPORTANT BOOKS WORTH BUYING, LENDING, READING, AND PRESERVING.

I. THE SIGNS OF THE TIMES; or, a Glance at Christendom as it is. By H. L. Hastings. Cloth $1, paper 50 cts.

A sad exhibition of the predicted perils of the Last Days; the selfishness, hypocrisy, and crimes of Christendom, as shown in Statistical Accounts of the slave trade, cotton trade, opium trade, Coolie trade, and the licentiousness, illegitimacy, child murder, bloodshed, and military preparations of this age.

II. THE VOICE OF THE CHURCH on the Coming and Kingdom of the Redeemer. By D. T. Taylor. Edited and prefaced by H. L. Hastings. Cloth $1, paper 50 cts.

A history of the doctrine of the reign of Christ on earth, containing the views and testimonies of nearly four hundred of the greatest preachers, reformers, and writers the church has ever known, concerning the establishment of the future glorious Kingdom of God, under the whole heaven.

III. THESSALONICA, OR THE MODEL CHURCH; A Sketch of Primitive Christianity; and REASONS FOR MY HOPE, or the Tokens of Speedy Redemption, by H. L. Hastings; and SPIRITUALISM A SATANIC DELUSION, by Wm. Ramsey, D.D. Cloth $1, paper 50 cts.

"Thessalonica," portraying the faith and practice of the early Christians; "Reasons," exhibiting the hope of the Church, the fulfilment of prophecy, the spread of the gospel through Missionaries, Bible and Tract Societies, etc.; and "Spiritualism," unveiling and exposing the monster delusion of Satan in these latter times.

IV. THE GREAT CONTROVERSY BETWEEN GOD AND MAN; its Origin, Progress, and End; with numerous TRACTS on Prophetical and Practical subjects. By H. L. Hastings. Cloth $1, paper 50 cts.

The "Controversy" sketches the History of the World since man's revolt from God, narrates the judgments already inflicted upon the nations of the earth for their iniquities, and those more terrible and exterminating calamities yet to overwhelm the nations, and prepare the way for the establishment of a divine government upon the earth. The TRACTS are, "The Church not in Darkness," "The Three Worlds," "The Last Days," "Plain Truths," "Ancient Landmarks," "Important Questions," "Olive Leaves," etc. etc.; a valuable and spirited collection.

V. FUTURE PUNISHMENT, as Taught in the Scriptures; with the various Doctrines of Men upon this subject. By H. L. Hastings. Cloth $1, paper 50 cts.

Containing "Pauline Theology," or Future Punishment as Taught by Paul; "The Old Paths," or the Doctrines of the Apostolical Fathers; "Retribution," or the Resurrection and Punishment of the Wicked; "Will all Men be Saved?" an Antidote for Universalism; "The Destiny of the Wicked," a Scripture Tract; "The Decrees of Popes and Councils on the Immortality of the Soul;" with The Views of Justin Martyr, Luther, Jeremy Taylor, Milton, and Bishop Law on the state of the dead, etc.

CASH PRICES.

By Mail: 1 Book, cloth $1.00, paper 50 cts.; 5 Books, cloth $5.00, paper 2.50. By Express: 5 Books, cloth $4.00, paper 2.00; 20 Books, cloth $15.00, paper $7.50, 50 Books, cloth $33, paper $16; 100 Books, cloth $62, paper $31.

☞ 3 Books, paper, sent to any three ministers for $1.

SEPARATE PAMPHLETS NOT BOUND IN CLOTH.

1 THESSALONICA; or, the Model Church, 25 cts. 2. THE GREAT CONTROVERSY, 25 cts. 3. REASONS FOR MY HOPE, 20 cts. 4. SPIRITUALISM, 20 cts. 5. Looking Forward, 10 cts. 6. SOCIAL HYMNS, original and selected. By H. L. H., 15 cts. single; $1 for 8 copies; $10 for 100 copies by mail,—post-paid to any address.

7. RETRIBUTION; or the Doom of the Ungodly, 20 cts. PAULINE THEOLOGY, 10 c. 8. THE OLD PATHS, 10 c.

TRACTS PRACTICAL and SCRIPTURAL in great variety. 1300 pages for $1; by mail, 1300 pages for $1. Tracts and pamphlets free to the poor and to ministers. Discount to those who buy to sell again.

Direct all orders, with the money, and plain directions for sending the books, to

H. L. HASTINGS,
June, 1864. 167 Hanover St., Boston.

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

Correspondence.

From Bro. B. Spaulding.

Bro. Grant:—I am once more at home, having spent eight weeks this winter in Connecticut. My last visits were at Cheshire Street and Wallingford, where I was well received and hospitably used, and helped on my way after a godly sort. Brethren in Connecticut generally understand that the ox that treadeth out the corn should not be muzzled. In this particular duty they have done well; not that I desire a gift, but I do desire fruit that may abound to their account. The good Lord bless them, and reward them an hundred-fold in this life, and in the world to come with eternal life.

I spent one Sunday in Wilbraham, where the Lord has been doing wonders in the conversion of sinners, under the labors of Brn. Higgins and Butler. The day was so very rainy, we did not have any meeting until evening, which was a blessed season. Last Sunday I visited Westford. Found them in much better state than they had been. Some stirred up, and all seemed agreed to lay aside divisions, contentions, and strife about words, or ideas, and to think and let others think, and speak and let others speak, act and let others act. This is as it should be. They have seen the evil of making a test of any particular truth, which one understands and another does not. I have seen much of this evil among the Advent brethren, and I have long ago determined not to press or make a test of any particular truth. We should all do well to open our minds to conviction, be willing to hear on any subject which may be presented, claiming to have Bible for proof, and if fairly convicted receive, but if not, why then let it stand on its own merits, not rise in opposition, and spend our breath in trying to put down what some other good brother thinks is the truth. We are all fallible, and if we would keep this in mind, we should say, I may be wrong, yet I am honest, or my brother may be honest, when he is wrong; perhaps neither are exactly right, the truth may lie between. O then let us put on forbearance, love and kindness, and be courteous to each other, though we differ in opinion.

We should not come to the conclusion that we have the whole truth, but that more truth is still before us, and will be daily coming forth. There are many things in the prophecies, which remain to be understood; they are not of private interpretation, and therefore may and will be understood. They are profitable, too; but in order to be so must be understood. The good Lord help us to search and see what God hath spoken by the mouth and pen of his holy prophets, for not one jot or tittle will fail, but all will be fulfilled.

Yours, B. Spaulding.

Chelmsford, Mass.

From Bro. G. W. Gillespie.

Bro. Grant:—I am still loving the Lord, and can testify that it is good to serve him. In Christ my Savior I feel safe amid the perils of these last days. My hope is like an anchor, reaching to that within the vale, the kingdom of God. My faith is often tried, but I cling the more closely to the Rock as the billows roll high. But tried we must be. The Lord will have a peculiar people, zealous of good works. Grace will "purify," the precious blood of Christ will make "white," and in the the crucible we must be "tried," that we may come forth more precious than "fine gold." Then, again, the Lord wants good tools to work with, rightly tempered, sharp and keen; so into the fire we're put till hot, then on the anvil and hammered into shape; then comes the rasp and file, and finally the polishing wheel, which finishes us, and—then to work.

Good tools work well, so do good christians; and the Lord will have and has them. O that all professors of religion would only yield themselves as "instruments" in the hands of God, that he might use them to his glory, and thus gain an abundant entrance into his everlasting kingdom.

Dear Bro., let us not be weary in well doing, but work the harder as '68 draws near. May the Lord direct you to fill the Crisis with the choicest of "meat in due season." O for one more "grand movement" upon the enemy's works, and then VICTORY! Praise the Lord, O my soul, we're almost home. Yours, waiting for the kingdom, G. W. Gillespie.

From Bro. J. G. Hook.

Bro. Grant:—I am still trying to obey the good Lord of life and glory. I think he is mindful of me, and does bless me, as I journey on to the land of rest.

I am doing what I can to publish Christ's gospel. It is indeed good news and glad tidings, to know that Jesus, who died for us all, and rose from the dead for our justification, who ascended to the Father, and is now our great High Priest, will soon come again to bless the waiting ones with everlasting life and a home in his kingdom. Some are hearing this gospel and rejoicing in hope of the glory of God. I am glad to see some in the various places I visit from week to week inquiring the way to the heavenly land.

I feel more and more the responsibility that rests on us as a people, who have been blessed of God with the precious truth contained in his word, pertaining to the end of this age, and the establishment of God's everlasting kingdom. We must let the light shine, or we shall be condemned in that day when Jesus appears in his glory.

I send the names of three more subscribers for our excellent paper, the World's Crisis. Hope to send more soon. Your Bro. in the vineyard, John G. Hook.

Concord, N. H.

From a Methodist Sister.

Writing from Rochester, N. H., she shows her interest in the Crisis by subscribing herself and sending us three new subscribers, with $6,63, and says: "You may be surprised that I, a stranger, and a Methodist of thirty-eight years' standing, should want your paper, and be interested in your reading matter, as I have been ever since Alton Bay campmeeting. But your tracts have helped me much. I cannot yet see all clear as I wish; but I thank God I can say, like one of old, I see men as trees walking. I expect to see more and more. I feel you are God's people." B. W. S.

Mrs. T. M. Goddard writes from Three Oaks, Mich.: "The Crisis is all the preaching we have, and I prize it very much. I sometimes feel lonely and almost discouraged; but when my paper comes, and I read the many good letters from my brothers and sisters, it gives me new courage, and oh! how I long to meet with them.

Mrs. J. D. E. writes from Caledonia, Co., Vt.: "The truths you advocate were entirely new to me six months ago. I can say in my heart I love them, and I desire others should know and love them, too. Please send the Crisis, for the enclosed money, to Rev. ——, also a package of tracts. I would be glad also for a few for free distribution. The field is large, and work to be done.

J. W. Taylor, Chatham Valley, Pa., writes: "I must confess the Crisis is the best paper I receive, and the only one I will recommend. I admire the manner in which it is conducted. I mean what I say."

Obituaries.

Elizabeth Chapman.

Died in Reading, Mich., Feb. 28, 1865, Sr. Elisabeth, wife of H. B. Chapman, aged forty-five years, three months and twenty-four days.

Some eleven years since she, together with her husband, embraced the faith and hope of the gospel of the soon coming kingdom, and has maintained her integrity to the last. She was a faithful companion, and a devoted mother. Scarcely any could have been more so. She sleeps in hope of a world of blessedness beyond the sorrows of this life, and her husband and ten children mourn not as those who have no hope; for all believe she died a christian. Her funeral services were attended by a large concourse of relatives and sympathizing friends, in the Methodist church, at Reading. The writer endeavored to render consolation to the weeping family, from Rev. 14: 3. A. N. Seymour.

"Voice of the West" please copy.

E. I. Cole.

Died in Hartford, Me., Feb. 20, 1865, of dropsy on the brain, Estella Isabell, only child of Virgil and Lizzie S. Cole, aged one year and eight months.

> "She was the music of our home,
> A day that knew no night,
> The fragrance of our garden bower,
> A thing all smiles and light.
>
> Each flutter of the pulse we marked,
> Each quiver of the eye;
> To the dear lips our ear we laid,
> To catch the last low sigh.
>
> At last the fluttering pulse stood still,
> The death-frost through her clay
> Stole slowly; and as morn came up,
> Our sweet flower passed away.
>
> But we shall clasp that hand again,
> And kiss those lips once more;
> Estella, we will meet you there,
> Safe on the other shore."

Frances D. Haggett.

Harley P. Fletcher.

Died in Stafford, Feb. 17th, 1865, Harley P. Fletcher, aged four years and sixteen days.

Little Harley was spared just long enough to become interesting, as well as lovely, to his fond and doting parents. The blasting winds of disease and the wintry frost of death nipped the bud,—it faded and died; but the blessed hope of the coming spring of immortality and life-giving power of the Sun of righteousness, which is to arise with healing in his wings, and speak the dead to life, cheers the hearts of the bereaved and mourning parents.

Word of comfort were spoken on the funeral occasion from 1 Thess. 4, by the writer. A. M. Higgins.

M. Harmon.

Died in Standish, Me., March 1, 1865, Mehetable, wife of Wm. Harmon, aged seventy-nine years, four months and fourteen days.

She loved the truths of the Bible, and was cheered on her journey by the blessed hope of eternal life at Jesus' coming. She leaves a large circle of friends to mourn her loss. E. M. Haggett.

George Garland.

Died in the Baptist Church Hospital, at Fredericksburg, Va., May 23d, 1864, George, son of James and Elizabeth Garland, aged twenty years and eleven months.

He was wounded May 8th, by a rifle ball, passing into his right lung. George was a kind and affectionate child, possessed with a cheerful disposition. Elisabeth Garland.

Mary E. Gavit.

Died, in South Kingston, R. I., Feb. 25th, 1865, of consumption, Sr. Mary E. Gavit.

She was a great sufferer during her sickness, but died in hope of a better resurrection. Sermon by the writer, from words chosen by her, Amos 4: 12, —"Prepare to meet thy God." P. C. Rodman.

Phebe Durfee.

Died, in Mohegan, R. I., Oct. 30th, 1864, Phebe P., daughter of Eld. A. and Phebe A. Durfee, aged four years and eight months.

Edgar L. Tenant.

Died, at Natick, R. I., March 4th, 1865, Edgar L., only son of Daniel R. and Sybel E. Tenant, aged six years and two months.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

Liverpool March 5th, Queenstown 6th.

Parliamentary proceedings were unimportant.

Queen Victoria had temporarily emerged from her seclusion by receiving the foreign Ambassadors, members of the Legations, etc., at Buckingham palace. Mr. Adams and secretaries were present, but Mrs. Adams was unavoidably absent. The Queen will hold another court soon, limited to select circles of the English nobility.

The great exhibition in Dublin has been inaugurated by the Prince of Wales with the same ceremonial as by the Queen in person.

The opening of the telegraph to India has been favorably announced, causing considerable sensation. A private message from Calcutta had reached Constantinople in six hours and another message from the same place had reached London in eight and a half hours.

A rebellion is going on in Abyssinia which threatens the throne and life of King Theodore, who has imprisoned his own son on suspicion of participation in it. At latest dates a great and decisive battle was expected.

TURKEY.

The difficulty between Turkey and Persia is growing more serious. A diplomatic rupture is expected.

Terrible Snow Storms in Scotland.—Scotland is snowed under; such a winter has not been seen since 1837. A correspondent writing from Banffshire, says:

"We are now in the seventh week of this protracted and increasing snow storm, without the faintest indication of a favorable change. On the contrary, new falls of snow are almost of daily occurrence, along with keen and severe frost. Trade of all kinds is suffering a depression more or less, and the prosecution of out-door works is entirely out of the question. Deer and all sorts of game continue to suffer, after all the extreme care and watchfulness by which they are tended by the gamekeepers of the respective forests. The deer, especially after receiving even more care and attention than a provident farmer bestows upon his stock, are daily getting more and more reduced and emaciated, although large quantities of hay and other provender are laid out at every available place in the forest for their maintenance. A powerful stag, the other day, took possession of a bundle of hay, upon which he lived for some three or four days, none of his weaker and starving brethren daring to approach him while the food lasted. Hares, rabbits, crows, and other vermin are everywhere actually starving, and the result of a few weeks' continuance of this dreadful weather would be awful to contemplate."

Canadian Affairs.—Quebec, March 15. Parliament last night voted $1,000,000 for the permanent defense of Canada; also $350,000 for expenses of volunteers on the frontier.

The finance minister, in a speech, said that the Canadian government were of the opinion that so long as the American war lasted we must have a force on the frontier in the shape of police and militia to support the civil authorities and fulfill the obligations we are under to act the part of good neighbors toward the United States.

☞ The population of Paris is 1,667,841 souls, exclusive of a garrison of 28,300 men.

DOMESTIC.

New York, March 15. The Herald's Newbern correspondence of the 11th says the rebels suffered dreadfully on Friday in their repeated charges upon our works. They came up a dozen times with a bravery worthy of a better cause, but our men had the advantage and repulsed them with terrible slaughter. That night and the next morning Gen. Couch's forces came up and the rebels began to fall back across the river into Kingston. Our forces followed them up vigorously and will cross the river as soon as the bridge can be repaired.

A letter from Gen. Schofield's headquarters, Newbern, March 11th, says Hoke this morning attempted to break our lines, but was repulsed with terrible slaughter. Our loss is not more than 300 or 400 killed, wounded and prisoners. The rebel loss in killed, wounded and prisoners must be at least eight times greater. We have the field with all the rebel killed and wounded.

Sanitary supplies are abundant at the front.

The special Times' dispatch from Washington states that Senator Sumner has expressed it as his firm opinion, based on the best of reasons, that we may look for peace in six months.

The editor of the Waynesboro' (S. C.) News gives an account of the occupation of that place by Sherman, after leaving Columbia. He says the main army was preceded by a body of bummers, who rode into the city helter-skelter and proceeded to ransack public and private property.

On the arrival of the main body, however, all this was stopped, no disorderly proceedings being permitted. The business portion of the place was, however burned.

New York, March 18. The following dispatch has been received at the War Department at Washington, and a copy forwarded to Gen. Dix:

Fayetteville, March 10. To-day we have added Fayetteville to the list of cities that have fallen into our hands. Hardee, said to have 20,000 men, withdrew across the river yesterday and last night, and is reported to be en route to Raleigh.

The rebels skirmished in the town and fired artillery upon the houses occupied by women and children. They burned a bridge at this place and removed all the public stores by railroad that they could. Gen. Sherman is here and well. Many of the men are wanting shoes and clothing, but the army was never in better condition.

(Signed) O. O. Howard, Maj. General.

New York, March 18. The Times' Army of the Potomac dispatch of the 15th says during the greater part of the 14th active operations on the most extensive scale could be discovered within the limits of the rebel army. Camps were struck, and large and heavy masses of troops were seen in line of battle. Besides, three columns of men were seen moving to and fro within their interior lines. Orders were at once issued to our troops to be in instant readiness to move.

It is believed that the enemy have mined our works in the centre of the line, near the Appomattox. Our engineers are investigating the matter.

During the best portion of the night of the 14th trains and wagons were in active motion, while sutlers were ordered to the rear.

There is every indication of a speedy movement, and appearances look like a fight.

The correspondents of both the Herald and the Tribune corroborate these reports of activity within the lines of both armies, and the indications of an early collision. So far as our army is concerned, its movement depends only upon the weather.

Important Order by Gen. Grant—Revocation of Trade Permits.—The Washington dispatch of the Advertiser contains the following highly important order by General Grant, which sweeps away the whole brood of cotton, tobacco, tar and turpentine speculators, setting aside alike the permits of special agents, Cabinet ministers, and even of the President himself. Official records show that it will affect jobs covering over half a million bales of cotton, sixteen thousand barrels of turpentine, five thousand barrels of tar, two thousand barrels of resin, and one hundred thousand boxes of tobacco:

"Headquarters Armies of the U. States, City Point, Va., March 10, 1865. [Special Orders No. 48.]

The operations on all Treasury trade permits, and all other trade permits and licenses to trade, by whomsoever granted, within the State of Virginia, except that portion known as the Eastern Shore, and within the States of North Carolina, and South Carolina, and that portion of the State of Georgia immediately bordering on the Atlantic, including the city of Savannah, are hereby suspended until further orders.

All contracts and agreements made under or by virtue of any trade permit or license, within any of said States or parts of States, during the existence of this order, will be deemed void, and the subject of such contracts or agreements will be seized by the military authorities for the benefit of the government, whether the same is at the time of such contracts or agreements within their reach, or at any time thereafter comes within their reach, either by the operations of war or by the acts of the contracting parties or their agents.

The delivery of all goods contracted for and not delivered before the publication of this order is prohibited. Supplies of all kinds are prohibited from passing into any of said States or parts of States, except such as are absolutely necessary for the wants of those living within the lines of actual military occupation, and under no circumstances will military commanders allow them to pass beyond the lines they actually hold.

By command of Lieut. Gen. Grant.
T. S. Bowers, Ass't. Adjt. General."

Accounts of the Flood.

Rochester, N. Y., March 19. The great flood is abating. The damage done is estimated at a million dollars. The railroad bridges above the Falls and south of the city were carried away. About 2000 feet of the railroad track were also carried away, and the banks of the canal burst in several places, newspaper press rooms were submerged and their issue suspended.

Syracuse, N. Y., March 19. Many bridges, dams, and some houses were carried away in this vicinity by the flood. The salt works were damaged to the amount of $150,000. Loss by the flood in this county is not less than $500,000.

Harrisburg, Pa., March 18. The flood in the Susquehanna is unprecedented. The river is thirty inches higher than in the destructive freshet of 1846. Thousands of timber logs, with millions of feet of sawed lumber, have already passed this point, swept away by the flood.

Intelligence from the north and west of us indicate the most frightful destruction of property ever known in the State. The public property on streams emptying into the Susquehanna has suffered tremendously. Bridges have been swept away with dwelling houses, barns, etc.

This morning the bridges at Northumberland and Duncan's Island, and part of the bridges of the Pennsylvania Railroad above this city, were carried away. A bridge, said to be from Juniatta River, is being borne with fearful violence down stream. The Cumberland Valley Railroad bridge is in imminent danger, several spans being two feet under water.

The river still continues to rise and it is impossible to resist the force of the flood.

No trains have passed through Harrisburg from Pittsburg or Philadelphia for twelve hours.

The lower part of this city is completely under water. Much suffering has been created among many poor families at Middletown and all along the shore to Columbia.

The destruction of private property and the suffering among individuals is immense. The fires in several furnaces in this city have been extinguished. All the lumber stocked at Marietta, Columbia and Middletown has been swept away. Some of the streets in the lower parts, which were not approached by the great flood in 1846, are in great danger of being overflowed. Millions of dollars will not cover the loss already sustained.

Pittsburg, Pa., March 20. Telegraphic communication with Oil City not yet being established, we can get but meagre details of the losses by the great flood. The total loss is immense, being moderately estimated at over $2,000,000. Oil City is completely flooded, and many of the business offices have been carried away by the water, which rose with unprecedented rapidity. All the bottom lands above Oil City are submerged, and the McClintock and Oil City bridge over Oil creek, and the Franklin bridge over French creek, have been carried away. Derricks and tanks containing large quantities of oil have come down, and the river is black with floating barrels, most of them filled with oil. Many Pittsburg firms suffer heavily. Along the banks are sad evidences of wreck. Houses are gone and families are camping out in the open air. All the towns along the Alleghany river are inundated. A considerable quantity of oil in barrels will be recovered, having floated into eddies below this city and been left aground by the receding waters. At the mouth of Sewickly creek it is estimated that property to the amount of $100,000 has been washed ashore. A large field at Manchester is entirely covered with oil barrels, and one piece of bottom land a short distance below, about twenty-one acres in extent, is covered with a confused mass of oil barrels and lumber.

Freshet in New Hampshire.—Concord, N. H., March 18. There is a great freshet in the Merrimac River, and the water is rising fast. Railroad trains to the north are all delayed, and the track in many places submerged. Much damage to railroad and public property is feared.

The Great Flood in Pennsylvania.—Danville, Pa., March 18. The most destructive flood ever known in these parts is now raging on the north-west branch of the Susquehanna River. The railroad is submerged and all travel suspended.

All the bridges on the west branch as far as Williamsport are gone. The Lackawana and Bloomsburg road is under water in some places ten feet.

The canal in many places is completely destroyed. Half of Danville is under water, and the river is still rising.

Great Flood in Western New York.—New York, March 18. Dispatches from the western part of the State say the greatest flood for years is prevailing. All the lower part of Albany is submerged.

The Central Railroad west is broken in many places and the telegraph lines are down. At Utica and Rochester the water was never so high. The Hudson River Railroad is submerged near Albany and the track carried away.

Amnesty to Deserters.

BY THE PRESIDENT OF THE U. S. OF AMERICA.

A Proclamation.

Whereas, the twenty-first section of the act of Congress, approved on the 3d inst. entitled, "an act to amend the several acts heretofore passed to provide for enrolling and calling out the National forces, and for other purposes," requires that in addition to other lawful penalties of the crime of desertion from the military or naval service, "all persons who have deserted from the military or naval service of the United States who shall not return to said service, or report themselves to a Provost Marshal, within sixty days after the proclamation hereinafter mentioned, shall be deemed and taken to have voluntarily relinquished and forfeited their rights to citizenship and rights to become citizens, and such deserters shall be forever incapable of holding any office of trust and profit under the United States, or of exercising any rights of citizens thereof. And all persons who shall hereafter desert the military or naval service, and all persons who, being duly enrolled, shall depart the jurisdiction of the district in which he is enrolled, or go beyond the limits of the United States with intent to avoid any draft into the military or naval service duly ordered, shall be liable to the penalties of this section. And the President is hereby authorized and required forthwith, on the passage of this act, to issue his proclamation, setting forth the provisions of this section, in which proclamation the President is requested to notify all deserters returning within sixty days as aforesaid, that they shall be pardoned on condition of returning to their regiments and companies, or to such other organizations as they may be assigned to until they shall have served for a period of time equal to their original term of enlistment."

Now, therefore, be it known, that I, Abraham Lincoln, President of the United States, do issue this, my proclamation, as required by said act, ordering and requiring all deserters to return to their proper posts. And I do hereby notify them that all deserters who shall within sixty days from the date of this proclamation, viz., on or before the 10th day of May, 1865, return to service or report themselves to a Provost Marshal, shall be pardoned on condition that they return to their regiments and companies, or to such other organizations as they may be assigned to, and serve the remainder of their original terms of enlistment, and in addition thereto a period equal to the time lost by desertion.

In testimony whereof I hereunto set my hand and cause the seal of the United States to be affixed.

Done at the city of Washington, this 11th day of March, in the year of our Lord, 1865, and of the Independence of the United States the eighty-ninth. Abraham Lincoln.

By the President.
Wm. H. Seward, Secretary of State.

Letter from "Carleton."

Charleston, Feb. 24, 1865.

To the Editor of the Boston Journal:

THE FREEDMEN.

It is impossible for me to give a complete representation of the joy of the freedmen of this city over the arrival of the Yankees. On Monday morning last, when the steamer W. W. Coit, with Gen. Gillmore's flag at the fore and the Stars and Stripes at the stern, steamed up the harbor, with the band playing "Hail, Columbia," there was a sudden gathering of colored people upon the wharves. They were full of ecstasy. Springing upon the pier before the lines were thrown out, I met a gray-bearded old man, who touched his hat, bowed himself to the ground and said: "Good morning, massa."

"We are Yankees, uncle. Are you not afraid of us?" I said.

"God bless you! no, massa. I've prayed for you to come, and God has heard me," he said, grasping my hand. He threw his old battered hat upon the ground, looked upward, and poured out his gratitude from an overflowing heart.

"Are you a slave?"

"Yes, massa."

"Well, you are a slave no longer. You are as free as I am."

"Is it so, massa?" he asked, with indescribable earnestness; and again raising his eyes toward heaven, he gave thanks to God, with an emotion such as I never before witnessed.

ROSA'S MOTHER.

Two years ago, when I was at Hilton Head, my laundress was Rosa, a colored young woman, who escaped from Charleston in 1862, with her husband and four other persons, in a small boat. On that occasion Rosa dressed herself in men's clothes, and the whole party rowed past Sumter and made for the gunboats.

"If you go to Charleston I wish you would see if my mother is there," said Rosa, on Sunday last. "Gov. Aiken's head man knows where she lives." Accompanied by a correspondent of the New York Tribune, I went up King Street to Gov. Aiken's. We found his head [illegible] man in the yard—a courteous black, who, as soon as he learned that we were Yankees, and had a message from Rosa to her mother, dropped all work and started with us, eager to do anything for a Yankee. A walk to John Street, an entrance through a yard to the rear of a dwelling-house, brought us to the mother, in a little dingy room, cluttered with pots, kettles, tables and chairs. The old woman was sitting on a stool before the fire, cooking her scanty breakfast of corn cake. She had a little rice meal in a bag, given her by a rebel officer. She must be past sixty years of age—a large, strong woman, with a wide, high forehead and intellectual features. She was clothed in a skirt of dingy negro cloth, a sack of old red carpeting, and poor, thin canvas shoes of her own make. Never had I such an introduction.

"Here comes de great Messiah, wid news of Rosa!" said my introducer, with an indescribable dramatic flourish. The mother sprang from the stool with a cry of joy. "From Rosa? From Rosa? O, thank the Lord." She took hold of my hands, looked at me with an intensity of feeling—an earnestness, joy, and yet with a shade of doubt as if it could not be true.

"From Rosa?"

"Yes, aunty."

I shall not attempt to give her language. She looked up into heaven—yes, into heaven! She saw not us, but God and Jesus. The tears rolled from her eyes. She recounted in prayer all the long years of slavery, the suffering, the unrequited toil, the heart achings, the prayers of the past, and now God had heard her. I have seen great dramatists upon the stage, and have been moved to tears by preachers and orators, but never have I heard such an outpouring of soul as by that poor slave woman. It was a conversation between herself and the Savior. She told him the story of her life, of all its sorrows, of his goodness, and kindness, and love, the tears rolling down her cheeks the while and falling in great drops upon the floor. She pressed my hands again and again, and when I told her I must go, she kneeled upon the floor and asked for God's best blessings and for Jesus' love to follow me. It was a prayer from her heart. We had carried to her the news that she was free and that her Rosa was still alive. It was the long-looked for jubilee morning to her, and we were God's angels. It was one of the most thrilling moments I ever experienced, or that I expect to experience. "Berwick" stood a sympathetic statue, unable to control his emotion. This woman had been a slave—she had been sold, she had been exposed to insult, she had no rights which a white man was bound to respect. So the Chief Justice of the United States said! So Rev. Dr. Thornwell, the great South Carolina theologian, said. Slavery is a divine institution, said the Southern Presbyteries. Remembering these things, I went out from that humble dwelling with my convictions deepened that this is God's war, that he is on the side of the meek and lowly, the poor, the despised and oppressed, and that this nation is passing through the fire to cleanse it from sin, and to meet with retribution for its crimes.

☞ There is a man in Chicago who is doing a large business in healing the diseased by simply touching them. The hall in which he manipulates is daily crowded by hundreds afflicted by all the ills that flesh is heir to. His patients profess to believe themselves cured.

☞ Of the 1,000,000 inhabitants in New York, 500,000 live in tenement houses, and 15,000 in cellars.

☞ Elihu Burritt has been appointed United States Consul at Birmingham.

Notices.

Notice.

As I believe time is very short, and it behooves us to be up and doing, and as I have found many females that feel God has called them to labor in the vineyard of the Lord, but because of the prejudice of the church in its present cold and backslidden state, they are kept back from laboring as they feel God has called them to do; and as I believe that we are living in the day when God will pour out his spirit upon his handmaids, I therefore give this notice to all the women of America, independent of denomination or color, who feel that they have been called of God to preach, exhort, pray, or to write, on the subject of his speedy coming, and a preparation for that coming, to open a correspondence with me in reference to holding a convention of women, which will be held in the Poultney church, at Poultney, Vt., commencing Wednesday, June 7th, and continuing one week. All brethren are invited to meet with us. This convention shall be for the promulgation of all Bible truths; but no hobbies.

Now, sisters, let this be a missionary movement. Remember Jesus is at the door, and wickedness is abounding, and the love of many is waxing cold. Let us be up and doing, so that he may say to us, "Well done, good and faithful servant, . . . Enter into the joy of thy Lord." Let all who feel interested in this great work, make it a subject of special prayer at the hour of twelve o'clock, every day, that God may bless the effort that we may put forth to his honor and glory.

All brethren who are favorable to this convention are invited to assist us by advice, by kind words of encouragement. Address,

Mrs. Anna E. Smith,
No. 128 East 27th St., New York City.

R. I. and E. Conn. Quar. Conference.

This conference will hold its next session with the church in Abington, Ct., commencing Wednesday, April 5th. Preachers and brethren from abroad are invited to attend. All churches connected with this conference are requested to report by letter at this meeting. Direct to the Clerk, at West Killingly, Conn., Box 87.

Wm. H. Chapman, Clerk.

Iowa Christian Conference.

The second quarterly meeting of the Iowa Christian Conference will be held at Boylair's Grove, Butler Co., Iowa, March 24th, and continue over Lord's day. Peter S. W. Deyo, Conference Clerk.

Maine Second Advent Tract Society.

S. K. Partridge, R. R. York, I. C. Wellcome, Board of Managers.

I. C. Wellcome, Secretary and Business Agent.

Isaac Wight, Treasurer.

It was voted that all orders for tracts and books for distribution by this Society be addressed to the Agent, I. C. Wellcome, Yarmouth, Me., who will supply them as fast as the means are furnished.

All our ministers will receive subscriptions for the Tract Fund, and they purpose to raise $200, or more, for free distribution in Maine this year.

I. C. Wellcome, Agent.

Agency for Maine.

Having been solicited to take the agency for Maine of Bro. Himes' "New Chart of Daniel and John," I would say to any and all in Maine who wish it, I am prepared to furnish it at the regular retail price, $5.00, and to preachers (or others who wish them to sell) at a liberal discount. Address orders to I. C. Wellcome, Yarmouth, Me.

Notice.

Elder Thomas Smith, Bangor, Me., has on hand for sale H. L. Hastings' "Signs of the Times," with an assortment of his various Tracts; also, the Tracts by Miles Grant, on "The Soul," "The Spirit, and "What is Man?" and other Advent tracts.

Appointments.

We would say to our preaching Brethren that it is necessary we should receive their appointments as early as Tuesday Morning, as our paper goes to press about noon; otherwise they will not be inserted till the week following.

Lowell Street Chapel, Boston, corner of Causeway and Lowell Streets. Meetings are held regularly three times every Sunday, and Tuesday and Friday evenings. Seats free.

Cordaville, Mass. . . . . Saturday evening, March 25th
Lord's day . . . . March 26th
Worcester, Mass. . . . . Sunday, April 2d
M. [illegible]

East Boston, Mass. . . . . Sunday, March 26th
C. E. Piper.

Lowell, Mass . . . . March 26th
Wm. C. Thurman.

South Ashburnham, Mass . . Friday evening, March 31st
Danielsonville, Ct. . . . . Sunday, April 2d
Abington, Ct., at the conference . . . . . . April 5th to 8th
H. F. Carpenter.

Worcester, Mass. . . . . Sunday, March 26th
S. S. Brewer.

New Bedford . . . . March 26th
Plymouth . . . . April 2d
Carver . . . . April 9th
J. S. White.

Cheshire Street, Ct. . . . . Sunday, April 2d
South Windsor . . . . Sunday, April 9th
Pine Swamp, Ct. . . . . Sunday, April 16th
C. Goodrich.

Northfield, (at Bro. Gage's) . . . . Sunday, March 26th
H. K. Flagg.

Southington, Ct. . . . . Sunday, March 26th
O. D. Woodruff.

[illegible] . . . . March 26th
Meredith Village, N. H. . . . . Sunday, [illegible] 31st
North Sutton, (at Bro. I. Andrew's) . . . . March [illegible]
Sutton Mill Village, (where Bro. Bean may appoint), Sunday, April 2d.
A. Mussey.

Canton Street, Ct. . . . . Sunday, March 26th
S. Woodruff.

Valley Falls, R. I. . . . . Sunday, March 26th
West Mansfield, Mass. . . . . Sunday, April 2d
J. N. Sherman.

West Abington, Mass. . . . . March 26th
C. C. Ramsay.

Pleasant Valley . . . . Friday evening, March 24th and over the following Sabbath.
A. Ross.

Southbridge, Mass. . . . . April 2d
Westford, Ct., (at Bro. G. F. Chapman's) . . . . . April 4th
Intend to be at the conference at Abington, Ct.
Holden, Mass. . . . . April 16th
Geo. A. Streeter.

Warehouse Point, Ct. . . . . Sunday, March 26th
Westfield Farms . . . . Saturday evening, April 1st
Montgomery . . . . Sunday, April 2d
Walbridge . . . . Sunday, April 9th
P. S. Butler.

Bangor, Me. . . . . Sunday, April 2d
Commence a protracted meeting at West Levant, (White school-house), Friday, April 7th, at 2 o'clock P. M., and continue over Lord's day. Preaching brethren are invited to come. Will Bro. Morill be with me there, and others if convenient? Brethren around are invited to come and help us. Israel Damman.

Dover, N. H. . . . . March 26th
C. S. Emerson.

Lincolnville Center, (meeting-house) Sunday, March 26th
Thomas Smith.

Greenwood City . . . . March 25th and 26th
North Norway . . . . April 2d
Stoneham, (as Bro. J. Howe may appoint), April 8th and 9th.
C. M. Currier.

Lovely Street, (School-house) . . . . Sunday, April 2d
Wm. Ripley.

West Stafford, Ct. . . . . Sunday, March 26th
I. B. Potter.

Exeter, N. H. . . . . Sunday, March 26th
Thos. M. Lutnum.

Vernon, Vt. . . . . Sunday, March 26th
L. Boutell.

Lynn, Mass. . . . . March 26th
J. K. Bellows.

Lawrence, Mass. . . . . March 26th
J. Couch.

Bristol, Ct. . . . . March 26th
At liberty in April.
H. Munger.

Goshen . . . . Sundays, March 26th, and April 2nd
H. Pratt.

Bradford, N. H., (Pond meeting-house), Sunday, March 26th, and remain in the vicinity as long as the interest may demand. Joseph W. White.

Meredith Village . . . . March 26th
A. Mussey.

Holden, Mass. . . . . Sundays, March 26th and April 2d
A. Simpson.

Meredith Village, N. H. . . . . April 9th
A. Ross.

Melvin Village . . . . March 26th
Tamworth, (Birch Interval) . . . . April 2d
Sandwich, (where Bro. A. B. Hoyt may appoint) April 9th
T. W. Piper.

Wallingford Farms, Conn. . . . . March 26th
B. Hitchcock.

Business.

Gold Falling.

Gold has fallen rapidly in the last few weeks. It was quoted yesterday at $1.67. Some think it will not decline lower than this, yet not a few intelligent dealers predict, as the result of military operations yet to be heard from, that it will take another run downwards, from which it will not again recover.

Our friends in the British Provinces who are still in arrears on Crisis and book accounts, will do well to take note of this, and act accordingly. For every dollar in Canadian bills, or in gold or silver, at the present rates of premium, we give credit for its full value here, which is now from $1.60 to $1.67; but how much below that it may be in a few weeks from this time it is hard to tell.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

Bro. D. Palmer—In answer to your inquiry about the tract, we would say the matter would probably make about eight pages. If it was not stereotyped, 500 copies would cost somewhere in the neighborhood of $10.

N. F. Nason—Six for $19.20.

C. B. Turner—You did not give his post office in your order, and as your letter was dated "Syracuse," we supposed that was it, and sent it there. We have changed it to South Butler.

CASH RECEIPTS FOR THE CRISIS.

To find how your account stands.

The present No. of the Crisis is 494. The No. which follows your name is the No. to which you have paid.

If the No. paid to, is greater than the present No., the difference shows how many weeks you have paid for in advance. If the No. paid to, is less than the present No., the difference shows for how many weeks you owe. For every week of indebtedness before No. 468, charge (at the old rate) four cents; and, for every week of indebtedness since No. 468, charge (at the new rate) five cents,—and you have the amount due the office. (This, however, will give a trifle more than the amount due. To make it exact, deduct four cents for every dollar due before No. 468, and five cents for every dollar due since No. 468.)

$1.00 each.—B. Pilcher 486, J. Clewley 607, C. Barns 510, B Bemis 504, J Nason 505, L A Vaunce 539, H S Moore 505, W F Higgins 477, M Stockwell 392, D Kellum 514, Mrs. C. Smith 510, W. Mitchell 473, Mrs. J. Perkins 490, S Corwin 479, A Stout 506, Jas. Smith 3d 490, D Rowell 499, T R V Bradley 440, D H Squier 498, R P Bean 447, W A Silvernail 501, M A St. Clair 520, J S Sherman 576, M R Miles 522, C Mead 514, H P Van Kirk 564, J Elkins 532, E Witherell 484, S W Foss 365.

$1.25 each—E. C. Swain 520, G. R. Griffeth 515, R. Knight 517, Mrs. S Murray 517, S. Spinney 517, T. S. Case 517, L. M. Smith 516, L C Johnson 520, P Blanchard 501, N. Clark 513, C. H. Nowell 494, I. Quimbly 494, S Tucker 520, M C Tucker 518, A T Wiggins 518, E A Titcomb 518, L G Smith 518, C Carter 518, A Eaton 520, S N Lewis 519, M E Aldrich 519, C H Osgood 519, N B Davis 519, B P Straight 579, L Bullard 520, E D Hanson 518, Z Snow 519, S F Whitcom 519, N Lazelle 494, A Owen 495, R I Radcliff 519, E Tompkins 494, L Mead 500, F S Lathrop 491, W S Chandler 519, J. W. Marden 495, C Watler 519, A Richardson 519, A S Lull 520, I Cobb 520, T W Davis 520, W Lester 513, S Baseford 516, C M Chapman 518, G D Stewart 520, Mrs. B Deming 520, Mrs. A S Whitney 520, S T Fones 520, M Hyde 520, L Tuttle 519, J H Young 519, S A Paine 516, A McClure 518, S W Bartlett 520, M. Kenyon 520, B. Whitmore 520, S Mayberry 520, Mrs. E Collins 520, E F Rowand 512, R Williams 520, J M Churchill 520, H Packard 520, Mrs. E Garland 520, P B Hoyt 519, C Hyde 520, J McDowell 519, J E Marsh 514, S. Payson 519, J. Curtiss 520.

$1.50 each.—R Allen 519, J Odell 524, H Brock 525.

$2.00 each.—N. Hoyt 507, J. Conklin 472, W. Ward 522, B B Hill 519, E A Marsh 523, W G Ruggles 501, A Boothby 447, Mrs. S M Goddard 503, M C Stetson 533, T D Johnson 494, D A Martin 494, F J Stevens 536, Dr. A. Decker ($1.86 on old acct, 14c. on new) 452, S. Caverly 517, G Albright 532, D Churchill 536, J E Roberts 512, A Martin 533, J Coolbroth 535, L G (A. M.) Humphreyville 551, H Fellows 513, I P Knapp 535.

$2.50 each.—L T Allen 583, N P Wiggin 543, N. T. Thompson 520, G S Harwood 543, W B Lang 546, S P Grant 539, J Doe 503, Mary Jones 547, H Crippen 545, E P Philbeck 565, M L Willard 522, W T Fulton 549, G. G. Godfrey 549, H. Cushman 544, O. P. Stowell 544, J. Salisbury 544, A. Webster 544, E. R. Maxwell 544, C. Howard 519, K A Hunt 545, E. Whitford 545, E Hughart 545, A H Cutler 499, W A Viets 545, J. Richardson 520, M Smith 557, J. E. Phelps 538, S. A. Bailey 520, E B Young 535, E P Robinson 548, S French 542, M. C. Allen 508, W. Wright 562, Mrs. C. C. Bragg 522, N Turner 545, A McKenzie 534, T Sproul 534, W Holliday 545, L Ross 521, J B Richardson 545, S Munroe 546, W Woodard 540, W Gilman 511, T H Knowles 520, J Berley 546, A Hunt 536, L. Lyon 550, A. Lucas 536, N Warner 530, C M Mathews 520, Mrs. S L Marks 535, A Smith 545, D Palmer 496, E A. Pray 520, C L Dale 545, J C Tibbetts 535, M E Bather 517, W Jackson 556, Z Fairfield 539, N W Chapman 522, E R Wormwood 592, G B Keach 539, Mrs. B Weston 547, G. W. Hunt 536, S M Wadlin 546, D Smith 542, A Smith 540, M. G Toles 547, N Swain 544, B. M. Kent 520, J. D. Smith 545, N Sleeper 499, Mrs. M. J. Barton 545, D. Veazie 2nd 546, A Hennie 541, Mrs. H Sawyer 545, C M Sweet 522.

$3.00 each.—H. Stratton 552, H. H. Corbin 530, L. Wheeler 535, J Nichols 550, W E Desper 556, Mrs. S E Clough 546, T Apthorp 547, D Taylor 557, J Chapman 538, J McCammon 531, J French 541, A Philbrook 562, A F Quimby 490.

$5.00 each—Mrs. A L Gould 504, J M Brown 500, J Fitzgerald 543, C Robinson 607.

Various Sums.—Mrs. S Woodruff 20c, 477; Mrs. R E Cole 22c, 497; A J Taylor 50c, 501; J Stephens $1.17, 494; B W Tibbetts 36c, 516; Mrs. S Dow 85c, 489; M Crabtree $1.50, 515; D S Randall 65c, 495; G F Clough $1.50, 520; H. Sisson $1.04, old acct.; F. Boardman $1.04, old acct.; G Wrightman 42c, 493; L Drew $4.26, 439; H. Drew $2.26, 439; H. Saplin $2.26, 439; J. D. Hoyt $2.26, 439; T. McNeal $2.26, 439; H. Lewis 45c, C. Purdy $1.30, 490; Mrs. J. Ford 75c, 465; Mrs. L. McLanathan $1.88, 494; B H Couch 53c, 493; S Copeland 63c, 490; Mrs. A Amour $3.88, 550; J D Waldron $1 50, 524; J. Demarest $3.25, 549; W. H. Hacking $1.80, 491; G. Lyon 62c, 494; J. T. Peaslee $2.75, 523; J Crowley $1.31, 507; S. Gilland $1.86, 486; B Cheney 63c, 507; Mrs. H Davis 50c, 421; S. F. Mathews $3.95, 546; S Hawkins 15c, 497; J T Fry $2.90, 519; W York $5.00, 531; H H Bailey $3.80, 523; A S Sheldon $1.60, 494; E. S. Morgan 75c, 496; S. R. Gladding $1.68, 494; A. S. Sheldon 45c, 489; P. S. Peckham $1.75, 520; A. Macomber $1.75, 520; C Copwell $3.52, 494; W Angell $1.77, 520; L V Kenicum $4.39, 520; J Hyde 82c, 494; J. Hyde (8 copies) $8.96, 520; E. Smith $1.16, 494; C. E Burke 78c, 533; Mrs. R. P. Nutting $1 40, 4.3; N. S. Tuck $2.72, 520; J B Fitch $3.26, 546; W. P. Richardson $1.36, 520; M. A. Baker $1 63, 527; B. Aird 62c; J McGregor $3.50, 566; T. J. Hill $1.70, 537; J Hopkins 30c, 494.

FOR BOOKS AND TRACTS.

Mrs. R B Dockum $1.00, J Wheeler $3.17, S Boynton $5.00, J Stephens 8c, D M Kinter $3.00, L M Stratton 75c, W D Cook 22c, L Jackman $1.35, A C Taylor 63c, J S Carter $2.00, L M Smith 75c, A Storer $2.00, G B Smith 20c, W C Gage $1.10, J Peirce 75c, T Smith 25c, A Hawks $4.20, H Fuller 50c, E E Ingalls 83c, A M Bancroft $1.00, C H Bartlett $5.10, T. M. Redhead 55c, S H Dearborn $2.00, H Gibbs $3.00, W H Chapman $5.00, P Tandy 20c. E D Hanson $2.03, Z Snow 75c, J Sawyer 50c, A Cook 30c, D McMillan $2.00, J. F. Frescott 20c, W Mitchell $1.00, C N Harvey $5.17, M. [illegible] $2.00, J Demarest $1.75, E H Shaw 40c, L. W [illegible] Robinson $3.40, A Lewis $1.55, R H Ross 50c, Mrs. [illegible] $1.00, T. Apthorpe $3.11, Hines $1.00, A. H. [illegible], B Hitchcock $2.30, Mrs. J Bartlett 30c, E S Hall $1.00, [illegible] Thomas $1.00, J M Taylor $1.20, M A Weaver 60c, J W [illegible], N S Tuck 25c, C L Dale 50c, J. E. Marsh $1.70, [illegible] Fitch $1 34, A Dalzill $1 82, S W Worthington $3.00, J French $2.00, S J Buswell $1.25, G W Gillespie $1.00, I Rowley $1.85, D Q Kent $2 00, S Hawkins 85c, W G Wright 25c, C. E. Burke 34c, J. A. Cleaveland $1.50, J S Morgan $1.70, L L Lord 88c, F. S. Pond 45c, J. W. Towne 35c.

BOOKS AND TRACTS SENT.

By Mail—G W Gillespie, M J Bartlett, I Rowley, S J Buswell, J French, M A Weaver, C E Burke, I B Potter, J B Fitch, A Dalzill, J S Morgan, J S Moulton, S Hawkins, Edmund S Hale, J W Thomas, B Hitchcock, D Q Kent, J M Taylor, J A Cleaveland, C L Dale, L L Lord, J E Marsh, F L Pond, I Kulp.

LETTERS RECEIVED.

L B Weaver, G A Streeter, J Elkins, G W Gillespie, J Taylor, M A Weaver, D T Taylor, I B Luther, F H Chamberlain, J J Perkins, G W Hurd, N D Babcock, J E Barnes, H P Kirk, W H Silvernail, J W Taylor, C H Williams, W H Hacking, H L Bradley, H Bailey.

POST OFFICE ADDRESS.

H. K. Flagg—For the next two weeks, Holliston, Mass.
C. Goodrich—West Winsted, Ct.

ENGLISH BIBLES FOR SALE.

We can fill no more orders for English Bibles except for the following: Diamond, fine print, marginal references, at the following prices:

Morocco, $1.75; postage 12 cents. Calf, one copy, $1.40; postage 12 cts. Roan, gilt, $1.10; postage 12c.

Address Miles Grant, Boston, Mass.

BOOKS FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

The Emphatic Diaglott: containing the Original Greek Text of the New Testament, according to the Recension of Dr. J. J. Griesbach, with an Interlinear Word-for-Word English Translation, based on the renderings of eminent critics, and on the various readings of the Vatican Manuscript (No. 1209) in the Vatican Library; with Notes, References, and an Appendix. 880pp. 12mo. Price, plain leather, $4.00; extra, gilt, $4.50; Turkey morocco, $5.00. Postage, 16 cents.

The New Testament of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ; with brief Notes and Instructions; containing the references and marginal readings of the Polyglott Bible; also the Psalms, Maps, and Harmony of the Gospels. Published by the American Tract Society. For family use. $1.75; by mail, $1.90.

Dictionary of the Holy Bible, for general use in the study of the Scriptures, with Engravings, Maps, and Tables. Published by the Amer. Tract Society. This is one of the best. Cloth, $1.50; by mail, $1.75. Sheep, $2.00; by mail, $2.25.

Canon of the Holy Scriptures examined in the light of History. By Prof. L. Gaussen, of Geneva, Switzerland. Translated from the French, and abridged by Edward N. Kirk, D. D. $1.75. By mail, $2.00.

Cruden's Complete Concordance to the Holy Scriptures. New and condensed edition. Edited by John Eadie, D. D., LL.D. Cloth, $1.50; by mail, $1.80. Sheep, 2.00; by mail, $2.30.

Thurman's Bible Chronology, or, The Sealed Book of Daniel Opened. A work for every Bible Student. $1.50; by mail, $1.75.

Why the Shoe Pinches. A useful little work, with cuts, showing the conditions of a healthy foot, the causes of deformities, and how to avoid those troublesome diseases and malformations, such as chilblains, corns, bunions, flat-foot, bent-up toes, grown-in nails, etc. Price, 30 cents.

BOOKS AND TRACTS.

[illegible]

All orders for any of the following works must be addressed to

MILES GRANT, Boston, Mass.

MILES GRANT'S WORKS.

Resurrection of the Wicked. Discussion with [illegible]

Eternal Suffering. Discussion with Dr. J. Litch. [illegible]

State of the Dead. Discussion with W. W. Clayton, [illegible]

Miles Grant's Tracts. 32 pages each. Price 5 cents [illegible]

What is Man? A Bible view of his creation; The [illegible]

The Soul, What is it? Or a careful examination of [illegible]

The Spirit, What is it? Or a careful examination [illegible]

The Rich Man and Lazarus. Thief on the Cross; [illegible]

EXPOSITORY WORKS ON PROPHECY. BY S. S. BREWER.

1. The Days in which we Live. This is a concise [illegible]
2. An Exposition of the Seven Seals. History [illegible]
3. The Slaying of the Witnesses. Showing that [illegible]
4. A Treatise on Revelation XIII, in Two Parts. [illegible]
5. The Kingdom of God and Signs of the Times. [illegible]
6. The Last Day Tokens. No. 1. This is an argument [illegible]
7. Last Day Tokens. No. 2 is an answer to the [illegible]
8. Last Day Tokens. No. 3. This is a phenomenal [illegible]
9. The Great Image soon to be dashed to pieces. [illegible]
10. The History of an Immortal Soul. Mythology [illegible]
11. Rich Man and Lazarus. New edition, [illegible]

One copy of each of the above works sent by mail for $1.25

MISCELLANEOUS.

Cruden's Condensed Concordance, by which any [illegible]

The Life of Trust. An account of the Lord's Dealings with George Müller, [illegible]

A Treatise on the 24th and 25th chapters of Matthew, [illegible] By I. C. Wellcome. [illegible]

Should Christians Fight? A pamphlet on War, embracing the Scripture argument against fighting, and the testimonies of the Primitive Church. By I. C. Wellcome. [illegible]

The Bible from Heaven, or a dissertation on the Evidences of Christianity. By M. Hull. [illegible]

America in Prophecy. Exposition of the 18th chap. of Isaiah, [illegible]

The Celestial Railroad, or Modern Pilgrim's Progress. [illegible]

The Three Kingdoms, or the Kingdom of God the Father, the kingdom of Satan, the kingdom of the Lord Jesus Christ; [illegible] By T. M. Preble. [illegible]

The Ten Virgins, or Wisdom and Folly contrasted. By T. M. Preble. [illegible]

The Two Adams. By T. M. Preble. An interesting tract. [illegible]

Messiah's Mission, or an exposition of the Gospel Covenant, [illegible]

The Excellency of the Lord's Anointed, or Christ the promised Messiah. By Mrs. Mary A. Seymour. [illegible]

Everybody's Book. The Bible View of the personality of God. The Devil; his origin, personality, power, and doom. [illegible]

Cook Book. By Dr. F. W. Hurd. This book gives [illegible]

Premature Decay of American Youth. By Dr. [illegible]

The Saint's Harvest, or an exposition of Matt. 24: [illegible] By H. K. Flagg. [illegible]

The Old and New Covenant. Superiority of the New. By A. W. Sibley. [illegible]

The Christian Lyre. A collection of Hymns and Tunes for Worship. [illegible]

A Disquisition on the Prophecies. By F. H. Berick. [illegible]

An Appeal to Pious Trinitarians. By H. Grew. [illegible]

THE BIBLE STUDENT'S LIBRARY.

A Series of Volumes Edited and Published by H. L. HASTINGS, 167 Hanover St., Boston, Mass.

Each vol. contains over 400 pages, [illegible] uniformly bound in Cloth and in Paper Covers. Sold separately or in sets. Single volumes sent post-paid on receipt of the price.

IMPORTANT BOOKS WORTH BUYING, LENDING, READING, AND PRESERVING.

I. THE SIGNS OF THE TIMES; or, a Glance at Christendom as it is. By H. L. Hastings. Cloth $1, paper 50 cts.

A sad exhibition of the predicted perils of the Last Days; the selfishness, hypocrisy, and crimes of Christendom, as shown in Statistical Accounts of the slave trade, cotton trade, opium trade, Coolie trade, and the licentiousness, illegitimacy, child murder, bloodshed, and military preparations of this age.

II. THE VOICE OF THE CHURCH on the Coming and Kingdom of the Redeemer. By D. T. Taylor. Edited and prefaced by H. L. Hastings. Cloth $1, paper 50 cts.

A history of the doctrine of the reign of Christ on earth, containing the views and testimonies of nearly four hundred of the greatest preachers, reformers, and writers the church has ever known, concerning the establishment of the future glorious Kingdom of God, under the whole heaven.

III. THESSALONICA, OR THE MODEL CHURCH; A Sketch of Primitive Christianity; and REASONS FOR MY HOPE, or the Tokens of Speedy Redemption, by H. L. Hastings; and SPIRITUALISM A SATANIC DELUSION, by Wm. Ramsey, D.D. Cloth $1, paper 50 cts.

"Thessalonica," portraying the faith and practice of the early Christians; "Reasons," exhibiting the hope of the Church, the fulfilment of prophecy, the spread of the gospel through Missionaries, Bible and Tract Societies, etc.; and "Spiritualism," unveiling and exposing the monster delusion of Satan in these latter times.

IV. THE GREAT CONTROVERSY BETWEEN GOD AND MAN; its Origin, Progress, and End; with numerous TRACTS on Prophetical and Practical subjects. By H. L. Hastings. Cloth $1, paper 50 cts.

The "Controversy" sketches the History of the World since man's revolt from God, narrates the judgments already inflicted upon the nations of the earth for their iniquities, and those more terrible and exterminating calamities yet to overwhelm the nations, and prepare the way for the establishment of a divine government upon the earth. The TRACTS are, "The Church not in Darkness," "The Three Worlds," "The Last Days," "Plain Truths," "Ancient Landmarks," "Important Questions," "Olive Leaves," etc. etc.; a valuable and spirited collection.

V. FUTURE PUNISHMENT, as Taught in the Scriptures; with the various Doctrines of Men upon this subject. By H. L. Hastings. Cloth $1, paper 50 cts.

Containing "Pauline Theology," or Future Punishment as Taught by Paul; "The Old Paths," or the Doctrines of the Apostolical Fathers; "Retribution," or the Resurrection and Punishment of the Wicked; "Will all Men be Saved?" an Antidote for Universalism; "The Destiny of the Wicked," a Scripture Tract; "The Decrees of Popes and Councils on the Immortality of the Soul;" with the Views of Justin Martyr, Luther, Jeremy Taylor, Milton, and Bishop Law on the state of the dead, etc.

CASH PRICES.

By Mail: 1 Book, cloth $1.00, paper 50 cts.; 5 Books, cloth $4.00, paper 2.50. By Express: 5 Books, cloth $4.00, paper 2.00; 20 Books, cloth $15.00, paper $7.50; 50 Books, cloth $32, paper $16; 100 Books, cloth $62, paper $31.

☞ 5 Books, paper, sent to any three ministers for $1.

SEPARATE PAMPHLETS NOT BOUND IN CLOTH.

1. THESSALONICA; or, the Model Church, 25 cts. 2. THE GREAT CONTROVERSY, 25 cts. 3. REASONS FOR MY HOPE, 20 cts. 4. SPIRITUALISM, 20 cts. 5. Looking Forward, 10 cts. 6. SOCIAL HYMNS, original and selected. By H. L. H., 15 cts. single; $1 for 8 copies; $10 for 100 copies by mail,—post-paid to any address.

7. RETRIBUTION; or the Doom of the Ungodly, 20 cts. PAULINE THEOLOGY, 10 c. 8. THE OLD PATHS, 10 c.

TRACTS PRACTICAL and SCRIPTURAL in great variety. 1500 pages for $1; by mail, 1200 pages for $1. Tracts and pamphlets free to the poor and to ministers. Discount to those who buy to sell again.

Direct all orders, with the money, and plain directions for sending the books, to [illegible]

H. L. HASTINGS, 167 Hanover St., Boston.
June, 1864.

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

For the World's Crisis.

"If thou wouldst enter into life, keep the commandments."—Jesus.

Those who have entered mortal life,
Tasted its weal, its woe, its strife,
With mind and body ailments rife;
All life the shadows flown.
Mockery's spell rests down on all,
And all is blighted by the fall,
Where once heaven's lustre shone.

Wouldst thou escape this Upas blight,
Where day reigns not, but only night;
Where all are groping for the light,
Longing for brighter skies?
Casting their anchor for the day,
How many, too, have lost the way,
And thus have missed the prize.

Oh! follow Him who is the guide,
Calling from Jordan's other side,—
My guide-book with thee doth abide,
I've walked the path before.
Keep near me; thou shalt never slide,
Safe o'er life's billows thou shalt ride,
Till reached the heavenly shore.

See that thy armor's girded well,
Watching 'gainst sloth's beguiling spell;
Beware! billows around thee swell,
Foes every side may foil.
If thou to enemies shouldst yield,
Thou canst not win the battle field;
That life is reached through toil.

The way is narrow, strait the gate,
Some go astray, some seek too late;
Beware! beware of such a fate,
But strive to enter in;
Lest thou shouldst weep and wail at last,
When death's dark chain has bound thee fast,
The wages dire of sin.

M. C. Allen.

For the World's Crisis.

THE PAST AND PRESENT.

While reading "Gabriel's Flight" in the last Voice of the West, I became thoughtful relative to this grand and sublime scene, and took up the faithful record to again peruse this familiar, yet divine, and ever soul-stirring account of one of "like precious faith with us," who was then a Hebrew captive in the court of Babylon; so sincere and honest, so pure and upright, so energetic and vigorous, and yet so humble. Read his prayer and humiliating concessions in chapter 9th, and be not surprised that the angel Gabriel stood at his side and positively said, "Thou art greatly beloved." But so anxious was he relative to the church, and what was to befal them, although they had sinned, he seemed to forget this blessed assurance, as does the faithful minister now sometimes, in his great anxiety to disseminate light that souls may be saved. But, faithful servant, keep on laboring to save perishing men, and when your weary and perturbed brain shall insinuate some deficiency because a multitude do not heed your warning, and professed friends turn away, the angel will again stand by your side, and reassure you of divine affection and approbation, if you, like Daniel, are making the closest mental application, with fastings, and prayer, for light, that you may give the household meat in due season.

In reading this history over again, I do not discover any particular caution given Daniel, and the church, relative to danger attending the examination of this subject, as though they were stepping on the crust of a burning crater. If Daniel, while investigating this subject was thrice assured by Gabriel of being "greatly beloved," how will it be with those who do the same thing "at the time of the end," with all the universal monarchies and celestial signs in the past, and the last terrestrial ones rapidly fulfilling before their eyes? I ask, what will be said to that man who disposes of his earthly substance, willing to adopt close or hard fare, voluntarily becoming a pilgrim and stranger, and, with fasting and prayer, searches to understand the things Daniel searched into? If I were permitted I should say the same would be said to the latter as the former, because the Lord does not change.

Question. Should not God's children appreciate what he appreciates? We have abundance of proof that God does love those men and women who subject themselves to great painstaking in order that they may understand his word. The Savior expressly stated to some caviling professors that one woman would condemn that generation at the judgment, because of the great sacrifice she made to obtain knowledge "concerning the name of the Lord." The Savior had not forgotten that long and dangerous journey, performed not by an iron horse propelled by steam, but with all the inconvenience of those early times; in the slow march of the merchant caravan, with no commodious inn at the end of the day's journey, but to encamp where lions prowl, and scorpions sting, and the simoon sweeps its poisonous blast and clouds of sand threaten the traveler with a living burial, for sixty nights ere she reached her destination, and all this to learn more about God and his will to man!

If Queen Balkis, as Arabian tradition names her, had lived down here do you not believe she would have searched to understand the prophetic numbers, especially if she knew the high authority of this statement, "All Scripture given by inspiration of God is profitable"? Now are not the prophetic numbers reaching to the resurrection of the dead given by inspiration? If so, they are profitable, and if the man of God could have been thoroughly furnished without them then we have so much useless furniture. And no one, I presume, will admit this charge of folly upon the Eternal. Once more, can a piece of furniture be profitable unless it be used sometimes? And can the prophetic numbers be profitable to the church, unless they are sufficiently understood to be used sometime in her history?

For one I must believe they will be understood just as definitely as they are given. Yes, I believe those numbers are a piece of furniture the church have need of "at the time of the end," and though I may not yet fully understand how to use it, thank God I am trying to learn how; and I rejoice to see some who are so much more competent doing their best in that same direction; it shows they have confidence in their Heavenly Father, that all he has given is for their profit.

What if a piece of furniture were sent us we had never seen used, but knew it was sent by a sincere friend? We might set it wrong side up, and turn it in many wrong directions ere we found its perfect use. I remember such a thing happening with me, since I kept house, and the friend who brought it laughed heartily to see the mistakes I made ere I found its use. But one thing he did which I wish our opponents would do, he showed how to use it. Now if he himself had not known its use, a jest at my misapprehension would have seemed ill-timed indeed. And to have used harsh words would have been monstrous. But even if this had been the case, I think I should have kept trying while my confidence remained unshaken in the donor.

But if one should obtain superior knowledge, it may be the same as in times past, when a messenger of Satan was suffered to buffet them withal, lest they be exalted above measure. But I pray God my sympathy may be with the buffeted instead of the buffeter.

B. Mathewson.

Castleton, Vt., March, 1865.

For the World's Crisis.

LETTERS ILLUSTRATIVE OF CHRISTIAN EXPERIENCE.

NUMBER FOUR.

To Mrs. L.:—My dear Sister,—In respect to those incidents of experience related by you, I see nothing objectionable in them at all. I have practised not unfrequently the same method, and received answers direct from God which subsequent facts confirmed.

The voice of the Spirit can be distinctly heard by the mental ear, and often has it spoken to me when I was not expecting it. I will relate one or two instances for your encouragement.

Several years ago, while at C., I attended a prayer meeting one evening, at which time I was deeply impressed that there was a backslider present, and I must exhort such an one to submit to God. My mind rested on a lady who sat at some distance, and whose face I could not see. It was a great cross for me to arise and address a backslider, when I had not the least reason for supposing such a character was present, except my own inward conviction. I however obeyed the suggestion, which bore to me the impress of the Spirit; but no sooner had I sat down than the burden rolled heavily upon me, and I felt it my duty to kneel and pray for divine assistance to be imparted to that soul. I reasoned against it thus: "I have no evidence except my own feelings that there is a backslider in this room, and if not, how foolish I shall appear." I could not free myself of the duty pressing hard upon me, and I told the Lord if he would move upon some one to pray, I would follow. As the season of prayer had given place to testimonies, this was hardly to be expected; but no sooner asked, than the token was given. A brother knelt for prayer. I could scarcely restrain the Spirit's breathings till he had ceased, so strongly was I exercised to pray for the unknown wanderer, that they might be enabled to decide ere they left the house to return to their Father's house. After praying, the burden left me. I arose calm, but was tempted to think my exercises were all a delusion.

Several minutes elapsed, and then the lady toward whom my attention had been drawn as the object of my solicitude arose, and for the first time I saw her face. She stated that she was visiting in the place, and hearing of the meeting came in. The exhortation of the sister to a backslider sank into her heart. It was for her, and she felt it her duty to arise and confess her wanderings, but being a stranger the cross was heavy; in answer to prayer her heart was strengthened to decide, and she was resolved to be from henceforth the Lord's. For several years she had been a member of the Congregational church, but destitute of true piety. Previous to this she had been looking for and loving the appearing of her Lord.

I would refer to another incident, yet more striking, but must defer to a future letter, as I wish to say a few words respecting your point of difficulty. Do not suffer Satan again to hinder your faith in respect to direct answers to prayer. The reason why specific answers are not the common experience of God's people is because they lack the needful faith. There is a precious scripture which has encouraged me to carry what to many would seem trivial matters to my heavenly Father. "Be careful for nothing," however trifling the matter which would produce care or anxiety, "but in every thing by prayer and supplication let your requests be made known unto God"; and the blessed promise annexed to this divine precept is this: "And the peace of God that passeth all understanding shall keep your heart and mind in Christ Jesus."

We can learn from this that our Father wishes us to bring to him "every thing" that grieves, perplexes, or disquiets us, for it is his will that we should be kept in perfect peace; that the peace of God should rule in our hearts; therefore "every thing" that mars that peace should be brought to him "by prayer and supplication," and our "requests" will not be disregarded if presented in faith. Methinks we hardly begin to realize our privileges in connection with prayer. The majority of prayers are lost, because destitute of that living faith which gives them true value in the estimation of God. Stereotyped and formal prayers are the order of the day.

Our "requests" to God ought to be as distinct, specific and earnest, as those made by the child to its parent. We would not feel disposed to grant the requests of our child if they were all mixed up, and presented in a hurried, indifferent manner, and then when repeated the child should run immediately away without expecting or waiting for our answer. But when it comes with real desire and asks for a piece of bread, cake, or a drink of water, looking up into our face with eagerness, and lingering for the wished-for boon, repeating again and again the request if not immediately noticed, how exceeding rare the instance in which the child is denied. The weary little one comes to mother's knee, and looking up imploringly says, "Mamma, take me, I'se tired"; can the loving heart resist the simple pleadings?

The love of our heavenly Father is very far beyond that of the most affectionate mother, and he is far more willing to give the Holy Spirit to those who ask him, than earthly parents are to give good gifts unto their children. Our sympathizing Savior invites the weary and heavy laden one to come unto him for rest. We are invited to cast all of our care on him, because he careth for us. He does not have to step aside out of his common order to answer our petitions, for it is in the plan laid from the foundation of the world, to "fulfill the desire of the righteous."

Bear in mind this one fact, dear sister, viz: that you are just as much the object of the Father's love and the Savior's death as though none other were associated with you in the great scheme of redemption. The promises are as fully your own, the blessings also, as though you were alone in the world. When this great truth is deeply impressed on your mind, your faith will more readily embrace those promises, appropriate the blessings, and calmly rest in God. May you become more and more established in the life of faith; then the unbelief of others will not so easily turn you aside. Yours truly, M. D. W.

☞ Envy is the foolish man's homage.

For the World's Crisis.

WHO IS ON THE LORD'S SIDE?

There are only two sides in this case; the right side, and the wrong; the Lord's side, and the Devil's side! The side of truth, and the side of error. We are the servants of God, or we are the servants of Satan. For the Savior says, "He that is not for me, is against me, and he that gathereth not with me, scattereth abroad." We cannot serve two masters; we must love the one, and hate the other, etc. "We cannot serve God and mammon." The Lord further informs us, "that ye are my friends, if ye do whatsoever I command you." Now what has be commanded us to do? We are required to "fear God, and keep his commandments; which is the whole duty of man."

Are we doing this? if we are, we are on the Lord's side. Are we loving God with all the heart, and our neighbor as ourself? He says, too, "Be ye holy, for I am holy;" and we read that without holiness "no man can see the Lord." (That is, we cannot see the Lord in peace and joy). He says again, "Be ye perfect, for your Father in heaven is perfect."

The Lord does not require us to be perfect gods, or perfect angels; but perfect christians. Is it more than our meat and drink to do the will of the Lord? if so, we are on the Lord's side. The Lord requires us (as his disciples) "to come out from the world, and be separate, and touch not the unclean thing." Are we doing this as he requires? Let conscience answer. Jesus says, "If any man will come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross and follow me." Do we deny ourselves as we should? Do we?

Dear brethren and sisters in the Lord, are we as "poor in spirit," as humble and contrite for our sins, and as meek of heart as we should be? Do we really "hunger and thirst after righteousness"? are we "merciful"? are we "pure in heart"? are we "peacemakers"? And are we so very good and devoted in the cause of God that we are persecuted for righteousness' sake? Then let us not be ashamed. For "Blessed are ye, when men shall revile you, and persecute you, and say all manner of evil against you, falsely, for my sake, etc. Permitting these things to be true of us, then we are on the Lord's side. But, if we are "scattering abroad," we are not on the Lord's side.

The Apostle says, he that is a friend of the world, is an enemy of God. If we are using armed weapons to kill even our enemies, we are not on the Lord's side. Or, if we vote for wicked men for office, we are not on the Lord's side; for the good Lord does not sanction any such unholy acts. Who is on the Lord's side! Who? P. Tandy.

For the World's Crisis.

WILL THE TIMES AND SEASONS EVER BE DEFINITELY KNOWN?

NUMBER TEN.

Book of life, which is opened at the judgment. Rev. 11: 15, 18.—"The seventh angel sounded, and there were great voices in heaven saying, The kingdoms of this world have become the kingdom (the word kingdoms being singular in the original) of our Lord. . . . And the nations were angry, and thy wrath is come, and the time of the dead that they should be judged, and that thou shouldst give reward unto thy servants the prophets, and to the saints, and them that fear thy name." This is when Christ the King comes to receive a kingdom, and to give a kingdom unto his saints, which kingdom is under the whole heaven, and is an everlasting kingdom. See Daniel 7: 27. This kingdom is not where some suppose it is, as they sing it,

"Beyond the bounds of time and space," but under the whole heavens.

This kingdom will be like our temporal kingdoms with respect to its constitutional form, viz: there must be territory, a king to govern, a capital, subjects to be governed, and laws. This must be conceded. The new earth will be the purchased possession. The Revelator speaks of it (21: 1).—"I saw a new heaven and a new earth." This was the new earth that Peter was looking for when the old earth was destroyed by fervent heat. 2 Pet. 3: 13,—"Nevertheless we, according to his promise, look for new heavens and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness." This promise we find in Isa. 65: 17,—"Behold I create new heavens and a new earth." Christ will be King, as it reads, "The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdom of Christ, and he shall reign for ever," whose right it is. The subjects of the new earth will be the saints of the Most High. Daniel saw in vision (7: 22) that the time came for the saints to possess the kingdom. Christ says in his model sermon on the mount (Matt. 5: 5),—"Blessed are the meek; for they shall inherit the earth." In Psalm 37: 18, it reads, "their inheritance shall be for ever."

The capital city of the new earth will be the New Jerusalem. Rev. 21: 2,—"And I saw the holy city, New Jerusalem, coming down from God out of heaven," etc. This city will be transcendently beautiful, with its pearl and jewelled gates, with its streets of transparent gold. Some difference between that gold and ours. Although some think that they can see every thing through the almighty dollar, or in the words of Rev. D. M. Graham (a Free-will Baptist), who preached on the signs of the times in New York, Jan. 4th, who said in his sermon that "the great law of the whole nation is—the shortest way to the dollar."

The laws of God will then be imprinted on every one's heart, as all then will know the Lord from the least to the greatest. The kingdoms of the world in their present state can never be converted or become Christ's kingdom, because we find in Luke that they were delivered over to the devil, hence he could in a measure offer them to Christ if he would fall down and worship him, while at the same time he knew that he did not own land enough (rightfully) on which to place his cursed feet. We find in Rev. 21; 27, "There shall in no wise enter into it (the kingdom) anything that defileth, . . . but they which are written in the Lamb's book of life." "And many of them that sleep in the dust of the earth shall awake, some to everlasting life"—eternal life. Rom. 2; 7,—"The wages of sin is death; but the gift of God is eternal life, through Jesus Christ." Here the resurrection and judgment are brought to view. "And they that be wise shall shine as the brightness of the firmament, and they that turn many to righteousness as the stars for ever and ever."

Now it is quite evident that God intended that we should know something about the time of this period. It is manifest, also, that the times and the seasons of the first advent were not hid from the Levitical church; else whence that universal expectation of the coming of the Messiah, which even heathen historians testify to have filled the minds of the whole eastern world in the age of our Lord's appearance, and which the gospel history no less clearly shows to have pervaded the whole body of the Jewish people. It was this knowledge of the times and seasons, derived from the prophecies of Jacob and Daniel, that prepared the minds of Simeon, of Anna, of Nathaniel, and all who looked for redemption in Jerusalem, to expect his appearance and to welcome and receive him when he was manifested. Where, then, we may ask, is the unreasonableness of the supposition that a similar knowledge shall be vouchsafed to the waiting saints of the New Testament church, to prepare their minds in like manner for the second revelation of their Lord and Master from heaven, and to prevent them from being taken by surprise when he shall come? "But ye, brethren, are not in darkness, that that day should overtake you as a thief."

The signs of the times indicate some great disturbing cause, some overwhelming crisis at hand; and God by these things is calling our attention to his word. From the commencement of the time of the end, the seal was to be removed so that the wise might understand. The Revelator, speaking of the time of the end, says (22: 10), "Seal not the sayings of the prophecy of this book; for the time is at hand."

Some argue that the time will not be known, because it was not known in the time of Noah until the flood came and took them all away. But mark! who was it that knew not until the flood came and took them all away? Was it the wise? those who pay attention to the word of God? No; they knew, they had faith in the word; they entered the ark, and were saved. John Taylor.

New Sharon, Me.

For the World's Crisis.

"THERE'LL BE NO SORROW THERE."

Soon shall the wilderness
Appear in verdant bloom,
The lately solitary place
A paradise become.

Chorus.—There'll be no sorrow there,
There will be no sorrow there;
When Jesus comes and all get home,
There will be no sorrow there.

The desert shall rejoice,
And blossom as the rose;
With joy and singing lift its voice,
While it abundance knows.

The lame ones shall be there,
And leap for bounding joy;
The dumb the ecstasy shall share,
While praise their tongues employ.

Blind eyes shall then behold
A world made new and fair;
A city bright with burnished gold,
And princely mansions there.

Lo! in the wilderness
Salvation's waters flow;
And pains and tears no more oppress,
The saved redemption know.

Let such a hope sustain;
Behold the Lord is near;
For lo! he comes on earth to reign,
Then sing with lofty cheer.

Chorus.—There'll be no sorrow there,
There'll be no sorrow there;
When Jesus comes and saints get home,
No curse will more be there.

Stanbridge, C. E. C. P. Dow.

For the World's Crisis.

VOLUME OF TRUTH.

Of all the books that have been sent forth to enlighten mankind and to give instruction to the nations of the earth, the Bible has the pre-eminence. It shows us our duty to God and to our fellow-men (Ex. 20: 3–18). It reveals the origin of man (Gen. 1: 26, 27; 2: 7), his past (Gen. 3: 19), present (Luke 13: 3) and future condition (Mark 16: 16). It points to the future restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all the holy prophets since the world began. Isa. 65: 17, 18.—"For, behold, I create new heavens and a new earth; and the former shall not be remembered, nor come into mind. But be ye glad and rejoice . . . for behold I create Jerusalem a rejoicing, and her people a joy." Rev. 21: 1, 5.—"And I saw a new heaven and a new earth; for the first heaven and the first earth were passed away, and there was no more sea. And He that sat upon the throne said, Behold, I make all things new."

It treats of the past and present, and lifts the dark veil of the future, presenting to our view glorious signs that predict the coming of the Messiah (Luke 21: 25–29). It is the great compass by which the mariner can guide his bark over the tempestuous ocean of time, and without this divine revelation his bark is liable to become a wreck, and be overwhelmed in the dark waves of superstition, bigotry and vice. Hence the command, "Search the Scriptures; for in them ye think ye have eternal life, and they are they which testify of me."—John 5: 39.

It is the neglect in searching this volume of truth that has caused so much discord among the people at the present day, and it is this negligence that will damn thousands when Christ shall come to judge the world. Men (clergymen) have erected bulwarks (creeds), and people without investigating for themselves hide behind the same, and think they are secure, while at the same time the erectors are as blind as the people in regard to the teachings of the word of God. Matthew says (15: 14)—"Let them alone; they be blind leaders of the blind. And if the blind lead the blind both shall fall into the ditch."

Though in the dark ages of Papacy this volume was almost destroyed and its light nearly extinguished, yet through the providence of God it was preserved to once more shed its light over this dark world of sin; and since that time it has gone forth to all the nations of the earth, bringing life and immortality to light; even to the time of the end "many shall run to and fro, and knowledge shall be increased."—Dan. 12: 4. Yes, its light is still increasing. Many are running to and fro.

The end is near. Its last work is being done. The last warning voice is being heard. The last signal is being given. The cry, "Behold the Bridegroom cometh!" breaks forth from all quarters of the earth. Awake, sleeping virgin, trim your lamp, and "take heed to the sure word of prophecy, as unto a light that shineth in a dark place; until the day dawn, and the day-star arise" in your heart. "Knowing this first, that no prophecy of the Scripture is of any private interpretation."—2 Pet. 1: 20.

Dear reader, do you search the Scriptures as for hid treasures? If so, God has promised to impart wisdom to such, and only those who believe and obey this volume of truth will have access to the tree of life, and enter through the gates into the city. The Lord help us to search the Scriptures.

Fort Edward, N. Y. Cornelius Pike.

REMARKS ON BUTTER MAKING.

(By C. N. Bement, from the Genesee Farmer.)

The great point of making good butter, and that which will keep, is the freeing it from all buttermilk; and if everything else is well done, if this point is overlooked, good butter is impossible for any length of time. The mixture of milk in any degree with the butter is sure to produce frouziness or an unpleasant taste to the butter; and the entire freedom from this constitutes the grand secret of making good butter. There are many who think washing butter with water incompatible with retaining the rich flavor; but if the water is cold and pure it is scarcely possible anything should be washed away—the buttermilk, which destroys the flavor of all butter, excepted. Besides, the best butter in the world, and that which in all markets commands the highest price—viz., Dutch butter—is invariably made in this way; and when the example has been followed by others, it has rarely failed of success. If any, however, doubt the propriety of washing butter, they may use any method they choose, provided the milk is separated perfectly. Entirely free from the substance that causes it to assume the frouzy taste of bad butter, it may be kept with almost as much ease as lard. Solidity in packing, clean, sweet vessels, and a low temperature, will ensure its keeping for any reasonable time. Let no one expect good butter, however, so long as coarse impure salt is used, or a particle of the buttermilk is allowed to remain in it.

REQUISITES FOR MAKING GOOD BUTTER.
(From the Country Gentleman.)

What are the requisites for making the best butter?

Answer. There are a few butter-makers who have established such a reputation for making the very finest article, that all they can spare for market is eagerly taken at several cents a pound above the market price. So far as we know, they all adopt the following rules; or if they do not they practice them:

1. A perfectly clean cellar, not only clean from all dirt, but from every bad odor—pure, sweet, and fresh.
2. Perfectly clean, and well aired vessels. Not an infinitesimal speck of any foreign or sour substance adheres to any of them.
3. Churning before the cream becomes old.
4. Securing such a temperature that it will require about half an hour for churning—if performed much sooner, a loss of butter must occur, and it is not so good.
5. Work all the buttermilk out, which is rarely done; and work no longer, which is still more rarely, but sometimes done.
6. Use the purest salt—and add an ounce to a pound.
7. Pack the butter in the jars or firkins solid—put as much in a small space as possible.
8. Lastly, and first also, provide good sweet pasture, and plenty of perfectly pure water for the cows at all times.

If any have practiced all these, and have not succeeded, we should like to hear from them. It is proper to state, however, that there are some who assert that their vessels, etc. are clean, when in fact they are far from it.—Circular.

A MAN WHO HAS NOT SLEPT FOR OVER FOURTEEN YEARS.

At present there is a soldier at the Chestnut Hill Military Hospital, Philadelphia, who has not slept for a single moment for fourteen years and six months. This may seem incredible, but, nevertheless, it is true, and can be verified by numbers of persons. The individual is an intelligent man, naturally, and has had the benefit of a moderate education. His name is C. D. Saunders, Orderly Sergeant of Company G., Thirteenth Virginia Volunteers. He entered the service of the United States on December 28th, 1863. He is in the forty-fifth year of his age. His health has been generally excellent during his life.

In 1849 he was attacked with cholera, and since that period with lung fever on two occasions. In the summer of 1850 sleep forsook him, and since that time he has never felt the least drowsy. He always led a temperate life. His wife and children reside in Putnam county, West Virginia. Since he entered the Union army he has been on seven raids and four charges, during which time he informs us that he never felt tired or sleepy. He was in the four charges made beyond Harper's Ferry, Va., on the 17th, 18th, 19th and 20th of last August, and yet did not feel the least sleepy. Why it is that he cannot sleep, is as much a mystery to him as it is to many scientific gentlemen, who, having had their attention called to him, have been astounded in their attempts to investigate the cause.

Upon one occasion, at his request, a number of curiously-inclined gentlemen watched him for forty-two days and nights consecutively, in order, if possible, to arrive at the cause of the wonderful phenomenon. These gentlemen took turns with each other in the progress of watching, so that if he should chance to sleep it would be observed. Some of the watchers became drowsy, and it was as much as he could do to awaken them.

This singular man was sent to Philadelphia by order of the field surgeon. He was admitted into the Chestnut Hill Hospital November 17th, suffering from chronic diarrhea and rheumatism. He has nearly recovered from physical disability; his appetite is good, but yet he does not sleep. He retires to bed, the same as other soldiers, but he cannot sleep. He simply receives physical rest. This brief narrative of a more wonderful phenomenon may seem fabulous, but the reader is assured that it is the truth.—Ex.

A WORD FITLY SPOKEN.

Many a preacher, on whose lips admiring crowds have hung, has had to look with grateful recollection to some kind word fitly spoken to him at the commencement of his course, as having had not a little to do with the splendor of its subsequent stages. One such piece of counsel, Mr. Wardlaw received from his uncle, Mr. Ewing Maclay, which proved to him a cherished lesson for life.

"Ralph," said his uncle, after hearing one of his first sermons in public, "did you notice that poor woman in the duffle cloak, that sat under the pulpit when you were preaching to-day?" "Yes, sir." "Well, my man, remember that people like her have souls as well as their betters, and that a minister's business is to feed the poor and illiterate as well as the rich and educated. Your sermon to-day was a very ingenious and well composed discourse, and in that respect did you great credit; but there wasn't a word in it for the poor old woman in the duffle cloak."

DUST! DUST! DUST!

Mr. Cecil, riding once with a friend on a very windy day, the dust being very troublesome, his companion wished they could ride in the fields, where they could be free from dust; and this wish was repeated more than once while on the road. At length they reached the fields, when the flies so teased his friend's horse, that he could scarcely keep his seat on the saddle. On his bitterly complaining, "Ah! sir," said Mr. Cecil, "when you were in the road the dust was your trouble, and all your anxiety was to get into the fields; you forgot that the flies were there. Now this is a true picture of human life, and you will find it so in all the changes you make in the future. We know the trials of our present situation, but the next will have trials, and perhaps worse, though they may be of a different kind."

☞ The noblest question in the world is, What good can I do in it?

Hygiene.

"This is for your health."—Paul.

For the World's Crisis.

HYGIENE.—NO. 7.

BY IRA A. THAYER, M. D.

Improper Medication.

Though the last, is not the least subject in importance as a cause of disease, which we will now briefly consider. I shall not presume to discuss the merits of the various sects into which the profession is divided, or the prominent remedies which they administer; but will notice some articles in popular use, in the form of patent nostrums.

Now, in the first place, in order to prescribe for a disease properly, it is necessary to know precisely the nature of the disease, its cause, its extent, its complications, etc., besides the temperament, age, sex, predispositions, peculiarities of constitution, and the general strength and mental condition of the patient. To form a compound for a disease of a certain name, with no variations to adapt it to these various conditions is, to say the least of it, dangerous. To diagnose, or discriminate between diseases, is one of the greatest problems of medicine, and requires the most profound knowledge of the human system; and yet, in the treatment of disease by the use of patent medicines, the patient is required to diagnose his own case! Suppose he is correct in his diagnosis; it is a well-known fact, that a disease may have several different causes, and will require the treatment to be varied accordingly; e. g., dyspepsia may result from two or more conditions of the alimentary canal; either from a relaxation of the muscular coat of the stomach and intestines, or from a chronic irritation of the mucous membrane. Now a remedy that would relieve the disease when produced by the former condition, would aggravate it when produced by the latter condition. So with all diseases. The treatment must have reference to the cause of the ailment. Besides, a medicine which would relieve one person of a given disease, would aggravate the same disease in another person. But these medicines are recommended for almost every disease to which the human family is subject. This makes the whole thing most wonderfully ridiculous. One medicine cure two diseases which are entirely opposite in their nature! Nonsense. This at once stamps them as a humbug—an imposition upon the afflicted public—an unmitigated swindle.

But what of the nature of these remedies? They are generally, and I presume I shall not depart from the truth in saying, universally, composed of the most common and worthless drugs, "preserved" in the poorest liquor found in the market, sweetened, if sweetened at all, with molasses which is fit only to catch flies, and present upon the whole a most villainous compound, costing from six to twelve cents (including bottle and label), and sold for $1. Now is it supposed that these slops are going into the stomach, and from thence to all parts of the system, mingling with the blood and permeating all the delicate textures of the body, and not be a source of disease and death? It is a positive fact that injudicious medication has caused more human suffering than judicious medication has relieved. I have been called upon to treat more physical derangements caused by improper medication than any thing else.

Hair restoratives, complexion daubs, silly boys' onguents, and a host more toilet articles, are alike injurious. If you want a clear complexion, observe natural law; restore your system to health, and you will have a complexion far more handsome, and much clearer than by the use of these various compositions which you purchase. If you wish a luxuriant, glossy growth of hair, or whiskers, apply to the same great physician—nature, and while she insures you all these, she confers upon you all the blessings of health and longevity.

The writer of the following has just been looking into the virtue of patent medicines. Hear him:—

"Common Sense vs. Nostrums.—And then what are the remedies usually resorted to? Common sense would suggest that, as there cannot be an effect without a cause, all that is necessary would be to find out the cause and remove it; place the body in the best hygienic condition, and trust to nature for the result. But 'No,' answers Dr. Behind-the-age, 'such a course would be extremely dangerous (to his pocket); it would be necessary to take, every four hours, two of my purely—vegetable—mineral—pills,' compounded from rare substances brought from the four corners of the earth, carried four times across the great Sahara desert on the backs of fourteen camels, and brought across the Atlantic Ocean on two ships. Besides other 'remedies' equally respectable and infallible, as Dr. Gumption's Gullible Gulps, only 'one dollar per bottle,' warranted to gull all the gullible gulps, who are unfortunately ignorant and credulous enough to buy and swallow the poisonous stuff. Also Professor Poke's Powerful Patent Pressure Pills, Powders, and Potions, Balms, and Ready Resolvents."

In looking over the various certificates of the cures which these nostrums effect, one is struck with the variety and complications of disease which the same remedy will cure. I insert one here as a specimen, and if I have not quoted it verbatim, it will nevertheless serve to illustrate the general tone of these boughten puffs and certificates.

"Wolfe's Den, Rocky Mountains, Aug. 26th. I, John Lubberlie, was supposed to be in the last stages of consumption in the year 1848, suffering at the same time with a severe attack of rheumatism, liver complaint, gravel, dropsy, and cholera morbus: simultaneously, also, I took the yellow fever and small pox; the latter assuming the chronic form of scrofula, completely destroying my lungs, liver, spinal marrow, nervous system, and the entire contents of my cranium. I got so low, in fact, that I did not know my brother-in-law when he came to collect the delinquent taxes. For three months I swallowed nothing but twenty packages of Dr. Kunklehausen's Pills, which effected an immediate cure in two weeks. Sworn and subscribed to, etc.

P. S.—My uncle, Bacchus Pettinger, was so long afflicted with the gout, that life became a burden to him. He took only four boxes of said pills, and life was a burden to him no longer."

The custom of drugging for every trifling ailment is very pernicious, and the idea of taking medicine to prevent disease is as foolish as it is common. Children are tortured to death with constant drugging for every bad feeling they have, or to prevent, bad feelings. Babies, not an hour old, are compelled to swallow a potion of some nauseous stuff, as castor oil and the like. And from birth, their little tender stomachs are made the receptacle of some infernal drug that destroys its stomach and forever blights its health. Mothers, will you ever learn that your children need no medicine? or will you continue to throw half of your dear ones into premature graves by its use? It is high time you were awake to this subject. Hundreds and thousands of graves are dug annually to receive the little victims of drug poison.

In this series, which must now close, I have endeavored to instruct the reader in the matter of preserving health. How I have succeeded, the reader must decide. If I have succeeded in calling the attention to the great facts of which I have spoken, so as to relieve human suffering, and be instrumental in prolonging and perfecting life, I am well paid. I have studied brevity. I have contented myself generally with facts, rather than theory. I have given the results of experience and observation. If I have committed some errors, it is nothing extremely uncommon. Though the subject is by no means exhausted, yet from a want of time, I shall rest the matter here. My only excuse for introducing the subject into these columns is its importance, and its close connection with the common subject of this paper. If you doubt its importance, let me ask you what you will do without health? or what your preaching will amount to where the subject of health is totally disregarded? The health laws are as much the laws of God as the decalogue; and you cannot violate them without incurring moral punishment—without sinning. "Therefore, oh man, know that health is both a privilege and bounden duty, and both learn and fulfill its conditions."

Bristolville, O., Jan., 1865.

For the World's Crisis.

UNLEAVENED BREAD.

Bro. Grant:—I was very glad to see your article in the Crisis of March 7th, headed—"Baking Pans for Unleavened Bread,"—describing the process of making, and testifying to its excellence, etc. I would like to add my testimony, also, to its superiority over all kinds of fermented bread, or of bread raised with soda and acid, both in point of healthfulness and sweetness. It is also a more economical bread than any other, no part of the grain being destroyed, as is the case with fermented bread; and no money wasted in purchasing chemicals. It does not require so much time to prepare it as other bread, making the labors of the cook lighter.

I have used it exclusively for over five years, and I can truly say that nothing would tempt me to go back to the common style of making bread. I have often wondered why those who profess to eat and drink to the glory of God will not stop and think if there is not a better way than to follow the world's customs and manners in eating. If they would, I think they would cease to pursue such ruinous habits of diet as they do at present.

Another article of food, which ought to go side by side with the healthful bread, is cracked wheat mush, or pudding, which is best made by using a hand mill in which to grind the wheat (white winter is best); then stir into boiling water, the same as for making hasty pudding, and if the wheat is not ground too coarsely, it will cook in half an hour; and with sugar and milk, or cream, for seasoning, is relished by almost every one. As food for children, it has no equal; and with the addition of unleavened bread, and a good supply of fruit, makes a diet, for young or old, of unequaled healthfulness; and will (other things being equal) preserve the organism in the highest state of bodily health and mental vigor of which it is capable. Some might suppose that one would tire of so simple a diet all the time, but it is not so; the longer you eat it, the better you like it.

The best article for grinding the wheat is Swift's Patent Hand Mill, and is also excellent for grinding corn for hominy, dried bread for rusk, etc. It is of cast iron, very durable, not liable to get out of repair; cuts the grain, instead of mashing it like the common grist mill, and is just what every family, who desires to eat to live, should have. Price of small size, $2.50; large, about $10.

Earnestly for the truth, your Bro. in Christ,

East Weare, N. H. G. Frank Locke.

For the World's Crisis.

CURE FOR POLYPUS.

Mr Grant:—Seeing in your paper an inquiry for the cure of a polypus, I have a neighbor who had one; and so bad that it disfigures her face, and she consulted an old doctor, and he told her to take blood root snuff; and it cured her.

I wish to learn of a cure for catarrh.

Kennebunk, Me. I. G.

Remedy for Earache.—Mix equal parts of chloroform and laudanum, a little being introduced on a piece of cotton. The first effect is a sensation of cold, then numbness, followed by a refreshing sleep.—Med. Jour.

The World's Crisis

AND SECOND ADVENT MESSENGER.

TERMS:

If paid in advance,—	One year	$2.50
	Six months	$1.25
If not paid within six months,—	One year	$3.00
	Six months	$1.60
Five copies, to one address, six months		$5.60
—same rate for any larger number under ten.
Ten copies, to one address, six months		$10.00
—same rate for any number over ten.

CLUB PRICES PAYABLE ALWAYS IN ADVANCE.

Postage.—The postage, in the United States, on each single copy of the Crisis, is 20 cents a year, payable quarterly, in advance, at the office of delivery.

Rules for Correspondents.—Over all matters not intended for publication, write Private.
Over all business matters, write Business.
Over all articles for the paper, write For the Crisis.
All articles should be accompanied by the writer's name, for the Editor's information, even if it is not published.
When the names of new subscribers are sent, please say they are new, and it will save us much labor.
Private Letters.—Those wishing to address the Editor on matters not connected with the office, will please write the word Private on the outside of the envelope.
Please put the business matters and appointments on a piece of paper separate from other communications.
All persons writing to the office should give distinctly and plainly the Post Office, County and State at which they wish to be addressed; and all orders, subscriptions, communications and remittances, should be plainly directed to MILES GRANT, Boston, Mass.

PUBLISHED ALSO AT THE SAME OFFICE,
Semi-monthly:

THE YOUNG PILGRIM:
An Illustrated Sunday School Paper,
FOR CHILDREN AND YOUTH.

TERMS:

[illegible]

Payable always in advance.

[illegible]

The World's Crisis
AND SECOND ADVENT MESSENGER.

"BEHOLD, I COME QUICKLY; AND MY REWARD IS WITH ME."

WHOLE NO. 495. BOSTON, TUESDAY, MARCH 28, 1865. VOL. XXI.—NO. 2.

The World's Crisis
AND SECOND ADVENT MESSENGER,
Issued every Tuesday Afternoon, at
167 HANOVER STREET, BOSTON.

MILES GRANT, EDITOR.

EDITORIAL COMMITTEE:
S. G. MATHEWSON, I. C. WELLCOME, H. F. CARPENTER.

PUBLISHING COMMITTEE:
C. F. HUDSON, H. V. DAVIS, S. S. BREWER, J. G. HAMBLIN, D. MATHEWSON.

GEORGE T. ADAMS,
TREASURER AND BUSINESS AGENT.

☞ THE CRISIS is devoted to the exposition of all Bible truth; especially the doctrine of the immediate, personal coming and reign of Christ on the earth; holiness of heart; the unconscious state of the dead; their literal resurrection, and final destruction of the wicked.

For the World's Crisis.

OLD AGE.

"Now also when I am old and grey-headed, O God, forsake me not"—DAVID.

With staff in hand, and feeble steps all trembling,
Aware that soon my terminate must come,
I raise my cry, without a note dissembling,
To Him who guides his weary children home:
Forsake me not, though morn and noon have past,
Old and grey-headed, guide me to the last.

"Grey hairs a crown of glory"—so was singing
A king of old, who sought and wore that crown;
"Found in the way of righteousness," 'tis bringing
A rich inheritance—endless renown.
Old and grey-headed, may that crown be mine,
Forsake me not, but seal me ever thine.

Child of thy care! by thy strong arm protecting,
Lord, thou hast led along this changeful life;
How oft the past, presented by reflecting,
Shows Thou hast shielded from impending strife.
Forsake me not! my grey hairs and my age,
Ask Thy renewed, unfailing mercy's page.

Though griefs no larger grow as I'm advancing,
Yet I have lessened strength to bear their weight;
Thy kindness past, thy goodness still enhancing,
Leads me each hour to knock at mercy's gate.
Old and grey-headed! Lord, forsake me not,
Strengthen to bear what love may still allot.

Though billow over billow should be rolling,
The river grow more dark as I draw near,
While in my ear the requiem is tolling
For treasures lost,—still going year by year:
Forsake me not, I cry to Thee, Most High,
Now I'm grey-headed, let me see Thee nigh.

Longer or shorter should I here be staying,
Feed me with hidden manna from thy throne;
While covenant blessings day by day conveying,
I'll bless the hand that gives,—my Father's own.
Old and grey-headed, I would humbly bow,
And cry, forsake me not, my Master, now.

And hour and hour, with increased effort striving,
May I anticipate heaven's joys in store;
Renewed strength from the Great Fount deriving,
Make progress heavenward, daily, more and more.
Old and grey-headed, me it troubles not,
If ne'er by Him forsaken, ne'er forgot.

M. C. ALLEN.

For the World's Crisis.

THE PUSHING OF THE RAM.
Daniel 8: 4.

WHAT ARE THE FACTS?

According to the general view of expositors, the pushing of the ram was for conquests; and the powers against which it pushed for a long period of time were unable to stand before him; that the Persian power was victorious in its aggressive movements till the days of Xerxes. And thus the prophecy of Dan. 8: 4 was fulfilled,—"So that no beasts might stand before him; . . . but he did according to his will," etc. Now I ask, is this view or interpretation correct? I think it is not; because it is not in harmony with the facts of history. So far from its being true that no beast or power could stand before the Persian, in the expedition of Cyrus, the first Persian king, against the Queen of Massagetæ, the greater part of his army was slain. I will give the historical fact from Herod. B. I., c. 214.

"On the refusal of Cyrus to listen to her counsel, Tomyris collected all her forces; a battle ensued; and of all the conflicts which ever took place amongst the barbarians, this was, I believe, by far the most obstinately disputed. According to such particulars as I have been able to collect, the engagement began by a shower of arrows poured on both sides, from an interval of some distance; when these were all spent, they fought with their swords and spears; and for a long time neither party gained the smallest advantage. The Massagetæ were at length victorious; the greater part of the Persians were slain; Cyrus himself also fell, and thus terminated a reign of twenty-nine years. When after diligent search his body was found, Tomyris directed his head to be thrown into a vessel filled with human blood; and having insulted and mutilated the dead body, exclaimed, 'Survivor and conqueror as I am, thou hast ruined my peace by thy successful strategem against my son; but I will give thee now, as I threatened, thy fill of blood.'"

Does this look like a fulfillment of the common view, that no power was able to stand against the Persians? The next king on the Persian throne was Cambyses. In his expedition against the Ethiopians, he was obliged to abandon his design, and was dethroned, and lost his kingdom by an imposter. (Herod. B. III., chs. 25, 61. After committing various excesses and crimes, he died from a wound of his own sword, after a reign of seven years and five months, according to Herodotus. What do we here find in the reign of this Persian king that looks like a fulfillment of the prophecy, "He did according to his will"? Just the opposite of this is true, according to the historian.

How was it in the case of Darius the third Persian king? In his expedition against the Scythians, instead of accomplishing anything, the Persians were allured into various places, and with many strategems the Scythians completely outwitted the Persians, so that they were obliged to "exert all their sagacity to effect their safe return to the place from whence they came." (Herod. B. VII., c. 134.) Xerxes, the fourth king, in relating to the Persians the exploits of Cyrus, Cambyses and Darius, said "it was his careful endeavor not to reflect any disgrace upon my forefathers"; but admitted they were not successful in their expeditions. And Artabanus, son of Hystaspes, and uncle to Xerxes, in his speech before Xerxes in endeavoring to persuade him not to undertake his contemplated expedition against Greece, refers to their enemies being valiant, and that the Athenians by themselves routed the numerous armies of Datis and Artaphernes. It proves (he says) that we are not by land or sea perfectly invincible. So much for their confession. These facts may be learned in Herod. B. VII., chs. 8, 10.

We all know the result of Xerxes' expedition into Greece, with his five millions of men, how disastrous it was, losing the greater part of his army, and himself with difficulty barely escaping back into Asia, from which time history dates the decay of the Persian power. In the light of these facts, can any one fail to see the want of application of history to the prophecy with the usual view of expositors? For my part, I believe no such application can be sustained, but is false. The quotations from history might be extended at great length, disproving the general application of expositors. If these quotations from history are reliable, whose historical car has the broken wheel?

I will now briefly give my reasons for believing the "pushing of the ram" was against Daniel's people, or the Jews.

1. The pushing was for the entire destruction of some people, as we read in Dan. 8: 4; "I saw the ram pushing westward and northward and southward, so that NO" living soul "MIGHT stand before him." There appears to be something significant in the word "might," implying that an effort would be made for the destruction of some people, that would not be accomplished. The laws of the Medes and Persians were unalterable, therefore the only way the decree of Ahasuerus, through the instigation of Haman, could be nullified, was the issuing of a second decree empowering the Jews to stand for their lives against those that would injure them.

Let it be remembered that in Dan. 7: 5, the Persian bear had "three ribs in the mouth of it, between the teeth of it; and they (i. e. the ribs) said unto it, arise, DEVOUR much flesh." The object of wars is conquest, and not entire destruction, as in this case. I wish to call particular attention to what is implied by the three ribs in the mouth of the Persian bear. Three ribs represent the remnant of a carcass that may have been devoured. Haman and his family were a remnant of the nation of the Amalekites, thus corresponding to the three ribs in the mouth of the bear, he hating the Jews on account of what his people had suffered from the Jews in the days of Moses and king Saul. God commanded king Saul to utterly destroy the nation of the Amalekites; and he went about the work and destroyed the most of them, but left king Agag alive, and was rejected of the Lord for disobedience.

Let it be remembered that Haman was an Agagite, the remnant of the Amalekites, and in the power of the Persian bear; that he, out of hatred to the Jews, obtained from Ahasuerus his consent for their entire destruction. But God ordered it otherwise. Instead of the Jews being destroyed, the ribs were crushed in the mouth of the Persian bear, i. e., Haman and his family were put to death. God had previously threatened to blot out the name of Amalek from under heaven, and so his word was fulfilled. Num. 24: 20,—"Amalek was the first of the nations, but his latter end shall be that he perish for ever."

I think this is evidence that ought to be conclusive, that the pushing of the ram was for the destruction of Daniel's people. What other application can be given to the three ribs in the mouth of the Persian bear?

2. The vision commenced with the pushing of the ram, and its length was 2300 years, in which the "sanctuary and host were to be trodden under foot." I understand the term host, in Dan. 8: 13, to represent the true people of God in both the Jewish and Gentile church. The sanctuary originally was in Palestine, which has been trodden under foot at least nearly eighteen hundred years. The angel Gabriel was commanded to make Daniel understand the vision. Dan. 8: 16. He explained to Daniel all the symbols of the eighth chapter but the time—the 2300 days; and he told him the 2300 days reached to the last end of the indignation. Dan. 8: 19. But Daniel was not satisfied, for he says (verse 27), "I was astonished at the vision, but none understood it," (or, literally, "none was explaining," Bro. Whiting's trans.); therefore he set his heart to seek the Lord God by prayer and supplications, with fasting, etc. Dan. 2. He says in verse 21, "While I was speaking in prayer, even the man Gabriel whom I had seen in the vision at the beginning, . . . said, O Daniel, I am now come forth to give thee skill and understanding . . . I am come to show thee, . . . therefore understand the matter, and consider the vision." What vision? The one in the eighth chapter, for that was the one Daniel did not understand. Dan. 8: 27.

Gabriel commences thus: "Seventy weeks are determined upon thy people, and thy holy city, (or cut off) to restrain transgression," or hold back, to check the desolating power that was finally to overthrow the Jews in just 490 years. In other words, these 490 years, that were cut off from the vision of 2300, were cut off upon Daniel's people and holy city; i. e., so much time was allotted to the Jews for their continuance as a people, from the pushing of the ram, where the vision commenced, which was to cover a period of 2300 years. As the 490 were cut off from the 2300, they must commence together. And as the 490 commenced with the pushing of the ram against Daniel's people for their destruction (instead of that purpose being accomplished), Gabriel informs Daniel that their allotted time was to be 490 years longer; which would reach to A. D. 65, when the Romans commenced the siege of Jerusalem.

When the 490 years were run out, the desolating power was no longer restrained, but the Jews were overthrown by it. And their city is to remain desolate until the consummation of all things at the end of the 2300 years, which is in 1875. The 490 ending in A. D. 65, 1810, the remainder of the vision, added to 65, end in 1875. Amen.

I am satisfied the 490 years of the vision ended in A. D. 65, from the fact that transgression was to be restrained from overthrowing the Jews that length of time, and they being preserved as a people in their national capacity (although tributary to other nations) till A. D. 65; and then were broken to pieces, and have remained so till the present time. What stronger evidence can we ask that the 490 years of the vision ended there, and the remainder, the 1810 years, in 1875, when the sanctuary will be cleansed? This is the only view I can take of this important and sublime subject, with present light; and I believe the wise will understand the definite time before the Lord comes. Therefore I would exhort all to awake and trim their lamps, and have them burning, and see that we are well replenished with oil, and prepared for the marriage of the Lamb.

L. T. CUNNINGHAM.
Newton Upper Falls, Mass.

AS YE SOW, SO SHALL YE REAP.

Scatter we must, and scatter we will,
Strewing at broadcast all the day long,
Down through the valley, or over the hill,
The seeds of right, or the seeds of wrong.

Every thought is an embryo,
Every word is a planted seed;
Look to it well that the seed ye sow
Be for the flower, and not for the weed.

Beware! beware! lest the seeds ye sow
Be mixed with malice and pride and strife,
For the wheat and the tares must together grow,
Till the reapers bind in the field of life.

Cull the good seed for the coming hours,
That all thy days may be calm and free,
Evermore plucking the planted flowers,
Binding rich sheaves for eternity.

For the World's Crisis.

THE TIME OF THE END.

BRO. GRANT:—I believe we are living in the period of the world's history when we may reasonably expect the speedy establishment of God's everlasting kingdom under the whole heavens. My reasons for this belief are partly as follows: In the prophecy of Daniel, under the symbols of the four divisions of the image, and also the four beasts, we have presented to our vision the entire reign of Gentile kingdoms, or power, reaching from the time of Babylon to the setting up of the kingdoms of God, and consequently we must be living somewhere in the reign of the prophecy referred to above.

Where are we in the prophetic history? In the head of the image, or the first beast? No; it is numbered with the things that were. In the second, or third succeeding powers? No; they also are past. Then where are we? In the fourth and last division of the image, or under the dominion of the fourth and last, "dreadful and terrible beast," even that beast that had the "little horn," that had eyes and a mouth speaking great things.

But in what part of the last universal monarchy are we? Not in the legs, nor simply in the feet, but in the very toes of the image, in the very part that will first be demolished by the "stone" kingdom. Daniel said, "I beheld till the thrones were cast down." This is the last event here mentioned prior to the setting of the judgment.

The world has passed down through the great chain of prophecy to the time of the end. The second wo is past, and behold the third wo cometh quickly. The seventh angel sounded, the mystery of God is finished. Under the sounding of the seventh angel, the nations are angry, "and Thy wrath is come, and the time of the dead that they should be judged, and thou shouldest give reward unto thy servants the prophets, and to the saints, and to them that fear thy name, small and great, and shouldest destroy them which destroy the earth."—Rev. 11: 18. Looking at the signs as given by the Savior and the apostles, we come to the same conclusions—the kingdom nigh at hand.

The angel having the last great message to a dying world and a sleeping church has gone forth; and as the cheering sound and life-giving strains, came swelling upon the breeze, how comforting to the weary pilgrims as they sigh for rest and a home in the kingdom of God.

These are perilous times indeed. There is great need of prayer and watchfulness. Let us see to it that we have on the girdle of truth, and bind it closely round our minds, having on the whole armor, and our lamps in our hand, our light burning, and we waiting for our Lord. It would be better if the church of God would adorn themselves in modest apparel, and let their christian graces shine out through their acts of kindness to poor suffering humanity, in relieving the distressed and binding up the broken-hearted, and causing their light to so shine before men that they may see their good works, and may be led thereby to embrace the truth, to warn the world of a coming judgment, and to act themselves as though they believed it.

The trying hour is at hand, that day which will test our profession, our name, the day that will burn up all the chaff. Who shall be able to stand, when the great white throne appears, and the day of God's wrath cometh? According to the calculations of many good men, we have only a few months to spend here in this sin-cursed world. Soon our Lord will appear. Yours in hope,

T. E. CLARK.

☞ Niebuhr's memory was so good that he once supplied from his own recollection a lost portion of a book of accounts, when employed in one of the public offices of Denmark.

For the World's Crisis.

THE VOICE OF HISTORIANS.
"The Lord's Day"—The True Christian Sabbath.

NUMBER FOUR.

From Tho. Morer, "ON THE SABBATH," published in London 1701, pp. 56 to 57, and 64 to 68, 189 and 227. In copying, I have followed the author's peculiar style of writing and spelling. T. M. P.

"My present opinion is, that the Lord's day was observed very early in the church, and that St. John's is the same with what we call by that name; that probably the apostles themselves (at least some of 'em) spake in that manner, because Ignatius, who lived either with or very near 'em, has the same denomination. And we find it in the Ecclesiastical Canons sometimes for their Antiquity called the Canons of the Apostles, tho' it may be short of their time; that the Fathers took it up on the Credit of these Precedents, and from the conveniency of the style itself, so respectful to our Lord, and so agreeable to the business of the Day, being a grateful and pious commemoration both of the honor our Blessed Redeemer did himself, and the benefits he brought us by his rising from the grave; and that all the Churches in succeeding ages have for these reasons conformed to the language, which is warrant enough for us, in a thing of this nature, to follow their examples, and give the Day this venerable name rather than any other, at least in our more serious thoughts and discourses.

"I would have nothing accounted more a truth than it really is. Nor should we, as I said, offer any proofs which may shake the thing they are brought to confirm. I allow, nay, I affirm it highly reasonable for one day in seven to be set apart to remember the Glory and Advantages of Christ's Resurrection. I can conceive of no day more proper than what we use, to make good that design. I acknowledge in it both the sense and warrant of antiquity; and I wonder at those that are apt to cavil at the Custom. . . . And tho' I am not of Metaphrastes' Mind to make it the Invention of Sylvester I., seeing we read the word many years before him, yet 'tis very likely that the solemn and more public use of it was not observed till about his time, when by Constantine's command it became an injunction, and was afterwards more generally noted in conversation and writings, religious and civil. . . .

"This controversy about the Sabbath is very early, and has as much conduced to disturb the Church of God as any other point of Religion. 'The starting needless questions about the morality of it, occasioning such disputes and heats as will not easily be allayed. And while one party raised the obligation of the fourth commandment to a pitch that was not practicable, it provoked others to slacken it too much; and this produced many sharp reflections on both sides, and has concluded in too common a neglect of the day, which, instead of being so great a bond and instrument of religion, as it ought to be, is become generally a Day of looseness and idleness.'*

"It was begun by Cerinthus and Ebion, who gave the Apostles St. Peter and St. Paul very great disturbance in the execution of their ministry, and were the occasion of that famous Council at Jerusalem under St. James, Bishop of the place, wherein it was decreed that christians, specially the Gentile converts, were not obliged to circumcision, nor any rite of the law of Moses, in opposition to the doctrine of those men who held and taught that except all were circumcised after the manner of Moses, they could not be saved. Here indeed no mention is made of any point besides circumcision; but they gave out, not only that Men ought to be circumcised in the flesh, but, as appears from the context, they were bound to the whole law, and some name the Sabbath in particular. After these followed the Sectaries, the Disciples of Ebion, whom Isidore calls Semi-Judæos, and who made the legal ceremonies necessary to salvation, and were half Jews and half Christians. Of the same stamp were the Nazaræi who retained the Sabbath; and tho' they pretended to believe as Christians, yet they practised as Jews, and so were in reality neither one nor other. From them sprung the Symmachiani, great Sabbathizers, making an odd Miscellany of both Religions, and offering the gross sacrifices of beeves and sheep, as well as the spiritual ones of prayers and praises. About the same time were the Hypsistarij, who closed with these as to what concerned the Sabbath, yet would by no means accept circumcision, as too plain a testimony of ancient Bondage.

"All these were heretics, and so adjudged to be by the Catholic Church. Yet their hypocrisy and industry was such, as gained 'em a considerable footing in the Christian world. So that, tho' the Lord's day had got a very great figure, and was well supported by those who presided in religious matters, yet for a long while the Sabbath kept its ground, and both together were respected as two Sisters. And when in process of time the Sabbath day grew somewhat feeble, and was at length forced to give way to her rival, the abettors and patrons of it, by a Pythagorean or Marcion spell, recovered it in our festival, and changing now and then the name of the day, revived the observation of it, and made it as solemn and rigorous in Sunday, as ever it had been in the day before.

"This appears from the third Provincial Council of Orleans, Can. 21, made on purpose to encounter this error, and allowed many sorts of innocent work to be done upon the day. This was in the reign of Childebert. About which time, the Romans gave the Goths a memorable defeat, who having married Jewish women, and learnt their way of keeping the Sabbath, which they applied to the Lord's day, they would not so much as lift up their hands in their own defence, and the enemies being aware of it, took that day to assault 'em, and in a few hours utterly routed 'em.

"The contagion had, it seems, spread itself as far as France, and succeeded so well that the people were grown very superstitious in their notion of the Christian Sabbath, which occasioned that Council to oppose the growth of it, and thereupon gave that indulgence I before spoke of, permitting all business to be done which did not hinder their coming to the Church and serving God in the hours of public worship. Yet still the others went on in their way; and to induce their proselytes to spend the day with greater exactness and care, they brought in the old argument of compassion and charity to the damned in hell, who, during the day, have some respite from their torments, and the ease and liberty they have is more or less, according to the zeal and degrees of keeping it well. And now the morality of the fourth commandment grew into great request; which is the reason that Clotaire and Charlemagne, publishing edicts for the stricter observation of the Lord's day, they so worded 'em as to make scripture the ground of what they required, supposing what was commanded concerning the Sabbath equally related to this other festival; and tho' the day was changed, in remembrance of the resurrection, yet in other respects the ceremonial part continued, and christians were enjoined to observe it with the same preciseness as the Jews did, and still do after the law of Moses. And for fear the doctrine should not take without miracles to support it, Gregory of Tours furnishes us with several to that purpose. . . .

"So that we see by what sort of men the Sabbatarian doctrine began, upon what foundation they built, and by what means and arts they kept it in repair. And notwithstanding this, after the Reformation here, upon a shew of piety by the pains and industry of a few men, it came abroad again with more vigor than before, and has not a little helped to distract and divide us. I do not say this was intentionally their end, but so it has fallen out. Charity suggests better things; and I hope this zeal was primarily directed against another extreme, and to check that party of men who are so far from admitting the Old Sabbath that their notion of Christian Liberty is, to observe henceforward no Days at all. And altho' both sorts, as far as the Jew is concern'd, allow the Divine Authority of the fourth Commandment, yet, as to themselves, they very much disagree in the interpretation and sense of it. For the Latter so understand it as to make it simply and wholly Ceremonial; and therefore argue, That under the Gospel we ought to have no set times to worship God in, but every man is to be left to his own discretion to time, as he pleases, the exercises of his Religion; in the number of which Libertines were the Petrobrusians of old, and in latter Ages the error is charged on the Ana-Baptists and the Family of Love. . . .

"The holy Fathers, saith Balsamon, made the Sabbath and the Lord's day to stand on the same ground; and they were equally respected in Ancient times. And tho' in the Western Church especially this custom wore off by degrees, and is now altogether laid by, yet still there are some marks of it in other places. . . . Scaliger saith, they call both days by the name Sabbath—the first and the latter Sabbath; or in their language, the one Sanbath Sachristos, Christ's Sabbath, the other Sanbath Judi, the Jew's Sabbath. . . .

"It was indeed Calvin's opinion, that 'at first the Apostles for a considerable time kept on foot the Old Days which had prevailed with the Jews for so many Ages. But afterwards, being compelled to change it, because of the many Abuses which the superstition of their countrymen brought upon it, they did substitute the First of the Week, in remembrance of Christ's Resurrection; which put a period to all the Shadows of the Law, and admonishes us weekly of our Christian Liberty.' But then this substituting of one day in the room of another was not in the way of Doctrine, but Practice; nor did they enjoin the observation of the First Day of the Week, though 'tis evident themselves observed it." T. M. PREBLE.

East Weare, N. H.

* History of the Reformation.

For the World's Crisis.

WILL THE TIMES AND SEASONS EVER BE DEFINITELY KNOWN?

NUMBER ELEVEN.

Time has been a prominent theme with the good worthies of old. Time has also proved the inspiration of the Scriptures true. We read that Daniel "understood by books the number of the years whereof the word of the Lord came to Jeremiah the Prophet, that he would accomplish seventy years in the desolations of Jerusalem."—Dan. 9: 2. To him also was revealed, "that from the going forth of the commandment to restore and to build Jerusalem, unto the Messiah the Prince shall be seven weeks and threescore and two weeks," or 483 years. See Dan. 9: 25, 26. And in just that period of time we hear a voice from heaven saying, "This is my beloved Son."—Matt. 3: 17. And the prediction is affirmed by our Savior, who said, "The time is fulfilled."—Mark 1: 15. There were Jews in Palestine who were expecting the Deliverer to come. They understood by the Scriptures that his advent was the next event to come, and they were not disappointed. One of these, the devout Simeon, to whom "it was revealed . . . that he should not see death till he had seen the Lord's Christ." Luke 2: 26.

The people were so much in expectation, that they mused whether John were not the Christ which was to come. This belief was not confined to Palestine alone. Says Suetonious, a Roman Historian,—"An ancient and settled persuasion prevailed throughout the East that the fates had decreed some one to proceed from Judea, who should obtain universal empire." And Tacitus, another Roman historian, says, "Many were persuaded that it was contained in the ancient books of their priests, that at that very time the east should prevail, and that some one should proceed from Judea and possess the dominion." And when he came, his birth was announced by angelic voices to the watching shepherds. A forerunner was sent before him, and those who received him not were rejected; as he said to Jerusalem, because they knew not "the time of their visitation." Luke 19: 44. Now why should it be thought strange for christians of the present day to inquire about the times and seasons, when it is affirmed in 1 Pet. 1: 10–12,—"The prophets have inquired and searched diligently, who prophesied of the grace that should come unto you: searching what, or what manner of time the Spirit of Christ which was in them did signify, when it testified beforehand the sufferings of Christ, and the glory that should follow." "It was revealed" unto them, "that not unto themselves, but unto us they did minister." The time was to be sealed up until "the time of the end" of this dispensation; then, at that time, "Many shall run to and fro, and knowledge shall be increased." As one Commentator has it, "Many shall endeavor to search out the sense," or keep searching until they shall finally understand. "None of the wicked shall understand." Evidently the time for that is the burden of the whole chapter—the 12th of Daniel. That which they were to understand would be understood when that period of understanding should come; as it reads in Hosea,—"Who is wise and he shall understand these things?"

Dr. Cumming states that he heard a person make the critical remark, that the words are literally translated, "Knowledge shall be darted." If his criticism be just, it would be a very singular coincidence. "Knowledge shall be darted like the lightning." It would exactly describe the phenomenon of the electric telegraph. But is it not true to the very letter that knowledge is darted like the lightning, when the messages from Queen Victoria to James Buchanan were passed from continent to continent in a few seconds of time? Is it possible to have a better fulfillment of the prophecy of Daniel? These things are signs of the end; and although the world thinks it an awful thing for this dispensation to end, yet the christian is commanded to lift up his head and rejoice in view of redemption near; and it is passing strange that there are those who would sooner cling to the aches, pains, and dying groans, the bitter partings, and all the ills that flesh is heir to, than live for another, happier, and better world, when a better genesis shall come, making paradise more glorious than before; knowing no death, but where all is one eternal sunshine of health and life, with unalloyed happiness for eternity. It is strange that people object to hear of the end of this generation, when they know that the vast population of the globe will be numbered with the dead in a generation of time; when but a few years places us in the cold, icy hand of death. Every family has lost some dear one in this our scattering time,—but the gathering time is coming, when the shout will be, "Lo, this is our God; we have waited for him." "O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory?"

New Sharon, Me. JOHN TAYLOR.

LIGHT AND TRUTH SOLICITED CONCERNING ANTICHRIST.

The re-establishment of Popery, by Bonaparte, not inconsistent with atheism being the characteristic of the French Empire.

The first French emperor has evinced, by his proclamation in Egypt, and by other documents, that, in point of sentiment, he was not unprepared to become a prime leader of the antichristian empire. Bonaparte's re-establishment of popery forms no objection to his being an atheist, nor to atheism being the characteristic of the French empire. For this characteristic the French nation clearly and officially assumed, and for years retained. And they have not since taken a single step to change this national characteristic, nor to evince that atheism is not their real sentiment as a nation.

It has been ascertained that the French as a nation are atheists. In support of this, let Dr. Priestley testify. And no one will suspect the doctor to have been greatly prejudiced against them! He relates the following: "When I was myself in France, in 1774, I saw sufficient reason to believe that hardly any person of eminence in church or state, and especially in a great degree of eminence in philosophy or literature, (whose opinions in all countries are sooner or later adopted by others), were believers in christianity. And no person will suppose that there has been any change in favor of christianity in the last twenty years. A person I believe now living, and one of the best informed men in the country, assured me very gravely, that (paying me a compliment) I was the first person he had ever met with, of whose understanding he had any opinion, who pretended to believe in christianity. To this all the company assented. And not only were the philosophers and other leading men in France at that time unbelievers in christianity, or deists, but they were atheists, denying the being of God."—(Priestley's Fast Sermon, 1794).

The French are to be denominated, (in the language of prophecy), from the characteristic of atheism, which they did, in their revolution, by national authority and undisguisedly assume. The remarks of authors relative to the ancient ten horns of the Roman beast, (whether they were correct in their applications of those horns or not), illustrate my present idea. They tell us it is sufficient to answer to the prophetic characteristic of the beast's having ten horns, if we can find precisely ten kingdoms, at any one time, into which the old empire was divided. For it is not supposed that the precise number ten continued.

New conquests, subdivisions, or unions, soon deranged and altered their number from being precisely ten. But it is sufficient that it once was precisely ten. So in the present case. It is enough to affix to antichrist the characteristic of atheism, and that he officially assumed this characteristic and maintained it for years; and has never discovered the least real disapprobation of atheism! His character then is atheism, notwithstanding that political views and a kind of necessity have induced the tyrant of France to re-establish Popery as his nominal form of godliness. The nation derives its characteristic, in the language of prophecy, not from this circumstance, but from its antecedent, undisguised profession of atheism. Popery is re-established by the French emperor merely as a tool of ambitious policy.

After the French nation had been torn for years by factions, and drenched in the blood of two millions of its murdered citizens, besides the seas of blood shed in war, it was there clearly ascertained by woeful experience, that subordination and civil government could never be maintained without adopting some kind of religion. The Papal system the tyrant of France found most subservient to his views. This he therefore nominally adopted, instead of Mohammedism, as when in Egypt. But this manœuvre did by no means obliterate the national feature of atheism which they had officially assumed. They had adopted, and in the language of prophecy, still possess, this essential characteristic of antichrist. The following is the finishing of a description, given by Mr. York, who was present at the celebration of the re-establishment of Popery by Bonaparte:

"These are the principal incidents which occurred at Notre Dame. I leave you to form a just idea of the emotions of those present, whether they be considered as christians or not. The far greater part of the Senate, the Legislative body, the Tribunal and the generals, being avowed atheists, and notorious for the murders, thefts and atrocities which they had perpetrated; with their Chief Magistrate, who had worshiped at the altar of atheism some years before in Paris; who afterwards knelt down before the Pope at Rome, and embraced the religion of Mohammed in Africa; assembled together in one place to adore a God in whom they had no faith; and to profess a religion which they despised; merely that they might be enabled to preserve their usurped authority over the people, and to retain their places. This is an occurrence in the history of pious fraud not to be met with since the days of Judas Iscariot. I may safely venture to affirm, that with the exception of the Bishops, (if they may be excepted), there was not a single person in the cathedral who quitted this religious mockery with a sentiment of piety excited in his breast; nor one who did not perfectly see through the whole subject of the ceremony." The re-establishment of Popery in France is so far from furnishing an argument against the nation bearing the character of antichrist, as it has been stated, that it furnishes the decisive argument in favor of it. The beast from the bottomless pit (Rev. 17) is bearing the Papal beast to her execution, as has been shown. This implies that the Power symbolized by the beast, has, for some sinister purpose, taken the Papal power into his arms. This same beast is presented in Rev. 16: 13, and 19: 20, in this very connection with Popery; which is now (since its subjection to the antichristian beast), denominated the false prophet. The beast and the false prophet are there found unitedly instigating the coalition for the battle of the great day; and in that battle going together into perdition. The beast and the false prophet, who wrought wonders before him, were taken and cast into the lake of fire burning with brimstone. In chapter 20: 19, after the Devil is loosed from his confinement, where he had been during the millennium, and is again taken, he is said to be now cast into the lake of fire and brimstone, where the beast and false prophet (or antichrist and the Papal power) are. Here is the third passage in the Revelation where the two Powers are spoken of in this very connection; the beast and the false prophet. And these three passages accord with Dan. 7: 2—"I beheld them, because of the great words, which the horn spake. I beheld even till the beast (the Roman beast under his last head, which goeth into perdition), was slain, and his body destroyed, and given to the burning flame." In all these passages, antichrist and Popery are found in this very connection. Accordingly Paul, in sketching the character of antichrist, (2 Thess. 3: 1–5), closes the description in these words, "having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof." . . .
—Advent Herald.

For the World's Crisis.

DEFINITE TIME DANGEROUS.

Is it in the Bible? It certainly is. Is it a dangerous thing? Dare I accuse God of putting that into his word which is dangerous, and commanding his children to search it! Have I any more right to pronounce one part of God's word dangerous than another? Have I any right to treat this part of God's word with sour contempt simply because my former computation of time has failed? Is not time placed in the Bible on purpose to be understood by the Lord's children? And are not past failures accounted for on the consideration that the time was to be "sealed" "till the time of the end"? Is it not asserted that in "the time of the end" "knowledge shall be increased" and "the wise shall understand"? Do not the signs show that we are far advanced in the time of the end? And is it not therefore time for us to receive an understanding of the time? Who can say no?

If a father tells his children to come out to meet him after the moon is up, at ten o'clock, and they rush out at nine o'clock, before the moon is up, and fall into the ditch and get hurt, and also disappointed, will that excuse them for not going out at the proper time? The father might not censure them for their premature movement, owing to their anxiety to see him, but would he exonerate them from blame should they stubbornly refuse to go out after the moon was up, on the plea they once went out in the dark and fell into the ditch and got hurt, and caution each other against going again? W. SHELDON.

The World's Crisis

AND SECOND ADVENT MESSENGER.

"BEHOLD, I COME QUICKLY; AND MY REWARD IS WITH ME."

WHOLE NO. 495. BOSTON, TUESDAY, MARCH 28, 1865. VOL. XXI.—NO. 2.

The World's Crisis

AND SECOND ADVENT MESSENGER,

Issued every Tuesday Afternoon, at 167 HANOVER STREET, BOSTON.

MILES GRANT, EDITOR.

EDITORIAL COMMITTEE: S. G. MATHEWSON, I. C. WELLCOME, H. F. CARPENTER.

PUBLISHING COMMITTEE: C. F. HUDSON, H. V. DAVIS, S. S. BREWER, J. G. HAMBLIN, D. MATHEWSON.

GEORGE T. ADAMS, TREASURER AND BUSINESS AGENT.

☞ THE CRISIS is devoted to the exposition of all Bible truth; especially the doctrine of the immediate, personal coming and reign of Christ on the earth; holiness of heart; the unconscious state of the dead; their literal resurrection, and final destruction of the wicked.

For the World's Crisis.

OLD AGE.

"Now also when I am old and grey-headed, O God, forsake me not."—DAVID.

With staff in hand, and feeble steps all trembling,
Aware that soon my terminate must come,
I raise my cry, without a note dissembling,
To Him who guides his weary children home:
Forsake me not, though morn and noon have past,
Old and grey-headed, guide me to the last.

"Grey hairs a crown of glory"—so was singing
A king of old, who sought and wore that crown;
"Found in the way of righteousness," 'tis bringing
A rich inheritance—endless renown.
Old and grey-headed, may that crown be mine,
Forsake me not, but seal me ever thine.

Child of thy care! by thy strong arm protecting,
Lord, thou hast led along this changeful life;
How oft the past, presented by reflecting,
Shows Thou hast shielded from impending strife.
Forsake me not! my grey hairs and my age,
Ask Thy renewed, unfailing mercy's page.

Though griefs no larger grow as I'm advancing,
Yet I have lessened strength to bear their weight;
Thy kindness past, thy goodness still enhancing,
Leads me each hour to knock at mercy's gate.
Old and grey-headed! Lord, forsake me not,
Strengthen to bear what love may still allot.

Though billow over billow should be rolling,
The river grow more dark as I draw near,
While in my ear the requiem is tolling
For treasures lost,—still going year by year.
Forsake me not, I cry to Thee, Most High,
Now I'm grey-headed, let me see Thee nigh.

Longer or shorter should I here be staying,
Feed me with hidden manna from thy throne;
While covenant blessings day by day conveying,
I'll bless the hand that gives,—my Father's own.
Old and grey-headed, I would humbly bow,
And cry, forsake me not, my Master, now.

And hour and hour, with increased effort striving,
May I anticipate heaven's joys in store;
Renewed strength from the Great Fount deriving,
Make progress heavenward, daily, more and more.
Old and grey-headed, me it troubles not,
If ne'er by Him forsaken, ne'er forgot.

M. C. ALLEN.

For the World's Crisis.

THE PUSHING OF THE RAM. Daniel 8: 4.

WHAT ARE THE FACTS?

According to the general view of expositors, the pushing of the ram was for conquests; and the powers against which it pushed for a long period of time were unable to stand before him; that the Persian power was victorious in its aggressive movements till the days of Xerxes. And thus the prophecy of Dan. 8: 4 was fulfilled,—"So that no beasts might stand before him; . . . but he did according to his will," etc. Now I ask, is this view or interpretation correct? I think it is not; because it is not in harmony with the facts of history. So far from its being true that no beast or power could stand before the Persian, in the expedition of Cyrus, the first Persian king, against the Queen of Massagetæ, the greater part of his army was slain. I will give the historical fact from Herod. B. I., c. 214.

"On the refusal of Cyrus to listen to her counsel, Tomyris collected all her forces; a battle ensued; and of all the conflicts which ever took place amongst the barbarians, this was, I believe, by far the most obstinately disputed. According to such particulars as I have been able to collect, the engagement began by a shower of arrows poured on both sides, from an interval of some distance; when these were all spent, they fought with their swords and spears; and for a long time neither party gained the smallest advantage. The Massagetæ were at length victorious; the greater part of the Persians were slain; Cyrus himself also fell, and thus terminated a reign of twenty-nine years. When after diligent search his body was found, Tomyris directed his head to be thrown into a vessel filled with human blood; and having insulted and mutilated the dead body, exclaimed, 'Survivor and conqueror as I am, thou hast ruined my peace by thy successful strategem against my son; but I will give thee now, as I threatened, thy fill of blood.'"

Does this look like a fulfillment of the common view, that no power was able to stand against the Persians? The next king on the Persian throne was Cambyses. In his expedition against the Ethiopians, he was obliged to abandon his design, and was dethroned, and lost his kingdom by an imposter. (Herod. B. III., chs. 25, 61. After committing various excesses and crimes, he died from a wound of his own sword, after a reign of seven years and five months, according to Herodotus. What do we here find in the reign of this Persian king that looks like a fulfillment of the prophecy, "He did according to his will"? Just the opposite of this is true, according to the historian.

How was it in the case of Darius the third Persian king? In his expedition against the Scythians, instead of accomplishing anything, the Persians were allured into various places, and with many strategems the Scythians completely outwitted the Persians, so that they were obliged to "exert all their sagacity to effect their safe return to the place from whence they came." (Herod. B. VII., c. 134.) Xerxes, the fourth king, in relating to the Persians the exploits of Cyrus, Cambyses and Darius, said "it was his careful endeavor not to reflect any disgrace upon my forefathers"; but admitted they were not successful in their expeditions. And Artabanus, son of Hystaspes, and uncle to Xerxes, in his speech before Xerxes in endeavoring to persuade him not to undertake his contemplated expedition against Greece, refers to their enemies being valiant, and that the Athenians by themselves routed the numerous armies of Dates and Artaphernes. It proves (he says) that we are not by land or sea perfectly invincible. So much for their confession. These facts may be learned in Herod. B. VII., chs. 8, 10.

We all know the result of Xerxes' expedition into Greece, with his five millions of men, how disastrous it was, losing the greater part of his army, and himself with difficulty barely escaping back into Asia, from which time history dates the decay of the Persian power. In the light of these facts, can any one fail to see the want of application of history to the prophecy with the usual view of expositors? For my part, I believe no such application can be sustained, but is false. The quotations from history might be extended at great length, disproving the general application of expositors. If these quotations from history are reliable, whose historical car has the broken wheel?

I will now briefly give my reasons for believing the "pushing of the ram" was against Daniel's people, or the Jews.

1. The pushing was for the entire destruction of some people, as we read in Dan. 8: 4; "I saw the ram pushing westward and northward and southward, so that NO" living soul "MIGHT stand before him." There appears to be something significant in the word "might," implying that an effort would be made for the destruction of some people, that would not be accomplished. The laws of the Medes and Persians were unalterable, therefore the only way the decree of Ahasuerus, through the instigation of Haman, could be nullified, was the issuing of a second decree empowering the Jews to stand for their lives against those that would injure them.

Let it be remembered that in Dan. 7: 5, the Persian bear had "three ribs in the mouth of it, between the teeth of it; and they (i. e. the ribs) said unto it, arise, DEVOUR much flesh." The object of wars is conquest, and not entire destruction, as in this case. I wish to call particular attention to what is implied by the three ribs in the mouth of the Persian bear. Three ribs represent the remnant of a carcass that may have been devoured. Haman and his family were a remnant of the nation of the Amalekites, thus corresponding to the three ribs in the mouth of the bear, he hating the Jews on account of what his people had suffered from the Jews in the days of Moses and king Saul. God commanded king Saul to utterly destroy the nation of the Amalekites; and he went about the work and destroyed the most of them, but left king Agag alive, and was rejected of the Lord for disobedience.

Let it be remembered that Haman was an Agagite, the remnant of the Amalekites, and in the power of the Persian bear; that he, out of hatred to the Jews, obtained from Ahasuerus his consent for their entire destruction. But God ordered it otherwise. Instead of the Jews being destroyed, the ribs were crushed in the mouth of the Persian bear, i. e., Haman and his family were put to death. God had previously threatened to blot out the name of Amalek from under heaven, and so his word was fulfilled. Num. 24: 20,—"Amalek was the first of the nations, but his latter end shall be that he perish for ever."

I think this is evidence that ought to be conclusive, that the pushing of the ram was for the destruction of Daniel's people. What other application can be given to the three ribs in the mouth of the Persian bear?

2. The vision commenced with the pushing of the ram, and its length was 2300 years, in which the "sanctuary and host were to be trodden under foot." I understand the term host, in Dan. 8: 13, to represent the true people of God in both the Jewish and Gentile church. The sanctuary originally was in Palestine, which has been trodden under foot at least nearly eighteen hundred years. The angel Gabriel was commanded to make Daniel understand the vision. Dan. 8: 16. He explained to Daniel all the symbols of the eighth chapter but the time—the 2300 days; and he told him the 2300 days reached to the last end of the indignation. Dan. 8: 19. But Daniel was not satisfied, for he says (verse 27), "I was astonished at the vision, but none understood it," (or, literally, "none was explaining," Bro. Whiting's trans.); therefore he set his heart to seek the Lord God by prayer and supplications, with fasting, etc. Dan. 9. He says in verse 21, "While I was speaking in prayer, even the man Gabriel whom I had seen in the vision at the beginning . . . said, O Daniel, I am now come forth to give thee skill and understanding . . . I am come to show thee, . . . therefore understand the matter, and consider the vision." What vision? The one in the eighth chapter, for that was the one Daniel did not understand. Dan. 8: 27.

Gabriel commences thus: "Seventy weeks are determined upon thy people, and thy holy city, (or cut off) to restrain transgression," or hold back, to check the desolating power that was finally to overthrow the Jews in just 490 years. In other words, these 490 years, that were cut off from the vision of 2300, were cut off upon Daniel's people and holy city; i. e., so much time was allotted to the Jews for their continuance as a people, from the pushing of the ram, where the vision commenced, which was to cover a period of 2300 years. As the 490 were cut off from the 2300, they must commence together. And as the 490 commenced with the pushing of the ram against Daniel's people for their destruction (instead of that purpose being accomplished), Gabriel informs Daniel that their allotted time was to be 490 years longer [illegible] A. D. 65, when the [illegible] siege of Jerusalem [illegible]

When the 490 years were run out, the desolating power was no longer restrained, but the Jews were overthrown by it. And their city is to remain desolate until the consummation of all things at the end of the 2300 years, which is in 1875. The 490 ending in A. D. 65, 1810, the remainder of the vision, added to 65, end in 1875. Amen.

I am satisfied the 490 years of the vision ended in A. D. 65, from the fact that transgression was to be restrained from overthrowing the Jews that length of time, and they being preserved as a people in their national capacity (although tributary to other nations) till A. D. 65; and then were broken to pieces, and have remained so till the present time. What stronger evidence can we ask that the 490 years of the vision ended there, and the remainder, the 1810 years, in 1875, when the sanctuary will be cleansed? This is the only view I can take of this important and sublime subject, with present light; and I believe the wise will understand the definite time before the Lord comes. Therefore I would exhort all to awake and trim their lamps, and have them burning, and see that we are well replenished with oil, and prepared for the marriage of the Lamb.

L. T. CUNNINGHAM.

Newton Upper Falls, Mass.

AS YE SOW, SO SHALL YE REAP.

Scatter we must, and scatter we will,
Strewing at broadcast all the day long,
Down through the valley, or over the hill,
The seeds of right, or the seeds of wrong.

Every thought is an embryo,
Every word is a planted seed;
Look to it well that the seed ye sow
Be for the flower, and not for the weed.

Beware! beware! lest the seeds ye sow
Be mixed with malice and pride and strife,
For the wheat and the tares must together grow,
Till the reapers bind in the field of life.

Cull the good seed for the coming hours,
That all thy days may be calm and free,
Evermore plucking the planted flowers,
Binding rich sheaves for eternity.

For the World's Crisis.

THE TIME OF THE END.

BRO. GRANT:—I believe we are living in the period of the world's history when we may reasonably expect the speedy establishment of God's everlasting kingdom under the whole heavens. My reasons for this belief are partly as follows: In the prophecy of Daniel, under the symbols of the four divisions of the image, and also the four beasts, we have presented to our vision the entire reign of Gentile kingdoms, or power, reaching from the time of Babylon to the setting up of the kingdoms of God, and consequently we must be living somewhere in the reign of the prophecy referred to above.

Where are we in the prophetic history? In the head of the image, or the first beast? No; it is numbered with the things that were. In the second, or third succeeding powers? No; they also are past. Then where are we? In the fourth and last division of the image, or under the dominion of the fourth and last, "dreadful and terrible beast," even that beast that had the "little horn," that had eyes and a mouth speaking great things.

But in what part of the last universal monarchy are we? Not in the legs, nor simply in the feet, but in the very toes of the image, in the very part that will first be demolished by the "stone" kingdom. Daniel said, "I beheld till the thrones were cast down." This is the last event here mentioned prior to the setting of the judgment.

The world has passed down through the great chain of prophecy to the time of the end. The second wo is past, and behold the third wo cometh quickly. The seventh angel sounded, the mystery of God is finished. Under the sounding of the seventh angel, the nations are angry, "and Thy wrath is come, and the time of the dead that they should be judged, and thou shouldest give reward unto thy servants the prophets, and to the saints, and to them that fear thy name, small and great, and shouldest destroy them which destroy the earth."—Rev. 11: 18. Looking at the signs as given by the Savior and the apostles, we come to the same conclusions—the kingdom nigh at hand.

The angel having the last great message to a dying world and a sleeping church has gone forth; and as the cheering sound and life-giving strains, came swelling upon the breeze, how comforting to the weary pilgrims as they sigh for rest and a home in the kingdom of God.

These are perilous times indeed. There is great need of prayer and watchfulness. Let us see to it that we have on the girdle of truth, and bind it closely round our minds, having on the whole armor, and our lamps in our hand, our light burning, and we waiting for our Lord. It would be better if the church of God would adorn themselves in modest apparel, and let their christian graces shine out through their acts of kindness to poor suffering humanity, in relieving the distressed and binding up the broken-hearted, and causing their light to so shine before men that they may see their good works, and may be led thereby to embrace the truth, to warn the world of a coming judgment, and to act themselves as though they believed it.

The trying hour is at hand, that day which will test our profession, our name, the day that will burn up all the chaff. Who shall be able to stand, when the great white throne appears, and the day of God's wrath cometh? According to the calculations of many good men, we have only a few months to spend here in this sin-cursed world. Soon our Lord will appear. Yours in hope,

T. E. CLARK.

☞ Niebuhr's memory was so good that [illegible] once supplied from his own recollection [illegible] portion of a book of accounts, which [illegible] played in one of the public offices of Den- [illegible]

For the World's Crisis.

THE VOICE OF HISTORIANS.

"The Lord's Day"—The True Christian Sabbath.

NUMBER FOUR.

From Tho. Morer, "ON THE SABBATH," published in London 1701, pp. 55 to 57, and 64 to 68, 189 and 227. In copying, I have followed the author's peculiar style of writing and spelling. T. M. P.

"My present opinion is, that the Lord's day was observed very early in the church, and that St. John's is the same with what we call by that name; that probably the apostles themselves (at least some of 'em) spake in that manner, because Ignatius, who lived either with or very near 'em, has the same denomination. And we find it in the Ecclesiastical Canons sometimes for their Antiquity called the Canons of the Apostles, tho' it may be short of their time; that the Fathers took it up on the Credit of these Precedents, and from the conveniency of the style itself, so respectful to our Lord, and so agreeable to the business of the Day, being a grateful and pious commemoration both of the honor our Blessed Redeemer did himself, and the benefits he brought us by his rising from the grave; and that all the Churches in succeeding ages have for these reasons conformed to the language, which is warrant enough for us, in a thing of this nature, to follow their examples, and give the Day this venerable name rather than any other, at least in our more serious thoughts and discourses.

"I would have nothing accounted more a truth than it really is. Nor should we, as I said, offer any proofs which may shake the thing they are brought to confirm. I allow, nay, I affirm it highly reasonable for one day in seven to be set apart to remember the Glory and Advantages of Christ's Resurrection. I can conceive of no day more proper than what we use, to make good that design. I acknowledge in it both the sense and warrant of antiquity; and I wonder at those that are apt to cavil at the Custom. . . . And tho' I am not of Metaphrastes' Mind to make it the Invention of Sylvester I., seeing we read the word many years before him, yet 'tis very likely that the solemn and more public use of it was not observed till about his time, when by Constantine's command it became an injunction, and was afterwards more generally noted in conversation and writings, religious and civil. . . .

"This controversy about the Sabbath is very early, and has as much conduced to disturb the Church of God as any other point of Religion. 'The starting needless questions about the morality of it, occasioning such disputes and heats as will not easily be allayed. And while one party raised the obligation of the fourth commandment to a pitch that was not practicable, it provoked others to slacken it too much; and this produced many sharp reflections on both sides, and has concluded in too common a neglect of the day, which, instead of being so great a bond and instrument of religion, as it ought to be, is become generally a Day of looseness and idleness.' *

"It was begun by Cerinthus and Ebion, who gave the Apostles St. Peter and St. Paul very great disturbance in the execution of their ministry, and were the occasion of that famous Council at Jerusalem under St. James, Bishop of the place, wherein it was decreed that christians, specially the Gentile converts, were not obliged to circumcision, nor any rite of the law of Moses, in opposition to the doctrine of those men who held and taught that except all were circumcised after the manner of Moses, they could not be saved. Here indeed no mention is made of any point besides circumcision; but they gave out, not only that Men ought to be circumcised in the flesh, but, as appears from the context, they were bound to the whole law, and some name the Sabbath in particular. After these followed the Sectaries, the Disciples of Ebion, whom Isidore calls Semi-Judæos, and who made the legal ceremonies necessary to salvation, and were half Jews and half Christians. Of the same stamp were the Nazaræi who retained the Sabbath; and tho' they pretended to believe as Christians, yet they practised as Jews, and so were in reality neither one nor other. From them sprung the Symmachiani, great Sabbathizers, making an odd Miscellany of both Religions, and offering the gross sacrifices of beeves and sheep, as well as the spiritual ones of prayers and praises. About the same time were the Hypsistarij, who closed with these as to what concerned the Sabbath, yet would by no means accept circumcision, as too plain a testimony of ancient Bondage.

"All these were heretics, and so adjudged to be by the Catholic Church. Yet their hypocrisy and industry was such, as gained 'em a considerable footing in the Christian world. So that, tho' the Lord's day had got a very great figure, and was well supported by those who presided in religious matters, yet for a long while the Sabbath kept its ground, and both together were respected as two Sisters. And when in process of time the Sabbath day grew somewhat feeble, and was at length forced to give way to her rival, the abettors and patrons of it, by a Pythagorean or Marcion spell, recovered it in our festival, and changing now and then the name of the day, revived the observation of it, and made it as solemn and rigorous in Sunday, as ever it had been in the day before.

"This appears from the third Provincial Council of Orleans, Can. 21, made on purpose to encounter this error, and allowed many sorts of innocent work to be done upon the day. This was in the reign of Childebert. About which time, the Romans gave the Goths a memorable defeat, who having married Jewish women, and learnt their way of keeping the Sabbath, which they applied to the Lord's day, they would not so much as lift up their hands in their own defence, and the enemies being aware of it, took that day to assault them [illegible] The contagion had, it seems, spread itself [illegible] as far as France, and succeeded so well that the people were grown very superstitious in their notion of the Christian Sabbath, which occasioned that Council to oppose the growth of it, and thereupon gave that indulgence I before spoke of, permitting all business to be done which did not hinder their coming to the Church and serving God in the hours of public worship. Yet still the others went on in their way; and to induce their proselytes to spend the day with greater exactness and care, they brought in the old argument of compassion and charity to the damned in hell, who, during the day, have some respite from their torments, and the ease and liberty they have is more or less, according to the zeal and degrees of keeping it well. And now the morality of the fourth commandment grew into great request; which is the reason that Clotaire and Charlemagne, publishing edicts for the stricter observation of the Lord's day, they so worded 'em as to make scripture the ground of what they required, supposing what was commanded concerning the Sabbath equally related to this other festival; and tho' the day was changed, in remembrance of the resurrection, yet in other respects the ceremonial part continued, and christians were enjoined to observe it with the same preciseness as the Jews did, and still do after the law of Moses. And for fear the doctrine should not take without miracles to support it, Gregory of Tours furnishes us with several to that purpose. . . . .

"So that we see by what sort of men the Sabbatarian doctrine began, upon what foundation they built, and by what means and arts they kept it in repair. And notwithstanding this, after the Reformation here, upon a shew of piety by the pains and industry of a few men, it came abroad again with more vigor than before, and has not a little helped to distract and divide us. I do not say this was intentionally their end, but so it has fallen out. Charity suggests better things; and I hope this zeal was primarily directed against another extreme, and to check that party of men who are so far from admitting the Old Sabbath that their notion of Christian Liberty is, to observe henceforward no Days at all. And altho' both sorts, as far as the Jew is concern'd, allow the Divine Authority of the fourth Commandment, yet, as to themselves, they very much disagree in the interpretation and sense of it. For the Latter so understand it as to make it simply and wholly Ceremonial; and therefore argue, That under the Gospel we ought to have no set times to worship God in, but every man is to be left to his own discretion to time, as he pleases, the exercises of his Religion; in the number of which Libertines were the Petrobrusians of old, and in latter Ages the error is charged on the Ana-Baptists and the Family of Love. . . . .

"The holy Fathers, saith Balsamon, made the Sabbath and the Lord's day to stand on the same ground; and they were equally respected in Ancient times. And tho' in the Western Church especially this custom wore off by degrees, and is now altogether laid by, yet still there are some marks of it in other places. . . . . Scaliger saith, they call both days by the name Sabbath—the first and the latter Sabbath; or in their language, the one Sanbath Sachristos, Christ's Sabbath, the other Sanbath Judi, the Jew's Sabbath. . . . .

"It was indeed Calvin's opinion, that 'at first the Apostles for a considerable time kept on foot the Old Days which had prevailed with the Jews for so many Ages. But afterwards, being compelled to change it, because of the many Abuses which the superstition of their countrymen brought upon it, they did substitute the First of the Week, in remembrance of Christ's Resurrection; which put a period to all the Shadows of the Law, and admonishes us weekly of our Christian Liberty.' But then this substituting of one day in the room of another was not in the way of Doctrine, but Practice; nor did they enjoin the observation of the First Day of the Week, though 'tis evident themselves observed it." T. M. PREBLE.

East Weare, N. H.

For the World's Crisis.

WILL THE TIMES AND SEASONS EVER BE DEFINITELY KNOWN?

NUMBER ELEVEN.

Time has been a prominent theme with the good worthies of old. Time has also proved the inspiration of the Scriptures true. We read that Daniel "understood by books the number of the years whereof the word of the Lord came to Jeremiah the Prophet, that he would accomplish seventy years in the desolations of Jerusalem."—Dan. 9: 2. To him also was revealed, "that from the going forth of the commandment to restore and to build Jerusalem, unto the Messiah the Prince shall be seven weeks and threescore and two weeks," or 483 years. See Dan. 9: 25, 26. And in just that period of time we hear a voice from heaven saying, "This is my beloved Son."—Matt. 3: 17. And the prediction is affirmed by our Savior, who said, "The time is fulfilled."—Mark 1: 15. There were Jews in Palestine who were expecting the Deliverer to come. They understood by the Scriptures that his advent was the next event to come, and they were not disappointed. One of these, the devout Simeon, to whom "it was revealed . . . that he should not see death till he had seen the Lord's Christ." Luke 2: 26.

The people were so much in expectation, that they mused whether John were not the Christ which was to come. This belief was not confined to Palestine alone. Says Suetonious, a Roman Historian,—"An ancient and settled persuasion prevailed throughout the East that the fates had decreed some one to proceed from Judea, who should obtain universal empire." And Tacitus, another Roman historian, says, "Many were persuaded that it was contained in the ancient books of their priests, that at that very time the east should prevail, and that some one should proceed from Judea and possess the dominion." And when he came, his birth was announced by angelic voices to the watching shepherds. A forerunner was sent before him, and those who received him not were rejected; as he said to Jerusalem, because they knew not "the time of their visitation." Luke 19: 44. Now why should it be thought strange for christians of the present day to inquire about the times and seasons, when it is affirmed in 1 Pet. 1: 10–12,—"The prophets have inquired and searched diligently, who prophesied of the grace that should come unto you: searching what, or what manner of time the Spirit of Christ which was in them did signify, when it testified beforehand the sufferings of Christ, and the glory that should follow." "It was revealed" unto them, "that not unto themselves, but unto us they did minister." The time was to be sealed up until "the time of the end" of this dispensation; then, at that time, "Many shall run to and fro, and knowledge shall be increased." As one Commentator has it, "Many shall endeavor to search out the sense," or keep searching until they shall finally understand. "None of the wicked shall understand." Evidently the time for that is the burden of the whole chapter—the 12th of Daniel. That which they were to understand would be understood when that period of understanding should come; as it reads in Hosea,—"Who is wise and he shall understand these things?"

Dr. Cumming states that he heard a person make the critical remark, that the words are literally translated, "Knowledge shall be darted." If his criticism be just, it would be a very singular coincidence. "Knowledge shall be darted like the lightning." It would exactly describe the phenomenon of the electric telegraph. But is it not true to the very letter that knowledge is darted like the lightning, when the messages from Queen Victoria to James Buchanan were passed from continent to continent in a few seconds of time? Is it possible to have a better fulfillment of the prophecy of Daniel? These things are signs of the end; and although the world thinks it an awful thing for this dispensation to end, yet the christian is commanded to lift up his head and rejoice in view of redemption near; and it is passing strange that there are those who would sooner cling to the aches, pains, and dying groans, the bitter partings, and all the ills that flesh is heir to, than live for another, happier, and better world, when a better genesis shall come, making paradise more glorious than before; knowing no death, but where all is one eternal sunshine of health and life, with unalloyed happiness for eternity. It is strange that people object to hear of the end of this generation, when they know that the vast population of the globe will be numbered with the dead in a generation of time; when but a few years places us in the cold, icy hand of death. Every family has lost some dear one in this our scattering time,—but the gathering time is coming, when the shout will be, "Lo, this is our God; we have waited for him." "O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory?"

New Sharon, Me. JOHN TAYLOR.

LIGHT AND TRUTH SOLICITED CONCERNING ANTICHRIST.

The re-establishment of Popery, by Bonaparte, not inconsistent with atheism being the characteristic of the French Empire.

The first French emperor has evinced, by his proclamation in Egypt, and by other documents, that, in point of sentiment, he was not unprepared to become a prime leader of the antichristian empire. Bonaparte's re-establishment of popery forms no objection to his being an atheist, nor to atheism being the characteristic of the French empire. For this characteristic the French nation clearly and officially assumed, and for years retained. And they have not since taken a single step to change this national characteristic, nor to evince that atheism is not their real sentiment as a nation.

It has been ascertained that the French as a nation are atheists. In support of this, let Dr. Priestley testify. And no one will suspect the doctor to have been greatly prejudiced against them! He relates the following: "When I was myself in France, in 1774, I saw sufficient reason to believe that hardly any person of eminence in church or state, and especially in a great degree of eminence in philosophy or literature, (whose opinions in all countries are sooner or later adopted by others), were believers in christianity. And no person will suppose that there has been any change in favor of christianity in the last twenty years. A person I believe now living, and one of the best informed men in the country, assured me very gravely, that (paying me a compliment) I was the first person he had ever met with, of whose understanding he had any opinion, who pretended to believe in christianity. To this all the company assented. And not only were the philosophers and other leading men in France at that time unbelievers in christianity, or deists, but they were atheists, denying the being of God."—(Priestley's Fast Sermon, 1794).

The French are to be denominated, (in the language of prophecy), from the characteristic of atheism, which they did, in their revolution, by national authority and undisguisedly assume. The remarks of authors relative to the ancient ten horns of the Roman beast, (whether they were correct in their applications of those horns or not), illustrate my present idea. They tell us it is sufficient to answer to the prophetic characteristic of the beast's having ten horns, if we can find precisely ten kingdoms, at any one time, into which the old empire was divided. For it is not supposed that the precise number was continued. [illegible]

New conquests, [illegible] characteristic of atheism, and that he officially assumed this characteristic and maintained it for years; and has never discovered the least real disapprobation of atheism! His character then is atheism, notwithstanding that political views and a kind of necessity have induced the tyrant of France to re-establish Popery as his nominal form of godliness. The nation derives its characteristic, in the language of prophecy, not from the circumstance, but from its antecedent, undisguised profession of atheism. Popery is re-established by the French emperor merely as a tool of ambitious policy.

After the French nation had been torn for years by factions, and drenched in the blood of two millions of its murdered citizens, besides the seas of blood shed in war, it was there clearly ascertained by woeful experience, that subordination and civil government could never be maintained without adopting some kind of religion. The Papal system the tyrant of France found most subservient to his views. This he therefore nominally adopted, instead of Mohammedism, as when in Egypt. But this manœuvre did by no means obliterate the national feature of atheism which they had officially assumed. They had adopted, and in the language of prophecy, still possess, this essential characteristic of antichrist. The following is the finishing of a description, given by Mr. York, who was present at the celebration of the re-establishment of Popery by Bonaparte:

"These are the principal incidents which occurred at Notre Dame. I leave you to form a just idea of the emotions of those present, whether they be considered as christians or not. The far greater part of the Senate, the Legislative body, the Tribunal and the generals, being avowed atheists, and notorious for the murders, thefts and atrocities which they had perpetrated; with their Chief Magistrate, who had worshiped at the altar of atheism some years before in Paris; who afterwards knelt down before the Pope at Rome, and embraced the religion of Mohammed in Africa; assembled together in one place to adore a God in whom they had no faith; and to profess a religion which they despised; merely that they might be enabled to preserve their usurped authority over the people, and to retain their places. This is an occurrence in the history of pious fraud not to be met with since the days of Judas Iscariot. I may safely venture to affirm, that with the exception of the Bishops, (if they may be excepted), there was not a single person in the cathedral who quitted this religious mockery with a sentiment of piety excited in his breast; nor one who did not perfectly see through the whole subject of the ceremony." The re-establishment of Popery in France is so far from furnishing an argument against the nation bearing the character of antichrist, as it has been stated, that it furnishes the decisive argument in favor of it. The beast from the bottomless pit (Rev. 17) is bearing the Papal beast to her execution, as has been shown. This implies that the Power symbolized by the beast, has, for some sinister purpose, taken the Papal power into his arms. This same beast is presented in Rev. 16: 13, and 19: 20, in this very connection with Popery; which is now (since its subjection to the antichristian beast), denominated the false prophet. The beast and the false prophet are there found unitedly instigating the coalition for the battle of the great day; and in that battle going together into perdition. The beast and the false prophet, who wrought wonders before him, were taken and cast into the lake of fire burning with brimstone. In chapter 20: 10, after the Devil is loosed from his confinement, where he had been during the millennium, and is again taken, he is said to be now cast into the lake of fire and brimstone, where the beast and false prophet (or antichrist and the Papal power) are. Here is the third passage in the Revelation where the two Powers are spoken of in this very connection; the beast and the false prophet. And these three passages accord with Dan. 7: 2—"I beheld them, because of the great words, which the horn spake. I beheld even till the beast (the Roman beast under his last head, which goeth into perdition), was slain, and his body destroyed, and given to the burning flame." In all these passages, antichrist and Popery are found in this very connection. Accordingly Paul, in sketching the character of antichrist, (2 Thess. 3: 1–5), closes the description in these words, "having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof." . . . —Advent Herald.

For the World's Crisis.

DEFINITE TIME DANGEROUS.

Is it in the Bible? It certainly is. Is it a dangerous thing? Dare I accuse God of putting that into his word which is dangerous, and commanding his children to search it? Have I any more right to pronounce one part of God's word more dangerous than another? Have I any right to treat this part of God's word with sour contempt simply because my former computation of time has failed? Is not time placed in the Bible on purpose to be understood by the Lord's children? And are not past failures accounted for on the consideration that the time was to be "sealed" "till the time of the end"? Is it not asserted that in "the time of the end" "knowledge shall be increased" and "the wise shall understand"? Do not the signs show that we are far advanced in the time of the end? And is it not therefore time for us to receive an understanding of the time? Who can say no? [illegible]

If a father tells his children to come out to meet him after the moon is up, at ten o'clock, and they rush out at nine o'clock, before the moon is up, and fall into the ditch and get hurt, and also disappointed, will that excuse them for not going out at the proper time? The father might not chastise them for their premature movement, owing to their anxiety to see him; but would he not chastise them, if [illegible] [illegible] against going again? [illegible]

NAPOLEON III. AND THE ROMAN QUESTION.

Ever since the return of Pius IX. to Rome, after his hasty and unseemly flight before the Revolution of 1848, he has, notoriously, owed his security in the Chair of Peter to the bayonets of France. The motives of Louis Napoleon, then President of the French Republic, in undertaking this intervention, are difficult to divine. Meditating even then, as he undoubtedly did, the coup d'etat, which he subsequently executed, and foreseeing the necessity of securing the support of the Papacy, he resolved to purchase that support beforehand by marching his Holiness back in triumph to Rome, and guaranteeing for the nonce his temporal supremacy. A strange spectacle, truly, it was to see the Republic of France assisting at the murder of her sister Republic of Rome; but so strange afterwards, when the same hand which killed the latter strangled the former, seized on the Imperial crown, and succeeded to the name and office of "Eldest Son of the Church." By this armed occupation of Rome, Napoleon became the dictator of its destinies; and once fairly seated on the Imperial throne, he found in this occupation a powerful instrument for the furtherance of his political aims at home and abroad, and especially for the advancement of that grand imperial policy which he believed it to be the mission of the Napoleonic dynasty to accomplish. Our own civil war has lately evoked from him, in his letter on the Mexican question, the distinct announcement of this policy, which is the reorganization of the Latin races and governments, and the restoration of their power in the Old World and the New. Whether or not he dreams of the possible revival of the Roman Empire of Charlemagne, with a Napoleon at its head, time only can determine.

In the prosecution of this vast project, his eyes were naturally turned, first of all, to Italy. The first step taken by him in this character was to constitute an alliance with Victor Emmanuel and the kingdom of Sardinia. The next, the inauguration of the war with Austria, with its magnificent promise of the liberation of Italy, with its lame and impotent conclusion as the world then thought, in the treaty of Villafranca. Whatever may have been the original purpose of Napoleon in the war, or his ulterior aims in the treaty, the dissatisfaction first experienced soon gave way to the most lively gratification at the further development of events. These received their impulsion and direction mainly from two causes. The one was the consummate genius of the Italian Premier, Count Cavour, the rival, if not the superior of Napoleon himself, in all the arts of statesmanship. The other was the unconquerable energy of "the Revolution," which, once unchained, could not be stopped by a paper compact. Garibaldi, the incarnation of this movement, landing with his handful of warriors on the coast of Sicily, and marching thence to Naples, swept over Southern and Central Italy, putting to flight the despotic minions of Austria and Rome, and causing the Pope again to tremble for his throne. The result was the constitution of "the Kingdom of Italy," under Victor Emmanuel, reserving to the Pope his territorial estates, and to Austria Venetia. The national movement, of which Garibaldi was the head and front, renewing its battle-cry, "Italy for the Italians, and Rome for Italy," chafed against this reservation, but in vain. The French troops were still in Rome, and the King of Italy could not risk a collision with them. He must await the development of events. With feverish anxiety he lay in wait, watching the trouble in the North, the Polish insurrection and the war with Denmark, ready to spring, sword in hand, on Venice and Rome whenever opportunity should offer. Such an opportunity he hoped might arise, whenever, through being involved in a war, Austria on the one hand might be weakened in Venetia, and France on the other might have pretext for withdrawing from Rome. But neither contingency came to pass, and Italy had again to wait.

Meanwhile, the hero of Caprera, with his party of action, unable to brook longer delay, and stung by what he believed to be the Emperor, again took up arms, and marched Romeward. But King Victor felt constrained to put himself in Garibaldi's way, and the affair of Aspromote, where the hero of Italy fell "wounded in the house of his friends," put an end for the time to all hope of securing Rome by force of arms. But the solution of the Roman question still seemed as far off as ever. The Emperor still had the Pope on his hands, and what to do with him was as difficult a problem as ever. Never was a more troublesome responsibility than His Holiness. One day all daggers and curses; the next all honey and blessings. A dotard wielding the thunders of Hildebrand. A relic of mediævalism, and an incubus on the progress of Italy and of Europe, and yet so enshrined in the devout faith of millions, that to meddle with him might bring the nineteenth century down a tumbling about one's ears. Such did the Roman question seem to be but three months ago: the Pope as helpless as ever; difficulties attending the French occupation; difficulties attending the evacuation of Rome; Italy clamorous for its possession; the Church clamorous for the temporal rights of Papacy; the necessity of doing something apparent; the impossibility of doing anything equally clear. And the world was fast settling down once more into that fatalistic acquiescence in the statu quo which such a condition of things begets, when one morning the newspaper quietly announced the conclusion of the Franco-Italian Convention, providing for the evacuation of Rome, and the transfer of the Italian capital from Turin to—Florence!—Christian Herald.

For the World's Crisis.

THE FORGIVENESS OF SINS.

The burdened conscience longs for forgiveness. The soul haunted by a sense of guilt seeks eagerly for some sure refuge; and often cherishes hope that reform, or liberal charities, or holy living will pay the debt of past transgressions.

But the gospel of Jesus alone can remove the heavy load. It proclaims the forgiveness of sins and their removal as far as the east is from the west—a faithful pledge of Jesus' love. Mary received pardon while washing his feet with her tears. The thief obtained mercy in his dying moments. The same pardon is offered, the same fountain is open, dear friends, where you and I, though vile as they, can wash all our stains of sin away.

E. Hutchins.

☞ Working and thinking should go together, the thinker working, and the worker thinking.

The World's Crisis AND SECOND ADVENT MESSENGER.

Boston, Tuesday, March 28, 1865.

Please Remember.

All letters, communications and remittances, should be addressed to the Editor, Miles Grant.

All drafts, or bank checks, should be made payable to the Treasurer and Business Agent, Geo. T. Adams. Otherwise they cannot be used in the absence of the Editor.

THE DISCUSSION.

Our discussion with Bro. Wendell, on the subject of the resurrection of the wicked dead, closed Friday evening, March 24th, after being continued eight evenings. The debate was one of much interest to those who attended, and the impartial will best decide as to the merits of the points made, and arguments presented for their support. We felt specially sustained by the Lord by the aid of his Spirit and word; and we are gratified beyond our expectation with the results of the discussion.

We shall not be able to give a detailed report of the arguments on either side, and will only mention a few prominent thoughts presented in the course of the discussion; but even these we must defer till next week.

BRO. WALTER PRATT IS DEAD.

We are compelled to give the sad news to our readers that Bro. Walter Pratt's work is done, and his family sit in robes of sadness. He died in peace, about 3 P. M., March 22nd. He was too well known by faithful labors in the east and west, to need any words of praise to those who were acquainted with his earnest zeal for the cause of Christ. A proper obituary may be expected in due time.

Sister Pratt wishes to express her gratitude to the friends who have favored her family with deeds of kindness during their affliction.

And allow us to add, we hope the lonely widow and her children will not be forgotton by those who have been benefitted in spiritual things by the labors of Bro. Pratt. Now is a good time to administer to them in temporal things.

A CHANGE NEEDED.

It is a sad sight to witness when we find our public teachers, and the popular preachers of the day, bowing and bending to popular opinion, for the sake of enjoying the smiles of an ungodly world; but it seems to be the state of things now. And instead of any improvement, the conformity to the world is becoming more and more apparent. But few men have the courage to stand against the swelling tide of iniquity that is now sweeping over the world. Satan well knows how to lead men astray. If he can only persuade the professor to enter the halls of amusement to seek their enjoyment, he is sure to dry up their love for Jesus, and holy communion with him and his word. But in order to accomplish this, he must hold out some plausible motive. Perhaps there may be a poor minister of Christ, who needs help; and certainly, he says, it is "christian duty to aid such an one. But he is not willing to have this done in the simple apostolic way; there must be a "donation visit" appointed, and get all the people together, young and old, and so have a "nice time," and they will give more. And then, when they get together, it must be made pleasant and agreeable for all; hence it becomes necessary to adopt a worldly policy to please the ungodly who are present. Soon the reins are in their hands, and the rest consent to let them drive as they please. If one speaks against this departure from Christ, he is at once branded as being superstitious, or as an old "fogy, or a "croaker."

The next year the house of the good man is thought to be too small, and the large hall is engaged, and every thing is on an enlarged scale, especially in a worldly direction. By this time Satan has the reins of the church pretty freely in his hands; and by means of these fairs and festivals he can neutralize in a short time all the benefits of a most blessed revival of religion; and still the people do not see the snare, because he has blinded their eyes by the professed object of the gathering, which is to raise some money for the poor preacher and his family.

Now after all this has taken place, it will not do for the minister to go into his desk on the following Lord's day, and preach against such a commingling of the world and christianity together; as it would not please. In this way, Satan is succeeding in silencing the warning voice of a very large proportion of the popular ministers of these last days; hence it is "perilous times." How much a change is needed.

Says Henry Ward Beecher, when speaking on the wickedness of these days, and the importance of having ministers who possess courage sufficient to rebuke sin wherever it is found:—

"I have attended many councils where learned divines examined youthful candidates for orders, but I have never yet attended or heard one where a single question was put to test the fitness of the man as a teacher on the point most vital to his congregation. They ask him all about original sin, and the fall of Adam, and the superlapsus and the sublapsus, and test him as to whether he believes in natural grace or acquired grace, whether man is wholly depraved or only in part, and if the latter, where the depravity stops and what relation it bears to the rest of his nature; but they never, never suggest a question which would indicate that the souls or bodies of the men of the nineteenth century are of the least possible moment. These ministers are easy made. The doctors take a little of the regulation dough, they mold it into a pretty little cake of exactly the right shape, pinhole it with the necessary number of orthodox holes, put it on a patty pan, shove it into a properly built oven, and, when it is baked, you have your pretty cracker ministers! Out on them; and out on such a system. We are living in a land and in a time of peculiar temptation. We are, as a people, given greatly to lying. Why, the range of white lies alone is wonderfully long, running not only through the highest octaves but way up into the harmonics, while the sub-base of black lies is simply tremendous. We must have a change in our public men, and not only in the lower classes of officials, but even in the halls of our most exalted national council."

INTEMPERANCE AT WASHINGTON.

Facts show that intemperance is advancing in all directions, and that our National Capitol is not at all behind in this vice. But few real temperance men can be found in high places of trust. This is one great cause of other national crimes, which are fast sinking the American people into the pit of ruin.

A Washington correspondent of the Boston Journal, writes March 5th, as follows:

"Intoxication at the Capitol gives anxiety to thinking men, and measures will probably be taken soon to banish ardent spirits from the Senate wing. Mr. Speaker Colfax has never permitted it to be sold in the House wing."

THE WAR.

Since government at Washington has decided to let the captives go free, success seems to be more fully upon the side of the truth. It is very evident that the Lord is overturning the terrible system of slavery that has cursed the Southern States for many years.

Herodotus.—As Herodotus is often referred to, as a historian, it may be well to say of him, that he is the oldest historian, whose writings have been preserved; hence there is no authority from history any older than his. He wrote about 450 years B. C.

Pushing of the Ram.—Our readers will find an interesting article in another column from Bro. L. T. Cunningham, on the "pushing of the ram." We think light is shining on this interesting subject.

☞ Do not fail to read "Kitty's Rebellion" The article is in the children's department.

INSTRUCTION FROM THE SPIRITS.

Every week there is published in the Banner of Light a series of communications, which it is claimed come from departed human spirits. They tell us strange stories about the spirit-land and its inhabitants. They are all tending to destroy confidence in the Bible and its author. They are anti-Christ in the fullest sense.

The following, from a spirit, was published in the Banner of March 11th, 1865:—

"Chairman.—R. M. A., of Burlington, Vt., desires to propound two questions:

Q. 1st. It has been given through your medium that spirits have no form in their true spiritual state. How can this be true, in view of the fact that clairvoyants see, at the time of transitive, a perfect counterpart of the material body, while we are informed that the spirit world is one of sight, sound and objectivity, that every organ has its spiritual one?

A. The spirit, as a spirit, is without form, occupies no space, and is entirely exempt from the laws of material life. But under certain conditions the spirit finds itself necessitated to clothe itself with form. But the form is one thing, and the reality, the spirit, is another. In the spirit world, in its strictest and holiest sense, there is no form, as you will sooner or later ascertain.

Q. 2nd. In the Arcana of Nature, by Hudson Tuttle, it is said that spirits retain what are called the animal faculties. Through yours it was said, in substance, the animal desires are not retained—if a faculty, then a desire—hence one or the other must be mistaken. Please explain.

A. The faculties or powers of soul or spirit must of necessity be retained, else it loses its individuality, becomes a nonentity. It matters not where that spirit soars, whether to the highest heaven of mind, or the lowest hell of mind, it retains its individual faculties all the same.

Q. What is the Biblical meaning of the resurrection of Jesus?

A. To us it means simply a casting off of the old, and a putting on of the new. It has no reference to the physical body. It does not mean that the physical human body was ever raised, for we know that the laws of physical life forbid it. It belongs to the spirit, and not to the body."

Change of Price.

The prices of the following works, for sale at this office, have been advanced by the publishers as follows:—

Bible Student's Library (for the set),
By mail—cloth, $5.00; paper, $2.50.
By express—cloth, $4.00; paper, $2.00.
Debt and Grace, post paid, $1.50.
Christ our Life, post paid, cloth, 75c; paper, 45c.
Hudson's Tracts, 6 cents each, postage 2 cts.
Christian Lyre, 80c; by mail, 85c.
Social Hymns, 15 cts; eight for $1.00.
Cook Book, 15 cts; postage 2c.
Diphtheria, 10 cts; postage 2c.

Before ordering books, in these times of changing prices, it will be well to look at our latest price list, in the book column, and remit accordingly.

For the World's Crisis.

REVIVALS.

Reports of the outpouring of the Spirit, and revivals of religion, appear to be on the increase. Methodist papers report five thousand conversions in two weeks; and other denominations are also blest with revivals. Is not this good news? Let us "rejoice with those that do rejoice" over sinners converted from the error of their ways.

One feature if noticeable in some of the reports; different denominations unite, and laying aside all points of difference,—willing all the glory should be given to Him to whom it belongs,—they labor together for the same blessed object.

Will any say that all the churches and professors are going to destruction together? Do any say with Elijah,—"I, even I only, am left?" The answer to him was, "I have left seven thousand in Israel . . . . which have not bowed unto Baal." And may we not say with Paul (Rom. 11: 5,) "Even so then at this present time also, there is a remnant, according to the election of grace."

Who that knows the worth of prayer, will refuse to pray that multitudes more may be brought into the fold?

F. H. Chamberlain.

☞ A gentleman on board a steamer on the Hudson River found the following lines in the Bible lying on the cabin table:—

"This holy book neglected lies,
No soul with it communes;
While scores of souls sit round about
With Heralds and Tribunes."

THE NEW $2000 TRACT FUND.

We, the undersigned, agree to give the sums affixed to our names, for the purpose of raising two thousand dollars to aid the Christian Publication Society in the gratuitous distribution of tracts.

Previous donations	$736.03
J. Carr (tracts sold)	1.00

POOR FUND DONATIONS.

To pay for Papers sent to the Poor.

Whole number sent free 800. Amount $2000.00.

Previous donations	$351.46
S. Nye	.50
Mrs. J. Lyon	1.00
Mrs. H. White	1.00
S. R. G.	.65
B. F. Millard	.75
J. M. Tuck	1.00
S. G. Humphreville	1.25

For the World's Crisis.

THE ITALIAN MISSION.

Dear Bro. Grant:—During the month of February past, I delivered twenty-seven lectures in six different places. I am just commencing to preach the gospel of the kingdom in the valley of Angrogne, having given the inhabitants of La Tour and St. Jean and vicinity faithful warning to prepare for the coming and kingdom of Christ and escape the wrath to come. A Vaudois sister told me to-day that the principal conversation among ministers, professors and people in this vicinity was respecting myself and this mission; that in nearly every house there was a division in regard to what I preach, and that she suffered much persecution for her faith in the doctrines. She exhorted me to be of good courage, said I had proclaimed the truth to the people, and if they refused to obey it, I should be free from their blood in the last great day. One of the young men of whom I wrote you, Bro. John Geymat, who is preparing to become an evangelist, but who has a widowed mother to support by his labor in a silk factory, said to me to-day that since he attended my lectures the world had seemed to him very different from what it did before. He desires much to leave his present situation, where the associations are very distasteful to him, and engage entirely in the work of an evangelist; but at present he must assist his mother by the labor of his hands. He is an excellent brother, and I think is capable of doing much good. Dear brethren, pray for him.

The parish of St. Jean has a new pastor, who is making much effort to turn the hearts of the people against me, and the truths I preach. All the powers of the national church here are much stirred up against this new preaching, which they seem to fear will entirely overturn their established order. But all the opposition is out of sight. No one of all the ministers and professors here who labor so hard to keep the people from hearing and heeding my instructions, is willing to enter into a discussion with me upon the subjects on which they profess to think I am misleading their people. But I feel determined to go forward in the name and strength of Israel's God, notwithstanding all the opposition and discouragement I meet with, and sow the good seed, some of which I trust will fall on good ground and bring forth much fruit to eternal life. Human nature is the same in all ages and climes. The rulers of orthodoxy and the majority of the people have always rejected the truth of God, and always will. This is a sad truth, but we must accept it and be grateful to our dear Master for the privilege of laboring for the salvation of the few who have a heart to "strive to enter in at the strait gate."

I have now preached seven months in the parishes of La Tour and St. Jean, having delivered one hundred and eighty lectures, besides spending much time in private explanations of the Scriptures and endeavoring to enforce the solemn truths that lie so near my own heart. I now purpose to visit other parishes as the Lord shall open the way and give me access to the people. As the friends of the Italian Mission may be interested in reading something concerning these valleys, where the light of the gospel shone for so many centuries, amid the grossest surrounding darkness, I will devote a part of this letter to a brief description of the portion I have visited, and its people.

From Turin, in a southwestern direction, fifteen miles by railroad and six by omnibus, is the parish of St. Jean and the commencement of the valley of Luzerne. The nearly flat and somewhat monotonous scenery of the vicinity of Turin, is exchanged for a delightful plain a few miles in width, bordered with a superb chain of hills to the north, called in the Vaudois language, "La Costiere," which signifies a cultivated hill. These are covered with vines, fruit and nut trees, and dotted with many houses. To the south are also lofty hills, but more rugged and less cultivated. They yield however an abundance of nut trees of different kinds. A little to the west are grand mountains, now white with snow.

The little village of St. Jean contains a large Protestant church, curious in construction, having two steeples, and a smaller Catholic one. The parish of Angrogne, contiguous to St. Jean and north-west of it, is entirely mountainous. Its productions are principally fruits, vegetables and chestnuts. It is strongly fortified by nature, as it can only be entered by two passages.

Two miles across the plain, south of St. Jean, is the Catholic village of Luzerne, somewhat larger than St. Jean, but of little importance. It has two Catholic churches. The parish of Rora, some two miles south-west of Luzerne, is the smallest in this valley. It is very mountainous and poor. The chestnut trees, which are abundant, seem to be the principal resource of the poor inhabitants. Its village is small and mean, but it has one Protestant church.

Following the river Pellice, by which the valley of Luzerne is watered, westward two miles, we reach the village of La Tour, the most important in the three valleys of the Vaudois. It has one Catholic and one Protestant church. There is another ancient church or "Temple" a half mile further west, but it is not much used at present. La Tour has also its college and boarding school for girls, a hospital, and several factories of silk, cotton and wool. The parish of La Tour produces the vine, mulberry and fruit trees in abundance, with vegetables and nuts.

I would here remark that for fourteen years the vine has yielded no fruit until the past year, and then only by the use of sulphur upon the grapes at different stages of growth. By this means there were grapes the past year, but the crop was small and poor in comparison with former times. The scenery becomes grand and mountainous as we follow the river westward, toward its source.

About three miles north of La Tour is a grotto in the picturesque mountain called "le Vandelin," which has served as a refuge for the Vaudois in times of persecution, and which seems to have been formed by nature for this purpose. It has several rooms, some trees, a fountain, and an oven for baking bread; and is capable of containing three hundred persons or more. The only way of entering it is to descend through a hole by means of small steps which have been cut in the rock, and one can defend one's self at the entrance against an army. The parish of Villar joins that of La Tour, its village being between two and three miles farther west.

The valley is very narrow, but produces some grain and fruits, with chestnuts in abundance. The village of Villar has two churches, one Protestant and one Catholic, but is small and unimportant. The last parish in the valley of Luzerne is Bobbi, between two and three miles west of Villar, and quite similar to it in size and productions. It extends to the department of the high Alps. A walk of fifteen minutes from the village of Bobbi, and we reach the fort of Mirabeau, one of the keys to Piedmont. This fortress has so many natural advantages that one thousand men can here defend themselves against one hundred thousand. This valley is well watered by the river Pellice, and its branches, the Luzerne and Angrogne, and empties into the river Po.

But I have not time to write more at present. Pray for us. Your brother, rejoicing in hope of eternal life.

M. B. Czechowski.

La Tour, Pellice, via. Turin, Italy, March 1st, 1865.

For the World's Crisis.

THURMAN'S BLUNDERS.

1. "Mr. Thurman on page 123 of his work says that the shortest Jewish year consists of 354 days. Now if this is correct, three and a half of these shortest years consist of only 1239 days; but on the same page he says three and a half of these shortest years consist of 1269 days."

2. "On the same page (123) Thurman says the longest Jewish year consists of 384 days, and then adds that three and a half of these longest years consist of 1299 days, when really they make 1344 days." It is then asked, "Can a man who thus blunders be relied on to compute eclipses?" To which we reply, so far from Thurman having ever asked any one to rely upon his say so about the matter, his astronomical demonstrations are laid open to the criticism of the learned world, not only by giving the quantity eclipsed, but the time, even to the day, hour and minute, and if there is an error surely there are learned men enough to detect it and give us the truth.

When those who have resolved not to receive the truth are, with bitterness of soul, doing all they can to put us down, I prefer silence; but since a beloved brother (one who is not afraid of the light of truth) asks, saying, "Please tell me how this error crept into the book," we answer that the error is not in the book, but in those who, to the dishonor of God, have substituted the heathen method of reckoning time for that which God has positively enjoined to be used by his people: for those who honor God by using his sacred method of computing time are aware that at least once in three years we must have a leap year; hence three and a half of the shortest years we can have must consist of not less than 1269 days, thus: 354, 354, 384, 177,—1269. When it happens that the second year is a leap year, three and a half years must consist of 1299 days, thus: 384, 354, 384, 177,—1299.

3. Another blunder said to have been made by Thurman is, that "he says on page 218, that A. D. 1875 will be a leap year; and can we have confidence in the calculations of one unable to tell which are leap years?" To which we answer that those who are willing to hear a man before passing sentence of condemnation will, by reference to the work, learn that Thurman was computing time, not according to the heathen method, but according to God's own sacred method of reckoning time; and the sacred year which synchronizes with A. D. 1875 is a leap year.

4. Others have asked, "What proof have we that William Thurman is a competent astronomer?" In answer to which, we ask, which most becomes an humble seeker for the truth? is it to inquire whether Thurman has the worldly honor of being classed among the learned astronomers of the age? or whether he is correct in that which so much concerns the church of God? That which Thurman professes is not the honor of being called a learned astronomer, but to have proven that no astronomical tables can make all the ancient eclipses of the sun and moon in harmony with Ptolemy's canon; hence when your learned astronomers, in whom you are willing to place confidence, find that they can make them, then, and not till then, will they have proven that Thurman is not what he professes to be.

Again, Thurman professes to have discovered that all ancient eclipses, both of the sun and moon, can be and are found in harmony with that chronology established by the book of God. And when the learned, with all their modern improvements in astronomy, are able to prove this to be false, then it will be proven that Thurman is not what he professes to be.

5. It is asked, "What books has William Thurman studied?" We answer, he has studied the books of Moses, Joshua, and indeed all of the books that claim to contain a revelation from God to man. And Paul, at least, thought they contained enough to make one "wise unto salvation."

6. It is asked, "What observations has he (Thurman) made?" Answer: he has observed that though God's sacred book, which was to be "sealed up till the time of the end," is now opened, some who profess to be his servants do not manifest love enough for Christ even to inquire whether this be true or untrue.

7. "It has always been admitted by all of the learned world, that the pushing of the ram was against the kingdoms of earth; but Thurman says that it was against Daniel's people." To this we answer, if "the holy Scriptures are able to make us wise unto salvation," why may not the word of God be received as authority, weighing as much as the opinions of the learned? Now if we can humble ourselves so much as to exchange the doctrine and traditions of men for the clear authority of the express word of God, the question as to the "pushing" of the ram is clearly settled. For we are expressly informed that "the ram which thou sawest having two horns are the kings of Media and Persia."—Dan. 8: 20. Hence the "pushing" could not have commenced until after the rise of these two united powers; and since "the reign of the kingdom of Persia" did not begin until the end of the kingdom of "Babylon" (2 Chron. 36: 20), the "pushing" could not have commenced before that time. At the time Daniel saw the vision, "the two horns were high, but one was higher than the other, and the higher came up last." Dan. 8: 3. The first horn that came up, in extending its authority and power over Daniel's people, was that of the Medes, for "Darius the Median took the kingdom."—Dan. 5: 31. Hence the horn that came up last must be dated from an epoch later than the beginning of the reign of Darius the Median. Therefore we can not date the time at which the Persian horn "came up" at an earlier epoch than "the first year of Cyrus king of Persia" (Ezra 1: 1); and as the "pushing" did not take place before the rise of the second horn, it could not have commenced at an earlier date than the first year of Cyrus king of Persia. And if as early as that time, "the Lord God of heaven had given him all the kingdoms of the earth" (Ezra 1: 2); hence there were no kingdoms left for him to push against. If the word of God could weigh as much with men as the doctrines and traditions of men, how grossly absurd is it to say that the "pushing" was against the kingdoms of the earth. I must therefore conclude with "Gabriel," that the "pushing" was against Daniel's people, for he said, "I am come to make thee understand what shall befal thy people."—Dan. 10: 14. Against the "pushing" which Daniel saw, no living soul could stand before it, which was literally true; for "the posts went out, being hastened by the king's commandment, into all the king's provinces, to destroy, to kill, and to cause to perish all Jews, both young and old, little children and women in one day."—Esther 3: 13. But against the kingdoms of the world no such pushing did take place. The king of Persia never issued a decree for the slaying of all "living" in the surrounding kingdoms of the world. Before the pushing which Daniel saw, no living could stand; yet as regarding the kingdoms of the world "there was no power in the ram to stand before the goat."—Dan. 8: 7.

But it may be said, the Jews "stood for their lives." It is true that they did so, for they slew of their foes "seventy and five thousand." But so far from this being a resistance against the "pushing," it was not until the "pushing" was "turned to the contrary." And that which makes it further impossible to blend this with the "pushing, is the fact that it dates eleven months after. See Esther 9: 1, 15, 16. Instead of attempting to defend themselves against the "pushing," there was "great mourning among the Jews, and fasting and weeping and wailing, and many lay in sackcloth and ashes."—Esther 4: 3.

8. Again it is said that "Daniel, Ezra, Nehemiah, Mordecai, and others, held official positions in the Persian government, and were therefore for the time being a part of the ram power; and as the pushing of the ram was at other powers outside of himself, it could not be against the Jews." Before replying to this position, we first call for the proof that captive Jews "were for the time a part of the ram power." By reading the marginal note at the end of Dan. 1, in connection with the last verse of the same chapter, the conclusion is inevitable that Daniel must have been dead some sixty-two years before the ram began to "push," since he died in the first year of Cyrus king of Persia. As to Nehemiah, we learn from the first chapter of his book that he did not receive the appointment of "governor over the Jews" till eight years after the "pushing," and I have yet to learn that he ever had any office at the Persian court save that of "cupbearer to the king."

According to Josephus, Ezra had then been dead five years; and so far from his having ever exercised any civil authority at the Persian court, the facts in the case show him to have only exercised the office of "Priest and Scribe" to the Jews, in which capacity he returned with them from their captivity, by permission of Artaxerxes. And as to Mordecai, he did not receive his authority and position until some three months after the "pushing" had been made by the posts, who went out with the king's commandment to destroy the Jews. Hence I see no force to the argument that is brought to sustain the idea that the "pushing" was to be against the surrounding kingdoms of the world.

Wm. C. Thurman.

Boston, 26th of the 12th month, A. M., 5989.

For the World's Crisis.

HEALTH--TRAVELS--LABORS.

For God's glory and praise I think it duty, after more than a year's experience and practice on my renewed health, to confess again that the hand of the Lord has healed my bodily infirmities. Many of those who have heard me confess it with the mouth, will not regret to read it from my pen. Others may be encouraged by it who have heard, and gain renewed or increased confidence in God's healing mercy.

Those who saw and associated with me in the year '61, '62—'63, and who now see me, are surprised at the change which God hath wrought. I was then suffering from constant soreness of some twenty inches of the spinal column, often afflicted with severe pain. I became feeble, weak, much stooped forward, walked with a bad gait, and obliged to use a cane; often paralyzed so that I could not walk at all, nor use my pen. Two joints were thrown out, and curvatures forming in the spine. Our best physicians had done all they knew, and had pronounced it an incurable case, believing I would be fully paralyzed in a few months.

In this condition I, and many of my brethren and sisters, applied to God for my restoration. In about two weeks the numbness of my limbs, soreness of my spine, and pain in my back departed from me, and have not returned. Now fifteen months have passed. It is a miracle of God's grace. I made a public confession of this mercy soon after I was healed, but as some have seemed to doubt whether I continue free from the difficulty, I will say, that soon after the cure was effected, my general health improved, the curvatures disappeared, I could stand erect, walk a proper gait, laid by the cane, and during the past year my health has been better than any year during the last twenty.

Since I was cured I have traveled over three thousand miles, mostly with a horse team, attended about two hundred meetings, preached about one hundred and fifty times, and done much other work. Am now erect in walking, and well. Can preach six times a week without apparent injury to my health.

During the past winter I have visited Richmond, Litchfield, Newcastle, Whitefield, China, Searsport, Frankfort, Albion, Augusta, Bath, Bristol, Pemiquid, Rockland, Rockport, Camden, Hope, Topsham, Portland, Falmouth, Lewiston, Lisbon, Monmouth, Mt. Vernon, Stark, Farmington, Livermore, Hartford; and preached in most of those places, attended social meetings in some, and seen some of the Lord's children in all.

The word of the Lord is producing good results; believers in the truth are multiplying, and many new doors are opening for the message of the coming King to be preached. Yet there is quite too much fashion, vanity, worldliness, and folly. May God help us to be crucified with Christ, and live ready to meet him at his coming.

I. C. Wellcome.

Yarmouth, Me., March 19th, 1865.

For the World's Crisis.

CREDIBILITY OF HERODOTUS' ECLIPSES.

Bro. Thurman has called in question an eclipse of Herodotus, or at least the date of it, as incorrect. But the following extract from the "Penny Cyclopedia" calls him in question on another eclipse, involving him in a still greater mistake.

I. K. Lombard.

"In the reign of Algathocles a great eclipse took place while the Lydian and Median armies were fighting. (Herod. 1, 74.) The place where the eclipse was seen is not mentioned by Herodotus; but we may fairly conjecture that it was in the upper latitudes of Asia Minor, and between the Halys and the higher waters of the Euphrates. This eclipse was predicted by Thales of Miletus, but we cannot infer from the words of Herodotus that he predicted the day. All that the words of the historian can be made to signify, is that he predicted the year. But Herodotus knew so little of physical science, that we must not interpret his words too strictly.

"Scaliger says this eclipse took place Oct. 1st, 583 B. C.; Volney, Feb. 3d, 626; Mayer, May, 603. Costard (Philosophical Translations, 1753), showed by allowing for the moon's acceleration, that Mayer's eclipse was not seen at all in Asia Minor. Bailey has calculated (Phil. Trans. 1811) all the eclipses from B. C. 650 to B. C. 580, and has found only one that was total in or near any part of Asia Minor; viz., Sept. 30th, 610. The centre of the moon's shadow passed in the forenoon in a right line over the northeastern part of Asia Minor, through Armenia, into Persia. It passed over the mouth of the river Halys. If the eclipse mentioned by Diodorus to have taken place during the voyage of Agathocles, B. C. 310, be rightly given, a correction becomes necessary for the moon's distance from her nodes, which being allowed for, no eclipse between B. C. 650 and 580 was central or total at or near any part of Asia Minor. Therefore either the date of the eclipse of Agathocles, or Thales, is false."—Penny Cyclopedia, Art. Alyattes.

For the World's Crisis.

"HELP THE WOMEN."

"Rise up, ye women that are at ease; hear my voice, ye careless daughters; give ear unto my speech."
"Tremble, ye women that are at ease; be troubled, ye careless ones."—Isa. 32. 9, 11.

Dear Sisters in the Lord:—God is speaking to you by the mouth of the prophet, and will you hear him? It is better to obey than to sacrifice. I want to talk with you to-day, and if my brethren hear me, let them hold their peace, unless they can give us a word of encouragement by obeying the apostle Paul.

Some of you, my dear sisters, have felt for months that you must do something for God, labor more zealously in his vineyard; yea, have felt a trembling seize you at times, and a woe upon you if you preach not the gospel. Still you are disobeying God, settled down at ease in Zion, with the woe upon you, while the darkness gathers o'er your mind and clouds around your pathway. Oft you breathe a sigh with a solemn prayer to God for strength to do your duty. You see your way clear, and the solid rock to step out upon, but still you shrink, the cross looks heavy, some opposing friend or brother comes up before you, frail, timid nature gives way, and you are ready to cry out from the bitterness of your soul, O Lord, I cannot go! Hear the word of the Lord. "Rise up, ye women; tremble, ye careless ones"; tremble at the word of the Lord; not at the word of man, for it is God that is speaking to you, not man.

But you say you do not have the encouragement from our preaching brethren that you need. That is all very true; but remember, the preachers are not calling you to the work of the gospel, neither can they recompense you at the resurrection of the just for your work and labor of love; but God who is calling you will do it, for thus he has promised in his sacred word.

I am quite certain God's faithful servants will never try to lay a straw in the way of a faithful female while she plods her way over hills and through vales to sound the last note of warning to this doomed world. The last days have come, and the last day will soon be here. God spake by the prophet Joel, that in the last days he would pour out his Spirit upon his servants and handmaids, and they should prophesy, or proclaim; and surely if that Spirit was poured out upon the day of Pentecost, and it was called the last days, then may we not expect now in the last of the last days it may come more copiously upon the servants and handmaidens than we have seen it manifested in years that are in the past?

Brethren, suffer a word of exhortation in the name of the Lord. "And I entreat thee, also, true yoke fellow; help those women that labor in the gospel."—Phil. 4: 3. There are some in these days who need help as well as in the days of the apostle. Speak a word of encouragement to the trembling females. Say unto them that are of a fearful heart, be strong. Remember there was a Phebe and a Priscilla, a Mary and a Chloe, with many others, in the days of the apostles, that labored in the gospel field, and no marvel if God should send out many females in these last days to proclaim his truth (for the evil servants will not do it), who will need help, prayers, sympathy and encouraging words. Brethren in the ministry, will you help us in this way? Yes, methinks I hear a host saying, we will. God bless you. Amen, my soul replies. And may the trembling women hear it, and be encouraged to rise up in the strength of the Lord and go to work for the salvation of the perishing.

Thanks to Bro. McKinstry for his articles of encouragement through the Crisis. They have done us much good, and we feel encouraged to labor on in this glorious work until we are called from labor to reward.

Dear sisters, I would invite attention to the call of our dear Sr. A. E. Smith for a Convention of women. I believe she has been moved by the great Head of the church thus to do to help the timid, weak, and fainting ones, and we shall all do well if we heed the call. Will you go? By the help of the Lord,

I mean to be there, ready to work for God. Some of you may not have means to carry you so far. Look up. Father is rich. Pray over this matter. The way will open for you, and if you lack, write to me. I have got a rich Father, and I will divide with you, for I have never yet lacked any good thing. Brethren, help these women. A. MUSSEY.

DISTANCE TO THE THEOLOGICAL HEAVEN.

Modern speculations concerning heaven are a little amusing, and the conjectures about the distance there are pleasing. Not long since I listened to a lecture on Astronomy from Prof. ——, a minister of reputation, as well as a scholar, and admitted to be orthodox in his faith, and of almost uneclipsed notoriety. In his discourse he pictured out the sun as being in the centre of a great circle, with huge worlds revolving around it, outside of which circle he located heaven. Then after giving us the distance from earth to the outer world in the circle, he tried to simplify it to our capacity of comprehension by supposing a railroad to be laid from earth to that realm, and the cars to have started on the morn of creation, and to have run at the rate of thirty miles per hour ever since, day and night; stating that it would take them one thousand years more to reach it, at the same rate; that is, seven thousand years of travel, day and night, at railroad speed,—and heaven still beyond. After pausing to describe the different worlds in the circle, he remarked that when we died we should pass them on our way to heaven, and have a fair view of them all, "in a few hours."

Swift traveling, that! Going in a "few hours" beyond the point that railroad speed could not reach short of 7,000 years. Lightning would be a slow coach in comparison—like a snail trying to compete with the fiery steed on the race-course. Supple fellows those! The lightning couldn't flap its wings once before they would be out of sight,—nay, it would be out of breath to travel one mile while they were going a million miles! "Chariots of fire" would be obsolete wagons, that could not wait to ride in; and Elijah would have to trudge along behind. Really, having learned how smart they are to travel, when they get started, isn't this a solution of the mystery why we never see them leave the body at death?—they leap out so much quicker than lightning that we don't have time to see them. Wouldn't they need steel caps on their heads to cut the air so swiftly? They could fly from here to China, and back again a thousand times, while a man is drawing one breath. After having thus thrown the lightning into the shade, the thought of again being imprisoned in this material body must be repulsive, and the resurrection be dreaded.

O, insane theology!! The fruit of immortal soulism! The idea that earth is a soul-nursery, and heaven a soul-orchard, and that there is a constant transporting and transplanting going on, is foreign to Bible theology. Earth was primarily created for man, and the obedient will ultimately receive it for their home, when they are made immortal, and it is purified. The way to the saint's heaven is through the resurrection, or its equivalent, a change at the coming of Christ to set up his kingdom. W. SHELDON.

—Voice of the West.

Correspondence.

From Sr. L. A. Solter.

DEAR FRIENDS:—Do you think of Jesus, the blessed Son of God, who died to save you and me, that we through him might have everlasting life? For this cause we ought to be up and doing, praising our Master. We should do good to them that hate us and despitefully use us; love our neighbor as ourselves, and our enemies. "He that loveth not, knoweth not God; for God is love." "He that hath the Son, hath life; and he that hath not the Son of God, hath not life."

I am striving by the grace of God to enter into that kingdom of love, "where saints immortal reign," where sickness, sorrow, pain or death never can enter. Seek the Lord while he may be found. "Ye that seek me early shall find me." "Ask, and it shall be given unto you." "Knock, and it shall be opened unto you." Seven years this month since I joined the Lord's army. The cause is a good one. I am bound by the grace of God to fight my way through, and not let anything turn me back.

Brothers and sisters, think of Jesus; upon him rely; put your whole trust in him, for he careth for you; have faith, for without faith you can do nothing. L. A. SOLTER.

Plymouth, Vt.

From Sr. A. E. Smith.

Dear sisters scattered abroad:—Through the tender mercy and loving kindness of my heavenly Father, in answer to your many prayers, he has raised me up again, and to-day I am able to resume my duties in my field of labor. I love to work for Jesus. I love to talk about his many mercies, his goodness, his great love that he has had for me, that I should become a child of God. I love to walk into the sick room and take hold of the hand of one of his dear little ones as they are about to fall asleep in Jesus, and as life is ebbing out ask them how it is with them, and hear them whisper in my ear, "Jesus is precious," "Jesus is with me," "Jesus is my friend," "Jesus is my only hope; he has promised to be with me in this last struggle, and I find him as good as his word." Praise the Lord, that we can trust him even in death. I love to learn lessons of humility by the bedside of those who have passed through deep waters, those who give God all the glory. I praise God this day that I do know by personal experience that he has power on earth to forgive sin; that all we have to do is to believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and we shall be saved.

Sisters, if our hope in Christ here in the body is so good, what will it be when our hope is realized? when we shall see him just as he is, and be made like him? My heart burns within me when I think how short time is, and how soon we shall see Jesus.

> "O what a blessed hope is ours,
> While here on earth we stay;
> We more than taste the heavenly powers,
> And antedate that day."

May we be kept faithful till that day, and be enabled to hear him say, "Well done, good and faithful servant, enter into the joy of thy Lord."

Now, sisters, no doubt you wish to know something about our Convention. We have concluded to hold the first one at Poultney, Vt., as [illegible] a good opportunity to meet with us. The next one may be held in Phila. or Boston, as there does not seem to be spirit enough among the women of N. Y. city to hold one here. We shall hold it June 7th, as it will be impossible for me with my present engagements to attend any sooner. We shall commence Wednesday, June 7th, as it will take Monday and Tuesday to get to the place. We shall continue the meeting one week. We intend this to be a spiritual as well as a business meeting, and we invite all our brethren who are favorable to us to come. We shall conduct this meeting as near the following plan as possible: Prayer and conference meeting from eight to ten. Business meeting from ten to twelve. Prayer meeting from one to two. Business from two to five. Preaching every evening at half past seven o'clock.

We do hope as many of our brethren as possible will be with us, as we wish at the close to have a love feast and the Lord's Supper. Sisters, let us live for this meeting. Let us pray that God may own and bless us in every step that we take.

ANNA E. SMITH.

No. 128 East 27th St., N. Y.

From Bro. I. Damman.

BRO. GRANT:—Some five weeks ago a bad sore came on the back part of my neck. It prostrated me as much as a common fever, so that I have been unable to go out for more than three weeks; am just able now to go out a few miles to visit the sick in their afflictions. When the brethren see this, they will understand why I have not attended my appointments out West. The sore on my neck is called carbuncle; those that have had such know something what I have endured. I yet have a mind to work for God. Pray for me, that God will help me to stand straight and meekly for his truth in these days of evil and strife. My dear brethren, love one another. Do not get a spirit of wrangling. Consider one another. It is a day when we need mercy, and if we have it we must show it. God declares the meek shall understand time and judgment. Let judgment have a large place in our hearts. Then we shall understand God's judgments. So may grace, mercy and peace be with you all. Amen.

ISRAEL DAMMAN.

From Bro. J. Carr.

BRO. GRANT:—I have been doing what I could in new fields the past winter; have seen some good results, but it requires much labor to accomplish little in these times of infidelity. Truly, we are living in perilous times. I believe the generation that saw the darkness of the sun, A. D. 1780, will not pass away till the kingdom of God shall come. Bless the Lord, that we are so near the time when death will be destroyed, and eternal life be given to all that love the Savior's appearing. God grant that we may all be ready to meet him, and enter through the gates into the city, to be forever with our blessed Savior, who has done so much for us. We are living in a drowsy time. The Lord save us from sleeping as do others.

Your Bro. looking for immortality when the Life-Giver comes. JEREMIAH CARR.

South Albion, Me.

BRO. P. B. HOYT writes from Norwalk, O.: "We have been enjoying one of those blessed seasons of refreshing from the presence of the Lord. We have baptized twenty-five persons already, and there are eight to twelve more that will follow the Lord soon. Pray for us. Praise the Lord, Jesus soon is coming. Let us prove faithful.

Obituaries.

C. E. HARRINGTON.

Fell asleep in Jesus, March 18, 1865, Catherine E., wife of Daniel W. Harrington, of Harrison N. J., and daughter of the late George Carter, of Newark, N. J., in the thirty-ninth year of her age.

Sr. H. was a firm believer in the Advent doctrine, and maintained a consistent christian character until her death. Her disease was dropsy on the heart. She took medicine to relieve her distress and give her sleep. While sitting in her chair she quietly fell asleep, but never again woke, the nurse discovering that she had ceased to breathe.

> "Asleep in Jesus! blessed sleep,
> From which none ever wake to weep;
> A calm and undisturbed repose,
> Unbroken by the dread of foes."

It was my privilege to attend her funeral, and after the Episcopal service was read by the minister of the place, at the request of Bro. H., I was called upon (as a representative of the Advent people to which she belonged) to speak of her character as a christian and of the hope which she cherished until her death. The prospect of soon seeing her again, was truly comforting to the bereaved. She leaves two children, a little boy about three years and a babe three days old. That God may sustain and comfort our brother in this hour of bereavement and sorrow, is my sincere prayer.

A. H. BROWN.

L. BURROUGHS.

Died in Floyd, of typhoid fever, March 9, 1865, Lucinda Burroughs, aged sixty-eight years, six months and two days.

Sr. B. gave her heart to God in her younger days, and joined the Methodist church, and for many years walked in the light as she had received it. Four years since light was given her, and she embraced more fully the great and glorious truths of the blessed word; since which she enjoyed her mind far better than before. In her last sickness she was a great sufferer, but her mind was stayed on God. She often spoke of the glorious morn of the resurrection. She was firm in the belief that she should sleep until Jesus comes. Three hours before her death she talked to all her children, urging them to prepare to meet her in the resurrection morn. We believe she will sleep until the last trump shall sound, and the dead shall be raised incorruptible. B. L. C.

A. STANLEY.

Died in South Stukley, C. E., Feb. 8th, 1865, Sr. Amrilla Stanley, wife of Bro. Caleb Stanley, aged fifty-five years.

Sister Stanley was formerly a Methodist. Some three years ago she became interested in the speedy return of the Nobleman, and died in full faith. She leaves a husband and five children, and a large circle of friends, to mourn her loss, but not without hope. A discourse was delivered by the writer, from 1 Cor. 15: 16.

> "Asleep in Jesus, blessed sleep,
> From which none ever wake to weep;
> A calm and undisturbed repose,
> Unbroken by the dread of foes."

JOHN CHAPMAN.

ABBY M. ALLEN.

Fell asleep in Jesus, March 17, 1865, Sr. Abby M., daughter of Levi and Maria B. Allen, of Chicopee Falls, Mass., aged twenty-six years.

She has been a consistent and faithful christian from early youth; has suffered from a long and pining sickness, wasting her to a skeleton, but patient, cheerful, and confiding in Christ; faithfully exhorting all with whom she met; sinking finally into sleep without a struggle, and almost without warning: "The memory of the just is blessed." The parents and friends are sustained with the sure and certain hope of meeting her in the morning. "So He giveth his beloved sleep." [illegible]

E. C. RAMSEY.

Died in Piermont, N. H., Feb. 22d, 1865, of inflammation of the bowels, Edward C. Ramsey, only child of Sr. Augusta H. Ramsey, aged three years, ten months, seven days.

Thus my dear sister is called to mourn. In the short space of little more than fourteen months she has laid her husband and little son in the silent grave. Soon may the blessed morning dawn when our loved ones shall come again from the enemy's land, to bloom in immortal beauty in the paradise of God.

> Cease your weeping, dearest sister;
> Lonely mother, dry your tears;
> Eddie sleeps, but Christ will wake him
> When in glory he appears.

ANN E. CLARK.

BENJAMIN POTTER.

Died at his residence, Smith's Cove, County of Digby, Nova Scotia, on the 25th of June, 1861, my father, Benjamin Potter, in the eighty-fourth year of his age.

My father loved the Lord. He joined the Baptist church in early life, and remained a worthy member and deacon until his death. He always believed the saints would inherit the earth, after the resurrection. His house was always a home for the weary pilgrim, and his hand ready to relieve the poor and distressed.

JANE POTTER.

Died also, on the evening of the 1st of March, 1865, my mother, Jane Potter, in the eighty-eighth year of her age.

My mother never joined any sect, but she loved the Lord. She often said, she loved him just enough to want to love him more. She lived a christian life, and has gone down to the grave as a shock of corn fully ripe. May the Lord reward her at the resurrection of the just.

E. W. POTTER.

EMMA PUTNAM.

Died in Athol, Feb. 10th, 1865, Emma Putnam, daughter of Marton and Mary Ann Putnam, aged seven years, four months, and eight days.

She suffered very much, but bore it all patiently.

> Little Emma is at rest,
> Her hands are folded on her breast;
> She is safe from fear and care and pain,
> And soon she will wake to life again.
>
> Father, dry those tearful eyes,
> Jesus watches from the skies;
> All her sorrow and pain is o'er,
> Soon you will meet on the other shore.

LUTHERA B. WEAVER.

GEORGE RAMSDELL.

Bro. George W. Ramsdell, of Marblehead, Mass., died at Fort William Hospital, Vt., Feb. 21st, of typhoid fever, after an illness of four days, aged thirty years, three months and four days.

Bro. Ramsdell professed faith in Christ in 1856, and has ever since maintained a sterling christian character. He was embalmed and sent home. His funeral was attended by Bro. Rufus Wendell, who spoke words of comfort to the afflicted, from 1 Cor. 15: 2. JOHN GOODWIN.

MARY ALLEN.

Died in Fairview, Erie Co., Pa., Jan 17th, 1865, Mary, daughter of Bro. Lorenzo D. and Sr. Allen, in the —— year of her age.

The friends trust that she is another of those that sleep in Jesus, "whom God will bring with him" "from the dead" at the second coming of the Lord. God bless and comfort them through his precious promises. JOS. D. BROWN.

J. L. RICH.

Died in Charlestown, Mass., March 19th, Bro. J. L. Rich, aged forty-six years.

Bro. Rich was a christian, and sleeps sweetly in Jesus. In his death the church has lost a valuable member, and his family a kind husband and father.

MILES GRANT.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

Liverpool March 11th, Queenstown 12th.

Political news unimportant.

It is reported that the Emperor Napoleon was firmly resolved on maintaining the Empire of Mexico and honor of the French flag.

Advices of the 16th.

ITALY.

The King of Italy has signed a decree granting a full amnesty for political offenses.

Gen. Montebello had sent a dispatch to the French Government, requesting it not to withdraw at present any division of the French army now stationed in Rome, as otherwise it would be impossible to guaranty the maintainance of order.

The obsequies of the Duke de Morny were performed in Paris on the 13th with great pomp.

EVACUATION OF ROME.—France has informed the Italian government that the period of two years preceding the evacuation of Rome by the French troops will be calculated from the 6th of February last, that being the day on which King Victor Emmanuel left Turin for Florence. The 6th of February, 1867, therefore, will be a hazardous day for the Papal government. There is strong chance that, as soon as this main prop is removed, the whole superstructure of the Pope's temporal power will fall in disastrous ruin.—Ex.

DOMESTIC.

New Orleans, March 13. The Picayune's Extra says on Saturday last an attack was made on two batteries defending Mobile Bay, by the monitors. Two of them silenced the batteries, driving the men from their guns. This we obtain from an eye witness of the engagement.

New York, March 21. The Herald's Wilmington correspondence of the 15th says all the refugees, deserters and prisoners brought in by Gen. Sherman are being sent to that place. Two steamboat loads arrived that day. On the 14th, Sherman left Fayetteville, marching toward Goldsboro'. Before leaving the extensive arsenal was completely destroyed. It was the largest in the South. Every cotton mill and several residences were also destroyed. Six small steamers were burned.

The negroes who have followed Sherman will be sent to South Carolina.

The Herald's Washington dispatch says it was reported here yesterday that Davis had abdicated in favor of Lee, proposing that Grant and Lee settle the controversy and arrange terms of peace. It was also reported that the soldiers and inhabitants of Richmond were on the verge of starvation, Sheridan's raid having taken them by surprise and cut off their supplies. The rebel capital is in a state of chaos. Prices have more than doubled since Sheridan's raid.

New York, March 21. Richmond papers of Saturday say the rebel Congress adjourned sine die without passing any of the measures for the salvation of the Confederacy urged by Davis in his special message. The Congressmen are anxious to get out of Grant's trap as soon as possible and while they can.

They intimate that Stephens has deserted the cause.

From the expostulatory tone of various calls for negroes, it seems that the owners are not very willing to turn their slaves over to the government. Lee has printed another letter urging the carrying out of this measure.

Washington, March 22. The Republican extra says the Government has received intelligence that on Sunday last Sherman's army entered Goldsboro. His march was unopposed. Gens. Schofield's and Sherman's armies have formed a junction. The Republican says Sherman's present command is sufficiently formidable to confront Lee's whole army in open field without assistance of General Grant, and no force that the rebels may raise can impede Sherman's triumphant march northward.

The Richmond Sentinel of the 23d says Eastern Louisiana is infested with jayhawkers, robbers and murderers. The people are frequently found dead by the wayside. Even women are killed; in short, anarchy reigns supreme.

New York, March 23. The Commercial's special Washington dispatch says the War Department is reported to have received a dispatch from Fortress Monroe that Sherman arrived before the defences of Raleigh on Saturday. Having planted his guns in position to command the city, he sent in a summons to Gen. Johnston to surrender. The result is not given.

It is rumored on the street that Sherman had fought a battle with Johnston near Raleigh and defeated him. Gold fell to 160 in consequence of this report.

Washington, March 23. The Star says the mail boat to-day brought up five discharged soldiers, who left Wilmington on Monday morning on a steamer for Fortress Monroe. At Wilmington it was reported and generally believed that a portion of Sherman's army had entered Goldsboro without any resistance, and that Sherman himself entered the town on Sunday afternoon.

WASHINGTON, March 23.

To Major General Dix.

This morning at half past four o'clock the enemy by a strong and sudden assault captured Fort Steadman, but after a vigorous contest the fort was recaptured with 1600 prisoners, two flags, and all the guns uninjured.

Gen. McLaughlin was taken prisoner by the rebels, who also assaulted Fort Haskell, but were repulsed with great loss. E. M. STANTON,

Secretary of War.

Sherman, Schofield and Terry are in hourly communication with each other, and are pressing the enemy closely. Prisoners taken admit that they are unable to resist the combination, and that Raleigh must certainly fall.

THE FLOODS.—A letter from Rochester, N. Y., says about twenty-five stores were swept down the river into the lake, and there is hardly a dry building to be had for the love of money. Many who a few days ago were in affluent circumstances are reduced to penury. Stores, mills, bridges, etc. are all gone. Another account says that during the flood the gas works were submerged and the supply of gas cut off, thus adding darkness to the other terrors. Many men remained through the flood in their places of business, without being able to reach their homes.

A good business was done by many in transporting passengers across the water, and a round price was charged in some cases. The owners of some boats asked five dollars. A hack driver refused to take a woman and two or three children from a house where they were in danger of drowning because they had no means of paying him. Men were seen in boats in various parts of the city distributing bread to persons who could not get out of their houses. White flags were hung out from buildings as signals of distress.

A western paper says a most pitiable state of affairs exists along the shores of the Mississippi, from Cairo to Memphis, in consequence of the high water which is overflowing the whole country. The steamer Charmer, on her upward trip, was frequently hailed by families along shore, who had been driven from their houses by the rising flood, and had constructed rafts of rails, upon which they had placed their families and meagre effects, and were riding at the mercy of a flimsy clothes-line or bed-cord. A house floated down to Cairo, in which were found the bodies of a man and two children.—Boston Journal.

Condition of the Jews.

The Twenty-Seventh Report of the Episcopal Jews' Chapel Abrahamic Society, for visiting, corresponding with, and relieving the temporal wants of believing and inquiring Israelites. London, 1863. From this Report we learn the following facts:

"At the present moment there are about 20,000 Jews residing in the Holy Land. From the commencement of this century an unquenchable thirst after knowledge has manifested itself on the Continent amongst the Jewish people, which has no parallel in the history of any nation. Colleges, universities, and higher schools are attended proportionately by a much larger number of Jewish than christian students throughout Germany, Austria and France. In Prussia seven times more Jews than Gentiles devote themselves to the higher branches of knowledge, arts and sciences. The fields of polite literature, journalistic, arts and science, are filled with Jewish aspirants. Some of the best literary, political and scientific periodicals have been, and still are edited by Jews. Some of Germany's most conspicuous poets are Jews. Several of its most celebrated painters, engravers, medallists, musicians and composers are Jews, while there is scarcely a university but one or more chairs are occupied by Jews; and we thankfully add, many more by believing Jews. . . .

In England, in France, in Belgium, in Holland, in the kingdom of Italy, and in some minor states of Germany, the Jews have been entirely emancipated. In France and Belgium, all the officers of the synagogue are paid by government. The Jews in Poland who have hitherto groaned under much oppression, have obtained great privileges. They are permitted to buy real estate all through the kingdom; they may live in any part of the country; their testimony is received in every court; Jewish children are admitted to all schools, and the Jews are allowed to open schools of their own. Then those countries and towns from which the Jews have been hitherto excluded, even to our days, open now the gates to them."

THE POPE'S TIARA.—The Napoleon tiara, as it is called, is still in the service of the papacy. It has been repaired several times, and now serves for Pius IX., and was also made use of by Leo IX., Pius VII., and Gregory XVI. Its value is 217, 000f., and its weight is 8 lb.—8lb. of gold, rubies, pearls, and diamonds! This tiara is rarely worn. The Napoleon tiara was the only one possessed by the Pope, when, in 1855, the Queen of Spain sent another, weighing 3 lb., and worth about 300,000f. The three crowns in the Isabella tiara are similar, while in the Napoleon they are varied. It contains 12,000 precious stones. The top of the crown consists of a single sapphire.

☞ The Governor and Council have appointed Thursday, April 13th, for the annual Fast.

☞ It is stated that Queen Victoria will shortly visit Ireland, in great state, to open the Dublin Industrial Exhibition.

☞ The house of Rothschild has summoned all its agents abroad to a conference, which is about to take place in Paris.

☞ An international artistic and industrial exhibition is to open at Rome on the 6th of March, and to last six months.

☞ Molasses sold at 70 cents per gallon, and sugar at 12 cents per pound, at wholesale in New Haven, on Monday.

☞ A French Imperial decree is about to appear, appointing a committee for the arrangement of a grand Universal Exhibition of Art and Industry to be held in Paris in 1867.

☞ About fifteen hundred children are already attending the public schools in Charleston, S. C. There has been no parallel to this fact in the history of any captured city in the insurrectionary States.

☞ By the new postal law the system of free delivery is to be established in every place containing a population of fifty thousand, and at such other places as the Postmaster General, in his judgment, shall direct, provided that the prepayment on drop letters in all places where free delivery is not established shall be one cent only.

Married.

In Edinboro, Pa., Jan. 1st, 1865, by Jos. D. Brown, Bro. ISAAC N. VANMARTER and Sr. ELIZABETH A. BUNTING, both of Woodcock, Crawford Co., Pa.

In Loudon, N. H., March 19th, by Eld. T. W. Piper, Mr. MOSES E. STEVENS and Miss HENRIETTA BATCHELDER, both of Loudon.

In Cascade, March 1st, 1865, by Eld. P. W. Hough, Mr. ALONZO MACOMBER and Miss MARTHA HAMILTON, both of Cascade.

Notices.

Notice.

As I believe time is very short, and it behooves us to be up and doing, and as I have found many females that feel God has called them to labor in the vineyard of the Lord, but because of the prejudice of the church in its present cold and backslidden state, they are kept back from laboring as they feel God has called them to do; and as I believe that we are living in the day when God will pour out his spirit upon his handmaids, I therefore give this notice to all the women of America, independent of denomination or color, who feel that they have been called of God to preach, exhort, pray, or to write, on the subject of his speedy coming, and a preparation for that coming, to open a correspondence with me in reference to holding a convention of women, which will be held in the Poultney church, at Poultney, Vt., commencing Wednesday, June 7th, and continuing one week. All brethren are invited to meet with us. This convention shall be for the promulgation of all Bible truths; but no hobbies.

Now, sisters, let this be a missionary movement. Remember Jesus is at the door, and wickedness is abounding, and the love of many is waxing cold. Let us be up and doing, so that he may say to us, "Well done, good and faithful servant, . . . Enter into the joy of thy Lord." Let all who feel interested in this great work, make it a subject of special prayer at the hour of twelve o'clock, every day, that God may bless the effort that we may put forth to his honor and glory.

All brethren who are favorable to this convention are invited to assist us by advice, by kind words of encouragement. Address,

MRS. ANNA E. SMITH,

No. 128 East 27th St., New York City.

R. I. and E. Conn. Quar. Conference.

This conference will hold its next session with the church in Abington, Ct., commencing Wednesday, April 5th. Preachers and brethren from abroad are invited to attend. All churches connected with this conference are requested to report by letter at this meeting. Direct to the Clerk, at West Killingly, Conn., Box 87.

WM. H. CHAPMAN, Clerk.

Notice.

Those who are going to the conference, to be held at Abington, Ct., who start from Providence, can take the stage which runs to Danielsonville every day, starting, I think, about 11 o'clock, leaving the stage at Killingly Centre, six miles from the meeting. This is the cheapest way for those who can walk six miles. Those coming by railroad will take the Hartford and Providence train, stopping at Plainfield Junction. There take the Worcester train for Dayville. There will be a team at the depot on Wednesday, on the arrival of the cars about 5 P. M. All who want to be carried, must come on Wednesday. Distance five miles. Let there be a general gathering to this meeting. Bring the working power with you.

E. BELLOWS.

Illinois Annual Conference.

The Illinois Second Advent Christian Conference will hold its annual session at New Rutland, La Salle Co., commencing on Wednesday, May 24th, 1865, and continuing during the week and over Sunday. As this is in some respects the most important conference during the year, it is desirable to have a FULL ATTENDANCE.

Rutland is on the Illinois Central Railroad, some forty miles below Mendota.

E. ROYCE, Secretary.

Meetings in Burlington, Me.

Conference meetings will be held on the 4th Saturday in each month at Burlington, Me., Folsom's Ridge. Preaching brethren and others are invited to attend. SAMUEL HAMMONS.

Notice.

Preachers wishing to make appointments with the church in New Haven, Ct., will do so, in all cases, by previous correspondence with, and invitation of, the Corresponding Secretary, Ardin Hotchkiss, Fair Haven, Ct.

Notice.

Brethren wishing to send appointments to New Preston, Ct., are requested to correspond with the Secretary, H. J. BALDWIN.

Maine Second Advent Tract Society.

S. K. PARTRIDGE, R. R. YORK, I. C. WELLCOME,
Board of Managers.

I. C. WELLCOME, Secretary and Business Agent.

ISAAC WIGHT, Treasurer.

It was voted that all orders for tracts and books for distribution by this Society be addressed to the Agent, I. C. WELLCOME, Yarmouth, Me., who will supply them as fast as the means are furnished.

All our ministers will receive subscriptions for the Tract Fund, and they purpose to raise $200, or more, for free distribution in Maine this year.

I. C. WELLCOME, Agent.

Agency for Maine.

Having been solicited to take the agency for Maine of Bro. Himes' "New Chart of Daniel and John," I would say to any and all in Maine who wish it, I am prepared to furnish it at the regular retail price, $5.00, and to preachers (or others who wish them to sell) at a liberal discount. Address orders to I. C. WELLCOME, Yarmouth, Me.

Notice.

Elder Thomas Smith, Bangor, Me., has on hand for sale H. L. Hastings' "Signs of the Times," with an assortment of his various Tracts; also, the Tracts by Miles Grant, on "The Soul," "The Spirit, and "What is Man?" and other Advent tracts.

Appointments.

We would say to our preaching Brethren that it is necessary we should receive their appointments as early as TUESDAY MORNING, as our paper goes to press about noon, otherwise they will not be inserted till the week following.

LOWELL STREET CHAPEL, BOSTON, CORNER OF CAUSEWAY AND LOWELL STREETS. Meetings are held regularly three times every Sunday, and Tuesday and Friday evenings. Seats free.

Worcester, Mass. . . . Sunday, April 2d
MILES GRANT.

Lowell, Mass . . . Sunday, April 2d
WM. C. THURMAN.

Southington, Ct. . . . Sunday, April 2d
O. D. WOODRUFF.

Walbridge . . . Sunday, April 2d
E. OWEN.

North Canton . . . Sunday, April 2d
S. WOODRUFF.

Dover, N. H . . . Sundays, April 2d and 9th
THOS. M. LATHAM.

Haverhill, Mass . . . Sunday, April 2d
L. BOUTELL.

Holliston, Mass . . . Sunday, April 2d
H. K. FLAGG.

Concord, N. H . . . Sunday, April 2d
New Bedford, Mass . . . Sunday, April 9th and remain two or three weeks. J. COUCH.

Seitico . . . Sunday, April 2d
Forestville . . . Sunday, April 9th
RALPH WILLIAMS.

Boston, (East Hall) . . . Sunday, April 2d
Dover, N. H., Tuesday to Friday, (evenings), April 4th to the 7th.
Kennebunk, Me . . . Sundays, April 9th and 16th
C. E. PIPER.

Parsonsfield, Me., (where Bro. J. S. Moulton may appoint), Saturday, P. M., and Sunday, April 22d and 23d.
T. W. PIPER.

Biddeford, Me . . . Sunday, April 2d
New Boston, N. H., (where Bro. Dodge may appoint), Sunday, April 9th.
Nottingham, (where Bro. Geo. Randall may appoint), Sunday, April 16th. J. PINKHAM.

Warner, N. H., (Waterloo Village), Saturday evening, and Sunday, April 1st and 2d.
East Canaan, N. H., Saturday evening, and Sunday, April 8th and 9th.
Pittsfield, N. H., (at New Chapel), Sunday, April 16th
Bare Hill (school-house), Saturday evening and Sunday evening, April 15th and 16th. JOHN G. HOOK.

Chichester, (Pine Ground) . . . Sunday, April 2d
Concord . . . Sunday, April 16th
South Candias, (meeting-house, where Eld. Reynolds formerly preached) . . . Sunday, April 23d
S. S. MOONEY.

Boston, (Lowell Street) . . . Sunday, April 9th
Plymouth, Mass . . . evening, April 10th
Hartford, Ct. . . . Sunday, April 16th
New Haven, Ct., (where Bro. Tompkins appoints), Tuesday evening, April 18th.
Bristol . . . Sunday, April 23d
M. BATCHELOR.

Springfield, Mass., (Barnes' Block), April 9th and 16th
A. SIMPSON.

West Abington, Mass . . . April 2d
Lawrence, Mass . . . April 9th
Clinton, Mass . . . Sunday, April 16th
J. K. BELLOWS.

South Hope, Me., (funeral sermon) . . . April 9th
Branch Mills, China, Friday, April 14th, 2 o'clock, and hold over Sunday.
Brn. I. Wight and H. D. Reed are expected.
S. K. PARTRIDGE.

Danielsonville, Ct. . . . Sunday, April 2d
Abington, Ct., at the conference . . . April 5th to 8th
H. F. CARPENTER.

Plymouth . . . April 2d
Carver . . . April 9th
J. S. WHITE.

Cheshire Street, Ct. . . . Sunday, April 2d
South Windsor . . . Sunday, April 9th
Pine Swamp, Ct. . . . Sunday, April 16th
C. GOODRICH.

Sutton Mill Village, (where Bro. Bean may appoint), Sunday, April 2d. A. MUSSEY.

West Mansfield, Mass . . . Sunday, April 2d
J. N. SHERMAN.

Southbridge, Mass . . . April 2d
Westford, Ct., (at Bro. G. F. Chapman's) . . . April 4th
Intend to be at the conference at Abington, Ct.
Holden, Mass . . . April 16th
GEO. A. STREETER.

Westfield Farms . . . Saturday evening, April 1st
Montgomery . . . Sunday, April 2d
Walbridge . . . Sunday, April 9th
P. S. BUTLER.

Bangor, Me . . . Sunday, April 2d
Commence a protracted meeting at West Levant, (White school-house), Friday, April 7th, at 2 o'clock P. M., and continue over Lord's day. Preaching brethren are invited to come. Will Bro. Morill be with me there, and others if convenient? Brethren around are invited to come and help us. ISRAEL DAMMAN.

North Norway . . . April 2d
Stoneham, (as Bro. J. Howe may appoint), April 8th and 9th. C. M. CURRIER.

Lovely Street, (School-house) . . . Sunday, April 2d
WM. RIPLEY.

Goshen . . . Sundays, March 26th, and April 2d
H. PRATT.

Holden, Mass . . . Sundays, March 26th and April 2d
A. STIMSON.

Meredith Village, N. H . . . April 9th
[illegible]

Tamworth, (Birch Interval) . . . April 2d
Sandwich, (where Bro. A. H. Hoyt may appoint) April 9th
T. W. PIPER.

Business.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

J. W. Thomas—Have none of the "Two Hundred Stories," nor of the work on the Sabbath. Have sent tracts for the balance.
R. Woodward—See No. 486. Crisis $1.17; book 83c.
L. M. Goodyear—Due from No. 466.
Mrs. M. A. St. Clair—The former remittance was received and credited. The book is $1.75.
A. Amos—It was meant for you.
S. Y. Ives—From what P. O. is it to be changed?
J. Chapman—Paid to No. 509.
L. E. Saulpaugh—Have none of that No. left. Have sent tracts for the amount.
S. Mason—None other to that place.
J. A. Blake—To No. 501.
F. Burr—Published in Waverly, Mich.

CASH RECEIPTS FOR THE CRISIS.

To find how your account stands.

The present No. of the Crisis is 495. The No. which follows your name is the No. to which you have paid.

If the No. paid to, is greater than the present No., the difference shows how many weeks you have paid for in advance. If the No. paid to, is less than the present No., the difference shows for how many weeks you owe.

For every week of indebtedness before No. 468, charge (at the old rate) four cents; and, for every week of indebtedness since No. 468, charge (at the new rate) five cents,—and you have the amount due the office. (This, however, will give a trifle more than the amount due. To make it exact, deduct four cents for every dollar due before No. 468, and five cents for every dollar due since No. 468.)

$1.00 each.—J Chapman 413, E S Gage 505, R B Blackstone 247, W. Warner 494, L J Marry 497, S W Tibbetts 516, E Melcher 525, L Wolford 515, J Wallace 514, N Knapp 600.

$1.25 each.—B Franklin 520, C. Willoughby 519, D. Chase 516, W Hyde 520, J Small 512, S Stearns 520, R C Jackman 520, R Rickett 464, M Steere 520, J K Paine 514, H F Fry 518, Henry (?) Burleigh 492, E C Field 499, J Sawyer 520, H Greenleaf 520, P Clark 520, M A Joyce 520, E Marquand 522, J B Palmer 521, S C Wilcox 492, H Preebles 522, G W Grey 494, O A Hartford 521, J B Paine 520, D Foster 520, A Holt 519, Mrs. A B Angell 525, W Diley 520, L M Eccleston 516, G Wentworth 521, S Loud 520, A Jewett 527, H Burroughs 518, F C Ferguson 520, S D Applebee 524, T Blodgett 520.

$1.50 each.—E R Southwick 507, Mrs. J W Mowbray 532, Mrs. (Stephen ?) A. Holland 520, C. Heath 494, W. Rowarth 536.

$2.00 each.—Dr. A. Decker ($1.87 on old acct) 454, S L Garvin 524, T M Brewster 537, A H Smith 471, Mrs M Forrester 474, W M Webster 498, J B Whittier 436, R H Clark 466, J. Spicer 505, I J. Stedman 536, C. S. Libby 554, J W Trott 486, F P Smith 550, D D Clark 510, S Perkins 492, E A Sackett 535, J J Austin 546, W. STUART (what P. O.?)

$2.50 each.—L H Brigham 546, A E McAllister 596, E D Searles 546, Mrs. D Hitchcock, Mrs. W Thrall 508, S P Clark 572, S T W Sleeper 546, R. A. Haggett 516, Mrs. L Lee 546, J C Hutchins 546, A Webster 538, W H Ford 533, B Quint 520, R C Railsback 553, C Railsback 542, J A Pooler 519, E. W. IVES (from what P. O.?) P A Bronson 520, E M Skinner 546, M Shaw 532, B Webster 546, A. Haskell 546, J. S. Atwood 547, A. Peacock 546, J S Gavitt 523, J Hutchins 520, E Hutchins 536, H E Perkins 512, M B Hubbell 512, N Railsback 542, M A Wood 546, Mrs. P Varney 546.

Various Sums.—M A (Wm. E ?) Harris 50c, 478; J P Grover $3.25, 559; C Wakefield 65c, 501; A T Bunnell $3.11, 493; J C Stewart $11.25, 520; H W Burlingame $1.12, 494; J W Eaton $7.00, 541; B. F. Dudley $3.00, 503; C E Stevens $3.75, 544; L T Moses $4.00 568; A Burnett $1.02, 489; J West $6.75, 544; T Walker $5.00, 548; S Lombard $4.00, 505; S A Hayes 60c, 506, S Mason $5.00, 453; W Main $3.00, 511.

FOR BOOKS AND TRACTS.

I Kulp 90c, J W Town 30c, G Huston 25c, O D Woodruff $1.02, S C Wilcox 25c, G W Denney $2.55, A Mussey 70c, J Hoyt 45c, W H Hacking $1.50, P B Hoyt 36c, J E Marsh $1.70, E D Searles $1 70, S. Nye $4.00, H. Rowell 25c, I B Potter 50c, A. Lewis $2.25, A Burnet 28c, E M Smith 22c, M A Mason $1.25, C Colomy 25c, W Main 41c.

BOOKS AND TRACTS SENT.

BY MAIL—S Nye, O D Woodruff, N F Nason, W W Smith, W H Hacking, P B Hoyt, T M Redhead, Mrs M H Dagle, C B Ricker, J P Babcock, C M Currier, R. Hudspeth, J B Johnson, E Braley, A Cassell, A Amos, C A West, J R Boynton, L E Saulpaugh, M A Mason, W. Main, J E. Marsh, C. Colomy, S. J. Edgerly, J. S. Hindes, C Sweet, J H Cotton, J N Taylor, G E Newcomb, A W Bethell, S H Dearborn, Mrs. Herbert, C. C. Gregory, E Keith, J C Newhouse.

LETTERS RECEIVED.

Wm. Nichols, L Barber, O R Fassett, A E Smith, D F Newton, A H Stokes, Wm Crewdson, E. P. Beach, I A Thayer, J Carr, G W Denny, T E Clark, A. Mussey, I Damman, E Hutchins, L Elliott.

POST OFFICE ADDRESS.

C. Goodrich—West Winsted, Ct.
J. C. Wheeler—Carthage, Me.
H. F. Carpenter—Rutland, Vt.

ENGLISH BIBLES FOR SALE.

We can fill no more orders for English Bibles except for the following: DIAMOND, fine print, marginal references, at the following prices:

Morocco, $1.75, postage 12 cents. Calf, one copy, $1.40, postage 12 cts. Roan, gilt, $1 10; postage 12c.

Address MILES GRANT, Boston, Mass.

BOOKS FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

THE EMPHATIC DIAGLOTT: containing the Original Greek Text of the New Testament, according to the Recension of Dr J. J. Griesbach, with an Interlinear Word-for-Word English Translation, based on the renderings of eminent critics, and on the various readings of the Vatican Manuscript (No. 1209) in the Vatican Library; with Notes, References, and an Appendix. 880pp. 12mo. Price, plain leather, $4.00; extra, gilt, $4.50; Turkey morocco, $5.00. Postage, 16 cents.

THE NEW TESTAMENT of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ; with brief Notes and Instructions; containing the references and marginal readings of the Polyglott Bible; also the Psalms, Maps, and Harmony of the Gospels. Published by the American Tract Society. For family use. $1.75; by mail, $1.90.

DICTIONARY OF THE HOLY BIBLE, for general use in the study of the Scriptures, with Engravings, Maps, and Tables. Published by the Amer. Tract Society. This is one of the best. Cloth, $1.50; by mail, $1.75. Sheep, $2.00; by mail, $2.25.

CANON OF THE HOLY SCRIPTURES examined in the light of History. By Prof L. Gaussen, of Geneva, Switzerland. Translated from the French, and abridged by Edward N. Kirk, D. D. $1.75. By mail, $2.00.

CRUDEN'S COMPLETE CONCORDANCE to the Holy Scriptures. New and condensed edition. Edited by John Eadie, D. D., L.L.D. Cloth, $1.50; by mail, $1.80. Sheep, 2.00; by mail, $2.30.

THURMAN'S BIBLE CHRONOLOGY, or, The Sealed Book of Daniel Opened. A work for every Bible Student. $1.50; by mail, $1.75.

WHY THE SHOE PINCHES. A useful little work, with cuts, showing the conditions of a healthy foot, the causes of deformities, and how to avoid those troublesome diseases and malformations, such as chilblains, corns, bunions, flat-foot, bent-up toes, grown-in nails, etc. Price, 30 cents.

THE SCRIPTURAL QUESTION BOOK. "Sanctify them through thy truth: thy word is truth." A valuable help to Sunday School and family instruction. 127 pp. Price, 15 cts.; postage 4 cts. $1.50 per dozen; postage 8 cts. on every three copies.

THE TAKING OF HUMAN LIFE incompatible with Christianity; with remarks on the present crisis. By T. F. Tukesbury. Price, 8 cts.; postage 2 cts. A tract for the times.

THE SYRIAC NEW TESTAMENT. A literal translation from the Syriac Peshito Version. By James Murdock, D.D. Price $2.50. Postage 36 cts.

NON-RESISTANCE; or, the Spirit of Christianity restored. By W. C. Thurman. Price 20 cts.; postage 4 cts.

CHLOE LANKTON; or, Light beyond the Clouds. A Story of Real Life. 75 cents. By mail, 87 cts.

MULLER'S LIFE OF TRUST. A Narration of the Lord's dealings with George Muller, written by himself. $1.75; by mail, $2.00.

DIPHTHERIA: its Causes, Treatment, and Cure. By James C. Jackson, M. D. Price, 10 cts.; by mail, 12 cts.

Home Thrusts, and Home Thoughts. The Golden Rule in High Life and Low Life, and in the Family Circle. By D. F. Newton. [illegible]

Louis Napoleon, the Destined Monarch of the World, and Personal Anti-Christ. With seven Diagrams and two Maps. Fourth edition enlarged. By M. Baxter. [illegible]

C. F. HUDSON'S WORKS.

Debt and Grace. Or the Doctrine of a Future Life, by C. F. Hudson. [illegible]

Christ our Life. The Scriptural Argument for Immortality through Christ alone. [illegible]

Human Destiny. A Critique on Universalism. [illegible]

The Doctrine of Endless Misery an occasion of Scepticism. [illegible]

Eternal Death in the literal sense is Eternal Punishment. [illegible]

The Rich Man and Lazarus. With remarks on Josephus. [illegible]

The Rights of Wrong; or, Is Evil Eternal? [illegible]

Reviewers Reviewed. New edition with replies to [illegible]

JACOB BLAIN'S WORKS.

Death not Life; or, The Destruction of the Wicked [illegible]

Glad Tidings; or, Bible Proof that Woe and Sin are to end in the universe [illegible]

The Wicked not Immortal. [illegible]

Bible Meaning of the Word Hell. [illegible]

Endless Misery not a Bible Doctrine. [illegible]

Smoke of Torment, and Unquenchable Fire Explained. [illegible]

Bible Meaning of Forever and Everlasting, &c. [illegible]

Letter of Rev. John Foster on Future Punishment. [illegible]

BOOKS AND TRACTS.

[illegible]

All orders for any of the following works must be addressed to MILES GRANT, Boston, Mass.

MILES GRANT'S WORKS.

Resurrection of the Wicked. Discussion with [illegible]

Eternal Suffering. Discussion with Dr. J. Litch. [illegible]

State of the Dead. Discussion with W. W. Clayton, "On the State of the Dead and the Punishment of the Wicked." [illegible]

Miles Grant's Tracts. 32 pages each. Price 5 cents single. [illegible]

What is Man? A Bible view of his creation; The meaning of Soul, Spirit, Death, and Hell.

The Soul, What is it? Or a careful examination of all the uses of the words nephesh and psuche as employed in the old and new Testaments.

The Spirit, What is it? Or a careful examination of all the uses of the words ruach and pneuma as found in the old and new Testaments.

The Rich Man and Lazarus. Thief on the Cross; Souls under the Altar; an exposition of Matthew 10: 28, Genesis 35: 18, &c.

EXPOSITORY WORKS ON PROPHECY. BY S. S. BREWER.

1. The Days in which we Live. This is a concise history of the Four Great Monarchies—Babylon, Medo Persia, Grecia, Rome Pagan, Rome Papal—in its present condition, as viewed by the light of Revelation. [illegible]

2. An Exposition of the Seven Seals. History and facts applied in a manner plain and easy to be understood. [illegible]

3. The Slaying of the Witnesses. Showing that the "Second Woe" ended with the Reign of Terror in France. [illegible]

4. A Treatise on Revelation XIII, in Two Parts. [illegible]

5. The Kingdom of God and Signs of the Times. [illegible]

6. The Last Day Tokens. No. 1. This is an argument based upon Amos 3: 7—"Surely the Lord God will do nothing, but he revealeth his secret unto his servants the prophets." [illegible]

7. Last Day Tokens. No. 2 is an answer to the question, "What shall be the Sign of thy coming, and the end of the World?" [illegible]

8. Last Day Tokens. No. 3. This is a phenomenal compend, containing a history of the Signs in the Sun, in the Moon, and in the Stars; Meteorological Wonders, Fearful Sights and Great Signs in the Heavens—Blood, Fire, and Pillars of Smoke, &c. [illegible]

9. The Great Image soon to be dashed to pieces. Price 4 cts., postage 1 ct.

10. The History of an Immortal Soul. Mythology and Theology vs. Bible; embracing testimony from the above sources, concerning the nature and destiny of souls. [illegible]

11. Rich Man and Lazarus. New edition, revised, and enlarged. [illegible]

One copy of each of the above works sent by mail for $1.25

MISCELLANEOUS.

Cruden's Condensed Concordance, by which any passage of Scripture, of which only a single word is remembered, can at once be found, and every place where any word occurs in the English Bible, can be seen at a glance. [illegible]

The Life of Trust. An account of the Lord's Dealings with George Müller, Director of the Orphan Houses of Bristol, England. [illegible]

A Treatise on the 24th and 25th chapters of Matthew, showing by copious extracts from History, the fulfillment of Christ's Predictions, and the Kingdom of God soon to come. By I. C. Wellcome. [illegible]

Should Christians Fight? A pamphlet on War, embracing the Scripture argument against fighting, and the testimonies of the Primitive Church. By I. C. Wellcome. [illegible]

The Bible from Heaven, or a dissertation on the Evidences of Christianity. By M. Hall. 25c, postage 4c.

America in Prophecy. Exposition of the 18th chap. of Isaiah, showing its application to the United States of America in the present conflict, and end of the dispensation. By O. R. Fassett. [illegible]

The Celestial Railroad, or Modern Pilgrim's Progress. After the manner of Bunyan. Vividly representative of the present-day professors of religion. [illegible]

The Three Kingdoms, or the Kingdom of God the Father, the kingdom of Satan, the kingdom of the Lord Jesus Christ; or, a view of this world as it was, as it is, and as it is to be. By T. M. Preble. [illegible]

The Ten Virgins, or Wisdom and Folly contrasted. By T. M. Preble. [illegible]

The Two Adams. By T. M. Preble. An interesting tract. [illegible]

Messiah's Mission, or an exposition of the Gospel Covenant, as comprehended in the Scriptures of truth. By C. F. Sweet. [illegible]

The Excellency of the Lord's Anointed, or Christ the promised Messiah. By Mrs. Mary A. Seymour. [illegible]

Everybody's Book. The Bible View of the personality of God. The Devil: his origin, personality, power, and doom. By Phineas A. Smith. [illegible]

Cook Book. By Dr. F. W. Hurd. This book gives instructions for preparing all the articles of food used at Dr. Jackson's celebrated health institution, denominated "Our Home," Dansville, N. Y. Price 15c, postage 2c.

Premature Decay of American Youth. By Dr. A. Stone. This is a valuable work, and should be read by all the young. [illegible]

The Saint's Harvest, or an exposition of Matt. 24: 13, in connection with Dan. 12: 11-13. By H. K. Flagg. [illegible]

The Old and New Covenant. Superiority of the New. By A. W. Sibley. [illegible]

The Christian Lyre. A collection of Hymns and Tunes for Worship. [illegible]

A Disquisition on the Prophecies. By F. H. Berick. [illegible]

An Appeal to Pious Trinitarians. By H. Grew. [illegible]

THE BIBLE STUDENT'S LIBRARY.

A Series of Volumes Edited and Published by H. L. HASTINGS, 167 Hanover St., Boston, Mass.

Each vol. contains over 400 pages, uniformly bound in Cloth and in Paper Covers. Sold separately or in sets. Single volumes sent post-paid on receipt of the price.

IMPORTANT BOOKS, WORTH BUYING, LENDING, READING, AND PRESERVING.

I. THE SIGNS OF THE TIMES; or, a Glance at Christendom as it is. By H. L. Hastings. Cloth $1, paper 50 cts.

A sad exhibition of the predicted perils of the Last Days; the selfishness, hypocrisy, and crimes of Christendom, as shown in STATISTICAL ACCOUNTS of the slave trade, cotton trade, opium trade, Coolie trade, and the licentiousness, illegitimacy, child murder, bloodshed, and military preparations of this age.

II. THE VOICE OF THE CHURCH on the Coming and Kingdom of the Redeemer. By D. T. Taylor. Edited and prefaced by H. L. Hastings. Cloth $1, paper 50 cts.

A history of the doctrine of the reign of Christ on earth, containing the views and testimonies of nearly four hundred of the greatest preachers, reformers, and writers the church has ever known, concerning the establishment of the future glorious Kingdom of God, under the whole heaven.

III. THESSALONICA, OR THE MODEL CHURCH; A Sketch of Primitive Christianity; and REASONS FOR MY HOPE, or the Tokens of Speedy Redemption, by H. L. Hastings; and SPIRITUALISM A SATANIC DELUSION, by Wm. Ramsey, D.D. Cloth $2, paper 50 cts.

"Thessalonica," portraying the faith and practice of the early Christians; "Reasons," exhibiting the hope of the Church, the fulfillment of prophecy, the spread of the gospel through Missionaries, Bible and Tract Societies, etc.; and "Spiritualism," unveiling and exposing the monster delusion of Satan in these latter times.

IV. THE GREAT CONTROVERSY BETWEEN GOD AND MAN; its Origin, Progress, and End; with numerous TRACTS on Prophetical and Practical subjects. By H. L. Hastings. Cloth $1, paper 50 cts.

The "Controversy" sketches the History of the World since man's revolt from God, narrates the judgments already inflicted upon the nations of the earth for their iniquities, and those more terrible and exterminating calamities yet to overwhelm the nations, and prepare the way for the establishment of a divine government upon the earth.

The TRACTS are, "The Church not in Darkness," "The Three Worlds," "The Last Days," "Plain Truths," "Ancient Landmarks," "Important Questions," "Olive Leaves," etc. etc.; a valuable and spirited collection.

V. FUTURE PUNISHMENT, as Taught in the Scriptures; with the various Doctrines of Men upon this subject. By H. L. Hastings. Cloth $1, paper 50 cts.

Containing "Pauline Theology," or Future Punishment as Taught by Paul; "The Old Paths," or the Doctrines of the Apostolical Fathers; "Retribution," or the Resurrection and Punishment of the Wicked; "Will all Men be Saved?" an Antidote for Universalism; "The Destiny of the Wicked," a Scripture Tract; "The Decrees of Popes and Councils on the Immortality of the Soul"; with The Views of Justin Martyr, Luther, Jeremy Taylor, Milton, and Bishop Law on the state of the dead, etc.

CASH PRICES.

[illegible]

SEPARATE PAMPHLETS NOT BOUND IN CLOTH.

[illegible]

June, 1864. H. L. HASTINGS, 167 Hanover St., Boston.

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

For the World's Crisis.

THE PROMISED LAND.

"The righteous shall inherit the land, and dwell therein forever."—Psalms 37: 29.

Sweet land of vernal fruits and flowers,
I sigh for time to close,
That I may reach thine Eden bowers,
And rest in sweet repose.

Here storm-clouds hover round my head,
And Satan tempts me sore;
But just beyond I see the land
Where we shall weep no more;

Its rivers seem like streams of gold
To my enraptured view,
And verdant plains appear in sight,
With skies of richest hue;

The birds with golden plumages
Are flitting through the trees,
While incense from the tree of life
Is borne upon the breeze.

The clarion of war is hushed
Within that heavenly land;
For nought but peace and quiet reigns
Among that ransomed band.

O Father, we will patient wait,
For thou wilt "quickly come,"
To change our bodies now so vile,
And call thy children home.

The storm-cloud of the judgment day
Is even now at hand;
And if we faint not by the way,
We'll reach the promised land.

MELISSA A. WILBUR.

For the World's Crisis.

LETTERS ILLUSTRATIVE OF CHRISTIAN EXPERIENCE.

NUMBER FIVE.

To, MRS. L.:—My dear Sister,—The incident reserved for my next communication I will now relate to you. Not long after the one previously related, I was attending a campmeeting at S——. On Sunday, the last day of the meeting, there were quite a number of people baptized. A meeting was appointed at a private house for the next morning, for the special benefit of the converts—a parting interview of prayer and conversation.

At the commencement of the services a middle-aged lady arose and requested prayer for her daughter. She stated that she had been awakened with the rest, and she had hoped to see her converted and baptized with them. Her own mind had been much exercised in regard to baptism, and it had been her purpose to go forward with her daughter. She endeavored to persuade her to attend the meeting, but she declined, and seemed dejected. It was her principal design in coming to ask that prayer might be offered for her salvation.

While others were engaged in prayer, my own mind was exercised in respect to this daughter. I was very sensibly impressed with the fact that she had already found peace in believing, and I must visit her and persuade her to go forward in baptism before the ministers left the place. As soon as the exercises closed, I addressed her mother, and inquired where she lived. She told me it was half a mile distant, and gave the direction. I said to her, "Your daughter has found peace; the Lord has converted her soul." She looked at me with surprise. I told her I must go and see her; and with doubt expressed by one minister, and confidence and encouragement from the other, I started, having first obtained their promise to wait my return.

I found the girl alone, and began to question her respecting her state of mind. In reply she stated that she had found her Savior three days before, had desired to be baptized, but no one conversing with her respecting it, and being very timid in disposition, she had kept her feelings to herself. Her young friends going forward in the ordinance, she felt as though left behind and alone, and was much cast down thereby. But God would not suffer her to be thus left without the fold, and had now through the leadings of his Spirit brought to light her position, and opened a way for her to be brought into closer fellowship with his people. Her mother came in while we were conversing, and on her manifesting some doubt respecting the matter, I proposed bringing it before God in prayer. So apparent were the workings of the Spirit, she no longer opposed, but declined going forward herself as she had designed.

Her daughter left the house with me, and I lifted my heart to God in behalf of the mother, that she might be so troubled as to follow. After some conversation with the ministers, it was decided for her to be baptized, and then she expressed the wish that her mother might be present. I said to her, "Your mother will be here presently." Soon she appeared with a bundle of clothes for herself and daughter, and remarked that she was so troubled in her mind after we had left that she had concluded to go also. We then repaired to the water, and they were buried beneath the wave. One other, who had not obeyed this command, also went forward in this ordinance. When I beheld the result, think you not my heart rejoiced that the tender youth was not left to her sadness and loneliness, which would probably have led her to give up her faith?

"How could you know, Sister W., about her condition?" inquired a sister, after the close of the services. "By the communications made to my mind by the Holy Spirit," was my reply. I never saw either party till that morning. I knew nothing respecting them, except what the mother stated in the meeting. As she did not know of her daughter's conversion, but asked that prayer might be offered for her salvation, and at first doubted the fact when stated to her, of course it was not impressed on my mind by a mesmeric influence derived from her. I believe that it was given to me, just as the Spirit gave to Philip the command, "Go, join thyself to that chariot." Philip obeyed, and the result was the conversion and baptism of the eunuch straightway.

And, in connection with that beautiful incident, we see illustrated not only the fact of divine guidance, but of divine providence. The eunuch as he rode along was reading the fifty-third of Isaiah, so beautifully descriptive of the sufferings and death of Christ; and when Philip drew near and heard him read, he asks, "Understandest thou what thou readest?" He replies, "How can I, except some man should guide me?" Then he invites Philip to sit with him, and inquires of whom the prophet is speaking, of himself, or of some other man? Then Philip begins at the same scripture, and preaches unto him Jesus. The argument is convincing; he believes, and is baptized. Methinks he early found the "shorter way."

If we lived nearer Christ; if we trusted more implicitly in him for guidance; if we were more fully led by the Spirit, and if we gave greater heed to God's providences, we should not be such strangers to experiences like these. They are far too rare, and those who do have them seldom speak of them, lest they, perhaps, be deemed fanatical. But few can understand and appreciate these inward teachings, yet it would be better, possibly, if they were made more prominent, for the encouragement of others. I am aware that there is danger of being misled by a false spirit; but is there not danger, also, in disregarding the voice of the true Shepherd, by over carefulness lest we take heed to that of a stranger?

I have not time to enlarge upon this point. The doctrine of divine guidance and providence has for many years been deeply inwrought in my experience, and I prize it as a very precious truth. We can very clearly trace its workings in the biographies of the Bible. Adieu for the present.

M. D. W.

For the World's Crisis.

PEN PICTURES OF BIBLE SCENES.

NUMBER NINETEEN.

FALL OF JERICHO.

The towering walls and frowning battlements of Jericho arose in the plain, a seeming bar to the further progress of Israel. Its streets were thronged with legions of warriors, and its walls defended with lofty towers and men of valor. How could its strong walls be battered down without engines, and its strength overcome by men unused to war? The mighty machinery of war was not to figure in this strange siege, for there was an arm unseen, yet mighty, on the side of those who came to the attack of the wicked heathen city. Obedience to the will of the unseen power was all that was required for a complete triumph. There might have been some inquiring on the part of the people as they marched around the strong-walled city; but Joshua doubted not; he gladly obeyed the command of Heaven and calmly awaited the result.

The warriors of Israel, with their trumpets of rams' horns, followed the priests and the ark of the covenant around the city for six mornings in succession. This mysterious march was made in awful silence. No sound arose save the solemn tramp of the warrior host and the wild blast of the priests' trumpets. Each morning this scene of wonder and unknown import was enacted before the eyes of the doomed city. To those who thronged the walls it was a strange scene for an armed host of besiegers to make no demonstration of hostility, but simply to march in solemn array about the walls. As day after day passed away and this same scene was enacted, it seemed like a farce, and began to be derided by the warriors of Jericho, who scorned such unheard of strategy in war.

At length the seventh day dawned upon the scene. Nature boded no ill to the well-defended city. The morning breeze made sweet music as it sighed through the branches of the date trees, and the rising sun met a scene of beauty and fertility as it rose over the craggy hills of Palestine.

Once more and for the last day the wild blast of the trumpet called the warriors of Israel to compass the city; this morning they marched seven times instead of once around the city. The seventh time, at the command of Joshua, a great shout went up from the besieging host—a shout that shook the hills around with its wild and deafening sound. The walls of Jericho trembled to their foundations and fell even with the earth a mass of ruins. Terror and wild dismay seized the boldest heart. Not an arm was raised for defense; not a banner was unfurled to cheer on the fear-stricken warrior to meet the coming foe, so mysteriously triumphant that the strongest walls had fallen before the blasts of the trumpet. Warrior, civilian, matron and maiden, old and young, fell a prey to the sword of Joshua and his followers; none were spared save Rahab and her household who had sheltered the spies of Joshua; all others were destroyed because of their wickedness.

Ere night had darkened the plain with its shadows, Jericho had been blotted out of existence by the dire vengeance of Heaven and the warriors of Joshua, and a curse was pronounced on him who should lay the second foundation of the destroyed city. Thus disappeared the first barrier in the path of Israel to the possession of the promised land. They had seen the power of Heaven displayed, and their fame soon spread abroad to strike terror into the hearts of the heathen whom they had come to subdue.

After ages had passed over the grandeur of its doom, Jericho arose again from the slumber of its long desolation, and flourished through many vicissitudes, till the power of Moslem wasted it, and the hand of the robber laid it low. The wild Arab now revels there where once its walls arose; a few scattered huts of mud alone tell of the site of the ancient city. The last palm, that once gave it a name, has disappeared, and where once a smiling landscape greeted the eye, a barren plain now spreads wide its desolation. How the scene has changed since Joshua led his warriors to its first overthrow! How heavily the judgments of God have fallen upon it!

ORRIN P. ALLEN.

For the World's Crisis.

THORN IN THE FLESH.

There is a striking simplicity in Paul's narration of his peculiar and wondrous experience in being caught away to Paradise, where he heard the "unspeakable things which it is not lawful for a man to utter." Though a fallible human being, marked by those imperfections consequent on the original sin, which mar all human character, yet he was so highly honored and blest as to be admitted to the solemn and glorious mysteries of the dwelling-place of the Majesty on high, the Author of that great plan of redemption of which he was an apostle. "Lest I should be exalted above measure," he says, "there was given me a thorn in the flesh."

O, dear Paul, how many poor sufferers have had their "thorn in the flesh" since thy day. God knew him better than he knew himself, therefore he afflicted him. But Paul knew the power of prayer, and believing the Savior's promise, "ask, and ye shall receive," sought to have the affliction taken away. "Thrice I prayed that it might be removed"; but the answer did not come the first time, nor the second; and when at length it was received, it was not the request granted; it was the gentle hand pressed lovingly but firmly on the head of the pleading one,—the Supreme will, affectionately holding its power against entreaty, for the greatest good to the afflicted one.

Thus our Heavenly Father deals with us. We plead with tears and earnest entreaty for the satisfying answer, and we get it not. We pray again and again, yet have only the consciousness that we are heard,—no answer. Then passion rises against the holy will that is different from our own. It deals itself out in vain, and the sore heart, like a lashed slave, subsides,—not in loving submission, but with the elements of a new storm brooding in its depths. Perhaps the balm of peace soothes for a time; but while the ungratified desire lives, it asserts itself in restless risings, murmurings, pleadings, piteous cries to Him who knoweth all our hearts, all the demands of that being which his own wisdom created, and in agonizings unutterable, when the inmost recesses of the soul are stirred till they writhe and swell and toss like the strongest ocean billow, till the agitated frame is strung to its greatest tension, yet the eternal calm of that immutable destiny which has us in its keeping, remains unbroken.

Our mightiest passion is the slight dashing of a wave against the everlasting rock. In the culmination of human agony, sometimes we even turn upon him face to face as it were, to assert our cause, ready to forfeit eternal life, rather than yield. O then, how infinitely merciful is he, to let the wild hurricane pass, and receive the unpunished heart to his forgiving bosom. This is the love that passeth all understanding. He knows always, what the distrustful, forgetful heart fails to see,—"My grace is sufficient for thee." "My strength is made perfect in weakness." And his strength succeeds at length in breaking our wills, and moulding them over to his own. So when we are filled with his grace, walking according to the Spirit, above condemnation, our weakness is fully supplied by his strength, which had no place within us, while our own wills prevailed.

And what is the final result? The "far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory;" riches of love and joy and peace inexpressible, that will fill and surround and possess us through the glorious interminable seasons of rest that shall circle, cycle after cycle of delightful eyes, over the Paradise restored, the inheritance of the suffering and tried ones of this sorrowful time. How unspeakably sweet and full will be our songs of gratitude for these "light afflictions which are but for a moment," but which help us to the attainment of that life to come!

LOUISA SOUTHWICK.

For the World's Crisis

COMFORTS.

Does poverty oppress
With hard, unyielding sway?
Homeless, with sorrow,
Jesus went his way.

Does sorrowing spirit
Oft confess o'er coming wrong?
At Olive's summit
Angels made Jesus strong.

Does cruel death
To you new sorrowing lend?
So Jesus wept
Most sad o'er sleeping friend.

Do proud ones scorn
And coldly turn away?
This Christ a workman's son!
Jeering, they say.

Dost feel thyself alone,
And living slightly rate?
On Calvary Christ said,
Why me forsake?

Why should frail man
Presumptuous wish for more
Than follow Christ,
Who all our vileness bore?

L. ELLIOTT.

For the World's Crisis.

OIL STOCKS.

BRO. GRANT:—With your permission, I feel it a privilege, also a duty, to relate through the Crisis my experience of God's merciful deliverance to me from this whirlpool of destruction, with the hope that it may be the means of saving some others from this fatal delusion into which men and women are being drawn by thousands to the destruction of their souls.

I was enjoying the love of God in my heart, and bearing testimony of his speedy coming, when and where opportunity presented itself, and was but little moved by hearing of others making their thousands in a day, until happening into the business place of a highly respectable gentleman, somewhat advanced in life, in whom I placed great confidence, he said he intended purchasing some superior oil stock, and, if I wished, he would secure some shares for me. Having at the time some money to spare, and thinking I might be able to do more good by getting a little of the wealth God had deposited in the earth, I took some. Shortly after he called to see me and said it had proved to be much better than he had anticipated, and desired me to take more, which I did. It was so good I was now prepared to take a large slice, but laid it by for future development.

But I began to feel that my spirituality was on the wane, and I did not love to read God's precious word as before; it was not so sweet to my soul, and secret prayer was irksome. I suspected I had done wrong, and I began to cry mightily unto the Lord, that if it was not for his glory that he would deliver me and bring it all to naught. But I was in the ring. Calling on business at a friend's, a prospective was handed to me representing a large territory, mapped out and colored, presenting a very tempting appearance. I could not resist. I must have some of this also, another person having just purchased a large tract of oil territory promising large profits. Finally, I succeeded in obtaining a ground floor interest.

All this time I found myself growing sick, spiritually, and nigh unto death. I tried to persuade myself that my object was to do good, and concluded not to buy any more; but along comes a bosom friend, with farm and leases on a certain creek, exhibiting signs of untold wealth in coal, iron, oil, etc.; and because I was a bosom friend I must take a lion's share. But God's ways are not our ways. This was scarcely agreed upon when a person in whom I had much confidence came, and by lying and cunning deceit obtained the first purchase from me at a small advance. The next morning I found that what I had parted with for one hundred dollars' profit was worth thousands. Now came the vain regrets, the agony of mind. I thought again and again, if I had only waited, if I had only suspected his object when I saw he was in such haste to buy; and persons chided me for not having my eyes open; all vain comforters. For about twenty-four hours I could scarcely eat, or sleep, and I resolved to have nothing more to do with stocks, but to let the other interest develope itself. This did not satisfy me. I could get no peace of mind, my mouth seemed closed, I could not pray. At last the word of the Lord came unto me, saying, "Ye cannot serve God and mammon." Now my eyes began to open. I saw it was just what I had prayed for. Light burst into my soul, and I resolved that by the help of the [illegible] I would wash my hands of the whole thing. [illegible] this when the spirit of the Lord came into my soul, and I cried out, Glory to God! It gave me a peace which passeth all understanding, and tears of joy ran down like rain, and I am now free, and can say with Daniel, "The God whom I serve hath delivered me."

It was a fiery trial, but, praise the Lord, I have been saved, like the three Hebrews, without the smell of fire upon me. And now, dear brother, I am prepared to do my Master's work with renewed zeal and strength, for it has been another sweet evidence to my soul that I am his, and that he careth for me, and I will now with patience wait till Jesus comes and gives us to know what are the riches of the glory of his inheritance in the saints.

"Who shall ascend into the hill of the Lord? or who shall stand in his holy place? He that hath clean hands, and a pure heart; who hath not lifted up his soul unto vanity, nor sworn deceitfully. He shall receive the blessing from the Lord, and righteousness from the God of his salvation."—Ps. 24: 3, 4, 5. Yours, in hope of life eternal through Christ,

JOHN M. STETLER.

Philadelphia.

For the World's Crisis.

THE HOLY GHOST.

Were it not that some take the ground that there is no Spirit but the word, I should not perhaps trouble you with these few lines. I look upon such brethren not as being destitute of God's Holy Spirit, but holding an error on that point; they do not appreciate the great blessing they ought to enjoy, besides being better fitted to do the will of the Master; and they grieve the Holy Spirit whereby they are sealed unto the day of redemption.

To our Lord Jesus Christ the Holy Spirit was given without measure. That is, he had the Spirit constantly with him, and to such a degree that it is said it was given to him without measure. Thus Isaiah says when speaking of Christ, "And the Spirit of the Lord shall rest upon him, the spirit of wisdom and understanding; the spirit of counsel and might; the spirit of knowledge and of the fear of the Lord; and shall make him of quick understanding, and he shall not judge after the sight of his eyes, neither reprove after the hearing of his ears."

Now if our Father in heaven saw it necessary and proper to shower down such an abundance of his Holy Spirit upon our Lord, to sustain, and enable him to do his Father's work; to give him understanding, to give him counsel and might and wisdom, (for Jesus himself testifieth, "Of mine own self I can do nothing"), is it not reasonable to expect that he will do as much at least as to give his church a portion of that heavenly influence? Are we indeed to be co-laborers with Christ in the work of saving sinners? Are we to be the salt of the earth, a city on an hill, the light of the world, with nothing but the word? Let us see what saith Jesus. "The great day of the feast, Jesus stood and cried, If any man thirst let him come unto me and drink." How is that? Drink what? Why, drink by virtue of faith on the Son of God. Read the next verse. "He that believeth on me as the Scripture hath said, out of his belly shall flow rivers of living water." Bless the Lord, our Messiah, for such words as these. This spake he of the Spirit, which they that believe on him should receive.

Should this meet the eye of any poor starving, thirsty souls, to them I want to say, Come to the great fountain of life, and drink. Believe on the Lord of glory, and drink. Yea, drink at the fountain opened in the house of David for sin and uncleanness. Take the cup at the hand of the Lord, and drink of the well of salvation. What says Jesus? "Whoso drinketh (mark the expression) of the water that I shall give him, the water that I shall give him shall be in him a well of water springing up into everlasting life." The promise comes from one who spake as never man spake. He speaks in wisdom. He speaks in understanding. He speaks in the knowledge of God. Sinner, where are you traveling? Take the Bible. Sit down now and turn to John fourth chapter, and read to the sixteenth verse. Ponder it well, and if you are thirsty you will find a well deeper than Jacob's, and nothing to draw with. But if you ask of Jesus, he will give you living water,—water of life, and you may continue to drink until you press your way into the kingdom of heaven. "He that hath ears to hear let him hear." Oh for ears to hear in these days of apostasy! Oh that more of the blessed Holy Spirit of God might be poured out upon the church and ministry! that they might lift up their voice like a trumpet, cry aloud and spare not, but show the people their sins.

Do any say that the Holy Spirit was only for the apostle's day? But the apostle's declaration is good for all time, when he says, "They that follow after the flesh do mind the things of the flesh, but they that are after the Spirit the things of the Spirit." So then he adds, "They that are in the flesh cannot please God." Again. "Now if any man have not the spirit of Christ, he is none of his; for as many as are led by the Spirit of God they are the sons of God." Again. "The Spirit itself beareth witness with our spirits that we are the children of God." "Likewise he says, the spirit helpeth our infirmities; for we know not what to pray for as we ought, but the Spirit itself maketh intercession for us with groanings that cannot be uttered." Again. "Walk in the Spirit, and ye shall not fulfill the lusts of the flesh."

Now this is wholesale language, and cannot be narrowed down to the limits of the days of the apostles only, but reaches to the end of this age. For, says Peter, "the promise is to you and to your children, and to all that are afar off, even as many as the Lord our God shall call." What is that of the promise to us and our children and all that the Lord our God shall call? I answer, it is the promise that he will pour out his Holy Spirit on us and our children, and all that are afar off, and reaches to the time when the sun shall be turned into darkness, and the moon into blood, before the great and terrible day of the Lord come.

But I will not prolong this article. Enough has been said. We are in the rocks and quicksands of the last days. Lord, give us thy Spirit to guide us to the end. Men, women and children are going out of life, and no hope beyond the grave. Scarcely any one speaks to them of the Lord of glory, our Life-giver. They need instruction, the kind word, the friendly hand, the name of Christ spoken in the spirit of Jesus. The doom of the ungodly, the sleep that never awakes, the blotting out of existence, should be brought to bear upon their minds. Then the contrast, the turning to the Lord, the Holy Ghost, his work on the heart, the (?) life, beyond the grave, the inheritance, etc. Let us talk to our neighbors and friends whom we meet every day. Are we doing our duty to those around us? should be the question of us all. Oh that the Lord would pour out his Spirit abundantly before the harvest is past, the summer ended, and our friends and children not saved.

G. W. DENNEY.

New Haven, Ct.

HOW TO MAKE BEAUTIFUL HOMES.

The greater part of our population are waiting till they can afford to have pleasant homes, forgetting that they can at no time afford to have any other. We take the color of our daily surroundings, and are happier, more able, stronger to labor and firmer to endure, when those surroundings are pleasing and in good taste. To possess these important qualities they need not be expensive. True beauty is cheaper than we think. The first charm of a home, within and without, is thorough neatness, and this is the result of habit, not outlay. It is often cheaper than filth. Paint the house if you can; if not, white-wash; but in any case let it be in thorough repair. Let there be no loose shingles, or dangling clapboards, or gates hanging by a broken hinge. These hints favor thrift as well as taste. Let the house be sufficiently shaded. This will pay in comfort, wear of furniture, and lack of flies. If you cannot afford green blinds, you can always afford a green tree or two, that will cost nothing but labor and patience, and will shelter you from the sun in summer and the wind in winter.

Plant vines of some kind about your premises; they are indispensable to grace; they show that nature takes kindly to your home, and has thrown her arm round it. You need not resort to costly climbers; woodbine and clematis may be had for the gathering, and grapes and hop-vines may be so trained as to combine beauty and profit. Let your turf be smooth and firm as velvet, and enforce the death penalty upon weeds with an unsparing hand. No man, rich or poor, can afford to raise weeds. They choose the richest spots, where flowers, or fruit, or vegetables might grow, and send abroad their seeds as missionaries of evil into every nook and corner. Ill-kept places always have their vegetable five points, where sin and misery are mimicked in pigweed, burdock, and nettles. A very few flowers will suffice; a monthly rose in the window, a morning glory over the door-way, a bright border between your kitchen garden and the street; these add to the picture just those touches of color that make it pleasant to the eye. With half a dozen cheap and common kinds, your wife will take care that something is always in bloom.

But flowers are gross feeders, and if you keep no domestic animals, you fancy, perhaps, that you have no manure. You were never more mistaken. Every human dwelling is a centre of fertilizing agents, mostly wasted as times go, rich enough to make the whole plot around it blossom like the rose. Tell the soil that you have nothing to give it! Give it what you have and it will laugh in your face. The suds from your laundry is a store of liquid wealth. Never waste a drop of it in drains or sewers. It is a floating currency promising to pay roundly in grass, and vegetables, and fruit. Invest it in your home bank, which never suspends payment. These grassy slopes are as good as gold. Carpet sweepings are manure in a concentrated form; dug into your flower borders they weave a richer pattern than the one from which they were worn. Those old bones that deform the premises, if buried beneath the grape-vine, will be "health to the bones" of all your friends. Old boots and shoes, those most unsightly wrecks, are the favorite food of the raspberry and all its palatable kin. Tainted brine, if such unhappily is yours, is a treasure for the plum-trees and the asparagus bed; slacken lime with it, and it will make a rich dressing for any garden soil. Every household should have its compost bed, be it only an old packing box, where woolen rags, bits of paper, apple parings, refuse of vegetables, slops from the kitchen, chips and sawdust are storing up the elements of a glorious growth. Let not yours be one of the homes where all these bright possibilities arrive only at "burning instead of beauty." We have named but a part of the fertilizers of every household. Generally speaking, whatever is offensive to sight or smell is urging the appeal to our revolted tastes—Bury me, and I'll do you good.—Springfield Republican.

TEACHINGS OF AN OAK STICK.

In a certain great city, says a popular writer, I bought a little sheaf of walking sticks, of yellow varnished oak. These I conveyed, by land and sea, till they reached the spot where they were to be allocated among the individuals who were to use them. One stick, very large, unwieldy, and uncomfortable, fell to himself. It had a great thick handle, crooked and set on at a most awkward angle. I found it at first very uncomfortable to walk with. But in a few days my hand got accustomed to it, and I came to like the stick very much. To others, unaccustomed to it, it remained awkward as before.

That old oak stick taught me a lesson, and I gratefully record my obligations to it. The lesson was: not to be angry with people for preferring their own ways, and for declining to let you drive them into other ways which are perhaps absolutely better; for these persons may have grown so accustomed to the old ways, they are best to them, if not best in themselves, or in the judgment of a disinterested spectator. Preference is a relation between us and the things preferred—the result of use.

Let people be happy in their own way. My yellow stick, the very worst possible to many, is truly the best to me. Now I owe this to it; that it has cast a certain dignity about many little habits and oddities of manner, in various good men, at which in my own thoughtless ignorance I was ready to laugh. Especially it has taught me to regard with respect the little ways, if not in themselves offensive, of old people. It would be a terrible thing to them to change the ancient way. So if it make them happy, let them look for a long time at the outside of their letters, wondering from whom they came, and don't you petulantly tell them the best way to ascertain that fact is to open the letter; let them twirl their thumbs and enjoy their like innocent pleasure; it would be terrible and cruel to push them out of the dear old ways. The old familiar faces may not be the prettiest faces, but they are the faces we like best to see. It is these little knobs and knots which make the walking-stick of life fit the aged hand, and to cut these off would put the whole thing out of gear.

TRANSPLANTING AT NIGHT.—"A friend, in whose power of observation," says the Working Farmer, "we have confidence, and who is an exact experimenter, informs us that last spring and summer he made the following experiment: He transplanted ten cherry trees while in blossom, commencing at four o'clock in the afternoon, and transplanting one each hour until one in the morning. Those transplanted during daylight shed their blossoms, producing little or no fruit, while those planted during the darker portions maintained their conditions fully. He did the same with ten dwarf pear trees after the fruit was one-third grown. Those transplanted during the day shed their fruit; those transplanted during the night perfected their crop, and showed no injury from having been removed. With each of these trees he removed some earth with the roots."

The Children's Corner.

PLEDGE OF THE TEA-TOTAL COMPANY.

We, the Undersigned, hereby pledge ourselves to abstain from Tea, Coffee, Tobacco, and all Intoxicating Drinks as a Beverage.

KITTY'S REBELLION.

One sultry summer's afternoon, some seventeen years ago, little Kitty ran in from her play for a drink of the cool lemonade which stood on the table.

"Please, mamma;" said her mother, as she turned the glass.

"Kitty tan't say pease," replied the little maid.

Now Kitty had said 'pease' a hundred times, and usually delighted in saying everything that she was told. She quite revelled in conversational powers for a year and a half old. For the first time in her short life had she taken a notion that she would not do as she was bid. So her mother set the glass down untasted, and the child ran back to the door-step as thirsty as before. But it was very warm, and presently the little feet came pattering back, and the thirsty red lips were put up again for a drink.

"Kitty say please."

"Tan't say please." So the baby went away thirsty again.

This experiment was repeated perhaps a dozen times in the course of the afternoon, at first playfully as it seemed, but as the wee rebel began actually to suffer from heat and thirst rather than say "please," it became a rather serious question how long she would hold out.

Supper time came, and Pet ran to her high chair.

"Mamma, lift Kitty up!"

"Please," mamma, lift Kitty," said the mother, gently.

Instantly the eager little face fell. Baby shook her head—muttered "tan't say pease," and turned away. Her father and mother and the rest of the children sat down to the table, but who could eat supper while that poor little outlaw stood back by the wall moaning with hunger and thirst? The mother yearned to take her in her arms and give her food and drink; but how could she? The little one knew that one dutiful word would bring her all she wanted, yet she refused to speak it. The question was fairly at issue—should the child obey the parents, or the parents submit to the child? It is an old and common dilemma, and in thousands of households the child carries the day, but Mrs. Hart did not believe God meant that to be the order of the world. She took her baby to her own room, and set before her very tenderly and seriously her naughty behavior. She knelt down and prayed the Savior to make her good and obedient; but after all, Kitty could not say "pease," any better than before. At length distressed and tired out and fairly alarmed about the little creature, who had not tasted food since noon, she carried her to her father and begged him to take the case in hand. Mr. Hart began to talk playfully; nothing doubting he should soon bring her round. He gave her a great many words to speak, which she did all very readily till the fatal please came along; that she couldn't do. Year-and-a-half understood very well to say that was to submit. So he grew serious, and told her that he should have to whip her if she did not mind. Now Kitty and whipping were two things never thought of in the same breath before. She had always been an uncommonly sweet and gentle child, and nobody had ever guessed how much grit was latent in that soft little bosom. Nothing else would avail, however, and the whipping had to come. Still the baby remained stout-hearted, and far from righteousness.

Feverish and exhausted, with parched lips crying for drink, yet inflexibly refusing to speak the little word which would bring it, she was put to bed in her crib. All through the warm night she tossed and moaned in her unquiet sleep, or woke crying from thirst; but even then, sleepy and miserable as she was, she would only sob, "Tan't say pease," when the water came near. For the father and mother that was a night of sleepless wretchedness, relieved only by prayer. They really began to fear that the child would sooner die than give up.

"Oh pshaw! never mind the please; have her drink," many a father would have said. "Poor little thing; I must let the minding go till another time," mothers would have thought, but Mr. and Mrs. Hart did not see it so. If it was like death for a will to yield after eighteen months growth, what would it be after months and years of indulgence? God had committed to them this soul of his creating, to be trained for himself; if she could not be made to obey her father whom she had seen, how should she become obedient to her Father in heaven whom she had not seen? The very fact, that her will was so strong, made it the more imperative to their minds that it should be brought under the control of her conscience; they saw what a cruel tyrant it would prove if left to hold sway. The longer the struggle was protracted, the more likely it seemed that the result would be a final one, and the more important that it should be right. Then the other children who had been watching this new phase of family history with a kind of solemn dread—should they learn that the authority that they had been taught to revere, could after all, be trampled under the feet of a baby? It would not do. It had been clearly explained to the little one that it was her heavenly Father's command that she should obey her parents, and that she was resisting his will; and that father and mother felt that they had no right to annul his law. So the night wore away, and the morning broke; but it brought no peace to the household, weighed down by the perverseness of its young rebel. She woke worn and almost sick, but stubborn as ever.

Free will indeed! What a grand, awful mystery it is! How, shrined in a dainty delicate morsel of flesh, it can look out and defy the world! Terrible agent of evil! Glorious worker of good! Kingliest power in creation! —a sovereign human will! What wonder heaven and hell contended for little Kitty's will. So they do for every one. Happy the child whose parents steadfastly keep the right side of the conflict!

Kitty found an ally in the morning. A woman who occupied the adjoining tenement, having learned the state of things from the children, came to plead for her. She assured Mrs. Hart that she was killing her child; that it was downright cruelty to treat her so; that if she had a little girl, she would not see her suffer when she could help it. All this fell on a sore and aching heart. The mother had already been tormented with fears that the heat, and thirst and excitement would really be the death of her poor, dear, naughty, little darling. She tried to think of a compromise by which Kitty could be relieved without sacrifice of parental government. At last she quietly placed a mug of milk in a low chair, and left the little girl alone in the room, while her father and mother watched her unseen.

They saw her come up to the mug and press her hot little hands against its cool sides and begin to raise it to her thirsty lips, then suddenly she set it down with a piteous look, and went away moaning. It was a cruel battle between desire and honor for such a little heart. Again and again the little creature would look wistfully into the mug full of white milk—shake her head mournfully, and turn away. Kitty would not slink out of the difficulty, though her parents would let her; she or they must openly surrender. This little display of character made it clearer than ever that they should do the child a cruel wrong in helping her to break down the demands of her own conscience.

In the course of the morning Mrs. Hart was relieved to see the family physician drive up to the door. She hastened to tell him the whole story, and ask whether she was risking too much. He advised her to "put it through; the little thing could not hold out much longer." Moreover the good doctor straightway conceived a little stratagem for bringing her to terms. It was a great treat for any of the children to ride with him, and one to which Kitty had never yet arrived; so that when he proposed to take her this morning, she flushed up with delight, and began to caper about the room in high glee.

"Run and ask your mother to please put on your hat then;" said the doctor.

Instantly the bright little face faded; she had lost all desire to go if there was a "please" to it. So that expedient failed.

It was getting toward noon; nearly twenty hours since Kitty had tasted either food or drink. Persuasion and authority had been exhausted upon her, and still she wandered about the house, a wan, disconsolate little object, often crying, but obstinate as ever. Almost heart-broken to see her so, the mother took her in her arms once more and carried her to her chamber. Once again she showed the little girl how wretched her wilfulness was making herself and all the rest, and how it was grieving the dear Savior. Then she knelt and with strong crying and tears implored that blessed Spirit who can melt every heart, to subdue the stubborn will. Suddenly baby threw her arms around her neck and burst out: "Pease, pease, pease."

The grateful mother covered her with tears and kisses, and carried her down to the sitting-room where she sprang into her father's arms crying, "Pease, pease!" as if she never would be done. Now she was all radiant with love and peace. The other children came running in to hear how Kitty could say please. She was ready to hug and kiss every body. The whole family stood around laughing and crying, to see her drink her cup of milk, and hardly able to let her alone long enough to do it. The house was full of joy. The battle was ended. Right had triumphed. It had been a terrible struggle, but it was once for all; from that day to this, Kitty Hart has shown no disposition to resist rightful authority. Her will was not "broken—that is an ugly phrase—it is a good strong will yet; it was brought under her conscience. It was rescued from being mere willfulness.

These parents had tried all along to make their child understand that to resist them, was to disobey her Father in heaven, and that this was the head and front of her offending. As time went on, they found, to their thankful surprise, reason to believe that she understood it so well, that in yielding to them at last, she had also submitted herself to him. Maturer years and new experience deepened and developed her christian life, but it never seemed necessary for Kitty to be converted after she was a year and a half old. It appeared that the Redeemer had crowned their prayers and fidelity, and ended that long contest by changing the heart of stone to a heart of flesh, and sending his Spirit into it, crying, Abba, Father.—Earnest Christian.

"NO."

There's a word very short, but decided and plain,
And speaks to the purpose at once;
Not a child but its meaning can quickly explain,
Yet oft 'tis hard to pronounce.

What a world of vexation and trouble 'twould spare,
What pleasure and peace 'twould bestow,
To turn, when temptation would lure and ensnare,
And firmly repulse it with "No."

When deception, falsehood, and guile would invite,
And fleeting enjoyments bestow,
Never palter with truth for a transient delight,
But check the first impulse with "No."

SIT UPRIGHT.

"Sit upright! sit upright, my son!" said a lady to her son George, who had formed a wretched habit of bending whenever he sat down to read. His mother had told him that he could not breathe right unless he sat upright. But it was no use; bend over he would, in spite of all his mother could say.

"Sit upright, Master George!" cried his teacher, as George bent over his copy book at School. If you don't sit upright like Master Charles, you will ruin your health and possibly die of consumption."

This startled Master George. He did not want to die, and felt alarmed. So after school he said to his teacher, "Please, sir, explain to me how bending over when I sit, can cause me to have the consumption."

"That I will, George," replied his teacher, with a cordial smile. "There is an element in the air called oxygen, which is necessary to make your blood circulate, and to help it purify itself by purifying what is called its carbon. When you stoop you cannot take in a sufficient quantity of air to accomplish these purposes; hence the blood remains bad, and the air-cells in your lungs become irritated. Presently the lungs ulcerate, and then you die. Give the lungs room to inspire plenty of fresh air, and you will not be injured by study. Do you understand the matter now, George?"

"I think I do, sir, and will try to sit upright hereafter," said George.

George was right in this resolution. Will all the boys and girls who read this imitate him? They will, we know, if they wish to live healthy lives.

Make it your motto, therefore, little reader, to sit upright, whether you sit to eat, to sew, to read, or to converse. Now don't forget it. You must sit upright.

The World's Crisis

AND SECOND ADVENT MESSENGER.

TERMS:

If paid in advance,—	One year	$2.50
	Six months	$1.25
If not paid within six months,—	One year	$3.00
	Six months	$1.50
Five copies, to one address, six months —same rate for any larger number under ten.		$5.50
Ten copies, to one address, six months —same rate for any number over ten.		$10.00

CLUB PRICES PAYABLE ALWAYS IN ADVANCE.

POSTAGE.—The postage, in the United States, on each single copy of the Crisis, is 20 cents a year, payable quarterly, in advance, at the office of delivery.

RULES FOR CORRESPONDENTS.—Over all matters not intended for publication, write PRIVATE.

Over all business matters, write BUSINESS.

Over all articles for the paper, write FOR THE CRISIS.

All articles should be accompanied by the writer's name, for the Editor's information, even if it is not published.

When the names of new subscribers are sent, please say they are new, and it will save us much labor.

PRIVATE LETTERS.—Those wishing to address the Editor on matters not connected with the office, will please write the word PRIVATE on the outside of the envelope.

Please put the business matters and appointments on a piece of paper separate from other communications.

All persons writing to the office should give DISTINCTLY and PLAINLY the Post Office, County and State at which they wish to be addressed; and all orders, subscriptions, communications and remittances, should be plainly directed to MILES GRANT, BOSTON, MASS.

PUBLISHED ALSO AT THE SAME OFFICE, Semi-monthly:

THE YOUNG PILGRIM:

An Illustrated Sunday School Paper,

FOR CHILDREN AND YOUTH;

TERMS:

[illegible]

Payable always in advance.

[illegible]

The World's Crisis

AND SECOND ADVENT MESSENGER

"BEHOLD, I COME QUICKLY; AND MY REWARD IS WITH ME."

WHOLE NO. 496. BOSTON, TUESDAY, APRIL 4, 1865. VOL. XXI.—NO. 3.

The World's Crisis

AND SECOND ADVENT MESSENGER,

Issued every Tuesday Afternoon, at

167 HANOVER STREET, BOSTON.

MILES GRANT, EDITOR.

EDITORIAL COMMITTEE:
S. G. MATHEWSON, I. C. WELLCOME,
H. F. CARPENTER.

PUBLISHING COMMITTEE:
C. P. HUDSON, H. V. DAVIS,
S. S. BREWER, J. G. HAMBLIN,
D. MATHEWSON.

GEORGE T. ADAMS,
TREASURER AND BUSINESS AGENT.

☞ THE CRISIS is devoted to the exposition of all Bible truth; especially the doctrine of the immediate, personal coming and reign of Christ on the earth; holiness of heart; the unconscious state of the dead; their literal resurrection, and final destruction of the wicked.

For the World's Crisis.

"MY SHEEP."—John 10: 27.

One of Christ's "little flock"!
To hear His blessed voice,
And follow where He leads—
How doth my heart rejoice
That such a privilege is mine,
By thee, good Shepherd, claimed as thine.

What though rude storms may come,
And cold winds fiercely blow?
No harm can fall to me,
My Leader's voice I know;
And, following him, am safe indeed,
Provided well for every need.

Fierce foes may gather round,
And threaten to devour,
'Tis then that he proclaims
His firm intent and power.
"Shall never perish"—no rude hand
Can pluck them from my Father's hand.

Eternal life I give
To all who follow me,
Who from enticing voice
Of strangers ever flee;
These shall be gathered to my fold,
Where are rich joys that are untold.

One of Christ's chosen flock!
What more could I desire?
There's nought obtained on earth
That mortals need prize higher.
O! thou good Shepherd, ever guide
And keep me closely by thy side.

A. C. JUDSON.

For the World's Crisis.

PTOLEMY'S ECLIPSES.

The account of these is found in his astronomical "System," commonly called the Almagest, in the fourth and fifth books. The old eclipses are all of the moon, which Ptolemy preferred to those of the sun because he regarded the former as better suited to his purpose, which was to determine the moon's anomaly, and other problems of its motion.

Ptolemy refers to Hipparchus constantly, and takes his account of the ancient eclipses directly from him. Respecting these I also find the following statement. Says Dr. Jarvis: "On the capture of Babylon by Alexander the Great, there fell into the hands of the Greeks a series of records of astronomical observations, which Callisthenes transmitted from Babylon to Greece, at the instance of his master Aristotle. These observations, the oldest then in existence, Hipparchus, an eminent astronomer under Ptolemy Philadelphus, adjusted to the Egyptian method of calculation, 'from the original records,' as he himself states, "which had been kept at Babylon and brought from thence.'" (Discourses on Prophecy, p. 107.) This statement respecting Callisthenes I find made by various writers, and Simplicius is the ancient authority for it, in a comment on a work "On the heavens."

The era employed by Ptolemy is that of Nabonassar, very famous at that time. This began, by common consent, on the 27th of Feb., or, by another reckoning, the 26th, in the year 3967 of the Julian Period, and B.C. 747. With these data it is easy to translate the record into the terms of the Christian Era. Ptolemy's use of the eclipses in the Almagest is purely astronomical, and not chronological. Hence they are given not in chronological order, but are selected at certain intervals, for the purpose named above. I here translate the account he gives of the most of them, with such remarks of his as may best state the case respecting them.

After his general propositions, he says, b. 4, c. 5, "We will employ, from the most ancient eclipses which we have, three that appear to have been recorded beyond dispute; then also three others of the present age, which have been most carefully observed by ourselves."

"Of the three ancient eclipses, then, which we have taken from those observed at Babylon, the first is registered as having occurred in the first year of Mardoc Empadus, in the Egyptian [month] Thoth, 29th to the 30th. And it began, he [Hipparchus] says, to be eclipsed after its rising, a full hour having passed; and it was eclipsed whole. Since then the sun was near the last of Pisces [the sign of the Zodiac], and the night was of twelve equinoctial hours nearly, the beginning of the eclipse was evidently 4½ equinoctial hours before midnight; and the middle, since the eclipse was total, 2½ hours before [midnight]." He then gives the time for the meridian of Alexandria, five-sixths of an hour later. [Reckoned by chronologists as B. C. 721, March 19.]

"The second of the eclipses is registered as having occurred in the second year of the same Mardoc Empadus, in the Egyptian Thoth, 18th to the 19th. And it was eclipsed, he says, three digits on the south, at midnight. Since then the middle time at Babylon appears to have been at midnight, in Alexandria it must have been," etc. The reader sees at once how clearly Ptolemy separates his facts from his inferences. [B. C. 720, March 8.]

"The third of the eclipses is registered as having occurred in the same second year of Mardoc Empadus, in the Egyptian Phamenoth, 15th to the 16th. And it began to be eclipsed, he says, after its rising, and it was eclipsed on the north, more than half. Since then the sun was in the beginning of Virgo, the length of the night in Babylon was eleven equinoctial hours nearly, and half the night five and a half hours. The beginning of the eclipse, then, was about (or, at the most) five equinoctial hours before midnight," etc. [B. C. 720, Sept. 1.]

From these data, finding the intervals of time, Ptolemy proceeds with certain computations, illustrated by diagrams. He then gives the account of the three other eclipses above referred to, as follows:

"Again, of the three eclipses which we have selected from those carefully observed by us at Alexandria, the first occurred in the seventeenth year of Adrian, in the Egyptian Payni, 20th to the 21st. And we have accurately computed its middle time to have been a half and a fourth of an equinoctial hour before midnight. And it was eclipsed whole; at which hour the sun's true place was at 13¾ degrees of Taurus, nearly." [A. D. 133, May 6.]

"And the second occurred in the nineteenth year of Adrian, in the Egyptian Choiak, 2nd to the 3rd. And we have computed its middle time to have been one equinoctial hour before midnight. And it was eclipsed on the north, a half and a third of the diameter; at which time the sun's true place was at 25 1-6 degrees of Cancer, nearly." [A. D. 134, Oct. 20.]

"And the third of the eclipses was in the twentieth year of Adrian, in the Egyptian Pharmouthi, 19th to the 20th. And we have computed the middle time to have been four equinoctial hours after midnight, and it was eclipsed half its diameter, on the north. And the sun at this hour was at 14 degrees 12 minutes of Pisces, nearly." [A. D. 136, March 5.]

These three eclipses are then compared with each other, as the former had been compared. And in the next chapter (6), the two sets are compared with each other. The interval between the second eclipse of each triplet is found to be 854 Egyptian years, 73 days, 23 5-6 hours apparent time (if I understand rightly), or 23½ hours true time. Etc. The figures are carried not only to minutes of a degree, but to seconds, thirds, fourths, fifths, and sixths,—answering to about the tenth decimal place. In the seventh chapter the era of Nabonassar is introduced.

Ptolemy next introduces two eclipses as occurring on the same side of the same node, and of similar dimensions. He describes them as follows:

"We have taken for the first eclipse that which was observed at Babylon in the thirty-first year of Darius the first, in the Egyptian Tybi, 3rd to the 4th, at the middle of the sixth hour, when we are informed that the moon was eclipsed on the south, two digits." [B. C. 491, April 25.]

"And for the second, that observed at Alexandria, in the ninth year of Adrian, in the Egyptian Pachon, 17th to the 18th, three and three-fifths equinoctial hours before midnight, when the moon was likewise eclipsed the sixth part of its diameter, on the south." Then follow computations. [A. D. 125, April 5.]

In the same chapter (7) another eclipse is compared with the second of the present list (B. C. 720, March 8). It is described as follows: "The second eclipse employed by Hipparchus occurred in the 20th year of Darius the successor of Cambyses, in the Egyptian Epiphi, 28th to the 29th, the night having advanced 6⅓ equinoctial hours; when the moon was likewise eclipsed on the south, one fourth of its diameter. And the middle time in Babylon was two fifths of an equinoctial hour before midnight, since half the night was then 6⅔ equinoctial hours." [B. C. 502, Nov. 19.]

The reader will here note that the two eclipses are given as each of three digits, and as so employed by Hipparchus. Ptolemy proceeds with his computations, including a table of the moon's anomaly.

In the tenth chapter he finds occasion to examine three other eclipses, of which he gives the following account:

"He [Hipparchus] says that these three eclipses were selected from those brought from Babylon, as there observed; and that the first occurred when Phanostratus was archon at Athens, in the [Greek] month Poseidon, and that the moon was eclipsed a small part of its disc, after rising, when half a summer hour of the night remained. And moreover, he says, it set eclipsed. Now this time was the year 366 of Nabonassar," etc. Here follow computations. [B. C. 383, Dec. 22.]

"Again, he says that the next eclipse occurred when Phanostratus was archon at Athens, in the month Scirophorion, Egyptian Phamenoth, 24th to the 25th. And it was eclipsed, he says, after rising in summer, the first hour having elapsed. And this time also is the 366th year of Nabonassar," etc, and computations. [B. C. 382, June 18.]

"And he says that the third eclipse occurred when Evander was archon at Athens, in the first part of the month Poseidon, Egyptian Thoth, 16th to the 17th. And it was eclipsed, he says, whole, beginning when four summer hours had elapsed. Now this time is the 367th year of Nabonassar," etc., and computations. [B. C. 382, Dec. 12.]

Then comes another triplet. He says: "Let us pass, now, to the three last eclipses of which he [Hipparchus] has given account, which he says were observed at Alexandria. The first of these, he says, occurred in the 54th year of the second Calippic period, the 16th of the Egyptian Mesore, when the moon began to be eclipsed a half hour before rising, and resumed its full form in the middle of the third hour. . . . And the time from the first year of Nabonassar is 546 Egyptian years," etc. [B. C. 201, Sept. 22.]

"The next eclipse occurred, he says, in the 55th year of the same period, the 9th of the Egyptian Mechir. And it began when the night had advanced 5⅚ hours, and it was eclipsed whole," etc. [From Nabonassar, 547 years, etc. B. C. 200, March 19.]

"And he says that the third eclipse occurred in the same 55th year of the second period, the fifth of the Egyptian Mesore. And it began when 6⅔ hours of the night had elapsed, and it was eclipsed whole. And the middle time of the eclipse, he says, was at about 8⅓ hours, that is, 2⅓ hours of the season after midnight." [From Nabonassar, 547 Egyptian years, 334 days, etc. B. C. 200, Sept. 11.]

In the fifth book, chapter 14, two eclipses are compared, recorded as follows:

"In the fifth year of Nobopalassar, which is the 127th year of Nabonassar, in the Egyptian Athyr, 27th to the 28th, the 11th hour near ending in Babylon, the moon began to to be eclipsed. And it was eclipsed mostly on the south, one fourth of its diameter." [B. C. 621, April 21.]

"Again, in the seventh year of Cambyses, which is the 125th year of Nabonassar, Egyptian Phamenoth, 17th to the 18th, one hour before midnight, the moon was eclipsed in Babylon, on the north, half its diameter." [B. C. 523, July 16.]

In book 6, chapter 5, Ptolemy proposes to demonstrate certain matters "by two eclipses from among those observed near the perigee," which he describes as follows:

"In the seventh year, then, of Philometor, which is the 574th of Nabonassar, in the Egyptian Phamenoth, 27th to the 28th, from the beginning of the 8th hour to the ending of the 10th, in Alexandria, the moon was eclipsed on the north, in all seven digits." Etc. [B. C. 174, April 30.]

"Again, in the 37th year of the third Calippic period, which is the 607th of the era of Nabonassar, in the Egyptian Tybi, 2nd to the 3rd, in the beginning of the fifth hour at Rhodes, the moon began to be eclipsed, and it was darkened in all three digits on the south." Etc. [B. C. 141, Jan. 27.]

Such is the historical record that has come down to us.

Eld. Thurman has doubtless tried all these eclipses by his tables. And he has tabled against them the following charges:

1. That one of them (Mar. 8, B. C. 720) never occurred. It only almost happened,—i. e. within 100 miles. How it came to be recorded he does not offer to explain.

2. That several of them (April 21, B. C. 621, Nov. 19, B. C 502, Apr. 25, B. C. 491), as recorded, are too small to have been observed in that age. Thus he makes one of the features said to have been observed an argument to show that there was no observation at all. He admits that these eclipses occurred, but does not explain how; being never observed, they were yet recorded.

3. He finds "by calculation" that one eclipse (Sept. 1, B. C. 720), was of less than three digits, though recorded larger. Hence he infers that it was not seen.

His inferences and arguments will be further examined as I proceed.

C. F. H.

For the World's Crisis.

THE NEW BIRTH.

"Verily, verily I say unto thee, except a man be born again, he cannot see the kingdom of God."—JOHN 3: 3.

I doubt whether there is a single passage of Scripture, or statement of Jesus while on earth, which has been less understood than this; and Nicodemus is not the only ruler and master in Israel, or the christian church, who has failed to comprehend its meaning.

I had the privilege last Sabbath of listening to a discourse from this text, in a place where I was holding a series of meetings, which has called up my attention anew to this important declaration of Christ. And I refer to it, and the exposition given of the text, and the position assumed by the preacher, not with any intent to do injury to him, or in any lack of christian charity,—God forbid; but because the view he takes is that generally given of the passage, and because I deem it erroneous. We are set for the defense of the gospel.

The preacher spoke of the blindness of Nicodemus, and of many others, respecting the nature of the new birth; and then endeavored himself to clear up the text; but really, to my mind, his light was but darkness, and I think to his congregation; he left the subject in greater obscurity than when he began.

Never did I feel more convinced of the importance of christian ministers making themselves thoroughly acquainted with Christian doctrine and the Scriptures, than now in these perilous days; and of the divine aid of the Holy Spirit to lead us all into truth, by enlightening the understanding in "the things of the kingdom of God." May the Lord illuminate our minds by his word and Spirit; and especially his ministers,—that we may edify our hearers, and not leave them in greater darkness and doubt than before we attempt to teach them concerning the things which belong to their eternal peace.

The position assumed by our preacher was the following: The new birth, he considered "conversion." The kingdom of God, "the gospel church below, and the church triumphant above."

In endeavoring to explain and preach from the text with these premises assumed, and not proved from the Scriptures, he labored under great embarrassment, as he necessarily must; for in attempting to show how an unconverted man could not "see (enjoy) the gospel church below, nor enter" therein, as Jesus says, "he cannot enter into the kingdom of God" (ver. 5), he found a difficulty he could not harmonize with existing facts in "the church below." Therefore he soon left this part unsatisfactorily explained to his own mind and that of his thinking hearers, and proceeded to transfer our minds to "the church triumphant above," where he made out a little better case of it, granting such a church is existing there.

In describing, however, the happy state of such a church above, drawing wholly from the imagination and the application of a few perverted Scriptures to his use, he failed in proving that there was such a kingdom above, and broke out in the following train of remark: "It don't matter where heaven is, or what it is, if we are only prepared to go there. The preparation is the great thing necessary for us to attend to. Heaven will be a good place wherever it is, whether it is above or below, north or south, east or west. Heaven may not be a place; it may be a state." etc.

Without questioning the importance of the remark that a preparation for heaven is the one thing needful for us to see to, I do deny the statement that "it matters not where heaven is, or what it is." If God has seen fit to reveal the future state and the glories of the coming kingdom and restitution, giving us "exceeding great and precious promises whereby we may be made the "partakers of the divine nature," and designed to enable us to overcome this sinful world by contrasting "the things seen and temporal" with those "things unseen" and "eternal," they are of the last importance for us to understand in order to our perfection, and to incite us to a preparation to enjoy such a blissful state hereafter.

But what surprised me in this train of thought of our preacher was, the abandonment of his premises in the beginning. He started with the proposition that "the kingdom of God" was "the church below, and the church triumphant above." Failing to prove the first part of the proposition, he now abandons the last, having no Scriptures at hand to prove it, and declares heaven may have no special locality,—it may not be a place anywhere in the universe,—but a mere state or condition! So that "the kingdom of God"—"the church triumphant above," has vanished into nothing! For what kind of state can there be without place, and what kind of a church is a nonentity?

This reminds me of what Dr. Dick says:

"Many foolish and inaccurate conceptions prevail even in the christian world. The greater part of christians rest satisfied with the most vague and incorrect ideas concerning heaven. The image picture presented to their minds is that of a splendid chaotic mass, or a dazzling meteor. The term glory, and its kindred epithets, reiterated a thousand times in description of the heavenly state, is a vast assembly crowned in concave sky. Infidel scoffers have been led to conclude that the christian heaven is no object to be desired, and have declared that they feel no pleasure in being suspended forever in an etherial region, and perpetually singing psalms and hymns to the Eternal. It is incomprehensible, also, that a sensitive being should exist, furnished with all the organs and functions requisite to animal life, and yet of a size ten thousand times less than a mite." Phil. of Future State.

But our preacher proceeds in a kind of harangue, abandoning the Scriptures altogether, thus: "Stop your arguing—stop your arguing—and preach and tell your christian experience. You can do more in telling your christian experience than in all your arguing on the Scriptures. St. Paul did not argue, he preached his experience wherever he went, and darkness, and idolatry, and heathenism fled before him," (quoting Paul before Agrippa). With many such like words as these the Scriptures and gospel were laid aside as comparatively ineffective in the conversion of men, beside one's christian experience.

I must confess that this was a new doctrine to me, and I thought, how can there be christian experience without a knowledge of christian doctrine? And how can there be a knowledge of christian doctrine unless the church preach the word of God? And again I thought, was it true that "St Paul went preaching his christian experience" everywhere, and before it darkness, and idolatry, and heathenism took flight and fell? And I have searched the "Acts of the Apostles," and St. Paul's Epistles, to ascertain if this was his custom.

Now, I do not ignore christian experience; I would not speak lightly of it; I believe every christian is bound to tell what the Lord has done for his soul; but I do not believe that christian experience should be substituted for the gospel, nor be preached instead of the word of God. It is like fighting with the scabbard instead of the sword, and presenting the people with the earthern vessel, instead of the treasure in it. "The sword of the Spirit" is "the word of God," and not christian experience. "The treasure" is "the gospel" in our earthern vessels, that "the excellency may be of God, and not of us."

I must confess I was amazed to hear a christian minister instructing his christian hearers to lay aside the Scriptures, and all go to preaching and telling their christian experiences in order to convert men to the truth and to God. There is ignorance enough now prevailing on the Scriptures and confusion of ideas relative to Bible doctrines; but what would be the condition of things if such advice be followed? Ignorance and superstition would prevail, and impressions, visions and dreams be followed instead of the word of God, and the confusion of Babel would be repeated in the christian world. There is Babylon enough now on christian doctrine, owing to a lack of scriptural knowledge; but this would lead to confusion confounded! Such an idea will do for Roman Catholics who are afraid of the light of the Bible, but should not be entertained a moment by Protestant christians.

The remark that "St Paul preached his experience instead of arguing upon the Scriptures," is refuted by the fact that he did not tell his experience, I think, but three times; once before Ananias, who opened his eyes after he saw Jesus in the way; once before his brethren, who feared he was not truly converted, and once before King Agrippa. These were the only special instances. He often referred to his state of mind, the hope he had within him; but always showed that this experience came through obedience and sanctification of the truth. Immediately on his conversion it is recorded of him: "And straightway he preached Christ in the synagogues, that he is the Son of God" (Acts 9: 20), not his Christian experience. "But Saul increased the more in strength, and confounded the Jews which dwelt at Damascus, proving that this is very Christ."—Acts 9: 22. This was not done by his experience, nor without argument. "And Paul, as his manner was, went in unto them . . . and reasoned with them out of the Scriptures."—Acts 17: 2. This was his usual custom, to "reason" (argue) from the "Scriptures,"—not his experience.

"Therefore disputed he in the synagogues with the Jews, and with the devout persons, and in the markets daily with them that met with him."—Acts 17: 17. He did not dispute thus publicly in the synagogues and markets daily on his christian experience, for that would be absurd. "Then certain philosophers of the Epicureans, and of the Stoics, encountered him . . . he preached unto them Jesus, and the resurrection."—17: 18. This encounter was not without close argument, and it was not about his experience; for what cared they about that? "Then spake the Lord to Paul in the night by a vision, Be not afraid, but speak, and hold not thy peace." —Acts 18: 9. What did the Lord tell him to speak and tell boldly? His christian experience? Paul, I suppose, complied with what the Lord commanded him to do, and it is recorded, "He continued there a year and six months, teaching the word of God among them."—Acts 18: 11.

This will suffice as to what Paul preached. With the charge he gives to Timothy,—a solemn charge to all ministers of the gospel,—I close: "I charge thee, therefore, before God, and the Lord Jesus Christ, who shall judge the quick and the dead at his appearing and his kingdom, Preach the word." If St. Paul's example and St. Paul's charge were more followed and observed by the christian ministry and church at large, there would be less ignorance of christian doctrine; more uniformity of faith and experience; more unity, love and fellowship among christians, and more power in the church.

Martin Luther thus observes to his brethren who had departed from the preaching of the word of God to a reliance on other instrumentalities in order to extend what they supposed to be the kingdom of God: "I am ready to preach, argue, write. I stood up against the Pope, indulgences, and Papists; but without violence or tumult. I brought forward God's word. I preached, and wrote, and then stopped. And while I laid me down and slept, or chatted with Armsdorff and Melancthon, the word I preached brought down the Pope to the ground, so that never prince or Emperor had dealt it such a blow. The word run through the length and breadth of the land."

In my next I will endeavor to explain the text chosen by my brother through the aid of the Scriptures, and by the assistance of the Holy Spirit, if the Lord graciously bestows this gift upon me. Brethren, pray that we may make plain the word of God to others, first having an understanding of it ourselves. And pray for my christian brother in the ministry, that he may soon see light, and become a more efficient minister of the word of God and the gospel of God.

There were many good things he said, and although I have not mentioned them, to them I give my hearty assent. The Lord help us to be "able ministers of the New Testament," rightly dividing the word of truth."

O. R. FASSETT.

For the World's Crisis.

THE CHRISTIAN'S HOPE.

St. Paul was judged for the hope of the promise of God made unto the fathers; unto which promise the twelve tribes instantly serving God hoped to come; for which hope's sake he was accused of the Jews. St. Paul's hope is the christian's hope, unto which only by instantly serving God every christian can hope to come.

The promise of God made unto the fathers we find recorded in Gen. 17: 8,—"And I will give unto thee, and to thy seed after thee, the land wherein thou art a stranger, all the land of Canaan, for an everlasting possession; and I will be their God." "Abraham believed God, and it was accounted to him for righteousness;" and through the righteousness of faith he became heir of the world; not as it now is, but as it will be when redeemed from sin, or at the time of restitution of all things, "which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." Restitution is the act of restoring what is lost; bringing this world back to its primeval purity and glory, as it came from the hand of its Maker, pure and spotless, when God called it good, before sin had defiled man, or man had defiled the earth. "The righteous shall inherit the land and dwell therein forever."—Ps. 37: 29. Land is the christian's reward.

The inspired writers have written of a good time coming, a land of delight, where the inhabitants shall be righteous, and shall delight themselves in the abundance of peace. The apostle says, "The heavens and the earth which are now, . . . are kept in store, reserved unto fire against the day of judgment and perdition of ungodly men. . . . Nevertheless we, according to his promise, look for new heavens and a new earth wherein dwelleth righteousness." Such is the christian's hope. Such is my hope, through the righteousness of faith to attain unto the resurrection from the dead; and through the resurrection of the dead inherit the land promised to Abraham. A land where the inhabitants will never say they are sick. No death-bed scenes, no more sighing over the pale and languid features of our loved friends, no more scalding tears shed at the graves of the loved, no more sorrow, no more sighing, no more death, no more toils, no more troubles, no more war, carrying desolation to our happy homes; but peace, everlasting peace, is the christian's portion when Jesus comes. What a contrast! Exalted from the dust of earth to everlasting life in the kingdom of God's dear Son. "For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven, with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God; and the dead in Christ shall rise first; then we which are alive and remain, shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air; and so shall we ever be with the Lord."

Amid the wreck of worlds the Revelator saw the "holy city, New Jerusalem, coming down from God, out of heaven, prepared as a bride adorned for her husband;" and "heard a great voice out of heaven saying, Behold, the tabernacle of God is with men, and he will dwell with them, and they shall be his people; and God himself shall be with them and be their God. And God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes; and there shall be no more death, neither sorrow, nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain; for the former things are passed away."

The new earth with all its blessings will very soon be spread out before us. Abiding peace is near at hand. The muttering of the distant thunder proclaims the day of God approaching. Weary pilgrim, lift up your head and rejoice, for your redemption draweth nigh. The waymarks are in the distance passed. The promise made of God to the fathers is about to be ushered in, when righteousness shall cover the earth as the waters cover the sea.

Beloved saints in the Lord, are you poor in spirit? the kingdom of heaven shall be yours. Do you mourn? you shall be comforted. Are you meek? you shall inherit the earth. If you are hungering and thirsting after righteousness, you shall be filled. Are you merciful? then you may hope in God's mercy. Are you pure in heart? then you shall see God. Are you peacemakers? then you may be found of him in peace. Are you persecuted for righteousness' sake? "rejoice, and be exceeding glad; for great is your reward in heaven." Soon the Lifegiver will come and reward us according to our works. If we are faithful, we shall be blessed with faithful Abraham.

I. B. LUTHER.

Hereford, C. E.

For the World's Crisis.

THE VOICE OF HISTORIANS.
"The Lord's Day"—The True Christian Sabbath.

NUMBER FIVE.

From Justin Martyr's and Tertullian's "Apologies," as translated by Wm. Reeves. Pp. 123 to 127, and 235-9.

"And in every Eucharistical Sacrifice we bless the Maker of all things, through his Son Jesus Christ, and through the Holy Spirit; and upon the day called* Sunday, all that live either in city or country meet together at the same place, where the writings of the apostles and prophets are read, as much as time will give leave. When the reader has done, the bishop makes a sermon, wherein he instructs the people, and animates them to the practice of such lovely precepts. At the conclusion of this discourse, we all rise up together and pray; and prayers being over, as I now said, there is bread, and wine, and water offered, and the bishop, as before, sends up prayers and thangsgivings, with all the fervency he is able, and the people conclude all with the joyful acclamation of Amen. Then the consecrated elements are distributed to and partaken of by all that are present, and sent to the absent by the hands of the deacons.

But the wealthy and willing, for every one is at liberty, contribute as they think fitting; and this collection is deposited with the Bishop, and out of this he relieves the orphan and the widow, and such as are reduced to want by sickness or any other cause, and such as are in bonds, and strangers that come from far; and, in a word, he is the guardian and almoner to all the indigent.

Upon Sunday we all assemble, that being the first day in which God set himself to work upon the dark void, in order to make the world, and in which Jesus Christ our Savior rose again from the dead; for the day before Saturday (or Saturn), he was crucified, and the day after, which is Sunday, he appeared to his apostles and disciples, and taught them what I have now proposed to your consideration.

And so far as these things shall appear agreeable to truth and reason, so far we desire you would respect 'em accordingly, but if they seem trifling, despise 'em as trifles; however, don't proceed against the professors of 'em, who are people of the most inoffensive lives, as severely as against your professed enemies; for, tell you I must, that if you persist in this course of iniquity, you shall not escape the vengeance of God in the other world. But be this as it will, you shall hear us contentedly cry out, God's will be done. And altho' we might produce the rescript of your father, the great and illustrious Emperor Adrian, to plead in our behalf for the moderating your proceedings according to that rule of equity we ourselves have proposed, yet we shall not insist so much upon the authority of Adrian as the justice of our demands, which was the reason of composing this Apology and Exposition of the Christian Faith. However, we have subjoined a copy of Adrian's Epistle, to let you see the truth and justice of our cause," etc.

So much for Justin Martyr, who wrote A. D. 138 or 139. Now let us hear Tertullian, as translated by the same author, Wm. Reeves, on pp. 238–9.

* "Upon the day called Sunday. It was called Sunday by Justin and Tertullian, because it happened upon that day of the week which by the heathens was dedicated to the sun, and therefore as being best known to them by that name, the Fathers commonly made use of it in their Apologies to the heathen Emperors; but the more proper and prevailing name was kuriakee, or the LORD'S DAY, as it is called by St. John himself. Rev. 1: 10."—[Note by Reeves.]

TERTULLIAN:—"Others, with a greater show of reason, take us for worshipers of the sun. These send us to the religion of Persia, tho' we are far from adoring a painted sun, like them who carry about his image everywhere upon their bucklers. This suspicion took its rise from hence, because it was observed that christians prayed with their faces towards the East; but some of you likewise, out of an affectation of adoring some of the celestial bodies, wag your lips towards the rising sun; but if we, like them, celebrate Sunday as a festival and day of rejoicing, 'tis for a reason vastly distant from that of worshiping the sun; for we solemnize the day after Saturday in contradistinction to those who call this day their Sabbath, and devote it to ease and eating, deviating from the old Jewish customs, which they are now very ignorant of."

In addition to the foregoing, as translated by Reeves, we introduce the following as given by James Gilfillan, from his work entitled "The Sabbath," pp. 374–5:—

"Like Pliny and Justin Martyr, but with still more detail, Tertullian sets forth the manner in which christian worship was conducted in his time. Although he does not mention the day in the description itself, he has, in a preceding chapter of the same work, declared, that the christians solemnized the day of the sun, 'the day after Saturday, in distinction from those who call this day their Sabbath. The passage is too long for insertion, but the following is, we trust, a faithful translation of so much of it as bears upon our subject:—'We christians, incorporated by our common faith, worship, and hopes, meet for prayer, in which we as it were take the kingdom of heaven by a violence grateful to God, not forgetting to offer up supplications for emperors, and all in authority, for the prosperity and peace of the state, and for the delay of the final doom. We assemble, also, for receiving instruction, warning, and exhortation from the Divine word, whereby we nourish our faith, animate our hope, establish our confidence, and stir up ourselves by every argument to the practice of good works. On these occasions discipline is administered with all solemnity, and the censures pronounced on offenders are regarded as anticipating the judgment to come. Every one puts something into the public stock once a month, or when he pleases, and according to his ability and inclination, for there is no compulsion; these pious deposits being applied, not to the indulgence of appetite, but in aid of the poor, orphans, the aged, the shipwrecked, the persecuted, and for burying the dead. Then follows a supper, a love-feast, not an entertainment for the sensual, but a refreshment to the hungry and the needy. To this supper we do not sit down till we have previously tasted the pleasure of prayer to God; we sup in the recollection that God is to be worshipped in the night season, and we converse with the consciousness that he hears us. Praise succeeds, and the whole is concluded with prayer when we depart; not for the purposes of dissipation, licentiousness, or violence, but with the same regard to purity and moderation as in our coming together, like men who have been enjoying a spiritual banquet rather than a common supper."—Apol. c. 39.

East Weare, N. H. T. M. PREBLE.

For the World's Crisis.

THE OLD TESTAMENT.

"If they hear not Moses and the prophets, neither will they be persuaded though one rose from the dead."—LUKE 16: 31.

It is common for skeptics to attack the Old Testament in various ways, while they (some of them) seem to admit the truth of the New. They speak of Moses as having no knowledge of the subjects upon which he wrote, and do not believe he was inspired. At the same time if they can find a passage anywhere in the Book that can be twisted so as to seem to favor their cause they will present it as unanswerable and quite reliable. Let me say to these skeptics and to all who are influenced by them, that there is, if possible, more proof of the authenticity of the Old Testament than of the New.

The quotation at the head of this article is of itself sufficient to bind the two Testaments together, so that if the Old is rejected the New must be also rejected. Moses wrote truly and faithfully as the Almighty directed. And if some parts of his writings were intended for the Jews only, certainly other portions apply to all nations and tribes of men.

One thing further I would say to all who speak contemptuously of any of the writers of the Old Testament,—or doubtingly of the things written, when you strike them you dash youself against the ETERNAL ROCK. You think it pleasant pastime to joke about Jonah and the whale, but the truth of that narrative is sustained in the New Testament by HIM who spake as never man spake.

Without asserting the complete accuracy of our common translation in every particular, we say fearlessly that if you reject one part of Scripture, you cast away all reasonable hope of your salvation. For "if any man shall take away from the words of the book of this prophecy, God shall take away his part out of the book of life, and out of the holy city, and from the things which are written in this book."

That this fearful fate may not be the portion of the reader or the writer of this, is my earnest prayer.

F. H. CHAMBERLAIN.

REPROOF.—Reproof is not good or pleasant, but sometimes needful, because wholesome and good in order to the end; it should therefore be administered as physic, and then only when the patient is fit to receive it, and it may serve to correct his distemper; otherwise you will only make him more sick and very angry. It must be like a bitter pill wrapped in gold, and tempered with sugar, otherwise it will not go down or work effectually.

Never abuse one who was once your bosom friend, however bitter now.

The World's Crisis

AND SECOND ADVENT MESSENGER.

"BEHOLD, I COME QUICKLY; AND MY REWARD IS WITH ME."

WHOLE NO. 496. | BOSTON, TUESDAY, APRIL 4, 1865. | VOL. XXI.—NO. 3.

The World's Crisis

AND SECOND ADVENT MESSENGER,

Issued every Tuesday Afternoon, at

167 HANOVER STREET, BOSTON.

MILES GRANT, EDITOR.

EDITORIAL COMMITTEE:
S. G. MATHEWSON, I. C. WELLCOME,
H. F. CARPENTER.

PUBLISHING COMMITTEE:
C. P. HUDSON, H. V. DAVIS,
S. S. BREWER, J. G. HAMBLIN,
D. MATHEWSON.

GEORGE T. ADAMS,
TREASURER AND BUSINESS AGENT.

☞ THE CRISIS is devoted to the exposition of all Bible truth; especially the doctrine of the immediate, personal coming and reign of Christ on the earth; holiness of heart; the unconscious state of the dead; their literal resurrection, and final destruction of the wicked.

For the World's Crisis.

"MY SHEEP."—John 10: 27.

One of Christ's "little flock"!
To hear His blessed voice,
And follow where He leads—
How doth my heart rejoice
That such a privilege is mine,
By thee, good Shepherd, claimed as thine.

What though rude storms may come,
And cold winds fiercely blow?
No harm can fall to me,
My Leader's voice I know;
And, following him, am safe indeed,
Provided well for every need.

Fierce foes may gather round,
And threaten to devour,
'Tis then that he proclaims
His firm intent and power:
"Shall never perish"—no rude hand
Can pluck them from my Father's hand.

Eternal life I give
To all who follow me,
Who from enticing voice
Of strangers ever flee;
These shall be gathered to my fold,
Where are rich joys that are untold.

One of Christ's chosen flock!
What more could I desire?
There's nought obtained on earth
That mortals need prize higher.
O! thou good Shepherd, ever guide
And keep me closely by thy side.

A. C. JUDSON.

For the World's Crisis.

PTOLEMY'S ECLIPSES.

The account of these is found in his astronomical "System," commonly called the Almagest, in the fourth and fifth books. The old eclipses are all of the moon, which Ptolemy preferred to those of the sun because he regarded the former as better suited to his purpose, which was to determine the moon's anomaly, and other problems of its motion.

Ptolemy refers to Hipparchus constantly, and takes his account of the ancient eclipses directly from him. Respecting these I also find the following statement. Says Dr. Jarvis: "On the capture of Babylon by Alexander the Great, there fell into the hands of the Greeks a series of records of astronomical observations, which Callisthenes transmitted from Babylon to Greece, at the instance of his master Aristotle. These observations, the oldest then in existence, Hipparchus, an eminent astronomer under Ptolemy Philadelphus, adjusted to the Egyptian method of calculation, 'from the original records,' as he himself states, "which had been kept at Babylon and brought from thence.'" (Discourses on Prophecy, p. 107.) This statement respecting Callisthenes I find made by various writers, and Simplicius is the ancient authority for it, in a comment on a work "On the heavens."

The era employed by Ptolemy is that of Nabonassar, very famous at that time. This began, by common consent, on the 27th of Feb., or, by another reckoning, the 26th, in the year 3967 of the Julian Period, and B.C. 747. With these data it is easy to translate the record into the terms of the Christian Era. Ptolemy's use of the eclipses in the Almagest is purely astronomical, and not chronological. Hence they are given not in chronological order, but are selected at certain intervals, for the purpose named above. I here translate the account he gives of the most of them, with such remarks of his as may best state the case respecting them.

After his general propositions, he says, b. 4, c. 5, "We will employ, from the most ancient eclipses which we have, three that appear to have been recorded beyond dispute; then also three others of the present age, which have been most carefully observed by ourselves."

"Of the three ancient eclipses, then, which we have taken from those observed at Babylon, the first is registered as having occurred in the first year of Mardoc Empadus, in the Egyptian [month] Thoth, 29th to the 30th. And it began, he [Hipparchus] says, to be eclipsed after its rising, a full hour having passed; and it was eclipsed whole. Since then the sun was near the last of Pisces [the sign of the Zodiac], and the night was of twelve equinoctial hours nearly, the beginning of the eclipse was evidently 4½ equinoctial hours before midnight; and the middle, since the eclipse was total, 2½ hours before [midnight]." He then gives the time for the meridian of Alexandria, five-sixths of an hour later. [Reckoned by chronologists as B. C. 721, March 19.]

"The second of the eclipses is registered as having occurred in the second year of the same Mardoc Empadus, in the Egyptian Thoth, 18th to the 19th. And it was eclipsed, he says, three digits on the south, at midnight. Since then the middle time at Babylon appears to have been at midnight, in Alexandria it must have been," etc. The reader sees at once how clearly Ptolemy separates his facts from his inferences. [B. C. 720, March 8.]

"The third of the eclipses is registered as having occurred in the same second year of Mardoc Empadus, in the Egyptian Phamenoth, 15th to the 16th. And it began to be eclipsed, he says, after its rising, and it was eclipsed on the north, more than half. Since then the sun was in the beginning of Virgo, the length of the night in Babylon was eleven equinoctial hours nearly, and half the night five and a half hours. The beginning of the eclipse, then, was about (or, at the most) five equinoctial hours before midnight," etc. [B. C. 720, Sept. 1.]

From these data, finding the intervals of time, Ptolemy proceeds with certain computations, illustrated by diagrams. He then gives the account of the three other eclipses above referred to, as follows:

"Again, of the three eclipses which we have selected from those carefully observed by us at Alexandria, the first occurred in the seventeenth year of Adrian, in the Egyptian Payni, 20th to the 21st. And we have accurately computed its middle time to have been a half and a fourth of an equinoctial hour before midnight. And it was eclipsed whole; at which hour the sun's true place was at 13¼ degrees of Taurus, nearly." [A. D. 133, May 6.]

"And the second occurred in the nineteenth year of Adrian, in the Egyptian Choiak, 2nd to the 3rd. And we have computed its middle time to have been one equinoctial hour before midnight. And it was eclipsed on the north, a half and a third of the diameter; at which time the sun's true place was at 25 1-6 degrees of Cancer, nearly." [A. D. 134, Oct. 20.]

"And the third of the eclipses was in the twentieth year of Adrian, in the Egyptian Pharmouthi, 19th to the 20th. And we have computed the middle time to have been four equinoctial hours after midnight, and it was eclipsed half its diameter, on the north. And the sun at this hour was at 14 degrees 12 minutes of Pisces, nearly." [A. D. 136, March 5.]

These three eclipses are then compared with each other, as the former had been compared. And in the next chapter (6), the two sets are compared with each other. The interval between the second eclipse of each triplet is found to be 854 Egyptian years, 73 days, 23 5-6 hours apparent time (if I understand rightly), or 23½ hours true time. Etc. The figures are carried not only to minutes of a degree, but to seconds, thirds, fourths, fifths, and sixths,—answering to about the tenth decimal place. In the seventh chapter the era of Nabonassar is introduced.

Ptolemy next introduces two eclipses as occurring on the same side of the same node, and of similar dimensions. He describes them as follows:

"We have taken for the first eclipse that which was observed at Babylon in the thirty-first year of Darius the first, in the Egyptian Tybi, 3rd to the 4th, at the middle of the sixth hour, when we are informed that the moon was eclipsed on the south, two digits." [B. C. 491, April 25.]

"And for the second, that observed at Alexandria, in the ninth year of Adrian, in the Egyptian Pachon, 17th to the 18th, three and three-fifths equinoctial hours before midnight, when the moon was likewise eclipsed the sixth part of its diameter, on the south." Then follow computations. [A. D. 125, April 5.]

In the same chapter (7) another eclipse is compared with the second of the present list (B. C. 720, March 8). It is described as follows: "The second eclipse employed by Hipparchus occurred in the 20th year of Darius the successor of Cambyses, in the Egyptian Epiphi, 28th to the 29th, the night having advanced 6¼ equinoctial hours; when the moon was likewise eclipsed on the south, one fourth of its diameter. And the middle time in Babylon was two fifths of an equinoctial hour before midnight, since half the night was then 6⅔ equinoctial hours." [B. C. 502, Nov. 19.]

The reader will here note that the two eclipses are given as each of three digits, and as so employed by Hipparchus. Ptolemy proceeds with his computations, including a table of the moon's anomaly.

In the tenth chapter he finds occasion to examine three other eclipses, of which he gives the following account:

"He [Hipparchus] says that these three eclipses were selected from those brought from Babylon, as there observed; and that the first occurred when Phanostratus was archon at Athens, in the [Greek] month Poseidon, and that the moon was eclipsed a small part of its disc, after rising, when half a summer hour of the night remained. And moreover, he says, it set eclipsed. Now this time was the year 366 of Nabonassar," etc. Here follow computations. [B. C. 383, Dec. 22.]

"Again, he says that the next eclipse occurred when Phanostratus was archon at Athens, in the month Scirophorion, Egyptian Phamenoth, 24th to the 25th. And it was eclipsed, he says, after rising in summer, the first hour having elapsed. And this time also is the 366th year of Nabonassar," etc, and computations. [B. C. 382, June 18.]

"And he says that the third eclipse occurred when Evander was archon at Athens, in the first part of the month Poseidon, Egyptian Thoth, 16th to the 17th. And it was eclipsed, he says, whole, beginning when four summer hours had elapsed. Now this time is the 367th year of Nabonassar," etc., and computations. [B. C. 382, Dec. 12.]

Then comes another triplet. He says: "Let us pass, now, to the three last eclipses of which he [Hipparchus] has given account, which he says were observed at Alexandria. The first of these, he says, occurred in the 54th year of the second Calippic period, the 16th of the Egyptian Mesore, when the moon began to be eclipsed a half hour before rising, and resumed its full form in the middle of the third hour. . . . And the time from the first year of Nabonassar is 546 Egyptian years," etc. [B. C. 201, Sept. 22.]

"The next eclipse occurred, he says, in the 55th year of the same period, the 9th of the Egyptian Mechir. And it began when the night had advanced 5⅓ hours, and it was eclipsed whole," etc. [From Nabonassar, 547 years, etc. B. C. 200, March 19.]

"And he says that the third eclipse occurred in the same 55th year of the second period, the fifth of the Egyptian Mesore. And it began when 6⅔ hours of the night had elapsed, and it was eclipsed whole. And the middle time of the eclipse, he says, was at about 8⅓ hours, that is, 2⅓ hours of the season after midnight." [From Nabonassar, 547 Egyptian years, 334 days, etc. B. C. 200, Sept. 11.]

In the fifth book, chapter 14, two eclipses are compared, recorded as follows:

"In the fifth year of Nobopalassar, which is the 127th year of Nabonassar, in the Egyptian Athyr, 27th to the 28th, the 11th hour near ending in Babylon, the moon began to to be eclipsed. And it was eclipsed mostly on the south, one fourth of its diameter." [B. C. 621, April 21.]

"Again, in the seventh year of Cambyses, which is the 125th year of Nabonassar, Egyptian Phamenoth, 17th to the 18th, one hour before midnight, the moon was eclipsed in Babylon, on the north, half its diameter." [B. C. 523, July 16.]

In book 6, chapter 5, Ptolemy proposes to demonstrate certain matters "by two eclipses from among those observed near the perigee," which he describes as follows:

"In the seventh year, then, of Philometor, which is the 574th of Nabonassar, in the Egyptian Phamenoth, 27th to the 28th, from the beginning of the 8th hour to the ending of the 10th, in Alexandria, the moon was eclipsed on the north, in all seven digits." Etc. [B. C. 174, April 30.]

"Again, in the 37th year of the third Calippic period, which is the 607th of the era of Nabonassar, in the Egyptian Tybi, 2nd to the 3rd, in the beginning of the fifth hour at Rhodes, the moon began to be eclipsed, and it was darkened in all three digits on the south." Etc. [B. C. 141, Jan. 27.]

Such is the historical record that has come down to us.

Eld. Thurman has doubtless tried all these eclipses by his tables. And he has tabled against them the following charges:

1. That one of them (Mar. 8, B. C. 720) never occurred. It only almost happened,—i. e. within 100 miles. How it came to be recorded he does not offer to explain.

2. That several of them (April 21, B. C. 621, Nov. 19, B. C. 502, Apr. 25, B. C. 491), as recorded, are too small to have been observed in that age. Thus he makes one of the features said to have been observed an argument to show that there was no observation at all. He admits that these eclipses occurred, but does not explain how; being never observed, they were yet recorded.

3. He finds "by calculation" that one eclipse (Sept. 1, B. C. 720), was of less than three digits, though recorded larger. Hence he infers that it was not seen.

His inferences and arguments will be further examined as I proceed. C. F. H.

For the World's Crisis.

THE NEW BIRTH.

"Verily, verily I say unto thee, except a man be born again, he cannot see the kingdom of God."—JOHN 3: 3.

I doubt whether there is a single passage of Scripture, or statement of Jesus while on earth, which has been less understood than this; and Nicodemus is not the only ruler and master in Israel, or the christian church, who has failed to comprehend its meaning.

I had the privilege last Sabbath of listening to a discourse from this text, in a place where I was holding a series of meetings, which has called up my attention anew to this important declaration of Christ. And I refer to it, and the exposition given of the text, and the position assumed by the preacher, not with any intent to do injury to him, or in any lack of christian charity,—God forbid; but because the view he takes is that generally given of the passage, and because I deem it erroneous. We are set for the defense of the gospel.

The preacher spoke of the blindness of Nicodemus, and of many others, respecting the nature of the new birth; and then endeavored himself to clear up the text; but really, to my mind, his light was but darkness, and I think to his congregation; he left the subject in greater obscurity than when he began.

Never did I feel more convinced of the importance of christian ministers making themselves thoroughly acquainted with Christian doctrine and the Scriptures, than now in these perilous days; and of the divine aid of the Holy Spirit to lead us all into truth, by enlightening the understanding in "the things of the kingdom of God." May the Lord illuminate our minds by his word and Spirit; and especially his ministers,—that we may edify our hearers, and not leave them in greater darkness and doubt than before we attempt to teach them concerning the things which belong to their eternal peace.

The position assumed by our preacher was the following: The new birth, he considered "conversion." The kingdom of God, "the gospel church below, and the church triumphant above."

In endeavoring to explain and preach from the text with these premises assumed, and not proved from the Scriptures, he labored under great embarrassment, as he necessarily must; for in attempting to show how an unconverted man could not "see (enjoy) the gospel church below, nor enter" therein, as Jesus says, "he cannot enter into the kingdom of God" (ver. 5), he found a difficulty he could not harmonize with existing facts in "the church below." Therefore he soon left this part unsatisfactorily explained to his own mind and that of his thinking hearers, and proceeded to transfer our minds to "the church triumphant above," where he made out a little better case of it, granting such a church is existing there.

In describing, however, the happy state of such a church above, drawing wholly from the imagination and the application of a few perverted Scriptures to his use, he failed in proving that there was such a kingdom above, and broke out in the following train of remark: "It don't matter where heaven is, or what it is, if we are only prepared to go there. The preparation is the great thing necessary for us to attend to. Heaven will be a good place wherever it is, whether it is above or below, north or south, east or west. Heaven may not be a place; it may be a state." etc.

Without questioning the importance of the remark that a preparation for heaven is the one thing needful for us to see to, I do deny the statement that "it matters not where heaven is, or what it is." If God has seen fit to reveal the future state and the glories of the coming kingdom and restitution, giving us "exceeding great and precious promises whereby we may be made the "partakers of the divine nature," and designed to enable us to overcome this sinful world by contrasting "the things seen and temporal" with those "things unseen" and "eternal," they are of the last importance for us to understand in order to our perfection, and to incite us to a preparation to enjoy such a blissful state hereafter.

But what surprised me in this train of thought of our preacher was, the abandonment of his premises in the beginning. He started with the proposition that "the kingdom of God" was "the church below, and the church triumphant above." Failing to prove the first part of the proposition, he now abandons the last, having no Scriptures at hand to prove it, and declares heaven may have no special locality,—it may not be a place anywhere in the universe,—but a mere state or condition! So that "the kingdom of God"—"the church triumphant above," has vanished into nothing! For what kind of state can there be without place, and what kind of a church is a nonentity?

This reminds me of what Dr. Dick says:

"Many foolish and inaccurate conceptions prevail even in the christian world. The greater part of christians rest satisfied with the most vague and incorrect ideas concerning heaven. The image picture presented to their minds is that of a splendid chaotic mass, or a dazzling meteor. The term glory, and its kindred epithets, reiterated a thousand times in description of the heavenly state, is a vast assembly crowned in concave sky. Infidel scoffers have been led to conclude that the christian heaven is no object to be desired, and have declared that they feel no pleasure in being suspended forever in an etherial region, and perpetually singing psalms and hymns to the Eternal. It is incomprehensible, also, that a sensitive being should exist, furnished with all the organs and functions requisite to animal life, and yet of a size ten thousand times less than a mite." Phil. of Future State.

But our preacher proceeds in a kind of harangue, abandoning the Scriptures altogether, thus: "Stop your arguing—stop your arguing—and preach and tell your christian experience. You can do more in telling your christian experience than in all your arguing on the Scriptures. St. Paul did not argue, he preached his experience wherever he went, and darkness, and idolatry, and heathenism fled before him," (quoting Paul before Agrippa). With many such like words as these the Scriptures and gospel were laid aside as comparatively ineffective in the conversion of men, beside one's christian experience.

I must confess that this was a new doctrine to me, and I thought, how can there be christian experience without a knowledge of christian doctrine? And how can there be a knowledge of christian doctrine unless the church preach the word of God? And again I thought, was it true that "St Paul went preaching his christian experience" everywhere, and before it darkness, and idolatry, and heathenism took flight and fell? And I have searched the "Acts of the Apostles," and St. Paul's Epistles, to ascertain if this was his custom.

Now, I do not ignore christian experience; I would not speak lightly of it; I believe every christian is bound to tell what the Lord has done for his soul; but I do not believe that christian experience should be substituted for the gospel, nor be preached instead of the word of God. It is like fighting with the scabbard instead of the sword, and presenting the people with the earthern vessel, instead of the treasure in it. "The sword of the Spirit" is "the word of God," and not christian experience. "The treasure" is "the gospel" in our earthern vessels, that "the excellency may be of God, and not of us."

I must confess I was amazed to hear a christian minister instructing his christian hearers to lay aside the Scriptures, and all go to preaching and telling their christian experiences in order to convert men to the truth and to God. There is ignorance enough now prevailing on the Scriptures and confusion of ideas relative to Bible doctrines; but what would be the condition of things if such advice be followed? Ignorance and superstition would prevail, and impressions, visions and dreams be followed instead of the word of God, and the confusion of Babel would be repeated in the christian world. There is Babylon enough now on christian doctrine, owing to a lack of scriptural knowledge; but this would lead to confusion confounded! Such an idea will do for Roman Catholics who are afraid of the light of the Bible, but should not be entertained a moment by Protestant christians.

The remark that "St Paul preached his experience instead of arguing upon the Scriptures," is refuted by the fact that he did not tell his experience, I think, but three times; once before Ananias, who opened his eyes after he saw Jesus in the way; once before his brethren, who feared he was not truly converted, and once before King Agrippa. These were the only special instances. He often referred to his state of mind, the hope he had within him; but always showed that this experience came through obedience and sanctification of the truth. Immediately on his conversion it is recorded of him: "And straightway he preached Christ in the synagogues, that he is the Son of God" (Acts 9: 20), not his Christian experience. "But Saul increased the more in strength, and confounded the Jews which dwelt at Damascus, proving that this is very Christ."—Acts 9: 22. This was not done by his experience, nor without argument. "And Paul, as his manner was, went in unto them . . . and reasoned with them out of the Scriptures."—Acts 17: 2. This was his usual custom, to "reason" (argue) from the "Scriptures,"—not his experience.

"Therefore disputed he in the synagogues with the Jews, and with the devout persons, and in the markets daily with them that met with him."—Acts 17: 17. He did not dispute thus publicly in the synagogues and markets daily on his christian experience, for that would be absurd. "Then certain philosophers of the Epicureans, and of the Stoics, encountered him . . . he preached unto them Jesus, and the resurrection."—17: 18. This encounter was not without close argument, and it was not about his experience; for what cared they about that? "Then spake the Lord to Paul in the night by a vision, Be not afraid, but speak, and hold not thy peace."—Acts 18: 9. What did the Lord tell him to speak and tell boldly? His christian experience? Paul, I suppose, complied with what the Lord commanded him to do, and it is recorded, "He continued there a year and six months, teaching the word of God among them."—Acts 18: 11.

This will suffice as to what Paul preached. With the charge he gives to Timothy,—a solemn charge to all ministers of the gospel,—I close: "I charge thee, therefore, before God, and the Lord Jesus Christ, who shall judge the quick and the dead at his appearing and his kingdom, Preach the word." If St. Paul's example and St. Paul's charge were more followed and observed by the christian ministry and church at large, there would be less ignorance of christian doctrine; more uniformity of faith and experience; more unity, love and fellowship among christians, and more power in the church.

Martin Luther thus observes to his brethren who had departed from the preaching of the word of God to a reliance on other instrumentalities in order to extend what they supposed to be the kingdom of God: "I am ready to preach, argue, write. I stood up against the Pope, indulgences, and Papists; but without violence or tumult. I brought forward God's word. I preached, and wrote, and then stopped. And while I laid me down and slept, or chatted with Armsdorff and Melancthon, the word I preached brought down the Pope to the ground, so that never prince or Emperor had dealt it such a blow. The word run through the length and breadth of the land."

In my next I will endeavor to explain the text chosen by my brother through the aid of the Scriptures, and by the assistance of the Holy Spirit, if the Lord graciously bestows this gift upon me. Brethren, pray that we may make plain the word of God to others, first having an understanding of it ourselves. And pray for my christian brother in the ministry, that he may soon see light, and become a more efficient minister of the word of God and the gospel of God.

There were many good things he said, and although I have not mentioned them, to them I give my hearty assent. The Lord help us to be "able ministers of the New Testament," rightly dividing the word of truth."

O. R. FASSETT.

For the World's Crisis.

THE CHRISTIAN'S HOPE.

St. Paul was judged for the hope of the promise of God made unto the fathers; unto which promise the twelve tribes instantly serving God hoped to come; for which hope's sake he was accused of the Jews. St. Paul's hope is the christian's hope, unto which only by instantly serving God every christian can hope to come.

The promise of God made unto the fathers we find recorded in Gen. 17: 8,—"And I will give unto thee, and to thy seed after thee, the land wherein thou art a stranger, all the land of Canaan, for an everlasting possession; and I will be their God." "Abraham believed God, and it was accounted to him for righteousness;" and through the righteousness of faith he became heir of the world; not as it now is, but as it will be when redeemed from sin, or at the time of restitution of all things, "which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." Restitution is the act of restoring what is lost; bringing this world back to its primeval purity and glory, as it came from the hand of its Maker, pure and spotless, when God called it good, before sin had defiled man, or man had defiled the earth. "The righteous shall inherit the land and dwell therein forever."—Ps. 37: 29. Land is the christian's reward.

The inspired writers have written of a good time coming, a land of delight, where the inhabitants shall be righteous, and shall delight themselves in the abundance of peace. The apostle says, "The heavens and the earth which are now, . . . are kept in store, reserved unto fire against the day of judgment and perdition of ungodly men. . . . Nevertheless we, according to his promise, look for new heavens and a new earth wherein dwelleth righteousness." Such is the christian's hope. Such is my hope, through the righteousness of faith to attain unto the resurrection from the dead; and through the resurrection of the dead inherit the land promised to Abraham. A land where the inhabitants will never say they are sick. No death-bed scenes, no more sighing over the pale and languid features of our loved friends, no more scalding tears shed at the graves of the loved, no more sorrow, no more sighing, no more death, no more toils, no more troubles, no more war, carrying desolation to our happy homes; but peace, everlasting peace, is the christian's portion when Jesus comes. What a contrast! Exalted from the dust of earth to everlasting life in the kingdom of God's dear Son. "For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven, with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God; and the dead in Christ shall rise first; then we which are alive and remain, shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air; and so shall we ever be with the Lord."

Amid the wreck of worlds the Revelator saw the "holy city, New Jerusalem, coming down from God, out of heaven, prepared as a bride adorned for her husband;" and "heard a great voice out of heaven saying, Behold, the tabernacle of God is with men, and he will dwell with them, and they shall be his people; and God himself shall be with them and be their God. And God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes; and there shall be no more death, neither sorrow, nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain; for the former things are passed away."

The new earth with all its blessings will very soon be spread out before us. Abiding peace is near at hand. The muttering of the distant thunder proclaims the day of God approaching. Weary pilgrim, lift up your head and rejoice, for your redemption draweth nigh. The waymarks are in the distance passed. The promise made of God to the fathers is about to be ushered in, when righteousness shall cover the earth as the waters cover the sea.

Beloved saints in the Lord, are you poor in spirit? the kingdom of heaven shall be yours. Do you mourn? you shall be comforted. Are you meek? you shall inherit the earth. If you are hungering and thirsting after righteousness, you shall be filled. Are you merciful? then you may hope in God's mercy. Are you pure in heart? then you shall see God. Are you peacemakers? then you may be found of him in peace. Are you persecuted for righteousness' sake? "rejoice, and be exceeding glad; for great is your reward in heaven." Soon the Lifegiver will come and reward us according to our works. If we are faithful, we shall be blessed with faithful Abraham. I. B. LUTHER.

Hereford, C. E.

For the World's Crisis.

THE VOICE OF HISTORIANS.

"The Lord's Day"—The True Christian Sabbath.

NUMBER FIVE.

From Justin Martyr's and Tertullian's "Apologies," as translated by Wm. Reeves. Pp. 123 to 127, and 238-9.

"And in every Eucharistical Sacrifice we bless the Maker of all things, through his Son Jesus Christ, and through the Holy Spirit; and upon the day called* Sunday, all that live either in city or country meet together at the same place, where the writings of the apostles and prophets are read, as much as time will give leave. When the reader has done, the bishop makes a sermon, wherein he instructs the people, and animates them to the practice of such lovely precepts. At the conclusion of this discourse, we all rise up together and pray; and prayers being over, as I now said, there is bread, and wine, and water offered, and the bishop, as before, sends up prayers and thangsgivings, with all the fervency he is able, and the people conclude all with the joyful acclamation of Amen. Then the consecrated elements are distributed to and partaken of by all that are present, and sent to the absent by the hands of the deacons.

But the wealthy and willing, for every one is at liberty, contribute as they think fitting; and this collection is deposited with the Bishop, and out of this he relieves the orphan and the widow, and such as are reduced to want by sickness or any other cause, and such as are in bonds, and strangers that come from far; and, in a word, he is the guardian and almoner to all the indigent.

Upon Sunday we all assemble, that being the first day in which God set himself to work upon the dark void, in order to make the world, and in which Jesus Christ our Savior rose again from the dead; for the day before Saturday (or Saturn), he was crucified, and the day after, which is Sunday, he appeared to his apostles and disciples, and taught them what I have now proposed to your consideration.

And so far as these things shall appear agreeable to truth and reason, so far we desire you would respect 'em accordingly, but if they seem trifling, despise 'em as trifles; however, don't proceed against the professors of 'em, who are people of the most inoffensive lives, as severely as against your professed enemies; for, tell you I must, that if you persist in this course of iniquity, you shall not escape the vengeance of God in the other world. But be this as it will, you shall hear us contentedly cry out, God's will be done. And altho' we might produce the rescript of your father, the great and illustrious Emperor Adrian, to plead in our behalf for the moderating your proceedings according to that rule of equity we ourselves have proposed, yet we shall not insist so much upon the authority of Adrian as the justice of our demands, which was the reason of composing this Apology and Exposition of the Christian Faith. However, we have subjoined a copy of Adrian's Epistle, to let you see the truth and justice of our cause," etc.

So much for Justin Martyr, who wrote A. D. 138 or 139. Now let us hear Tertullian, as translated by the same author, Wm. Reeves, on pp. 238-9.

* "Upon the day called Sunday. It was called Sunday by Justin and Tertullian, because it happened upon that day of the week which by the heathens was dedicated to the sun, and therefore as being best known to them by that name, the Fathers commonly made use of it in their Apologies to the heathen Emperors; but the more proper and prevailing name was Κυριακη, or the LORD'S DAY, as it is called by St. John himself. Rev. 1: 10."—[Note by Reeves.]

TERTULLIAN:—"Others, with a greater show of reason, take us for worshipers of the sun. These send us to the religion of Persia, tho' we are far from adoring a painted sun, like them who carry about his image everywhere upon their bucklers. This suspicion took its rise from hence, because it was observed that christians prayed with their faces towards the East; but some of you likewise, out of an affectation of adoring some of the celestial bodies, wag your lips towards the rising sun; but if we, like them, celebrate Sunday as a festival and day of rejoicing, 'tis for a reason vastly distant from that of worshiping the sun; for we solemnize the day after Saturday in contradistinction to those who call this day their Sabbath, and devote it to ease and eating, deviating from the old Jewish customs, which they are now very ignorant of."

In addition to the foregoing, as translated by Reeves, we introduce the following as given by James Gilfillan, from his work entitled "The Sabbath," pp. 374-5:—

"Like Pliny and Justin Martyr, but with still more detail, Tertullian sets forth the manner in which christian worship was conducted in his time. Although he does not mention the day in the description itself, he has, in a preceding chapter of the same work, declared, that the christians solemnized the day of the sun, 'the day after Saturday, in distinction from those who call this day their Sabbath. The passage is too long for insertion, but the following is, we trust, a faithful translation of so much of it as bears upon our subject:—'We christians, incorporated by our common faith, worship, and hopes, meet for prayer, in which we as it were take the kingdom of heaven by a violence grateful to God, not forgetting to offer up supplications for emperors, and all in authority, for the prosperity and peace of the state, and for the delay of the final doom. We assemble, also, for receiving instruction, warning, and exhortation from the Divine word, whereby we nourish our faith, animate our hope, establish our confidence, and stir up ourselves by every argument to the practice of good works. On these occasions discipline is administered with all solemnity, and the censures pronounced on offenders are regarded as anticipating the judgment to come. Every one puts something into the public stock once a month, or when he pleases, and according to his ability and inclination, for there is no compulsion; these pious deposits being applied, not to the indulgence of appetite, but in aid of the poor, orphans, the aged, the shipwrecked, the persecuted, and for burying the dead. Then follows a supper, a love-feast, not an entertainment for the sensual, but a refreshment to the hungry and the needy. To this supper we do not sit down till we have previously tasted the pleasure of prayer to God; we sup in the recollection that God is to be worshipped in the night season, and we converse with the consciousness that he hears us. Praise succeeds, and the whole is concluded with prayer when we depart; not for the purposes of dissipation, licentiousness, or violence, but with the same regard to purity and moderation as in our coming together, like men who have been enjoying a spiritual banquet rather than a common supper."—Apol. c. 39.

East Weare, N. H. T. M. PREBLE.

For the World's Crisis.

THE OLD TESTAMENT.

"If they hear not Moses and the prophets, neither will they be persuaded though one rose from the dead."—LUKE 16: 31.

It is common for skeptics to attack the Old Testament in various ways, while they (some of them) seem to admit the truth of the New. They speak of Moses as having no knowledge of the subjects upon which he wrote, and do not believe he was inspired. At the same time if they can find a passage anywhere in the Book that can be twisted so as to seem to favor their cause they will present it as unanswerable and quite reliable. Let me say to these skeptics and to all who are influenced by them, that there is, if possible, more proof of the authenticity of the Old Testament than of the New.

The quotation at the head of this article is of itself sufficient to bind the two Testaments together, so that if the Old is rejected the New must be also rejected. Moses wrote truly and faithfully as the Almighty directed. And if some parts of his writings were intended for the Jews only, certainly other portions apply to all nations and tribes of men.

One thing further I would say to all who speak contemptuously of any of the writers of the Old Testament,—or doubtingly of the things written, when you strike them you dash youself against the ETERNAL ROCK. You think it pleasant pastime to joke about Jonah and the whale, but the truth of that narrative is sustained in the New Testament by HIM who spake as never man spake.

Without asserting the complete accuracy of our common translation in every particular, we say fearlessly that if you reject one part of Scripture, you cast away all reasonable hope of your salvation. For "if any man shall take away from the words of the book of this prophecy, God shall take away his part out of the book of life, and out of the holy city, and from the things which are written in this book."

That this fearful fate may not be the portion of the reader or the writer of this, is my earnest prayer. F. H. CHAMBERLAIN.

REPROOF.—Reproof is not good or pleasant, but sometimes needful, because wholesome and good in order to the end; it should therefore be administered as physic, and then only when the patient is fit to receive it, and it may serve to correct his distemper; otherwise you will only make him more sick and very angry. It must be like a bitter pill wrapped in gold and tempered with sugar, otherwise it will not go down or work effectually.

Never abuse one who was once your bosom friend, however bitter now.

For the World's Crisis.

REPORT.

The Maine Western Central Quarterly Conference met, agreeably to notice, at the Wellington school-house, in East Livermore, on Thursday, March 2nd, at half past six o'clock P. M. Sermon by Bro. L. Rhodes, of Gardiner, from Matt. 13: 44. The sermon being closed, the brethren and sisters occupied another hour in prayer and exhortation, giving evidence that we had met in the right spirit, prepared for labor.

Friday morning 9½ o'clock. Prayer and social meeting. A general determination was expressed to "contend earnestly for the faith once delivered to the saints." One o'clock, P. M., sermon by Eld. L. L. Howard from James 5: 8. Subject, the soon coming of the Lord. Half past six o'clock P. M., sermon by Eld. L. Rhodes, from Heb. 6: 1. Saturday morning, nine oclock, interesting social meeting. One o'clock P. M., sermon by Eld. Howard, from Luke 17: 32. Half past six o'clock P. M., sermon by Eld. Howard from Rom. 1: 16.

Sunday morning, 9½ oclock, social meeting. The congregation was much larger than could be seated; it was therefore necessary to provide temporary seats, which rendered this meeting less interesting than it might otherwise have been. Half past ten A. M., sermon by Eld. Howard from John 3: 16. Subject, the inheritance of the kingdom. Half past six P. M., an exhortation by Eld. Rhodes upon faith in God, and christian duties. At the close quite a large number partook of the Lord's Supper.

The ministering brethren present were—Elds. L. Rhodes, L. Howard, and D. M. Hanscomb. I would say for the encouragement of the brotherhood that the best of feeling prevailed during these meetings; no doting about questions and strifes of words, but harmony and union seemed to be the ruling sentiments; and some were raised to newness of life, and we think all were benefitted. We would here gladly acknowledge an exhibition of the power of God in strengthening the sick. Sister Etta Hamlin had been at Bro. Roberts' about two weeks, quite sick. The physician who attended her said he could do her no good. On Friday afternoon Sr. Roberts became satisfied that Etta was near her end, and sent for the ministering Brn. to visit her, feeling that it was doubtful if she could live until they arrived, as it was four miles from where the meeting was held. When they arrived she was almost unable to speak, but supplication being made in faith to Him who has the power to raise the dead, through His mercy she was enabled to rise from the bed, wash herself, comb her hair, and sit down and sing quite a long hymn; attended the meeting both forenoon and afternoon, on Saturday and Sunday, leaving her testimonies with us, which were listened to with almost breathless attention. On Monday morning she said she felt her strength still increasing. Bless the Lord. Amen.

It is expected that our next quarterly conference will be held about the second week in June next. If any of our brethren desire it should be held in their vicinity, will they please present their requests in season, that due notice may be given?

D. W. GRIFFIN, Clerk.

Starks, Mar. 24th, 1865.

For the World's Crisis.

ARE WE PREPARED FOR OUR LORD'S COMING?

My dear christian friends, do we realize the awful thought that we are soon to meet our Lord in judgment? Do we realize the nearness of that terrible day of God's wrath, when he will judge us for our short probation here? The signs of the times proclaim the closing up of this dispensation as near at hand, and the flaming signals hung in the sky for the the past century are a solemn warning that our Savior is soon to come. How soon, we cannot tell. "For as the lightning cometh out of the east, and shineth even unto the west, so shall also the coming of the Son of man be." He has warned us that he will come suddenly. Are we prepared if he should come this week? Or even if the trumpet should sound this moment, are we prepared to welcome the sound, and say "Amen, even so, come Lord Jesus"?

This is a solemn question. We are preparing for eternity. Let us make our preparation sure. Let us be prepared for our Savior's coming at any moment, for he has warned us that he will come as a thief, and has commanded us to watch. Let us watch and pray without ceasing, that when the trumpet shall sound we may welcome our Savior, and exclaim, "Lo, this is our God, we have waited for him, and he will save us." Christian friends, I entreat you to watch with humbleness and patience, and put on the armor of Jesus, with prayer and faith. Pray without ceasing that God will help you to be prepared when he comes in the clouds to judge the quick and the dead, when the trumpet shall sound and awake the sleeping world from its fancied security; it will be too late then to prepare. When Jesus shall pronounce that terrible sentence, "I never knew you," and shall bid you to depart from him, it will be too late to prepare. Let us heed our Savior's command to watch. Let us awake and wash our robes in the blood of the Lamb, and be found watching and prepared when our Lord shall come to make up his jewels. Lord Jesus, help thy waiting servants to watch, that they may be prepared to welcome thee when thou shalt come; and may God bless, guide and keep them blameless, that they may inherit eternal life when the dear Jesus is revealed.

WM. H. SILVERNAIL.

Dundee, N. Y.

For the World's Crisis.

SPECIAL PROVIDENCE.

If the eyes of men were open to see the works of the LORD, how clearly they might see his hand in those circumstances or results which are now blindly ascribed to nature or to chance. We can easily conceive of vast bodies of men created, and left to perish without the needful provision of food. If chance or blind nature ruled, such things would be of frequent occurrence.

Such a multitude of peculiar circumstances are indispensable to the life of every person, that when we see things as they are, or even approach near to a correct view, we must acknowledge the constant care of the Maker and Preserver of men. Not a "sparrow falleth to the ground" without his notice. "The very hairs of your head are all numbered." How comforting the thought that "the LORD will provide," not only in the common events of life, but also in those straits out of which chance or nature could never deliver us. O for more of living faith in a LIVING GOD. Truly his tender mercies are over all his works."

F. H. CHAMBERLAIN.

The World's Crisis
AND SECOND ADVENT MESSENGER.

Boston, Tuesday, April 4, 1865.

Please Remember.

All letters, communications and remittances, should be addressed to the Editor, MILES GRANT.

All drafts, or bank checks, should be made payable to the Treasurer and Business Agent, GEO. T. ADAMS. Otherwise they cannot be used in the absence of the Editor.

WHAT SHALL BE DONE?

Some months since it was advertised in "our paper" that we must cut off those from our lists to whom we had sent bills repeatedly, and who had not informed us whether they could pay, or whether they wished the paper continued. This work has been delayed in part for want of time to attend to it, until quite recently. We now inquire once more of those to whom we have sent bills, whether they wish the Crisis continued? We should be glad to let all have it who wish to read its columns; but do not think we ought to send it free where it is not wanted. If any to whom we have recently sent bills cannot pay all or any part of what is due the office, and yet wish us to continue sending the paper, will they please drop us a line at once, expressing their wishes.

We have endeavored to be patient with all; but think that the principles of Christianity would require as much as a few lines from those to whom we refer. Do not neglect it any longer. Please attend to it to-day if possible. If you cannot pay all now, send us part of it; and if you cannot pay any portion, see if you cannot get us some new subscribers; but do not fail to write and let us know your wishes, and we will do the best we can for you. We hope to make "our paper" worthy of the patronage of all who love our dear Savior.

TRACTS.

We would recommend to our readers to do all they can for the tract fund. Our tracts are doing a great work. The call for them is increasing. We have never found people more anxious to read them than at the present. A large number of church members in the different evangelical organizations are beginning to look at the light which is now shining upon the truths of the Bible that have been long buried under human tradition and theological fables. Many are beginning to thank the Lord for what they see, and are earnestly calling for more light. Shall they have it? Now is a favored time to sow with a liberal hand. Come, Brn. and Srs., let us spare no effort by means of which we can benefit our fellow men in these last days of the present dispensation. The call for help is urgent. While men are spending millions for war, let us do what we can for the cause of the Prince of peace. Who will lend to the Lord, by giving to the poor? A few dollars invested in tracts may be the means of saving many. Send in the free will offerings, that we may send out the little messengers on their errands of mercy to those who are anxiously waiting for their coming. If we sow "bountifully," we "shall reap also bountifully. Every man according as he purposeth in his heart, so let him give; not grudgingly, or of necessity; for God loveth a cheerful giver."

OUR DISCUSSION IN BOSTON.

As stated last week, our discussion with Bro. Wendell in Boston, was one of considerable interest. We felt special help from the Lord in the defense of the truth, and gratification in contemplating the results of the debate. We shall not give any detailed report of the discussion, but only notice a few prominent points. It was stated the first evening that the resurrection was not necessary for judgment. This statement was met by Rev. 20: 13:—"And the sea gave up the dead which were in it; and death and hell (hades, 'the grave.' Marg.) delivered up the dead which were in them; and they were JUDGED, every man according to their works." All could see that this scripture, even as well as other passages, taught very plainly that death must deliver up the dead before they were judged; consequently the resurrection precedes the judgment. It is also very evident that when the sea shall give up the dead, and death shall deliver up the dead also, that then they will come to life. If death still retained them in its prison, then they would not be "delivered up." So long as the jailor keeps the prisoner in his cell, he is not delivered up for examination and execution. This point was not met.

It was claimed again that the judgment was only for the righteous. But we found the Scriptures affirming that "whoremongers and adulterers God will judge."—Heb. 13: 4. As these classes could not be considered as belonging to the righteous, it was afterward admitted that Matt. 12: 36, applies to the wicked:—"But I say unto you, that every idle word that men shall speak, they shall give account thereof in the day of judgment." We then called attention to the fact that the Greek word, rendered account, in Matt. 12: 36, was logos; which is defined as follows:—"A saying, speaking, that which is said or spoken," "a statement," "an oracular response," "report," "authentic narrative," "history," "account," "dialogue, conversation, discussion," "a discourse about one."—Liddell and Scott. This scripture teaches most plainly that all must be present "in the day of judgment, and "give account," each one for himself. This was not met, only with a passing remark, that it probably related to the first advent of our Savior, which we thought could not be, because Jesus said, when speaking of his first advent, "If any man hear my words, and believe not, I judge him not; for I come not to judge the world. . . . The word that I have spoken, the same shall judge him in the last day."—John 12: 47, 48. Paul says:—"Therefore judge nothing before the time, until the Lord come."—1 Cor. 4: 5. This passage could not have reference to the first advent; for the Savior had completed that, and been gone to heaven some twenty-nine years, when Paul wrote his first letter to the Corinthians. Hence, if "every idle word that men" have spoken was brought to judgment at the first advent, it was "before the time" appointed, and was not done in harmony with the express declarations of the Bible.

Luke 13: 26, 27, was presented as proof that the wicked dead must rise in order to fulfill the Scripture:—"Then shall ye begin to say, We have eaten and drunk in thy presence, and thou hast taught in our streets. But he shall say, I tell you I know not whence ye are; depart from me, all ye workers of iniquity." The people of Boston could not say that Christ had taught in their streets; yet it was claimed by the affirmative that this passage might be fulfilled by any of Christ's ministers. Luke 11: 31, 32, was presented as further proof that there must be a resurrection of the wicked:—"The queen of the south shall rise up in the judgment with this generation, and condemn them; for she came from the utmost parts of the earth to hear the wisdom of Solomon; and, behold, a greater than Solomon is here. The men of Nineveh shall rise up in the judgment with this generation, and shall condemn it; for they repented at the preaching of Jonas, and, behold, a greater than Jonas is here." This Scripture was not answered by the affirmative. The word anisteemi, rendered "shall rise," is twenty-three times applied to the resurrection of Christ, and signifies a literal resurrection.

In 2 Peter 2: 9, we read:—"The Lord knoweth how to deliver the godly out of temptation, and to reserve the unjust unto the day of judgment to be punished." No language could be plainer, we think, to show that the punishment of the wicked does not consist in the first death; for if it did, then the righteous and the wicked are suffering it alike at the present time, and will till the resurrection of the former. Besides, if the first death is this penalty for our sins, those who have been pardoned should not die. If a man be condemned to be executed upon the gallows, and the Governor pardons him, then he escapes the penalty; so if a sinner repents, and does "that which is lawful and right, he shall surely live, he shall not die."—Ezk. 18: 21. Does the prophet mean to teach us that christians and innocent children shall not die the first death? Certainly not, for the whole experience of mankind is against such a conclusion. Then, as a holy life does not exempt us from the first death, it follows that the first death is not the penalty for sin, except in Adam's case.

It is not reasonable to suppose that men are punished before the judgment, and as they are not judged till after they come out of the sea and the grave, it is very clear that if death is to be the punishment, it must be a "second death," which is just what the Bible teaches. But one cannot die "the second death" till after he is raised from the first death. The affirmative was urged to explain "the second death" from his stand-point, but failed to comply with the request. He was also requested to tell what is meant by the "first resurrection," but gave no answer other than the remark, "The difficulties I don't undertake to explain," and "I don't know what Rev. 20 means."

He admitted that the wicked are not now being punished, and yet claimed they will never be raised; and at the same time asserting that death is the punishment for sin. We were unable to make harmony from such contradictory positions. If "the second death" is the penalty for sin, and their punishment does not begin with the first death, as admitted by the affirmative, and taught in the Bible; if the wicked never rise, when does their punishment begin, and when do they die "the second death," at the beginning of which commences their punishment? We could obtain no explanation of these difficulties, that stand as impassable barriers in the way of the doctrine of the non-resurrection of the wicked.

Dan. 12: 2 was quite critically examined, but was found to teach very clearly that two classes will awake; "some to everlasting life, and some to shame and everlasting contempt." It was claimed by the affirmative that the verb "awake" was applicable only to the righteous. We consulted Mr. Noot, a Jew, who is familiar with the Hebrew language, and asked him what verb understood was associated with the words "some" and "some" in Dan. 12: 2? He said the verb "awake." And then added, that the word not must be used to qualify the second "awake." We inquired if the Hebrew word loh, for "not," was in the original? He said it was not. Then why use it? we inquired. His answer was in substance as follows:—The notoriously wicked will never rise; but the souls of those who have not been very wicked will pass through purgatorial fires for some length of time, and when they have been sufficiently purified, then they will be fitted for a resurrection; but these could not then come forth "to shame and everlasting contempt." For this reason, the passage must mean that the second class shall not awake to shame and contempt; because the Lord would not purify their souls in purgatorial fires, and then bring them up "to shame." We asked him if his view was the same as that held by the ancient Pharisees? He said it was; and then referred to learned Jewish commentators to prove his position. We thought best to take heed to the Savior's caution, and "beware of the leaven of . . . the doctrine of the Pharisees." Matt. 16: 6–12. They believed in the resurrection "of the just and unjust," but not of the notoriously wicked. The information gathered from the Jew helped us to understand Paul's language in Acts 24: 15, better than ever before. This we will notice in due time.

After consulting this Pharisee, we then went to Mr. Salom, a converted Jew in Boston, who is said to be as good a Hebrew scholar as there is in New England, and asked him if in Dan. 12: 2, the original required that both classes mentioned should awake? He said there was no room for doubt that both classes would awake.

Prof. Hudson says:—"Standing alone it will bear, I think, two renderings: 1. That of the received translation, which says that 'some' of 'many' who awake—whether the 'many' are all mankind or not—are consigned to 'shame,' etc., after awaking.

2. That instead of 'some,' we would read 'these' and 'those,' dividing the sleepers into two classes, the just and the unjust, leaving the latter to the doom that is named, whenever and however consummated."

We then called on Dr. Noyes, Professor of Hebrew at Harvard College, and he expressed himself as follows:—"The verb awake is applicable to both pronouns, and the passage teaches beyond all doubt that both classes mentioned will awake." George R. Noyes.

We next consulted Prof. S. M. Vail, a noted linguist, and Professor of Hebrew in the Biblical Institute at Concord, N. H., and obtained the following:—

"Dan. 12: 2 reads as follows,—verbatim in English:—'And many from the sleepers of the ground—dust—shall awake,—these to life everlasting,—those to shame and everlasting contempt.'

Rav, [the word rendered 'many'] corresponds with the Greek hoi polloi,—the whole—the many. These and those are distributives and demonstratives in apposition with 'the many.' Of course the verb 'they shall awake' is also the predicate verb of these and those. The Hebrew clearly teaches that the wicked will arise, as well as the righteous. The passage is therefore parallel with the words of Paul, 'There shall be a resurrection both of the just and of the unjust.' . . . The passage teaches precisely that the wicked will be raised equally with the just. There can be no doubt that the verb awake is common to both of the words 'these' and 'those,' or both of the words 'some' as the English version renders.

Yours very truly, STEPHEN M. VAIL.

"P. S. The preposition min, from, corresponds in this connection with our English 'of the.' 'The many of the' [or 'from the'] sleepers,—the many who sleep,—or in other words, the multitude of the dead shall arise, being of two classes; one class being endowed with everlasting life—happiness—the other class, on account of their sins, fallen into shame and everlasting contempt."—S. M. V.

Our recent examination of the Scriptures on this subject has made it clearer than ever that there must be a resurrection of the wicked in order to fulfill the word of the Lord. We see no chance for a doubt in the case.

DISCUSSION IN WORCESTER.

March 27th, we commenced a discussion in the City Hall, Worcester, with Mr. J. G. Fish, of Michigan. Mr. Fish is a prominent lecturer on Spiritualism. He was formerly a Baptist preacher. He is now fully committed to the propagation of the morals and doctrines of Spiritualism. He is very bold in denouncing the Bible and the God of the Bible. Says he was only a human spirit, not as far advanced as persons at the present day, and charges him with the worst of crimes. It was enough to make one shudder to hear him talk. But such men have many sympathizers at the present time, and the number is rapidly increasing. All the spirits and their followers are at war with the Bible and its holy teachings; and are substituting doctrines directly the opposite of those in the sacred Scriptures. Truly they are "doctrines of devils," and the same that the heathen Persians, Hindoos, Egyptians, Chinese and Romans received from the demons in ancient times. Modern Spiritualists have only changed the names of some things, while they adopt the same philosophy and theology as taught by the heathen nations over two thousand years ago. While our opponent could sneer at the Bible, and call it the "old sheepskin," he would be careful to speak of the fabulous nonsense of the heathen writers as the "sacred writings" of the Persians and the Egyptians. And yet, after all this blasphemous talk about the Bible and its Author, it is claimed that Spiritualism is ancient christianity revived. One might as well call a bloody battle a peace conference, or the stench of an awful carrion like the sweet scent of a rose. Christianity and Spiritualism are as wide apart as light and darkness, truth and error, virtue and vice. They have nothing in common.

But notwithstanding all this, millions are being seduced by the cunning wiles of the Devil and his demons. The last jots and tittles of the prophetic chart are fast being accomplished. The "seducing spirits" are doing their work in earnest, while the great mass of professed christians are asleep, or looking on with comparative indifference, and think there is no special danger from this greatest of all delusions. It looks "like a lamb" to them. They do not discover that it speaks as the "dragon." Did they know a half of what is going on among Spiritualists, and of the great progress this infernal system is making, they would be filled with amazement.

Our discussion continued five evenings, before crowded audiences of some eight hundred people, who listened attentively. We trust much good was accomplished, judging from the remarks of those present. Many had not seen the hideous deformity of the system of Spiritualism, in so clear light before. They had but a very faint idea of its bold blasphemies, and its rank infidel and atheistical doctrines. It may well be styled "the sum of all villanies." Mr. Fish very truly remarked, that if our position is right, he was "a lost man." We believe there is not a more direct road to perdition than the one in which the spirits are trying to lead men at the present time. The bite of the rattlesnake can be no more poisonous to the physical system, than Spiritualism to the moral. He who embraces it, signs his eternal-death warrant, and severs himself from "the tree of life." He who expects salvation through Jesus our Lord, should shun Spiritualism as he would the poison of asps.

EXPOSITION OF COL. 1: 13.

"Will you give an exposition of the last part of Col. 1: 13?" H. H. HENDRIX.

We suppose our Bro. refers to the expression, "hath translated us into the kingdom of his dear Son."

By some, the passage is supposed to teach that the kingdom of Christ is already set up, and has been upon earth for eighteen hundred years. This passage in Col. is the only one of any weight on which to base such an opinion. It is singular that the King should leave his kingdom in Satan's hands for so long a time. But Jesus does not promise that any one shall have the kingdom till he returns. In Matt. 25: 31, 34, we read, "The Son of man shall come in his glory, and all the holy angels with him, then shall he sit upon the throne of his glory; . . . then shall the King say unto them on his right hand, Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world." The kingdom is not to be given to the Son of God till at the time of his return, at the end of the reigns of the kings symbolized by the wild beasts of Daniel and John.

The word rendered "hath translated," in this passage, is properly rendered in the Emphatic Diaglott—"hath changed us for the kingdom." The idea in the original is, that the saints are those who have reformed, changed their mode of living, by the help of the Lord, and are thus made fit for the coming kingdom, which is to be set up when Christ comes the second time.

A few examples of the use of the word rendered into, in Col. 1: 13, may help some to understand the passage better. In the following examples the word rendered into in Col. 1: 13, is rendered for, which we put in italics. "Launch out into the deep, and let down your nets, for a draught."—Luke 5: 4. "No man, having put his hand to the plough, and looking back, is fit for the kingdom of God."—Lk. 9: 62. Any one can see that it would not make sense to put into in the place of for. The same is true of Col. 1: 13, when we endeavor to make out the doctrine that the kingdom is now set up, and that the good are already translated into it. The whole Bible, we think, is opposed to such an idea.

Let us look at a few other examples of the use of this same preposition:—"The same came for a witness."—John 1: 7. "I have set thee to be a light of the Gentiles, that thou shouldst be for salvation unto the ends of the earth."—Acts 13: 47. "Whatsoever were written aforetime were written for our learning."—Rom. 15: 4. "I am set for the defense of the gospel."—Phil. 1: 17. "Take Mark, and bring him with thee; for he is profitable to me for the ministry."—2 Tim. 4: 11. "By faith Abraham, when he was called to go out into a place which he should after receive for an inheritance, obeyed."—Heb. 11: 8. "And the four angels were loosed which were prepared for an hour, and a day, and a month, and a year."—Rev. 9: 15. "And the leaves of the tree were for the healing of the nations."—Rev. 22: 2.

In all the foregoing examples, it will be seen that the word rendered into, in Col. 1: 13, should be translated FOR; and if the word be thus translated in Col., it will be in harmony with all the rest of the Bible.

THE MANSIONS.

BRO. GRANT:—I heard a sermon a short time ago, at a funeral, text, John 14: 2, 3. After repeating the first verse, the preacher spoke of the mansions in the Father's house. Then he spoke of Christ's coming again, and that he had prepared the place, and come again, and received the sister to himself,—a great error, I think; but I would like to know what those mansions are in the Father's house. Your Bro., wishing to know all the truth."

Suncook. JOHN B. PAINE.

We understand the "mansions" to be connected with the new Jerusalem, which Jesus went "to prepare." John says he "saw the holy city, new Jerusalem, coming down from God out of heaven, prepared as a bride adorned for her husband."—Rev. 21: 2.

"NEVER DIE."

A friend, wishing to understand a passage of Scripture more clearly, would like to have you give your views in the Crisis. You will find it in John 11: 26. R. A. HAGGETT.

Buckfield, Me.

The passage reads as follows:—"And whosoever liveth and believeth in me shall never die. Believest thou this?"

The preceding verse reads,—"Jesus said unto her, I am the resurrection, and the life; he that believeth on me, though he were dead, yet shall he live." In these two verses we have brought to view those who are dead in in Christ and those who are alive when he comes the second time. Those who are alive, and believe in him at the time of the second advent, "shall never die"; and those who have believed in him, and are dead, will be made alive at the same time. Paul says, "Behold, I show you a mystery; we shall not all sleep [or die], but we shall be changed, in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump; for the trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised incorruptible, and we shall be changed."—1 Cor. 15: 51, 52. Again he says, when speaking of the same time:—"The Lord himself shall descend from heaven, . . . with the trump of God; and the dead in Christ shall rise first; then we which are alive and remain, shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air; and so shall we ever be with the Lord."—1 Thess. 4: 16, 17.

☞ We commend to the reader the article in another column, entitled, "One Root of Drunkenness."

CORRECTION.—In editorial of last week's Crisis, second column, Art., "The War," third line, for "truth" read North.

THE NEW $2000 TRACT FUND.

We, the undersigned, agree to give the sums affixed to our names, for the purpose of raising TWO THOUSAND DOLLARS to aid the Christian Publication Society in the gratuitous distribution of tracts.

Previous donations	$737.03
Mrs. Joseph Harris	1.00
S. Bliss	.50
"Thorndike, Mass"	1.00
L. Burgess	1.00
W. D. Cook	10.00
Wm. A. Towle	.10
—— Hall	5.00
Mrs. N. Smith	3.63

PLEDGES PAID.—D. Mathewson $8.50, Betsy Hill.

POOR FUND DONATIONS.

To pay for Papers sent to the Poor.

Whole number sent free 800. Amount $2000.00.

Previous donations	$357.72
A. Buckelew	2.50
Martha	2.00
J. N. W.	1.00
R. Hinkley	.50
"Thorndike, Mass."	1.00
Mrs. Mary Curtis	.50
M. Morehouse	1.00
A friend	1.00
B. Davis	.50
Mrs. N. Smith	.50

Three for One.

"I see that W. R. P. has discontinued the Crisis because he does not believe in Abolition or Female Preaching. We do not intend that you shall lose anything by it; so we send you two new subscribers in his place, with $4.00 enclosed for the same."

New York City. ANNA E. SMITH.

"I send you a new subscriber, with $1.25 for six months, to fill up the place of W. R. P., who stops his paper because he has no faith in Abolition or Female Preaching."

W. Hoosick, N. Y. J. WILBUR.

For the World's Crisis.

WHY I WISH IT CONTINUED.

I wish the Crisis continued for seven strong reasons:

1. I love its doctrines, and delight in its precepts.
2. Its weekly visits bring joy to my lonely home, and cheer to my desponding heart.
3. It points me to a better land, where sorrow and death will never come.
4. It teaches me of the resurrection from the dead, and the reunion of loved ones sundered and asleep in Christ.
5. It tells me that Jesus is coming soon to reward every man according to his works, and give his saints eternal life.
6. It leads me to search more diligently the Scriptures of truth, to learn God's will and purpose, and man's nature and destiny.
7. It shows me how I may escape the wrath to come, and obtain an eternal inheritance in the kingdom of God.

I long to be there, with all the glorified, and sing praises to his holy name forever.

M.

THE ITALIAN MISSION.

Previous donations	$392.66
A widow's mite	20.00
A friend	1.00
G. L. Humphreville	5.00
Mrs. N. Smith	3.62

Change of Price.

The prices of the following works, for sale at this office, have been advanced by the publishers as follows:—

BIBLE STUDENT'S LIBRARY (for the set),
By mail—cloth, $5.00; paper, $2.50.
By express—cloth, $4.00; paper, $2.00.
DEBT AND GRACE, post paid, $1.50.
CHRIST OUR LIFE, post paid, cloth, 75c; paper, 45c.
HUDSON'S TRACTS, 6 cents each, postage 2 cts.
CHRISTIAN LYRE, 80c; by mail, 85c.
SOCIAL HYMNS, 15 cts; eight for $1.00.
COOK BOOK, 15 cts; postage 2c.
DIPHTHERIA, 10 cts; postage 2c.

Before ordering books, in these times of changing prices, it will be well to look at our latest price list, in the book column, and remit accordingly.

TWO HUNDRED STORIES FOR CHILDREN.—Eld T. M. Preble, East Weare, N. H., writes that another edition of this book will be got out soon, when orders can again be filled. Due notice will be given in the Crisis.

For the World's Crisis.

DR. GREGORY'S OPINION.

In the Crisis of Mar. 21 it is argued, by a quotation from Gregory's Astronomy, that there can be no acceleration of the moon's motion, such as I have said is now generally believed among astronomers. My conjecture on reading the extract was that Dr. G., quoting Dr. Halley as he does, did not think of disputing this doctrine. The period of 557 years, etc., I supposed to be given in the same way with the shorter period of 18 years, 11 days, 7 hours, etc., known as the Plinian period, or Chaldean Saros; only the longer period for the return of the same series of eclipses is much more accurate. And I knew that even in 500 or 600 years the supposed acceleration would be small compared with that in 2500 years; as a ball thrown horizontally falls less than one fifth as far in moving one foot as in moving five feet; or, for a better illustration, as a tangent line leaves the circle far less in one degree than in five degrees, and this at whatever place it leaves the circle. So this period would be good for all practical purposes, supposing the moon's motion to be accelerated as supposed.

And on referring to Dr. Gregory's book I find the following statements, c. 16, pp. 283–285: "Dr. Halley, when comparing the ancient eclipses obseved at Babylon, between 700 or 800 years before Jesus Christ, and those observed by Albategnius, in the ninth century, with some of his own time, led to the suspicion that the moon's mean motion from the sun, compared with the diurnal motion of the earth, is somewhat quicker than formerly: this increase of the moon's motion is called her acceleration." Dr. H. could not ascertain its amount, but this was estimated by Mr. Dunthorne (whom I named in my first article on the subject), who "confirmed the opinion of Halley." Dr. G. cites an enumeration from Dr. Long's Astronomy of several theories to account for this acceleration, and concludes by adopting that which I said was generally accepted, and which was first assigned by La Place, in 1786.

The Crisis calls this doctrine one of "Disorder in the Heavens." This seems to me a phrase not called for, when I had expressly named the law of the acceleration, now generally understood and accepted among astronomers.

C. F. H.

Correspondence.

From Bro. J. E. Rice.

BRO. GRANT:—It is with mingled feelings of sorrow and joy, that I improve this opportunity to inform the brethren and sisters scattered abroad, of our position and prospects; for while writing, in the enjoyment of my health and liberty, five of my dear brethren are incarcerated in Digby Prison, in honor of their Lord, whom they refuse to displease by training or preparing for war," as required by Cæsar's "bloodthirsty legion," who are exerting themselves in acquiring the accomplishments of warfare and carnage, which are expected soon to overrun this guilty world in their most direful forms; thus truly representing the prophet Joel's "weak" ones, under the influence of the "unclean spirits" (Joel 3: 10; Rev. 16: 13, 14; 20: 7, 8); and we are expecting that two more will be haled to their company so soon as they have undergone their "mock trial." But in all this they and "we have joy," and "count it all joy," —though the trial be great—when we call to mind that it has been the "path of the righteous" and "Zion's legacy," from righteous Abel" to the present day (Heb. 11), and must be "to the end," but, more especially in this day of the "two-horned beast" (Rev. 13: 16, 17); though greater and more bitter must the trials and "torments" of those be, who worship the beast and his image, and receive his mark" (Rev. 14: 10, 11; 18). Yet in all this we find Father's grace sufficient.

While meeting in social capacity, our hearts welled up in grief almost insupportable, as we looked over our little group and realized the places of dear ones vacant; no more hearing their encouraging and soul-stirring exhortations, nor their voices uniting in melody with ours; but in lonely confinement; environed by the gloomy walls of a culprit's cell, coupled with "transgressors" and "malefactors," and drawing comfort only by communion with "our Father," through Jesus, our blessed Mediator. Truly the picture was gloomy, having only one bright spot, but that a large one. O, how desirable would be deliverance! I often feel to sigh the question, When will the Nobleman return? and with beloved John cry, "Come, Lord Jesus"! Here disease, death, sorrow, ungodly professors and ungodly unprofessors are all doing their work, led and controlled by the Devil and Satan. Rev. 20: 2, 7; 1 Pet. 5: 8. Truly "here is the patience and faith of the saints (Rev. 13: 10), and "they that keep the commandments of God, and the faith of Jesus." 14: 12.

The brethren and sisters, in general, are particularly awakened to the necessity of an immediate preparation for our Lord the Bridegroom's return; for they want to "be ready" (Luke 12: 35–40; Rev. 19: 7), therefore are heeding His instructions literally, as recorded by Luke, in his 12th chapter, John 13th and Mark 5th, 6th and 7th, and carried out by the apostles (Acts 2: 44–47; 34, 35); casting off the works of darkness, and putting on the armor of light (Rom. 13; 11–14); putting on the breastplate of faith and love. 1 Thess. 5: Eph. 6: 13–20.

But, dear brethren and sisters, another cruelly dark picture is before us. While the Holy Ghost was in its glorious operation, leading some of the weak ones along "in the way of all truth," a letter, couched in words of regard, but pointed with the death sting of "the enemy," was sent from a sister in your country, and has torn from our care and embrace several of those dear ones, causing them to "grieve" it, and fall back into darkness, and some into bitter animosity; yet, by the grace of God, the strong are strong, our elders being "men of valor," firmly resolved to withstand "old Apollyon," yea, fight him to "the death," giving no quarter, followed "rank and file" by those who have "counted the cost," and seem to be as willing to be in prison as anywhere, if our King wants them there, knowing, by faith, that He will bring them out all right, they "having respect unto the recompense of the reward."

Dear brethren and sisters, "suffer the word of exhortation," and watch ye, stand fast in the faith, quit you like men, BE STRONG! "And the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ," and "my love be with you all in Christ Jesus, Amen." Your brother, expecting repemption speedily.

JOS. C. RICE.

Hillsburg, N. S.

From Bro. S. Worthington.

BRO. GRANT:—This morning I am thinking of the little flock of our Father's family scattered abroad, sighing and crying for the wickedness that is done in the land. They are set at nought by the world, and the churches of the day, the finger of scorn pointed at them, and counted as the offscouring of the earth; but methinks I heard Father's voice saying, "Fear not, little flock, it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom." If we are to be numbered among the blest that shall reach that happy shore, we must take up our cross and follow Christ in all things, do every duty, and keep every commandment, that we may be found without spot or wrinkle. My heart is sad when I see those who profess to be Christ's ready to join with the world to put down the true child of God. Truly the time has come when men will not endure sound doctrine, and when the hireling will flee because he is a hireling. A good shepherd careth for his sheep, but the hireling fleeth when their craft is in danger. But our great Shepherd careth for his sheep. They hear his voice, and are known of him, and they bring forth good fruit. Every tree is known by its fruit. I pray God that we may bring forth good fruit into holiness, having clean hands and pure hearts.

Although the servants of the wicked one are doing all they can to stop the work of God in this place, the work is going on; the children are strong in the Lord, willing to do every duty and to bear all that may be put upon them, even from those of their own household. Let us obey God, and we shall have grace according to our day. Soon we shall be done with all the cares of this life, and rest with Jesus in the kingdom. Yours, in the blessed hope, S. W. WORTHINGTON.

No. Bennington, Vt.

From Bro. J. E. Barnes.

DEAR BROTHER:—By the kindness of yourself and Bro. A. Fiske, of Woodland, I have enjoyed the reading of the World's Crisis for about a year. Permit me, sir, to say, that the reading of it has cost me no profitless expenditure of time. Notwithstanding some views and doctrines, such as the utter destruction of the wicked, etc., yet the glorious hope of the Savior's reappearance, into the world, and the ingathering of his elect to enjoy the everlasting inheritance, is so prominent, that we think that no unprejudiced seeker for Bible truth can read and study your editorials without being interested and profited by so doing. Notwithstanding I have been pastor of Baptist churches for nine years, and may be to the end of my life; yet I have always prayed, during my profession, that I might be kept from undue bias, or from giving any one, and especially a brother in Christ, less than their dues.

I have received from Bro. Fiske, also "The Signs of the Times; "The Olive Branch;" "The Three Worlds;" "The Second Advent at hand;" "Duties of Christians in the Present Crisis;" "The Close of the Present, and Speedy Ushering in of a New Dispensation;" all of which I have read with much interest. May the Lord in whom you trust, grant you all the aid you need in your labor of love in this life, and finally bring you to the rich joys of everlasting life. Permit me to remain, your brother in Christ,

JAMES E. BARNES.

Grafton, Yolo Co., Cal.

From Sr. H. T. Miller.

BRO. GRANT:—Please find enclosed —— for the Crisis. I cannot be deprived of reading the soul-stirring epistles from the dear brethren and sisters, who are looking for the speedy coming of our Lord and the light it contains on the time of His coming. The old '43 and '44 power of the living God comes with this message. The days are at hand, and the effect of every vision. Disappointments in the past only confirm the unerring word; at the appointed time the end shall be. It is meat in due season to all those who love the appearing of Jesus. The generation that saw the sun darkened in 1780, and the subsequent signs, falling stars, and portentous signs in the heavens, in the earth distress of nations, with perplexity, etc., shall not pass away until the coming of our Lord. Lift up your heads, dear, disappointed, afflicted, despised followers of the blessed Jesus; your salvation is at hand. More than twenty years nearer than when some of us first believed. May we in the day of His coming be among the happy number who will say, "Lo! this is our God, we have waited for him and he will save us," is the prayer of a sister in Christ,

HANNAH T. MILLER.

Cleveland, O.

Obituaries.

WALTER PRATT.

Died in Boston, March 22nd, Bro. Walter Pratt, aged forty-five years.

Bro. Pratt had been in poor health for several years past. His trouble has been weakness, and, perhaps, disease of the lungs. For the last two years he had not been able to preach but a portion of the time. His last public effort was at New Bedford, a short time before he died. He was taken down suddenly with lung fever, which after about twenty days terminated in quick consumption.

Our Bro. was extensively known among us as a very acceptable and faithful minister of the gospel. He was early in the Second Advent movement, and continued in his work to the extent of his ability while he lived.

I have known him for about twenty years. Have been with him in his varied relations to his family, the church, and the world; in sickness and health, at home and abroad, in private and in public, and in business with individuals and societies. I ever found him to be the same man. Indeed, he was a man. He made expediency nothing, but principle everything. This was his rule of action. To policy he was a stranger, except by observation. He lived above it. It was no part of the element in which he moved. He despised it. For him to have engaged in plans to secure a selfish end, making policy his rule, would have been a great stoop from his manhood. What he had to say of men and measures in private, he had to say in public.

He was open, frank, and honest in all his deal with men and things. Underhanded measures found no countenance with him. He was known and read of all classes of men with which he had any thing to do. It requires no long acquaintance with such a man, by those who can read character by certain unmistakable signs, to know what he is. Those who knew Bro. Pratt could always approach him in confidence, feel that he was a brother and friend indeed.

He was a philanthropist. He wished well and would do well to all. He sympathized with the afflicted and downtrodden. He felt for those in bonds as bound with them. He was loyal to his country. He could say with the manliness of Garibaldi, that "he sympathized with the United States government in their struggle with the slave power." He could see a very great difference between one of the best governments man ever made, and a mob engaged in its overthrow. He felt for the slaves and the poor ignorant whites in the South, degraded by that institution "which is the sum of all villanies." He deeply felt for the soldier, and especially for the prisoners in rebeldom, when he contrasted their treatment with the care taken of the prisoners at the North, and he dared speak of those things without stopping to first ascertain how it would be received by those who were in sympathy with their southern brethren in rebellion. Though he looked to another country for his inheritance, and could say with Paul that his citizenship was above, at the same time he could say with him that he was a Roman citizen, changing the name to America. He loved his country though he loved the true church more. His country—the mother that bore him, protected, cared for, and educated him when in trouble, he could not turn a cold shoulder to, and feel that he had no sympathy for, no prayer to offer for her, no word of encouragement in her bleeding distress. He rejoiced in the happiness and prosperity of all that was good.

Bro. Pratt had very many friends. They were wherever he was known. And if he had any enemies, they were so because he would tell them the truth. He will be widely missed, and his memory will be deeply written. He preached several years in the far West, with good acceptance and success. He has gone, and we shall see him no more till the last trump sounds. Then he will come forth, to be made like unto the angels, to die no more.

He has left a widow and two children to experience the affliction of his absence. May the blessing of Heaven rest on them, and they be prepared to greet him where sickness and death will not be known. The friends of our brother will affectionately remember the fatherless and widow.

J. S. WHITE.

R. B. BARNEY.

Died in New Preston, Ct., March 21st, Robert Bruce, son of J. A. and L. A. Barney, aged seven years.

This is the first death that has occurred among us since this people was called out through the labors of Bro. H. Pratt, three years ago.

Sermon by Bro. B. St John, from these words of Job: "If a man die, shall he live again?"

H. J. BALDWIN.

MARY ALLEN.

Died in Fairview, Erie Co., Pa., Jan. 17th, 1865, Mary, daughter of Bro. Lorenzo D. and his wife Jane Allen, in the twentieth year of her age. [illegible]

CHARLES UMBERHIND.

In Richmond, Feb. 14th, 1865, Bro. C. Umberhind, aged seventy-one years.

He was a devoted christian. In his youth he met with a misfortune by a fall. He was a great sufferer. His companion and children, brother and sisters, hope to meet him when Jesus comes. Discourse by the writer, from Matt. 22: 32.

N. F. NASON.

A WALDRON.

In the city of Portland, 6th ult., Alzina, daughter of S. H. and M. A. S. Waldron, aged thirteen years.

J. WALDRON.

Also, 23d ult., Josephine, daughter of S. H. and M. A. S. Waldron, aged fifteen years.

J. S. GRIFFIN.

Died in Windsor, Dec. 6th, 1864, Capt. James S. Griffin, aged sixty-seven years, one month and one day.

The subject of this notice was a great sufferer for the few last weeks of his life. He died with a hope of eternal life when Jesus comes. He sleeps in Jesus.

S. E. GRIFFIN.

W. AMES.

Died in Sangerville, Me., March 26th, 1865, Wilbur L., son of Samuel W. and Abbie P. Ames, aged one year and ten months.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

[From Queenstown the 19th ult.]

The King of the Belgians is expected to visit Queen Victoria in a few days.

The reported reply of Austria to the Prussian demand for annexation of the Duchies leaves room for further negotiations.

A Berlin dispatch says it was believed there that Austria would, after all, consent to the annexation of the Duchies, provided she receives a guaranty from the Germanic Confederation of all her present possessions. It is said that Russia decidedly opposes the annexation, while France encourages it with the intention of subsequently putting in a claim for compensation.

AUSTRIA.

A Vienna paper publishes a note presented by the English Ambassador to the Austrian Government, in which England recognizes the provisional state of things in the Duchies, provided the rights of the Diet of Schleswig-Holstein and of the German Diet are respected by Austria and Prussia.

DOMESTIC.

City Point, Va., March 28,
Via Baltimore, March 29.

Gen. Sherman arrived here last night at sundown to consult with Gen. Grant. His arrival was a surprise to every one except Gen. Grant, who about an hour before his coming informed the President that Wm. T. Sherman was coming. The President exclaimed: "You are joking, General." "No, he will be here in an hour," replied Grant. The President was overjoyed. Admiral Porter was informed of his expected arrival and gave a salute.

There were six men in council last night whose names will live in history—President Lincoln, Gens. Grant, Sherman, Sheridan, Meade and Ord. "I want an hour's talk with you," Sherman said to Grant when he landed. "Certainly, certainly," was Gen. Grant's reply, and the two Generals walked off together, both smoking, and as cordial to each other as two school boys. What was said or done will be known only when the words have become deeds and have passed into history.—Cor. Journal.

New York, March 29. The Herald's Army of the James correspondence says all has been quiet in that army since Saturday.

On Sunday President Lincoln, Gen. Grant and Admiral Porter reviewed two corps of the army and witnessed the crossing of the James by Sheridan's cavalry.

Washington, March 30. Three hundred and forty-two Union and fifty-eight rebel wounded arrived here to-day from City Point, and were distributed among the various hospitals. Three hundred more will arrive here to-morrow on board the State of Maine.

Deserters state that the rebel authorities have commenced to place negro troops in the Richmond fortifications, but as they are afraid to trust them in large bodies, they are distributed in the proportion of a battalion to one whole regiment. In spite of all their efforts thus far, not more 2000 or 3000 of them have been organized. They desert whenever they have an opportunity. Fifteen hundred unorganized colored conscripts are stationed at Belle Isle, awaiting arms.

City Point, Va., March 25. The total Union loss is about 1800 in the affair at Fort Steadman on Saturday last. We have 2800 rebel prisoners and about 100 deserters. The rebel loss will be from 1200 to 1500 killed and wounded, making a total loss of over 4000. We have ten battle flags.

The correspondent of the Journal at City Point states that on Saturday President Lincoln, accompanied by his son Theodore, visited the Army of the James and reviewed several of the divisions.

Eighteen hundred rebel prisoners were sent up to Richmond on Sunday and thirteen hundred Federal prisoners were received and sent to Annapolis.

New York, April 1. The Tribune's Washington special says a dispatch just received from Goldsboro' says the rebels have completed all preparations to evacuate Raleigh. All the Departments of the State Government have been removed to Greensboro,' as well as all surplus military stores.

Gen. Schofield has levied a contribution of 100,000 rations of meat and flour upon the citizens.

Baltimore, Md., March 31. The flag of truce boat Manhattan, with released prisoners, has arrived at Annapolis, and brings a rumor that Petersburg has been evacuated.

St. Louis, March 30. A dispatch from Mobile Point, dated 22d inst., says Col. Moore's brigade landed near Navy Cove to-day and drove a portion of Gardiner's command four miles, when the rebels being reinforced from Mobile, Col Moore's forces fell back without loss.

Every preparation was made on the 21st for heavy fighting, and the sound of artillery came down the bay all day yesterday and was distinctly heard at Fort Gaines.

Headquarters District of East Tennessee, Boone, North Carolina, March 27, via Knoxville, Tenn., April 1. The advance of Gen. Stoneman's force, commanded by Maj. Keogh, A. D. C., entered and captured the town of Boone, North Carolina, at 12 o'clock to-day. The rebel force was routed with the loss of ten men killed and sixty-five wounded and prisoners. Maj. Barnes' battalion, of the 12th Kentucky cavalry, lost a few men wounded.

Gen. Stoneman's command is now well into North Carolina, and will be heard from soon in the heart of Rebeldom.

War Department, Washington, D. C.,
April 1—11 o'clock P. M.

To Maj. Gen. Dix:

The following dispatch from the President, received to-night, shows that the desperate struggle between our forces and the enemy continues undecided, although the advantage appears to be on our side:

"City Point, April 1, 1865.

Hon. E. M. Stanton, Secretary of War:

A dispatch has just been received showing that Sheridan, aided by Warren, had at 2 P. M. pushed the enemy back so as to retake the Five Forks, and bring his own headquarters up to 'F. Boysseaus.' The Five Forks were barricaded by the enemy and carried by Devens' division of cavalry. This part of the enemy's force seems to be now trying to work along the White Oak road to join the No. 2 main force in front of Grant, while Sheridan and Warren are pressing them as closely as possible.

(Signed) A. LINCOLN."

Washington, April 2. A letter from the Army of the Potomac, dated Friday evening, says: "There has been severe fighting on some parts of the line, from morning until night, the result of which has been the extension of our lines still further westward, although with considerable loss in killed and wounded. The 2d division of the 5th corps, supported by the 3d, was thrown out toward White Oak road, east of the Boydtown plank road, and ordered to reach and take position there.

After crossing a small branch of Gravelly Run, and while about forming in line, our troops were fired upon by a heavy force of the enemy, who were lying concealed in the woods, and also by rebel artillery posted in favorable positions. Our men stood their ground for awhile, but the enemy appearing to be moving onward to the left as if to turn their flank, the line was forced back to their first position, where they rallied and soon checked the enemy's advance.

About the same time another attack was made on the right flank of the 5th corps, but Gen. Miles' division of the 5th corps, being posted here, made a brilliant charge and doubled up the enemy, driving them back a long distance, leaving their dead and wounded on the field. This was a very handsome affair, and the division received the highest praise for the manner in which it was done. The loss on our side was about 400, as nearly as can be ascertained, mostly in the 1st division. [illegible]

the White Oak road, for which they started in the morning, and established their line across the same, driving the rebels into their strong works at Hatcher's Run. Their loss in the day's work was not far from 1200. Among the casualties reported are Maj. Mills, A. A. G. on Gen. Humphrey's staff, killed by a shell; Col. Sargeant, 210th Pennsylvania, severely wounded, and Gen. Dennison, commanding a brigade in the 2d division of the 5th corps, slightly wounded.

An attack was also made in front of the 6th corps, but it was not successful.

After the rebels were driven back in front of the 5th corps, an attack was made with both infantry and cavalry on Sheridan's force, about three miles from the Southside Railroad, near Sutherland's Station, driving him back toward Dinwiddie, but subsequently he gained much more than he lost.

The roads are in a terrible condition, it being almost impossible to move trains over them. Heavy rains have swollen the streams, and engineers are busy day and night laying bridges and corduroys.

The loss of the enemy is not known, but, judging from the number of the dead lying in the woods and ravines where the fighting occurred, it must have been at least as heavy as our own. We took about 150 prisoners during the day.

War Department, Washington, D. C.,
April 2—6 A. M.

To Maj. Gen. Dix:

A dispatch just received from Gen. Grant's Adjutant General at City Point announces the triumphant success of our arms after three days' hard fighting, during which the forces on both sides exhibited unsurpassed valor.

"City Point, April 2—5.30 A. M.

A dispatch from Gen. Grant states that Gen. Sheridan, commanding cavalry and infantry, has carried everything before him, captured three brigades of infantry, a wagon train and several batteries of artillery. The prisoners captured will amount to several thousand.

(Signed) T. S. BOWERS."

E. M. STANTON, Secretary of War.

War Department,
Washington, April 2—11 A. M.

To Maj. Gen. Dix:

The following telegram from the President, dated at 8.30 o'clock this morning, gives the latest intelligence from the front, where a furious battle was raging, with continued success to the Union army. (Signed) E. M. STANTON, Secretary of War.

"City Point, Va., April 2—8.30 A. M.

To Hon. E. M. Stanton, Secretary of War:

Last night Gen. Grant telegraphed that Gen. Sheridan, with his cavalry and the 5th corps, had captured three brigades of infantry, a train of wagons, several batteries, and prisoners amounting to several thousand. This morning Gen. Grant, having ordered an attack along the whole line, telegraphs as follows:

'Both Wright and Parke have got through the enemy's lines. The battle now rages furiously. Gen. Sheridan, with his cavalry, the 5th corps, and Miles' division of the 3d corps, which was sent to him since one o'clock this morning, is now sweeping down from the west. All now looks highly favorable. Gen. Ord is engaged, but I have not yet heard the result in his front.' A. LINCOLN."

Washington, April 2—12.30 P. M.

To Maj. Gen. Dix:

The President in the subjoined telegram gives the latest news from the front:

E. M. STANTON, Secretary of War.

"City Point, Va.—11 A. M.—April 2.

Hon. E. M. Stanton, Secretary of War:

Dispatches are frequently coming in; all going finely. Parke, Wright and Ord, extending from the Appomattox to Hatcher's Run, have all broken through the enemy's entrenched line, taking some forts, guns and prisoners. Sheridan, with his own cavalry, and the 5th corps, and a part of the 2d corps is coming in from the west on the enemy's flank, and Wright is already tearing up the Southside Railroad. A. LINCOLN."

War Department,
Washington, April 2—11 P. M.

Maj. Gen. J. A. Dix, New York:

The following telegrams from the President report the condition of affairs at 4.30 this afternoon:

EDWIN M. STANTON, Secretary of War.

"City Point, Va., April 2—2 P. M.

Hon. E. M. Stanton, Secretary of War:

At 10.45 A. M. Gen. Grant telegraphs as follows: 'Everything has been carried from the left of the 9th corps. The 6th corps alone captured more than 3000 prisoners. The 2d and 25th corps captured forts, guns and prisoners from the enemy, but I cannot tell the number. We are new closing around the works of the line immediately enveloping Petersburg. All looks remarkably well. I have not yet heard from Sheridan. His headquarters have been moved up to Banks' House, near the Boydtown road, about three miles southwest of Petersburg.' A. LINCOLN."

"City Point, Va. April 2—8.30 P. M.

Hon. E. M. Stanton, Secretary of War:

At 4.30 P. M. to-day Gen. Grant telegraphs as follows:

'We are now up and have a continuous line of troops, and in a few hours will be intrenched from the Appomattox below Petersburg to the river above. The whole captures since the army started out will not amount to less than 12,000 men and probably fifty pieces of artillery. I do not know the number of men and guns accurately, however. A portion of Foster's division, 24th corps, made a most gallant charge this afternoon and captured a very important fort from the enemy with its entire garrison. All seems well with us, and everything is quiet just now.' A. LINCOLN."

War Department,
Washington, April 3—10 A. M.

To Maj. Gen. Dix:

The following telegram from the President announcing the evacuation of Petersburg and probably of Richmond, has been received by this Department. (Signed) E. M. STANTON, Secretary of War.

City Point, April 3—8.30 A. M.

To Hon. E. M. Stanton, Secretary of War:

This morning Gen. Grant reports Petersburg evacuated, and he is confident that Richmond also is. He is pushing forward to cut off if possible the retreating army. A. LINCOLN.

War Department,
Washington, April 3—10 A. M.

To Maj. Gen. Dix:

It appears from a dispatch of Gen. Weitzel, just received by this department, that our forces under his command are in Richmond, having taken it at 8.15 this morning. (Signed)

E. M. STANTON, Secretary of War.

War Department,
Washington, 12 M., April 3.

Maj. Gen. Dix:

The following official confirmation of the capture of Richmond, and announcing that the city is on fire, has just been received by this Department:

"City Point, Va., April 3—11 A. M.

Gen. Weitzel telegraphs as follows:

'We took Richmond at 8.15 this morning. I captured many guns. The enemy left in great haste. The city is on fire in one place, and I am making every effort to put it out.

The people received us with enthusiastic expressions of joy.

Gen. Grant started early this morning with the army toward the Danville road to cut off, if possible, Lee's retreating army.

President Lincoln has gone to the front.

J. S. BOWERS, A. A. G."

(Signed) EDWIN M. STANTON.

Washington, April 3. President Lincoln has arrived in Richmond, and will issue a proclamation to the Southern people this afternoon.

Washington, April 3—3.30 P. M.

At noon a salute of 500 guns was fired from Franklin Square, in the heart of this city. Several regiments with their bands are parading the streets, and crowds of citizens are calling out prominent personages. Speeches have been made by Vice President Johnson, Secretary Seward and several politicians, who profess to have known all about Grant's plans.

The national flag has been hoisted over the goddess of liberty on the Capitol, and on all public, and many private buildings. To-night we are to have an impromptu illumination.—Boston Journal.

THE HOLY SEPULCHRE.—The Empress of the French has addressed a circular to her sister princesses respecting the condition of decay into which the dome of the Holy Sepulchre at Jerusalem has fallen, and proposing a subscription for the building of a new church, on a new plan, and on a larger scale, so that it might afford accommodation for all parties. The subscription is to be headed by the Sisterhood of Queens and thereafter sent abroad for general support.

THE SHENANDOAH VALLEY.—Gen. Sheridan has not left the Shenandoah Valley unprotected. There is a large infantry force in the valley under the command of Maj. Gen. Hancock. A recent letter from there mentions the arrival of 10,000 new Western troops. Gen. Hancock, whose headquarters are at Winchester, will have his part in the final campaign which was doubtless arranged by Grant, Sheridan, and Meade in their recent interview.—Journal.

☞ The tree under which Grant and Pemberton held the interview which resulted in the capitulation of Vicksburg has disappeared, root, branch, [illegible]

THE OTTOMAN EMPIRE.—The Sultan of Turkey is causing much commotion among "the faithful" by an attempt to change the order of succession to his throne. The usual order is for the eldest member of the family to succeed, and not the eldest son. Under this law the present Sultan succeeded his late brother, whose son, Abdul Medid, now twenty-five years of age, would be properly the next heir. But as Abdul Medjid is a dissolute imbecile, the Sultan desires to confer the succession of his own son, a lad of seven or eight years, whom he proposes to send to Europe to be educated. Fuad Pasha, the Prime Minister, fears that the project may cost him his head, and refuses to sign the rescript. The Mussulman mind is greatly exercised at these revolutionary proceedings, and at the increasing dominance of European ideas, and all the more so as Abdul Medjid, whom it is proposed to set aside, was relied upon to lead the reaction in favor of Mahommedanism on his accession to power.—Journal.

A LONG STRETCH.—The new Atlantic cable, which is now in process of manufacture in England, to be laid next summer, is to be 2300 miles long, allowing four or five hundred miles for all contingencies; and its core, through which the electricity passes, is to be composed of seven strands of the best copper wire, making together over 16,000 miles of copper wire; this is to be enclosed in eight coats of insulating material, amounting to 18,400 miles; then follow ten coatings of jute, making 23,000 miles; and ten iron wires, making 23,000 more; and as each wire is covered separately with five twists or strands of yarn, there will be worked into the cable 135,000 miles of yarn; making all together a length of material which amounts to 215,500 miles; or sufficient, if placed end to end, to go around the earth nearly nine times, and lacking only 21,500 miles of being enough to reach from the earth to the moon—the latter distance being, as measured by astronomers, 237,000 miles.

MATTERS AT RICHMOND.—A letter from Richmond, apparently written early last week, says:

"I paid last week thirty-five dollars per dozen for eggs; before Sheridan tore up the canal I got them for twelve. I paid six dollars per pound for flour last Friday, and thirty-five for sugar (brown). Tea is one hundred dollars per pound; coffee forty-nine and fifty; bacon eighteen dollars per pound; beef fifteen.

ITEMS.

☞ The World's Fair for 1867 will be at Paris, and the building for it will cost from $6,000,000 to $8,000,000. The building will be made to hold 200,000 people, and everything will be on the grandest scale possible.

☞ Signor Mazzini has published an address to the Pope in answer to the Encyclical. He informs him that his anathemas against progress and knowledge are futile.

☞ Famine has again appeared in the west of Ireland, and meetings have been held to mitigate the distress.

☞ Deserters continue to come into Gen. Grant's lines at the rate of over 100 per day, and the whole number for the month of March, it is reported, will be 5000.

☞ So great has been the desire of the citizens of Charleston to take the oath of allegiance, that the authorities have been compelled to open six offices for the purpose of administering it.

☞ Fenianism is progressing in Ireland, to the evident alarm of the British authorities.

☞ One of the Japanese princes has resolved to erect a sugar refinery in Japan, and has engaged two skilled Europeans to assist him in carrying out his project.

☞ Flour in Richmond has gone up in price to $1500 per barrel, and everything else in proportion. A general order has been issued requiring country people visiting Richmond on business to bring their victuals with them.

☞ A gentleman residing in the suburbs of Lowell plucked flowers growing in the open air in his garden on the 25th inst., an interval of only three months twenty days between.

☞ Gen. Saxton recently visited Charleston and called a meeting of the colored people, to whom he announced, on the authority of the President, that they were "free forever." The message was hailed with a great shout.

☞ A telegram from Melbourne, Australia, dated Jan. 26th, says: "A fine comet is visible in the southwest. It is supposed to be that of 1853, predicted by Herschell as returnable in twenty-one and three-quarters years."

☞ Sir. Frederick Bruce, the new British Minister here, sailed from Liverpool on Saturday last.

Notices.

Notice.

As I believe time is very short, and it behooves us to be up and doing, and as I have found many females that feel God has called them to labor in the vineyard of the Lord, but because of the prejudice of the church in its present cold and backslidden state, they are kept back from laboring as they feel God has called them to do; and as I believe that we are living in the day when God will pour out his spirit upon his handmaids, I therefore give this notice to all the women of America, independent of denomination or color, who feel that they have been called of God to preach, exhort, pray, or to write, on the subject of his speedy coming, and a preparation for that coming, to open a correspondence with me in reference to holding a convention of women, which will be held in the Poultney church, at Poultney, Vt., commencing Wednesday, June 7th, and continuing one week. All brethren are invited to meet with us. This convention shall be for the promulgation of all Bible truths; but no hobbies.

Now, sisters, let this be a missionary movement. Remember Jesus is at the door, and wickedness is abounding, and the love of many is waxing cold. Let us be up and doing, so that he may say to us, "Well done, good and faithful servant, . . . Enter into the joy of thy Lord." Let all who feel interested in this great work, make it a subject of special prayer at the hour of twelve o'clock, every day, that God may bless the effort that we may put forth to his honor and glory.

All brethren who are favorable to this convention are invited to assist us by advice, by kind words of encouragement. Address,

MRS. ANNA E. SMITH,
No. 128 East 27th St., New York City.

Illinois Annual Conference.

The Illinois Second Advent Christian Conference will hold its annual session at New Rutland, La Salle Co., commencing on Wednesday, May 24th, 1865, and continuing during the week and over Sunday. As this is in some respects the most important conference during the year, it is desirable to have a FULL ATTENDANCE.

Rutland is on the Illinois Central Railroad, some forty miles below Mendota.

E. ROYCE, Secretary.

Notice.

The next annual meeting of the Iowa Christian Conference will be held at Manchester, Delaware Co., Iowa, commencing June 15th, 1865, and continuing over the first day. Strangers may call on Bro. Cooley near the depot. Dear brethren, let this be the largest gathering of the kind we have ever had. Come laden with grace, to work for the salvation of sinners.—Voice copy.

H. H. JANES, Pres.
P. S. W. DEYO, Conf. Clerk.

Dedication.

The new chapel in Chichester, N. H. (Pine Ground), will be dedicated on Saturday, Apr. 29th, 1 o'clock, P. M. Preaching on the following Sabbath.

J. COUCH.

Meetings in Burlington, Me.

Conference meetings will be held on the 4th Saturday in each month at Burlington, Me., Folsom's Ridge. Preaching brethren and others are invited to attend.

SAMUEL HAMMONS.

Notice.

Preachers wishing to make appointments with the church in New Haven, Ct., will do so, in all cases, by previous correspondence with, and invitation of, the Corresponding Secretary, Ardin Hotchkiss, Fair Haven, Ct.

Notice.

Elder Thomas Smith, Bangor, Me., has on hand for sale H. L. Hastings' "Signs of the Times," with an assortment of his various Tracts; also, the Tracts by Miles Grant, on "The Soul," "The Spirit," and "What is Man?" and other Advent tracts.

Agency for Maine.

Having been solicited to take the agency for Maine of Bro. Himes' "New Chart of Daniel and John," I would say to any and all in Maine who wish it, I am prepared to furnish it, at the regular retail price, $2.00, and to preachers (or others who wish them to sell) at a liberal discount. Address orders to I. C. WELLCOME, Yarmouth, Me.

Maine Second Advent Tract Society.

S. K. PARTRIDGE, R. R. YORK, I. C. WELLCOME, Board of Managers.

I. C. WELLCOME, Secretary and Business Agent.

ISAAC WRIGHT, Treasurer.

It was voted that all orders for tracts and books for distribution by this Society be addressed to the Agent, I. C. WELLCOME, Yarmouth, Me., who will supply them as fast as the means are furnished.

All our ministers will receive subscriptions for the Tract Fund, and they purpose to raise $200, or more, for free distribution in Maine this year.

I. C. WELLCOME, Agent.

Appointments.

We would say to our preaching Brethren that it is necessary we should receive their appointments as early as TUESDAY MORNING, as our paper goes to press about noon; otherwise they will not be inserted till the week following.

LOWELL STREET CHAPEL, BOSTON, CORNER OF CAUSEWAY AND LOWELL STREETS. Meetings are held regularly three times every Sunday, and Tuesday and Friday evenings. Seats free.

LOWELL STREET CHAPEL.

Wm. C. Thurman..........Sabbath morning, April 9th
M. Batchelor..........afternoon and evening, April 9th
J. S. White..........Sunday, April 16th

Manchester, N. H..........Saturday evening, April 8th and Lord's day, the 9th.
Lowell, Mass..........Saturday evening, April 15th and Lord's day, the 14th. MILES GRANT.

Boston, (East Hall)..........evening, April 9th
Portsmouth, N. H..........Monday evening, April 10th
WM. C. THURMAN.

Lawrence, Mass..........Sunday, April 9th
H. L. HASTINGS.

East Boston..........Sunday, April 9th
A. W. SIBLEY.

East Granby, or Turkey Hills, Ct., Sunday, 10½ A. M., April 9th.
Windsor Locks..........2 o'clock, P. M., April 9th
[Bro. Ralph Williams will preach in the same places and hours April 16th. D. C. TERRY.]
Warehouse Point..........7½ P. M., April 9th
Plainville, Ct..........April 16th
Worcester, Mass..........Sunday, April 29th
H. MUNGER.

Vernon, Vt..........Sunday, April 9th
Athol..........Sunday, April 16th
J. HEMENWAY.

Sutton Mill Village..........Sunday, April 9th
Haverhill..........Sunday, April 16th
Lee, N. H..........Sunday, April 23d
Kennebunk Port, Me..........Sunday, April 30th
A. MUSSEY.

West Hoosic, N. Y., (Advent Chapel)..........April 29th and over the Sabbath.
Pittstown, N. Y..........May 1st and 2nd
North Easton, N. Y..........May 3d, 4th and 5th
North Bennington, Vt..........May 6th and over the Sabbath.
South Shaftsboro..........May 8th and 9th
WM. J. BLANCHARD.

Northwood Narrows, N. H..........April 9th
Dover, N. H..........April 16th
G. S. EMERSON.

North Salem, N. Y., (as brethren may arrange), Sunday, April 16th.
Plymouth Hollow, Ct..........Sunday, April 30th
Wrightville..........Wednesday evening, May 3d
GEO. L. TEEPLE.

Bradford, N. H., (Pond meeting-house), Sunday, April 9th.
North Springfield, Vt., (as Bro. Cook shall arrange), Sunday, April 16th.
Newfane, Vt..........evenings of April 19th and 20th
West Brattleboro, Vt..........Sunday, April 23d
Northfield Farms, Mass..........Sunday, April 30th
WM. W. SUTHERLAND.

Smith's Hollow, Stanstead, C. E., Thursday evening, March 30th, and continue each evening through the week and over the Sabbath. J. G. SMITH.
J. H. F. VARNEY.

New Hartford, West Hill..........April 9th
Lovely Street..........April 16th
Bakerville, (as Bro. Harris may arrange)..........April 23d
North End, (at the dwelling of D. Baker)..........April 30th
H. ROCKWELL.

New Durham Ridge, N. H..........Sunday, April 9th
East Stoneham, Me..........Sunday, April 16th
Bryant's Pond..........Tuesday evening, April 25th
Franklin..........Wednesday evening, April 26th
Hartford..........Thursday evening, April 27th
South Livermore..........Friday evening, April 28th
Wayne, (as Bro. Hanscome may appoint), Saturday and Sunday, April 29th and 30th.
Vienna, (as Bro. Seavey may appoint) Monday, May 1st
Rome..........Tuesday, May 2nd
Starks, (as Bro. Griffin may appoint), Wednesday, May 3d.
Exeter, (Greenbush school-house)..........Sunday, May 7th
I. K. LOMBARD.

Kennebunkport, Me..........Sunday, April 9th
Cape Porpoise..........Tuesday, April 11th
Bro. Town's school-house..........Thursday, April 13th
Biddeford..........Sunday, April 16th
Hollis..........Sunday, April 23d
South Windham..........Sunday, April 30th
Windham Center..........Tuesday, May 2d and between as opportunities offer.
B. SPAULDING.

Bradford, N. H., (Pond meeting-house), Sunday, April 9th.
Waterloo, (Warner)..........April 16th
JOSEPH W. WHITE.

Haverhill, Mass..........Sunday, April 9th
L. BOUTELL.

Cordaville, Mass..........April 9th
Worcester, Mass..........April 16th
C. C. RAMSAY.

South Reading, Mass..........Sunday, April 9th
H. K. FLAGG.

Bristol, Ct..........Sunday, April 9th
S. B. MUNN.

Wallingford, (North Farms)..........Sunday, April 9th
B. HITCHCOCK.

Meredith Village, N. H..........April 9th
Holderness..........April 10th
Plymouth, as brethren may appoint..........April 11th
Tuftonboro..........April 12th
Wolfboro..........April 13th
April 14th as a door may be opened.
Brookfield..........April 15th and 16th
A. ROSS.

Meredith Village, N. H..........April 9th
A. ROSS.

Stoneham, (as Bro. J. Howe may appoint), April 8th and 9th.
C. M. CURRIER.

Walbridge..........Sunday, April 9th
P. S. BUTLER.

Holden, Mass..........April 16th
GEO. A. STREETER.

South Windsor..........Sunday, April 9th
Pine Swamp, Ct..........Sunday, April 16th
C. GOODRICH.

Carver..........April 9th
J. S. WHITE.

Lawrence, Mass..........April 9th
Clinton, Mass..........Sunday, April 16th
J. K. BELLOWS.

South Hope, Me., (funeral sermon)..........April 9th
Branch Mills, China, Friday, April 14th, 2 o'clock, and hold over Sunday.
Brn. I. Wight and H. D. Reed are expected.
S. K. PARTRIDGE.

Concord..........Sunday, April 16th
South Candia, (meeting-house, where Eld. Reynolds formerly preached)..........Sunday, April 23d
S. S. MOONEY.

Plymouth, Mass..........evening, April 10th
Hartford, Ct..........Sunday, April 16th
New Haven, Ct., (where Bro. Tompkins appoints), Tuesday evening, April 18th.
Bristol..........Sunday, April 23d
M. BATCHELOR.

Springfield, Mass., (Barnes' Block), April 9th and 16th
A. SIMPSON.

Dover, N. H..........Sundays, April 2d and 9th
THOS. M. LATHAM.

New Bedford, Mass..........Sunday, April 9th and remain two or three weeks.
J. COUCH.

Forestville..........Sunday, April 9th
RALPH WILLIAMS.

Kennebunk, Me..........Sundays, April 9th and 16th
C. E. PIPER.

Sandwich, (where Bro. A. B. Hoyt may appoint) April 9th
Parsonsfield, Me., (where Bro. J. S. Moulton may appoint), Saturday, P. M., and Sunday, April 22d and 23d.
T. W. PIPER.

New Boston, N. H., (where Bro. Dodge may appoint), Sunday, April 9th.
Nottingham, (where Bro. Geo. Randall may appoint), Sunday, April 16th.
J. PINKHAM.

East Canaan, N. H., Saturday evening, and Sunday, April 8th and 9th.
Pittsfield, N. H., (at New Chapel), Sunday, April 16th
Bare Hill (school-house), Saturday evening and Sunday evening, April 15th and 16th.
JOHN G. HOOK.

ENGLISH BIBLES

FOR SALE BY H. L. HASTINGS, BOSTON.

1. MINION, references between the verses. Sheep $2.40; roan gilt, $3.00; Turkey morocco, gilt, $3.60.
2. NONPAREIL. Sheep, $2.00; Roan gilt, rims and clasps, $2.25.
3. PEARL BIBLES. Roan gilt, $2.00; Roan gilt, rims and clasps, $2.40; Morocco, $3; Chenil (Turkey), with flaps to protect the edges, $4.00.
4. DIAMOND. Flexible roan, $1.25; Rims and clasps, $2.00. [illegible]

Business.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

C. P. Dow—No. Due from Wm. Caverly, $1.35, from No. 468. Will you please collect.

Geo. L. Teeple—D. A. Martin is credited to No. 536.

S. W. Bartlett—You are right. T. D. Johnson has paid to No. 524.

G. R. S.—It is sent.

A. Andrews—Yes.

☞ WHO? If the brother in Edgerton, Wis., who sends a gold dollar for books, will give us his name, which he forgot to sign, we will send him what he calls for.

CASH RECEIPTS FOR THE CRISIS.

To find how your account stands.

The present No. of the Crisis is 496. The No. which follows your name is the No. to which you have paid.

If the No. paid to, is greater than the present No., the difference shows how many weeks you have paid for in advance. If the No. paid to, is less than the present No., the difference shows for how many weeks you owe. For every week of indebtedness before No. 468, charge (at the old rate) four cents; and, for every week of indebtedness since No. 468, charge (at the new rate) five cents,—and you have the amount due the office. (This, however, will give a trifle more than the amount due. To make it exact, deduct four cents for every dollar due before No. 468, and five cents for every dollar due since No. 468.)

$1.00 each.—L. Jones 499, J. Eells 503, M. S. Wilds 498, B Davis 513, M E Murphy 531, R Lyman 520, A Perkins, Jr., 415.

$2.00 each—W J Harris 508, B. Loomis 537, L. Bellows 518, Z Whitney 518, A Thrasher 488, N Hall 339, H Hays 536, M V Meader 519, F Robbins 419, A Chase 532, S M Griswold 480, T F Pinkham 526, R F Berry 510, J Benson 536.

$2.50 each—F Reynolds 543, J Marsh 518, H H Roderick 547, L Sayles 574, J Andrews 527, W. S. Larkin 488, M J Coburn 485, A Flagg 546, S J Roberts 543, S. G Edgerley 543, S. M. Mann 520, N. Shumway 565, A. Andrews 534, J. M. Wyman 493, E. Smith 546, A Bucklew 539, H Kennedy 543, I S Palmer 524, H. H. Farnham 546, L Watrous 546, M Glines 529, B Davis 557, N Libby 544.

$1.25 each.—S P Shepherd 517, Mrs. E. Carson 520, R T Chatfield 520, F. H. Whitaker 521, E P Brownell 520, J H Edmands 520, A Moore 512, B F Millard 535, L Hall 520, S A Bartlett 525, A P Noyes 520, H C Card 520, S S Lane 521, J Hool 520, S Roby 520, H Haskins 474, S Harding 499, E L Welsh 520, P Pierce 520, S E Hubbard 525, R Morgan 521, F L Smith 520, J P Blaisdell 520, A Bryant 534, L E Collins 522, C Sperry 520, P. B. Brownell 520, B. Griffin 520, E. Slager 517, K. B. Saunders 520, H T Miller 556.

$3.00 each—L. Gaylord 542, W. A. Manning 539, W. Batchelder 500, B Chesley 519, L Carsley 556, C D Severance 503, J Lemaster 557, T Rogers 510.

VARIOUS SUMS.—C A Ricker $2.76, 369; C W Potter 5.00, 510; S W Titus $2.30, 542; M Whitehead 50c, 504; W Case 50c, 504; W. Nichols 75c, 499; J. W. Westcott 40c, what P. O.? E Heath $4.00, 468; A H Hatch 45c, 496; J L Gage 63c, 507; E O Osgood $5.00, 510; H. G. Whitaker $3.75, 525; S Scott $5.00, 495; E W Watson $3.75, 494; H Champlin $14.00, 563; R Avery 50c, 433; A W Towle $1.31, 496.

FOR BOOKS AND TRACTS.

G K Carroll 28c, L E Humphreyville 80c, J E Marsh $1.70, J M Matts $1.00, C P Dow $4.00, C A Ricker 24c, E Braley $1.00, A W Bethell 50c, T M Redhead $1, M M Dagle 50c, C A West 50c, J R Boynton $3.00, O Westcott 60c, Z. H. Greeley 50c, C. Dixon $2.30, J. Stanclift $1.00, A. Woodman 85c, A. Moore 25c, S. G. Edgerley 50c, J C Newhouse 23c.

BOOKS AND TRACTS SENT.

BY MAIL.—I. Sheen, D. L. Clark, J. Stanclift, L. G. Humphreyville, J M Matts, J A Cleaveland, W N Wales, O Gould, J B Fuller, J Price, Z H Gwby, N M Henry, A Woodman, W T Robens, S W Bartlett, I Kulp, J M M Gernerd, Mrs. J K Bellows, P S W Deyo, S O Westcott, C Dixon, J E Marsh, A Morse, G W Smith, S L King, G W Foster, D B Day, C Haltman.

BY EXPRESS—G K Carroll, N. F. Nason, L. C. Wellcome, D Mathewson.

LETTERS RECEIVED.

J G Hook, G Dillabaugh, S H Philbrick, E S Benton, T M Preble, L Boutell, E A White, J Blain, G W Stetson, I Fancher, J Wilber, E M King, L L Carpenter, W. D. C., F H Chamberlain, L Reimer, W H McDaniels, G. W. Turner, I C Wellcome, Wm. Walker, S H Dunn, J W Taylor, D. G. M.

ACKNOWLEDGMENT.

☞ Received of L. L. and A. L., $2.50; C. A. Barton. 50c.; A reader of the Crisis, $1.00; L, K., $1.50; A friend, $2.00; E. A. F., $1.00 in gold; M. W., H. B., T. P., $5.00.

The Lord reward them for their kindness in aiding us in this hour of deep affliction. MRS. WALTER PRATT.

POST OFFICE ADDRESS.

H. K. Flagg—Holliston, Mass.
P. S. W. Deyo—Strawberry Point, Iowa.
I. K. Lombard—South Exeter, Me.
J. Couch—Concord, N. H.
C. Goodrich—West Winsted, Ct.
J. C. Wheeler—Carthage, Me.
H. F. Carpenter—Rutland, Vt.

ENGLISH BIBLES FOR SALE.

We can fill no more orders for English Bibles except for the following. DIAMOND, fine print, marginal references, at the following prices:

Morocco, $1.75; postage 12 cents. Calf, one copy, $1.40; postage 12 cts. Roan, gilt, $1.10; postage 12c.

Address MILES GRANT, Boston, Mass.

BOOKS FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

THE EMPHATIC DIAGLOTT: containing the Original Greek Text of the New Testament, according to the Recension of Dr. J. J. Griesbach, with an Interlinear Word-for-Word English Translation, based on the renderings of eminent critics, and on the various readings of the Vatican Manuscript (No. 1209) in the Vatican Library; with Notes, References, and an Appendix. 880pp. 12mo. Price, plain leather, $4.00; extra, gilt, $4.50; Turkey morocco, $5.00. Postage, 16 cents.

THE NEW TESTAMENT of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ; with brief Notes and Instructions; containing the references and marginal readings of the Polyglott Bible; also the Psalms, Maps, and Harmony of the Gospels. Published by the American Tract Society. For family use. $1.75; by mail, $1.90.

DICTIONARY OF THE HOLY BIBLE, for general use in the study of the Scriptures, with Engravings, Maps, and Tables. Published by the Amer. Tract Society. This is one of the best. Cloth, $1.50; by mail, $1.75. Sheep, $2.00; by mail, $2.25.

CANON OF THE HOLY SCRIPTURES examined in the light of History. By Prof. L. Gaussen, of Geneva, Switzerland. Translated from the French, and abridged by Edward N. Kirk, D. D. $1.75. By mail, $2.00.

CRUDEN'S COMPLETE CONCORDANCE to the Holy Scriptures. New and condensed edition. Edited by John Eadie, D. D., LL.D. Cloth, $1.50; by mail, $1.80. Sheep, 2.00; by mail, $2.30.

THURMAN'S BIBLE CHRONOLOGY, or, The Sealed Book of Daniel Opened. A work for every Bible Student. $1.50; by mail, $1.75.

WHY THE SHOE PINCHES. A useful little work, with cuts, showing the conditions of a healthy foot, the causes of deformities, and how to avoid those troublesome diseases and malformations, such as chilblains, corns, bunions, flat-foot, bent-up toes, grown-in nails, etc. Price, 30 cents.

THE SCRIPTURAL QUESTION BOOK. "Sanctify them through thy truth: thy word is truth." A valuable help to Sunday School and family instruction. 127 pp. Price, 15 cts.; postage 4 cts. $1.50 per dozen; postage 8 cts. on every three copies.

THE TAKING OF HUMAN LIFE incompatible with Christianity; with remarks on the present crisis. By T. F. Tukesbury. Price, 8 cts.; postage 2 cts. A tract for the times.

THE SYRIAC NEW TESTAMENT. A literal translation from the Syriac Peshito Version. By James Murdock, D. D. Price $2.50. Postage 36 cts.

NON-RESISTANCE; or, the Spirit of Christianity restored. By W. C. Thurman. Price 20 cts.; postage 4 cts.

CHLOE LANKTON; or, Light beyond the Clouds. A Story of Real Life. 75 cents. By mail, 87 cts.

MULLER'S LIFE OF TRUST. A Narration of the Lord's dealings with George Muller, written by himself. $1.75; by mail, $2.00.

DIPHTHERIA: its Causes, Treatment, and Cure. By James C. Jackson, M. D. Price, 10 cts.; by mail, 12 cts.

C. F. HUDSON'S WORKS.

Debt and Grace. Or the Doctrine of a Future Life, by C F. Hudson. [illegible]

Christ our Life. The Scriptural Argument for Immortality through Christ alone. [illegible]

Human Destiny. A Critique on Universalism. [illegible]

The Doctrine of Endless Misery an occasion of Scepticism. [illegible]

Eternal Death in the literal sense is Eternal Punishment. [illegible]

The Rich Man and Lazarus. With remarks on Josephus. [illegible]

The Rights of Wrong; or, is Evil Eternal? With [illegible]

Reviewers Reviewed. New edition with replies to [illegible]

JACOB BLAIN'S WORKS.

Death not Life; or, The Destruction of the Wicked [illegible]

Glad Tidings; or, Bible Proof that Woe and Sin are [illegible]

The Wicked not Immortal. Two hundred texts [illegible]

Bible Meaning of the Word Hell. [illegible]

Endless Misery not a Bible Doctrine. [illegible]

Smoke of Torment and Unquenchable Fire Explained. [illegible]

Bible Meaning of Forever and Everlasting. [illegible]

Letter of Rev. John Foster on Future Punishment. [illegible]

BOOKS AND TRACTS.

[illegible]

All orders for any of the following works must be addressed to MILES GRANT, Boston, Mass.

MILES GRANT'S WORKS.

Resurrection of the Wicked. Discussion with Jos. T. Curry. [illegible]

Eternal Suffering. Discussion with Dr. J. Litch. [illegible]

State of the Dead. Discussion with W. W. Clayton. [illegible]

Miles Grant's Tracts. 32 pages each. Price 5 cents [illegible]

What is Man? A Bible view of his creation; The meaning of Soul, Spirit, Death, and Hell.

The Soul, What is it? Or a careful examination of all the uses of the words nephesh and psuche [illegible]

The Spirit, What is it? Or a careful examination of all the uses of the words ruach and pneuma [illegible]

The Rich Man and Lazarus. Thief on the Cross; [illegible]

EXPOSITORY WORKS ON PROPHECY. BY S. S. BREWER.

1. The Days in which we Live. This is a concise history of the Four Great Monarchies [illegible]

2. An Exposition of the Seven Seals. History [illegible]

3. The Slaying of the Witnesses. Showing that [illegible]

4. A Treatise on Revelation XIII, in Two Parts. [illegible]

5. The Kingdom of God and Signs of the Times. [illegible]

6. The Last Day Tokens. No. 1. This is an argument [illegible]

7. Last Day Tokens. No. 2 is an answer to the [illegible]

8. Last Day Tokens. No. 3. This is a phenomenal compend, containing a history of the signs in the Sun, in the Moon, and in the Stars [illegible]

9. The Great Image soon to be dashed to pieces. Price 4 cts., postage 2 cts.

10. The History of an Immortal Soul. Mythology and Theology vs. Bible [illegible]

11. Rich Man and Lazarus. New edition, [illegible]

One copy of each of the above works sent by mail for $1.25.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Cruden's Condensed Concordance, by which any passage of Scripture, of which only a single word is remembered, can at once be found [illegible]

The Life of Trust. An account of the Lord's Dealings with George Müller, Director of the Orphan Houses of Bristol, England [illegible]

A Treatise on the 24th and 25th chapters of Matthew, [illegible] By I. C. Wellcome. [illegible]

Should Christians Fight? A pamphlet on War, embracing the Scripture argument against fighting, and the testimonies of the Primitive Church. By I. C. Wellcome. [illegible]

The Bible from Heaven, or a dissertation on the Evidences of Christianity. By M. Hall. [illegible]

America in Prophecy. Exposition of the 18th chap. of Isaiah, showing its application to the United States of America in the present conflict, and end of the dispensation. By G. R. Fassett. [illegible]

The Celestial Railroad, or Modern Pilgrim's Progress. After the manner of Bunyan. [illegible]

The Three Kingdoms, or the Kingdom of God the Father, the kingdom of Satan, the kingdom of the Lord Jesus Christ [illegible]

The Ten Virgins, or Wisdom and Folly contrasted. By T. M. Preble. [illegible]

The Two Adams. By T. M. Preble. An interesting tract. [illegible]

Messiah's Mission, or an exposition of the Gospel Covenant, as comprehended in the Scriptures of truth. By C. F. Sweet. [illegible]

The Excellency of the Lord's Anointed, or Christ the promised Messiah. By Mrs Mary A. Seymour. [illegible]

Everybody's Book. The Bible View of the personality of God. The Devil: his origin, personality, power, and doom. [illegible]

Cook Book. By Dr F. W. Hurd. This book gives instructions for preparing all the articles of food used at Dr. Jackson's celebrated health institution [illegible] Dansville, N. Y. [illegible]

Premature Decay of American Youth. By Dr. A. Stone. This is a valuable work, and should be read by all the young. [illegible]

The Saint's Harvest, or an exposition of Matt. 24: 14, in connection with Dan. 12: 11-13. By H. K. Flagg. [illegible]

The Old and New Covenant. Superiority of the New. By A. W. Sibley. [illegible]

The Christian Lyre. A collection of Hymns and Tunes for Worship. [illegible]

A Disquisition on the Prophecies. By F. H. Berick. [illegible]

An Appeal to Pious Trinitarians. By H. Grew. [illegible]

THE BIBLE STUDENT'S LIBRARY.

A Series of Volumes Edited and Published by

H. L. HASTINGS,
167 Hanover St., Boston, Mass.

Each vol. contains over 400 pages, uniformly bound in Cloth and in Paper Covers. Sold separately or in sets. Single volumes sent post-paid on receipt of the price.

IMPORTANT BOOKS WORTH BUYING, LENDING, READING, AND PRESERVING.

I. THE SIGNS OF THE TIMES; or, a Glance at Christendom as it is. By H. L. Hastings. Cloth $1, paper 50 cts.

A sad exhibition of the predicted perils of the Last Days; the selfishness, hypocrisy, and crimes of Christendom, as shown in STATISTICAL ACCOUNTS of the slave trade, cotton trade, opium trade, Coolie trade, and the licentiousness, illegitimacy, child murder, bloodshed, and military preparations of this age.

II. THE VOICE OF THE CHURCH on the Coming and Kingdom of the Redeemer. By D. T. Taylor. Edited and prefaced by H. L. Hastings. Cloth $1, paper 50 cts.

A history of the doctrine of the reign of Christ on earth, containing the views and testimonies of nearly four hundred of the greatest preachers, reformers, and writers the church has ever known, concerning the establishment of the future glorious Kingdom of God, under the whole heaven.

III. THESSALONICA, OR THE MODEL CHURCH; A Sketch of Primitive Christianity; and REASONS FOR MY HOPE, or the Tokens of Speedy Redemption; by H. L. Hastings; and SPIRITUALISM A SATANIC DELUSION, by Wm. Ramsey, D.D. Cloth $1, paper 50 cts.

"Thessalonica," portraying the faith and practice of the early Christians; "Reasons," exhibiting the hope of the Church, the fulfilment of prophecy, the spread of the gospel through Missionaries, Bible and Tract Societies, etc.; and "Spiritualism," unveiling and exposing the monster delusion of Satan in these latter times.

IV. THE GREAT CONTROVERSY BETWEEN GOD AND MAN; its Origin, Progress, and End; with numerous TRACTS on Prophetical and Practical subjects. By H. L. Hastings. Cloth $1, paper 50 cts.

The "Controversy" sketches the History of the World since man's revolt from God, narrates the judgments already inflicted upon the nations of the earth for their iniquities, and those more terrible and exterminating calamities yet to overwhelm the nations, and prepare the way for the establishment of a divine government upon the earth. The TRACTS are, "The Church not in Darkness," "The Three Worlds," "The Last Days," "Plain Truths," "Ancient Landmarks," "Important Questions," "Olive Leaves," etc. etc.; a valuable and spirited collection.

V. FUTURE PUNISHMENT, as Taught in the Scriptures; with the opinions of Men upon this subject. By H. L. Hastings. Cloth $1, paper 50 cts.

Containing "Pauline Theology," or Future Punishment as Taught by Paul; "The Old Paths," or the Doctrines of the Apostolical Fathers; "Retribution," or the Resurrection and Punishment of the Wicked; "Will all Men be Saved?" an Antidote for Universalism; "The Destiny of the Wicked," a Scripture Tract; "The Decrees of Popes and Councils on the Immortality of the Soul;" with the Views of Justin Martyr, Luther, Jeremy Taylor, Milton, and Bishop Law on the state of the dead, etc.

CASH PRICES.

By MAIL: 1 Book, cloth $1.00, paper 50 cts.; 5 Books, cloth $4.50, paper 2.25. By Express: 5 Books, cloth $4.50, paper 2.00; 20 Books, cloth $15.00, paper $7.50; 50 Books, cloth $33, paper $15; 100 Books, cloth $60, paper $25.

☞ 3 Books, paper, sent to any three ministers for $1.

SEPARATE PAMPHLETS NOT BOUND IN CLOTH.

[illegible]

For the World's Crisis.

THE BRIGHT MORNING STAR.

BY S. S. BREWER.

Air—"Star of the Evening."

Star of the righteous, beautiful star,
Prophets beheld thee shining afar;
Look on thy children waiting to be Changed to thy likeness, ever with thee.
Now thou art nearing, whose seen afar,
Star of the righteous, beautiful star.

Light of the tempted, glorious light,
Beaming with rays pure shining bright,
Look in compassion down from above,
Father of life, and fill us with love;
Ever thee seeking, Bethlehem's star,
Star of the righteous, beautiful star.

Ark, where the mourners peacefully rest,
Faithful and true, sweetest and best;
Fountain of life, whose streams ever flow,
Gladdening each soul who would thy love know;
Gladly we'll hail thee, beautiful star,
Star of the righteous, beautiful star.

Come, stem of Jesse, Shiloh of old,
Gather thy saints now into one fold;
Set up thy kingdom, wear thy bright crown,
Gem'd with bright glory, plant of renown;
Star out of Jacob, Bethlehem's star,
Offspring of David, bright morning Star!

Ashburnham Depot, Mass.

For the World's Crisis.

WILL THE TIMES AND SEASONS EVER BE DEFINITELY KNOWN?

NUMBER TWELVE.

It was time that brought us out as a people, and I think that time, or the growing in knowledge and the grace of Jesus Christ, ought to distinguish us until we realize our hope, the redemption of the body and the possession of our eternal crown of glory. Now if angels, prophets, apostles, and holy souls have inquired the time, surely it cannot be amiss for us to do so, whom it principally concerns. Saints have inquired the time. Dan. 8 : 13,—"Then I heard one saint speaking, and another saint said unto that certain saint which spoke, How long shall be the vision?" 12 : 6,—"And one said to the man clothed in linen, which was upon the waters of the river, How long shall it be to the end?" Prophets have inquired the time. Psalm 13 : 2,—"How long shall mine enemy be exalted over me?" Ps. 94 : 3, 4,—"Lord, how long shall they speak hard things?" Isaiah inquired about the time. 6 : 11,—"Then said I, Lord, how long?" Isaiah was here inquiring the time, when the whole earth should be full of the glory of God. His answer was, "Until the cities be wasted, without inhabitant, and the houses without man, and the land be utterly desolate." That this has reference to the judgment is proved by other passages.

Apostles have inquired the time. Matt. 24 : 3; Mark 13; Luke 21 : 7,—"What will be the sign of thy coming and of the end of the world?" This is plain language, and not to be misunderstood; and yet whoever asks or takes up this question to-day in the nineteenth century, with all its light, must bear the cross while asking it. But amen to that. When you speak to them about the end of the world, or of this present anti-christian age, or the dawn of a better day, they reply, "What a thought! how shocking, and how dreadful!" Well, this must be the language of the world; but the Bible gives us this language to the christian,—"Lift up your heads"; "rejoice." Why? "Your redemption draweth nigh"—redemption from the power of the grave. It is considered an awful thing to make inquiries about the coming of Christ and the end of the age. But by the grace of God we care not, so long as we are found in such company as prophets, apostles, and the disciples of Christ.

In Acts 1 : 6, the apostles asked Christ, saying, "Lord, wilt thou at this time restore again the kingdom?" The inquiry was made by holy persons. Rev. 6 : 10,—"And they cried with a loud voice, saying, "How long, O Lord, holy and true, dost thou not judge and avenge our blood on them that dwell on the earth?" But many will say, if the coming of Christ is true, it ought not to be preached so prominently. If it is true, then it is a present truth, and all present truth ought to be applied to the age to which it belongs; as a certain exchange writer says,—"No truth is to be neglected in the dispensation of the word. It is particularly the duty of Christ's ambassadors, and it is made imperative on them to instruct the church and make known to the world in a more emphatic manner those truths which have a specific application to the times in which they live; whether they have a respect to sins which prevail then more than at other times, duties whose performance is then more imperatively demanded, or predictions which are then near to be fulfilled."

Some will say that the nearness of the time of the end is not revealed in the New Testament. Suppose it is not, is it not well to believe Moses and the prophets? Such testimony ought to be sufficient. But time is revealed both in the Old and New Testaments in the most plain and simple manner, just in the same way that Christ's first coming was revealed or made known.

It often appears to me that time is not the point at issue altogether; for sufficient evidence can be produced to prove that the church, and, I might say, the world, are with us on time; but it is the nature of the event that we connect with time that forms the barrier, or makes the difference. Because if we preached the conversion of the world, we should not be opposed as we are. O that mankind might see into this matter aright, that what they must do may be done quickly.

It may not be necessary to go into an examination of what I am about to mention, but merely to state that the time is revealed by types. Instance the six days of creation; the seventh, the day of rest. "For there remaineth a rest to the people of God."—Heb. 4: 9. The six days being typical of the six thousand years of the earth's age, the seventh of the Sabbath. Be it observed, the evening and the morning were the first day. See first chapter of Genesis. There are no evenings or mornings to the seventh day, upon which God rested, it being typical of the eternal day of rest for the children of God.

It is again revealed in the typical jubilee of fifty years, etc. God revealed the time to Daniel. 8 : 19,—"At the time appointed the end shall be." The appointed time was given. "And he said unto me, unto twenty-three hundred days" (years). Again, he was expressly told when the resurrection of the just would take place, by his own time being measured. And it will not be questioned that the coming of Christ and the resurrection of his saints take place at the same time.

New Sharon, Me. JOHN TAYLOR.

☞ Think that a word once spoken can never be recalled; therefore it is often prudent to think twice before we speak.

For the World's Crisis.

LETTERS ILLUSTRATIVE OF CHRISTIAN EXPERIENCE.

NUMBER SIX.

To MRS. L.:—My Dear Sister,—Your favors of Jan. 1st and Feb. 12th were duly received and perused with interest. I have been visiting friends at R——, and was permitted to see the work of God in the salvation of some souls. The revival began in a school district, under the labors of Eld. E. The house was filled evening after evening, and ten had professed religion when I left; since then the number has increased, I believe, to twenty-eight.

One Sabbath evening I felt it my duty near the close of the services to speak of the duty of parents to converse and pray with their children, and be in earnest for their salvation. I had spoken at an early stage of the meeting, but this was so impressed upon my mind, I could not feel clear without expressing my thoughts respecting it. In the course of my remarks I said: "There are parents, professedly pious, who never have prayed with their children; some whose children never heard them pray." It was an arrow to one heart, at least. A minister, observing the sadness of a lady present, addressed her after the close of the services. She burst into tears, and exclaimed, "O that woman—what that woman said about parents praying for their children! I have lost six, and they never heard me pray." She said that there were two left her, and the brother told her to go home and pray with them before she retired to her bed. O, what a sad picture is here presented! A professedly christian mother bringing up her children without family devotion—without secret prayer with them! Six dying without hearing that mother's voice raised to heaven in their behalf!

A young man of my acquaintance told my own dear mother, a few years since, that he had never heard his mother pray. Yet she was one of the prominent and active members of the M. E. church. That young man died in a few months, and whether he was permitted to hear his mother's voice in prayer for him, or not, I never knew. How can christian mothers be so negligent in respect to the salvation of those entrusted to their watch-care! Great and fearful responsibilities rest upon the christian parent.

The little child is in a state of grace; it is an heir of the kingdom; and the tender regard felt for such by the Savior is often manifest in his teaching. "Take heed," says he, "that ye despise not one of these little ones; for I say unto you, that in heaven their angels do always behold the face of my Father which is in heaven." Again he says that "it is not the will of your heavenly Father that one of these little ones should perish." He is discoursing of the "little child" which he has set in the midst of his disciples. Now if they are embraced in the covenant of grace, belong to the family of God, as the above scriptures plainly teach, then how faithfully ought the christian mother to labor to preserve her little one from falling into sin; how early and constant ought to be her teachings, how earnest and believing her prayers, so that the good seed may be sown and nurtured.

I have thought far more on this subject since the death of Charlie. I have realized more sensibly my remissness of duty, my too great indifference respecting the salvation of his soul. Thank God, my cup is not embittered by the thought that I did not pray with and for him. Often, yes, very often, have I knelt alone with him for prayer; and when he was laid upon a dying bed, I could, oh so readily, kneel down and bring him in the arms of faith and love to Jesus for pardon. For a long time previous to this, I had realized my near access to God in my secret devotions; and every time I knelt for prayer, this promise was renewed to my soul, "Ask what ye will, and it shall be done."

I had been praying for some months with greater earnestness for Charlie; but a few weeks prior to his sickness, as I bowed at the twilight hour to commune with God, and the precious promise was spoken anew to my heart, I said, If this be my privilege, I will ask for Charlie's speedy conversion. Before I arose, I felt assured my petition was accepted, and would be granted. Little did I then think the answer would come attended with such painful circumstances. After he was taken sick, and had found peace in believing, my petition then was, "Grant, oh my Father, that he may give such clear and unmistakable evidence of the inward change, as to leave no room to doubt." It was as I had asked. He afforded the most positive fruits of conversion. He had entire victory over the fear of death, and his last words were, "Glory, hallelujah! I am happy—I love Jesus—I am going home!" Such a triumphant death as this could but afford us great consolation, and inspire heartfelt gratitude to our heavenly Father. It is a comforting thought to know that I have two dear ones forever safe, who will live eternally in the glorious kingdom of our Savior. It is an incentive to me to be faithful, that I may be reunited to them, never more to part.

It was during Charlie's sickness I renewedly consecrated darling Frankie to the Lord. I thought it was quite probable he might be smitten with the same dreadful disease, and it cost my heart a sore struggle to say, "Thy will be done." But the victory was mine through grace. I hold him loosely; he is only lent; I would be faithful to my trust, and when he is called for yield him without a murmur.

I thank God for the gift of a pious mother. When very young, I can remember her taking me to her place for secret prayer, and there asking God to bless and save her little Mary. The influence of those prayers was abiding. Serious impressions began at an early period, and never were long absent. I often prayed to the Lord for a new heart, and believe if suitably instructed and encouraged I should when very young have become a christian. As it was, I lived to the age of seventeen before I took an open and decided stand on the Lord's side.

The youthful mind is very susceptible to religious impressions. I have recently conversed with a man quite advanced in years, who has long been despairing because he did not in early life become a christian. His parents were professedly pious, but they did not labor for his salvation. His mother never conversed with him about his soul's welfare until he was leaving the parental roof; then she said a few words. He blames his parents very much for their neglect, and himself for procrastinating the day of repentance till it is, as he believes, too late. But my letter is already too long, and I must close.

Yours truly, M. D. W.

For the World's Crisis.

WAITING UPON GOD.

Brethren and Sisters:—To-day while reading some extracts from "Barclay's Apology," I was most forcibly impressed with the thought, that as christians we do not wait before the Lord in that sense whereby we have the promise we shall renew our strength; and if this be true, does it not account for our leanness and woful lack of deep spirituality? We all know that nothing can be more opposite to the natural will and wisdom of man than this silent, patient waiting before God. We cannot be taught of God, so long as our will and wisdom is in exercise.

I venture the subjoined extract from the above named author, and I think all who are led by the Spirit of God must acknowledge that he has gotten at the germ of this matter of waiting upon the Lord. Barclay observes, "Since, then, man in his natural state is thus excluded from acting or moving in things spiritual, how shall he exercise this great duty of waiting upon the Lord? In no other way but abstaining from his own thoughts and imaginations, and from all the self-workings and motives of the mind. This, though hard to the natural man, is so reasonable to the natural experience, in other things, that it cannot be denied. He that comes to learn of a master, if he expects to hear the master, and be instructed by him, must not be continually speaking of the matter to be taught, and never be quiet; otherwise, how shall his master have time to instruct him? Yea, though the scholar were never so earnest to learn the science, yet would the master have reason to reprove him as untoward, or indocile, if he would always be meddling himself, and still speaking, and not wait in silence PATIENTLY to hear his master's instruction. Since, then, we are commanded to wait upon God diligently, and in so doing it is promised that our strength shall be renewed, this waiting cannot be performed but by a silence, or cessation, of the natural parts on our side; since God manifests himself not to the outward man, or senses, so much as to the inward, to wit to the soul and spirit. If the soul be still thinking and working, in her own will, and busily exercised in her own imaginations, though the matters in themselves may be good concerning God, yet thereby she incapacitates herself from discerning the still small voice of the Spirit, and so hurts herself greatly in that she neglects her chief business of 'waiting upon the Lord.' Supposing I should busy myself speaking of a business, while at the same time I neglect to hear one who is quietly whispering into my ear, those things most needful for me to know concerning that business. And since it is the chief work of the christian to have the natural will crucified, that God may both move in the act and in the will, the Lord requires profound subjection and self-denial. This great duty of waiting upon the Lord must needs be exercised in one's denying self, both inwardly and outwardly, in a still and mere dependence upon God, in abstracting from all the workings, imaginations and speculations, of his own mind; that being emptied as it were of self, and so thoroughly crucified to the natural products thereof, he may be fit to receive the Lord, who will have no copartners nor corivals of his power and glory.

By thus waiting, the seed of righteousness which God has planted, which has been kept from springing up by man's natural thoughts, finds a place to spring up, and becomes a holy birth and geniture in man, and in the diviner atmosphere, by which his soul is nurtured, he comes to be accepted in the sight of God, to stand in his presence, hear his voice, and observe the motions of his Holy Spirit."

God grant that you and I, my brethren and sisters, may THUS wait upon the Lord, that we may share in his glory here, and dwell with him upon the new earth. Your sister, waiting for Christ, H. P. VAN KIRK.

For the World's Crisis.

THE VOICE OF WISDOM.

Wisdom cries aloud; it cries aloud for all men to open their hearts that it may come in and direct their steps. It cries aloud also for justice and equity, that men may be just before God, and merciful and equitable to their fellow-men. Wisdom shows to us the path that leads to felicity, and invites us to walk therein. Yea, it points out the road that leads to the golden gates of heaven, where the righteous enter and partake of those joys that never die; joys that grow brighter and brighter throughout eternal ages.

Wisdom is the crowning shield, safe-guard, and the grand criterion of all our thoughts, words and work. Then how essential it is for us to open our hearts and receive it. For surely if we will but open our hearts it will gush in like an overflowing flood, which sweeps away all filth and leaves nothing behind but what will substantiate a golden harvest of joy and peace.

But notwithstanding wisdom offers itself in all kindness to the children of men, how many thousands do we see, who spurn it, and choose the paths of sin that lead to perdition, rather than the road that leads to eternal joy. Dear friends in Christ, can we lie at ease and see so many thousands of our fellow-mortals going the downward road to perdition, without giving them a warning voice to retrace their steps? Listen to the voice of wisdom, and secure their souls' salvation. If we would be Christ's disciples we should be up and at work in God's vineyard, warning the world of its impending danger. We should cry aloud and spare not, until they listen to the voice of wisdom. Then we shall fulfill our mission. Then shall we be filled with love to God and love to man. Then shall our peace flow as a river, and our righteousness as the waves of the sea. Then may we quench our thirst at the stream which issues from beneath the throne of the Most High, gladdening the city of our God, and making blest the hearts of men.

Shall wisdom cry aloud,
And not her speech be heard?
The voice of God's eternal word
Deserves a rich reward.

The world is in great commotion at this day by reason of sin and transgression. But nature at present rolls on as usual. The sun, moon and stars keep their regular course in submission to the great Author of wisdom, from whence all creation is sustained. But man heedeth it not; he goeth astray; he setteth his face against wisdom, and by his works polluteth the world. But notwithstanding the frailty of man, we have the promise of seedtime and harvest. Now if we will but take this promise in a spiritual sense, we shall find the seed spoken of to be wisdom, and if we will but gather the fruit thereof in due time and store it up, it will give us joy and peace, both in this world and that which is to come.

Here note, love to God and love to man is the true philosophy of wisdom. We should love God with heartfelt affection, and to all men who come in our way that stand in need of our aid, show sympathy, and supply their wants as far as our abilities allow. We should also admonish those who are going astray, and if possible bring them to the knowledge of the truth. Then it will be said to us, "Fear not, little flock, it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom." Hence, if we would wish to be happy, we must choose and walk in the path of wisdom. We must cultivate the spirit of charity and benevolence, and do unto others as we should wish them to do unto us; follow wisdom's ways of pleasantness and peace. In so doing we shall find true bliss, and be enabled, as we draw near the close of our earthly pilgrimage, to look back upon a life well spent, far preferable to silver or gold,—we can close oureyes upon all earthly scenes, and say, Farewell, glittering world, we look forward to a world of more substantial joys.

Fisherville, N. H. J. ELKINS.

For the World's Crisis

THE BRIDEGROOM IS COMING.

We're strangers and pilgrims, away from our home;
We've left all that's dear for the bright world to come;
But we're cheered on our journey, for this is our song,
The Bridegroom is coming, we'll be marching along.

CHORUS.

Marching along, we'll keep marching along,
Rejoicing in hope, we are marching along;
The Bridegroom is coming, and this is our song,
So we'll gird on our armor, and keep marching along.

The night has been dreary, beclouded in storm;
We've often been weary, and sighed for the morn;
But our journey's most over, we'll not cease our song,
For the Bridegroom is coming, as we're marching along.

Though scoffers abounding would sneer while we yearn,
We've sighed for his coming, and watched his return;
But our hope is reviving, we're cheerful and strong,
For the Bridegroom is coming, and we're marching along.

The clouds are dispersing, the skies getting clear,
The night is receding, the dawnings appear;
We'll soon be with Jesus in glory at home,
For the Bridegroom is coming, while we're marching along.

I. K. LOMBARD.

ONE ROOT OF DRUNKENNESS.

BY REV. THEO. L. CUYLER.

Ten years ago, slavery seemed to be deeply rooted for a century; intemperance and the liquor traffic apparently "trembled to their fall." To-day slavery is in its death throes; but drunkenness and the drinking customs have gained a new lease of existence. One Upas reels under the axe of Liberty; and the other Upas strikes its diabolical roots deeper every hour.

Drunkenness has several roots; and one of them is acquiring a prodigious hold among the most respectable classes in the community. To get some idea of the extent of this new danger, one has but to run his eye over the public journals, and see the portentous advertisement of popular "Tonics, and "Bitters," and "Invigorators." To each of these is attached a formidable list of recommendations; and the scribes who prepare them for the press do not hesitate about garnishing the list with a copious supply of "Revs." and "M. D's." Nearly all these boasted invigorators have their basis in alcohol. One of them—widely placarded on dead walls—is only a bedeviled Santa Cruz Rum; another is Holland Gin under a thin disguise. These alcoholic compounds are popular. Many a man who would blush to be seen taking his dram at the bar, or even ordering a demijohn of liquor from a grocer, does not scruple to throw off his morning draught of "the ardent" when the bottle bears the alluring label of "Tonic Invigorator." Even a pledged abstainer may become a habitual drinker of alcoholic stimulant—all the while telling his troubled conscience, "O! it is only a medicine."

A large proportion of these alcoholic beverages—now hawked under the seductive names of tonics and health restorers—are roundly condemned by judicious physicians as devices of the devil. We may be thought rather radical, but after twenty years of observation we have learned to fight shy of alcoholic medicines. A wise physician will occasionally use brandy or other alcoholic drink to save life; but we hold, too, that his wisdom will dictate to him never to use it when any other remedy will answer the purpose. How does he know but that he may be unconsciously feeding an appetite or creating an appetite that may yet enslave his patient? One of the most eminent civilians in our land, whom strong drink has destroyed, fell into fatal intemperance under a medical prescription. After a severe illness, he was recommended to use port-wine as a daily tonic. His new ally became his conqueror. Though he was never known to reel in his gait, or to babble in his speech, he was yet a confirmed slave to the drink which slowly consumed his vitals and laid him at last in the grave of the suicide. Lord Macaulay has indicated the secret of the younger Pitt's enslavement to the bottle by telling us that port-wine was administered to him freely in early youth as a medicine.

In this country of ours, alcoholic medicines are vastly more perilous, from the notorious fact that our popular liquors are adulterated freely from the most deleterious drugs. The traffickers in strong drinks can only realize their enormous profits by the most unscrupulous use of such ingredients as logwood, ratany root, and vitriol. As if alcohol itself were not a sufficiently subtle poison, these dealers in death by measure do not scruple to mingle other poisons in the circean cup. A skillful physician tells us that he never yet found a single pint of port-wine in New York that would bear analysis. In fact, there is more port-wine brought to America alone than is exported from the harbor of Oporto in Portugal every year! The adulteration of our ordinary alcoholic drinks is notorious. Add to this the influence of climate in America, and the national tendency to excess in everything, and you may understand why the bottle fills more graves in proportion to its use than in any other country on the globe. To-day there is an alarming danger that we drift back to the prevailing drunkenness of fifty years ago; and one of the pregnant roots of the peril is found in the medicinal use of strong drinks.

Earnestly do we caution those who undertake to be their own doctors, and make out their own prescriptions. When we see a man measuring out his habitual glass of Bourbon or port, or some other alcoholic medicine, we see, in imagination, the devil, with tape in hand, already taking that man's measure for a toper's grave. Self-doctoring with alcoholics is like gambling; is a man ready to stop when he is half way down the precipice? The teaspoonful insensibly grows to a tablespoon; the wine-glass increases to the tumbler, and the tumbler to the demijohn. To keep up the normal effect of the stimulant, its quantity must be increased, and the sipper of to-day becomes the tippler of tomorrow, with the bloodshot eye already looking out for his drunkard's grave.

We may be pronounced "ultra," but we take the firm ground that alcohol has killed an hundred where it has cured one, and it should be let alone, except in rare and extraordinary emergencies. By alcohol we mean every drink that intoxicates. The healthiest are those who touch it the least. Glorious old Lyman Beecher and Professor Silliman, at threescore and ten, are the fruits which the tree of teetotalism produces. What professional men are bearing a severer nervous strain than Henry Ward Beecher or John B. Gough? Would they do their herculean work better with a thin "tonic" before every meal, and a "night-cap" before every night's restoring slumber? My own experience is briefly this: I have preached every Sabbath, when in America, for fifteen years, and I never drank a bottle of intoxicating liquor in my life. Rather than rely on alcoholic tonics to sustain the pressure of labor, I would quit the ministry. God has no need of ministers who need a dram.—Independent.

For the World's Crisis.

WINTER LIFE

At the "Granite State Health Institute," Hill, N. H.

DEAR READERS OF THE CRISIS:—Being a former patient and now a guest at this Institution, I thought a glance at the every day life here might be of interest and benefit to you; and hoping that it may assist in removing prejudice which exists in the minds of some against this place, also that it might induce some one who has been vainly seeking for health from the popular or drug-medical treatment to come here, and place themselves under the great health laws of the organism, and so be restored to health and happiness.

This so-called "Water Cure" is located in the pleasant, retired village of Hill, N. H., about twenty-five miles nearly north of the capital of the State, of easy access, as the cars pass only a few rods from the door. The physician and proprietor is W. T. Vail, M. D., a man of large experience in the treatment of disease, without the use of medicines. He is assisted by his wife, Mrs. E. M. Vail, a lady of high culture and refinement. She is greatly beloved by all who know her.

We will commence with the ringing of the bell for rising at 6 o'clock A. M. Breakfast comes at 7½ oclock, consisting principally of nice unleavened wheat-meal bread, soft and hard, and a plentiful supply of fruit, cooked and raw; an addition of potatoes, mush, toast, griddle cakes, corn cakes, raised biscuit, or brown bread, make up a variety for a week. At about 8½ oclock, the household, physician, patients, and help usually, assemble in the sitting-room for lecture and devotional exercises. These lectures are very interesting, the Doctor explaining the laws which govern health, the causes of disease, and how to avoid them, and various topics connected with the growth and development of our physical and moral natures. The devotional exercises are very pleasant also to those who love to have God honored; they consist of reading the Scriptures, singing, and prayer.

Those who are strong enough then engage in some light gymnastic exercises for a little while, such as are practised at Dr. Dio Lewis' "Normal Institute for Physical Culture," at Boston, Mass. The rest of the time is spent in resting, reading, and walking, until 11 o'clock A. M., when the bath bell rings. There is no hesitancy on the part of the patients here, for they are not soaked and splashed in cold water, as some imagine, but the baths are very mild and pleasant. The bell rings again at 12 o'clock for resting hours, and until 1½ o'clock P. M. every body must keep quiet, so that the feeble ones can rest and sleep.

Dinner is served at 2½ o'clock. There is more variety than at breakfast, but it is all simply and healthfully prepared. Potatoes and other vegetables, beans, meat (beef, mutton, or chicken) three times a week, bread, rusk, hygienic pies and puddings, etc., offer a variety. Milk and sugar, or syrup, with salt, for those who are not willing to live without, are the seasonings allowed. The vegetables are all cooked in soft water, and are delicious. Mrs. V. superintends the cooking department, and all is nicely arranged. Patients are not starved, the table is always abundantly supplied with healthful, nutritious food.

After dinner the patients enjoy themselves as best they can, in riding, walking, and amusements, till 6 o'clock P. M., when the bath bell rings again, and some local baths are administered, as foot baths, etc. As a general rule no full baths are given in the after part of the day. The evening passes very swiftly and pleasantly in social converse, reading, music from the melodeon, and singing. 8½ o'clock P. M., brings the bells for retiring, and soon all is quiet for the night.

One great feature of the Institute is the excellent moral and social influence with which one is surrounded. At the present time the physicians, help, and nearly all the patients, are seeking to be earnest christians; and surely the love, peace and harmony which pervade the whole establishment must exert a very great influence on the sick ones. Prayer meetings are held every Sabbath afternoon in the dining room, not for sectarian purposes, but to enable all to become more like Jesus. There are a number here who love "the blessed hope and glorious appearing of the great God and our Savior Jesus Christ," and are earnestly striving to be ready to greet him. It really seems home-like to be here with them.

I would earnestly recommend this Institution to the attention of all the sick and suffering ones who read "our paper," and am sure they will find it a nice place to lay aside unhealthful habits, and adopt those in harmony with the laws which God has established for the maintenance of health, which if they heed, will find "Nature as a mistress is gentle and holy, and to obey her is to live."

I can give plenty of testimony to those who wish, of the efficacy of the treatment pursued here in removing disease, and bringing about a healthful condition of the system. Those that come here, will find a place where poisons are not given to cure the sick, or any form of drug medicines; but where gentle water treatment, an abundance of pure air and sunlight, a plentiful supply of simple, yet nutritious food, gentle exercise, and a large amount of rest, electricity, and moral and social influence, are wisely combined, and brought to bear on the sick ones, and the organism thereby puts on normal in the place of abnormal conditions.

The healthful and truly beautiful "American Costume," or reform dress for women, is worn considerably by the patients, and almost exclusively by the help; yet none are obliged to wear it unless they choose to do so. The terms are not exorbitant, not half what is charged per day at our first class hotels for board alone, and patients are not encouraged to stay after they are able to leave, for the sake of getting their money.

Any further information will be cheerfully given, and a circular of the Institution sent to all who wish. If I have interested you, or helped any poor sick one to see a chance to regain their health, my object will be accomplished. Thy Bro. for the right,

G. FRANK LOCKE, East Weare, N. H.
"Granite State Health Institute,
Hill, N. H., Feb. 1865.

DURABLE FENCE POSTS.—We have, from time to time, published numerous facts, to prove that posts put in the ground top end down, will last longer than when placed the other way. We now add another to the list. Yesterday a gentleman told us that he had just been removing some post and rail fence, which he built twenty-four years ago. The fence posts, set then butt down, were nearly all rotted off in ten years, when new ones were set, in the same way, below the old ones in the middle of each panel, and the old allowed to remain. The posts set fourteen years ago were now all rotted; but some gate-posts, set twenty-four years, accidentally with the top in the ground, are perfectly sound their entire length, and will probably last twenty-four years more! We might state that the gate-posts were cut off at the forks of the trees, which made the upper end largest, and hence the largest end was placed in the ground. —Ohio Farmer.

SPENT TAN FOR POTATO ROT.—A gardener residing at Troyes states that he has discovered an effectual cure for the potato disease. Having observed that everybody living in the quarter of the town occupied by tanners escaped the cholera, he determined to try the virtue of tan when planting potatoes. For that purpose he placed a shovelful of tan in the trench under the seed in a part of a field, and planted the remainder in the ordinary way. On digging out the potatoes, he found that those which were planted near the tan were perfectly sound, while the others were diseased. He found, further, that potatoes were preserved in the winter by spreading tan on the floor of the store-house.—Irish Agricultural Gazette.

DAY AND MARTIN'S BLACKING.—According to Mr. W. C. Day, the method of making the famous "Day & Martin's Blacking" is as follows:—Bone-black, in a state of powder, is mixed with sperm oil until the two are thoroughly incorporated. Sugar or molasses is then mixed with a small portion of vinegar and added to the mass. Oil-of-vitriol is next added, and when all effervescence has ceased, more vinegar is poured in until the mixture is of a proper consistency. This constitutes the liquid blacking of the above named manufacturers.

TO KEEP MOTHS FROM FURS.—A practical furrier says:—"The best way to keep moths from furs when putting them away in the spring is to beat them and comb them; it is better than pepper, snuff, tobacco, or anything of the kind."

TO MAKE HARD SOAP.—Melt and bring to a boiling heat the common soft soap. Then add common salt, in proportion of one pint to three gallons; bring again to boiling heat, and stir well. Let it cool, and your soap is done.

TANSY TEA will keep off bugs from the vines of squashes, pumpkins, cucumbers and melons. Steep the tansy plants, and then sprinkle it over the vines with a brush.

Hygiene.

"This is for your health."—Paul.

ALCOHOLIC MEDICAL MUDDLE.

Before I present the scientific argument, let us see how this false doctrine of the medical profession works practically, and how it is reasoned professionally. The temperance physician—and if there is any physician who is not a temperance man, I think he has mistaken his calling—when his patient has had a fever of two or three weeks' duration, and has become pale, weak and emaciated, prescribes wine, brandy, ale, porter, etc. Why? He says, "to keep the patient up," to "obviate debility," to "sustain the vital powers," etc. The indication is, to give his patient life and power, and he prescribes alcohol.

Ask him "what is the relation of alcohol to the living system?" He will answer, "A poison, of course."

"How can a poison "support vitality?"

"O, by developing the nervous energy."

"But, do not your books say that it exhausts the nervous energy, and diminishes the powers of life?"

"That is when it is used as a beverage; when administered as a medicine the case is different."

"How different?"

"Why, as a beverage, it is a narcotic stimulant, but as a medicine it acts as a tonic."

"Suppose you label one glass of brandy beverage, and another medicine, will the effects of each be different?"

"O, no, I don't mean that. In health, it acts as a poison; but in disease it operates as a remedy."

"Then, the relation of alcohol to the living organism depends on the condition of health or disease?"

"Precisely. That's it."

"Was your patient sick when you prescribed the brandy?"

"Certainly. He had just passed through a long course of fever."

"Passed through a fever?"

"No, I mean the fever passed through him—run in course."

"Where did the fever go, or what became of it, after it had 'passed through' your patient, or run its course?"

"That question is entirely irrevelant. It is mere ridicule; and ridicule is not argument."

"Very true; I raised the point just to give you a hint that the idea of the nature of a fever, as entertained by the medical profession, is not only erroneous, but absurd, if not ridiculous. But never mind; was your patient convalescent?"

"To be sure, he was—passed the crisis finely. His disease was fairly subdued with antiphlogistics and alteratives, and all he required was a little artificial support."

"You say he had had a fever. Did you prescribe the brandy for the fever he had had?"

"No, that was disposed of."

"Did you prescribe the brandy for the convalescence?"

"Not exactly that, but for the debility."

"Is debility sickness?"

"No; it is the effect of disease."

"Suppose the patient had been weak from any other cause, would not the brandy be just as appropriate?"

"Well, perhaps it would.

"Suppose a child had been weak, or had inherited a feeble constitution from its mother, or had a frail organization because of a father who was addicted to the use of intoxicating drink, or suppose a man should feel weak after a hard day's work, would you recommend brandy?"

"Ah, well, perhaps, probably I might, and then I might not. It would depend entirely on circumstances."

"What, then, becomes of the principle you advanced, that alcohol is remedial only in disease?"

"Never mind the theory. Observation and experience are my guides. I go for facts."

"One question more: Did it never occur to you that 'nervous energy,' 'vital power,' and 'living strength,' do not exist in brandy, and that brandy cannot impart what it does not possess?"

"O, that's all theory. I go for fact."

"But, now, Doctor, let us refer for a moment to first principles. You said that alcohol, though a poison, developed nervous energy. How does it do this?"

"O, that is going into the modus operandi. That we don't know any thing about."

"Then, how do you know that it does develope nervous energy?"

"Because it increases sensibility and circulation."

"Would not the application of boiling water, or a red hot iron, or a blister plaster, or a dose of arsenic, increase sensibility and circulation?"

"Yes."

"Would they also develop the nervous energy?"

"I suppose they would."

"Can you explain how they do it?"

"Of course not. That's modus operandi again."

"And if you could explain the modus operandi, you would at once renounce the practice."

"Why so?"

"You would then understand that, what is called "developed nervous energy," is merely vital resistance—the struggle of the vital powers against the poison—an effort of the living system to expel it."

"You mean, then, that the alcohol does not act at all?"

"I mean that, exactly."

"How, then, do you explain its effects?"

"I have just told you."

"But if alcohol does not act itself, it superinduces an action; and what's the difference?"

"The difference is in the kind of action. The action is simply defensive, it is war; it is waste; it is desolation; and this action only developes the expenditure of vital power." —Temperance Platform.

HEALTH A DUTY.

Were a young man to write down a list of his duties, health should be among the first items in the catalogue. This is no exaggeration of its value; for health is indispensable to almost every form of human enjoyment; it is the grand auxiliary of usefulness; and should a man love the Lord his God, with all his heart and soul and mind and strength, he would have ten times more heart and soul and mind and strength to love him with, in the vigor of health, than under the palsy of disease. Not only the amount, but the quality of the labor which a man can perform, depends upon his health. The work savors of the workman. If the poet sickens, his verse sickens; if black, venous blood flows to an author's brain, it beclouds his pages; and the devotions of a consumptive man scent of his disease as obscenities smell of gin. Not only "lying lips," but a dyspeptic stomache, is an abomination to the Lord. At least in this life, so dependent is mind upon material organization,—the functions and manifestations of the mind upon the condition of the body it inhabits,—that the materialist hardly states practical re[illegible]s too strongly, when he affirms that thought and passion, wit, imagination and love, are only emanations from exquisitely organized matter, just as perfume is the effluence of flowers, or music the ethereal product of an Æolian harp.—H. Mann.

PURE AIR AS A TONIC.

The Scalpel says: "Medicine can never add material to the body. It cannot heal an ulcer in the lungs or spine; it cannot effect the absorption of the tubercles which cause it; it cannot straighten the curved spine or leg, or give blood to the feeble girl; nor can the most perfect mechanism impart natural strength or tone to the muscles that support the spine or move the limb. Medicines are generally inert, and too often injurious. They destroy appetite and digestion, which is the source of strength. Mechanical appliances are only useful adjutants to take off the weight from the diseased part, and aid the effect of a surgical operation, or, what is far better, to prevent its necessity. There is no true tonic but pure air; there is no material to repair but blood. In all diseases originating in a low condition of the vital force, more air must be breathed, that more food may be consumed, or the red blood that makes and gives tone to the muscles that support the spine will not be supplid. The scrofulous tubercle will not be absorbed, nor will the ulcer heal."

BURNS AND SCALDS.—Mix thoroughly equal parts of the whites of eggs and linseed oil. Apply to the parts affected linen cloths saturated with this mixture, and change them as often as they become hot and uncomfortable. This application is only to be used in scalds and burns where the skin is off. In all cases where the skin is not removed, cloths wet every five minutes in a mixture made of two parts common spirits, and applied, will be of more service. Continue these applications till the burning and inflammation is removed. Then apply an ointment made of equal parts beeswax, fresh butter, and rosin melted together. This will soon heal the sores and remove the scars. Burns and scalds must always be kept excluded from the light and air as much as possible, as these increase the irritation and prevent rapid healing.—N. E. Farmer.

TO CURE A FELON.—As soon as the part begins to swell, get the tincture of lobelia, and wrap the part affected with cloth, saturate it thoroughly with tincture, and the felon will soon die. An old physician informs us that he has known this to cure in scores of cases, and it never fails if applied in season. —American Artisan.

BRO. GRANT: Please say in the Crisis, if any one is troubled with the toe nail growing into the side of the toe, if they will drop a few drops of kerosene oil between the nail and the flesh, it is a sure cure.

ROYAL JACKMAN.

The World's Crisis

AND SECOND ADVENT MESSENGER.

TERMS:

If paid in advance,—	One year	$2.50
	Six months	$1.25
If not paid within six months,—	One year	$3.00
	Six months	$1.50
Five copies, to one address, six months—same rate for any larger number under ten.		$5.60
Ten copies, to one address, six months—same rate for any number over ten.		$10.00

CLUB PRICES PAYABLE ALWAYS IN ADVANCE.

POSTAGE.—The postage, in the United States, on each single copy of the Crisis, is 20 cents a year, payable quarterly, in advance, at the office of delivery.

RULES FOR CORRESPONDENTS.—Over all matters not intended for publication, write PRIVATE.

Over all business matters, write BUSINESS.

Over all articles for the paper, write FOR THE CRISIS.

All articles should be accompanied by the writer's name, for the Editor's information, even if it is not published.

When the names of new subscribers are sent, please say they are new, and it will save us much labor.

PRIVATE LETTERS.—Those wishing to address the Editor on matters not connected with the office, will please write the word PRIVATE on the outside of the envelope.

Please put the business matters and appointments on a piece of paper separate from other communications.

All persons writing to the office should give DISTINCTLY and PLAINLY the Post Office, County and State at which they wish to be addressed; and all orders, subscriptions, communications and remittances, should be plainly directed to MILES GRANT, BOSTON, MASS.

PUBLISHED ALSO AT THE SAME OFFICE,

Semi-monthly:

THE YOUNG PILGRIM:

An Illustrated Sunday School Paper,

FOR CHILDREN AND YOUTH.

TERMS:

[illegible]

Payable always in advance.

[illegible]

The World's Crisis

AND SECOND ADVENT MESSENGER.

"BEHOLD, I COME QUICKLY; AND MY REWARD IS WITH ME."

WHOLE NO. 497. BOSTON, TUESDAY, APRIL 11, 1865. VOL. XXI.—NO. 4.

The World's Crisis
AND SECOND ADVENT MESSENGER,
Issued every Tuesday Afternoon, at
167 HANOVER STREET, BOSTON.

MILES GRANT, EDITOR.

EDITORIAL COMMITTEE:
S. G. MATHEWSON, L. C. WELLCOME,
H. F. CARPENTER.

PUBLISHING COMMITTEE:
C. F. HUDSON, H. V. DAVIS,
S. S. BREWER, J. G. HAMBLIN,
D. MATHEWSON.

GEORGE T. ADAMS,
TREASURER AND BUSINESS AGENT.

☞ THE CRISIS is devoted to the exposition of all Bible truth; especially the doctrine of the immediate, personal coming and reign of Christ on the earth; holiness of heart; the unconscious state of the dead; their literal resurrection, and final destruction of the wicked.

For the World's Crisis.

MARANATHA.

BY D. T. TAYLOR.

Hark! a mighty swelling sound
Filleth all the air around;
Voices shrill and lifted high,
Waft it upward to the sky.
Higher yet the strains ascend,
And with angel anthems blend;
Heaven and earth repeat the strain:
"Jesus comes, and comes to reign."

Sun, in solemn darkness veiled,
Moon, whose midnight glory paled,
Stars, in myriads falling fast,
As the leaves 'mid autumn's blast,
Roarings of the storm-waked sea,
Kingdoms in perplexity,—
All take up the rushing strain:
"Jesus comes, and comes to reign."

Deep with sin the world is stained;
Long the tyrant Death has reigned;
Long the earth has groaned aloud;
Long the church has sadly bowed;
Soon the absent Lord will come,
And reveal the Eden home.
All creation wakes the strain:
"Jesus comes, and comes to reign."

Haste the day and speed the hour,
When in awful pomp and power,
And with trumpet's rolling sound,
Christ shall come with glory crowned.
Then shall Paradise be here;
Then shall beauty bless and cheer.
Voices ring o'er earth and main:
"Jesus now has come to reign."

Rouses Point, N. Y.

For the World's Crisis.

THE NEW BIRTH.—No. 2.

"Verily, verily I say unto thee, except a man be born again, he cannot see the kingdom of God."—JOHN 3: 3.

Having alluded to the darkness which prevails in respect to the declaration of our Master, "Except a man be born again, he cannot see the kingdom of God" (John 3: 3), we will now, by the aid of the Scriptures, and the Holy Spirit illuminating our minds, endeavor to ascertain the meaning. There are two limbs to this statement, and they are equal. It is said of a parable, "The legs of a parable are not equal"; and that "a parable cannot be made to go on all fours." That is, all things in a parable are not designed for illustration. To make use of all the figures or parts in a parable to illustrate the one or more ideas designed to be made plain, would embarrass the truth designed to be brought out or illustrated. But it is not so with this declaration of our Lord;—the legs of this passage are equal, and needful, and on them the truth designed to be taught runs without limping.

The two main and distinct points of the text are,—"born again"—"the kingdom of God." By determining the meaning of these, the other parts of the text are plain and forcible. We will first notice

"THE KINGDOM OF GOD."

This is not "the gospel church below," nor "the church triumphant above." The Scriptures do not teach the doctrine. Those frequently quoted to support it are perverted from their meaning and true import.

To make "the kingdom of God" the church below or on earth in its present state, would make the Scriptures to teach the grossest absurdities. Suppose we quote the following few texts, among the many which might be quoted, with the idea which prevails respecting this passage, that the new birth means conversion, and the kingdom of God "the gospel church"; and substituting these words for "born again," and "the kingdom of God."

"Except a man be converted, he cannot see the gospel church below." "Except a man be converted, he cannot enter into the church below." Now is this true? Are there no unconverted persons in the gospel church? "How hardly shall they that have riches enter into the gospel church." "It is easier for a camel to go through the eye of a needle, than for a rich man to enter into the gospel church." Is this true, that covetous men and those who make riches their trust are not able to get into the church? How is it, then, that there are so many of this class within the church? "Verily I say unto you, among them that are born of women, there hath not risen a greater than John the Baptist; notwithstanding, he that is least in the church below is greater than he." Can this be possible, that the least in the gospel church below is greater than the greatest born of women? Absurd in the extreme would this make the Bible! To make "the kingdom of God" refer to "the church triumphant above," would dispute and contradict the Scriptures, which affirm every where that is is

"Under the whole heaven." "And the kingdom and dominion, and greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven shall be given to the people of the saints of the Most High, whose kingdom is an everlasting kingdom, and all dominions shall serve and obey Him" (Christ). Dan. 7: 27. And those which teach that it is on

"The whole earth." The stone kingdom, or kingdom of the stone, or kingdom of God represented or symbolized by "the stone," "became a great mountain, and filled the whole earth. Dan. 2: 35. Not all the "above," or "sky." As the golden kingdom filled the whole earth (Dan. 2: 37); as the silver kingdom also (ver. 39); as the brazen kingdom "bore rule over all the earth" (ver. 39); as the iron kingdom also, and its subsequent divisions as symbolized (Dan. 2: 40–43); so will the stone kingdom in subsequent order and time "fill the whole earth," being a greater mountain or kingdom than either of its predecessors.—Dan. 2: 44. Hence we are taught to pray, "Thy kingdom come; thy will be done in earth, as it is in heaven."—Matt. 6: 10. Not above; not in our hearts; but "in earth." Who can ever suppose God's will and kingdom can come in earth, and be done in earth as in heaven, as universally and perfectly, while men are mortal and fallen in natures? It cannot be; and the kingdom of God is therefore the Glorified and immortal state on earth. Jesus Christ is the King of this kingdom, who will be "King over all the earth," and who when He comes "with the clouds of heaven" has "given him the dominion and kingdom" of the earth, which "dominion is an everlasting dominion, which shall not pass away." Zech. 14; Dan. 7: 13, 14. Therefore "His flesh did not see corruption." Acts 2: 31. He has been made immortal.

The saints are to "reign with him on the earth" (Rev. 5: 9, 10), and "reign for ever and ever."—Rev. 22: 5. Therefore they must be made immortal and be glorified. "Flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God." And why? For the plain reason that "corruption" doth not "inherit incorruption." The kingdom of God is "incorruptible." Hence we must "all be changed." "The dead shall be raised incorruptible," and the living, too, "be changed to immortality." "This corruptible must put on incorruption, and this mortal must put on immortality" "at the last trump." 1 Cor. 15: 50–58. "Abraham, and Isaac, and Jacob, and all the prophets," are to be "in the kingdom of God," with many "from the east, and from the west, and from the north, and from the south," who "shall sit down in the kingdom of God." Luke 13: 28, 29. And mark! the kingdom of God is to "fill the whole earth." This cannot be until "the tares are gathered out of the kingdom." "Then shall the righteous shine forth as the sun in the kingdom of their Father." Matt. 13: 38–43.

What kingdom is this "kingdom of the Father," to be given the righteous? "Then shall the King say unto them on his right hand, Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world." Not "before the foundation of the world," as often quoted. What kingdom was this? The kingdom fitted up and given to Adam, and constituting "the kingdom" now given to men; but to be finally given to the Second Adam and his people "for ever, even for ever and ever." Dan. 7: 18.

The kingdom of God is made up of Christ, or the Messiah, as the King; the saints of the Most High, as the subjects; the earth renewed, or new earth, after the final conflagration (2 Pet. 3; Rev. 21), as the locality; the New Jerusalem, the city of God, which is to come down from God out of heaven upon the earth, on its regenesis, the celestial metropolis of this kingdom; and this kingdom is to endure eternal ages, "world without end." Now "except a man be born again, he cannot see (enjoy, or inherit) the kingdom of God"; "he cannot enter into the kingdom of God."

We consider next

THE NEW BIRTH.

What is it to be "born again"?

1st. It is evident that it is not a repetition of natural birth, as Nicodemus inquires, v. 4. And the Savior replies, "That which is born of flesh is flesh; and that which is born of the Spirit is spirit."

2nd. It is a spiritual birth, or a birth effected by the Spirit. This, I regard, includes both conversion and the resurrection,—the moral and the physical change fitting one to inherit glory. There are two extremes in the views entertained on this being "born again." One is, that it refers to conversion wholly; the other, the resurrection wholly. My opinion is, and I think the Scriptures I shall quote will show, that it implies both, and the complete and entire regeneration of the individual. By the Holy Spirit and the word of God we are begotten to a new and spiritual life in this world,—made new creatures in Christ Jesus; but this work goes on to perfection, and is only completed in an entire physical change and conformation, by a resurrection from the dead at the last day.

As in the natural, so it is in the spiritual world. We are first begotten, or conceived, then our organism grows into form and symmetry, and in due time we are born into the world to see its light and be subject to its sorrows and know its joys. So are we begotten by the Spirit through the Word of God, and grow up into Jesus Christ, in conformity to his moral image, and in due time we are born from the grave by a glorious resurrection and by the power of God to see the light and enjoy the blessedness of the new world to come. As Adam begat sons and daughters in his own likeness, and after his own image, so the second man, the Lord from heaven, begets sons and daughters in his own likeness, and after his own image. "And as we have borne the image of the earthy, we shall also bear the image of the heavenly."—1 Cor. 15: 49.

The apostle Paul makes the resurrection to be the period when the work of the new birth is completed, and when we arrive at the stature of perfect ones. "Not as though I had already attained; either were already perfect: but I follow after, if that I may apprehend that for which also I am apprehended of Christ Jesus." This was to "attain unto the resurrection of the dead." Towards this prize and hope he urges his brethren with himself to press forward, looking for the Savior, the Lord Jesus Christ, "who shall change our vile body, that it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body." Phil. 3.

As soon as one believes "the word of truth," or "the gospel," he is "sealed with the Holy Spirit of promise, which is the earnest of our inheritance, until the redemption of the purchased possession unto the praise of his glory." Eph. 1: 13, 14. Under the Spirit's influence we grow in grace and in knowledge; and finally he quickens us to immortality. "If the Spirit of Him that raised up Jesus from the dead dwell in you," he that raised up Christ from the dead shall also quicken your mortal bodies by his Spirit that dwelleth in you."—Rom. 8: 11.

On conversion, the Spirit begins its work, quickening us to a new spiritual and moral life and existence; and on the resurrection, he completes the work by the marvelous physical change effected in our vile and mortal bodies. Jesus Christ is "the first born from the dead"; and all the sleepers in the dust of the earth, who sleep in Jesus, are to be born like him from the dead. "The earth" shall "be made to bring forth in one day."—"a nation be born at once."—Isa. 66: 8. This is the nation of the righteous who shall be redeemed from the dead at the last day, as is evident by the context. Vers. 5–16.

The following scriptures will make this subject still plainer: "For though ye have ten thousand instructors in Christ, yet have ye not many fathers: for in Christ Jesus I have begotten you through the gospel."—1 Cor. 4: 15. "By the word of the gospel souls are begotten through the agency of the Holy Spirit. "Of his own will BEGAT he us with the word of truth."—James 1: 18. "Being born again, not of corruptible seed, but of incorruptible, by the word of God, which liveth and abideth for ever." 1 Pet. 1: 23. In this passage "the word of God" is represented as "the seed" sown by the Holy Spirit's agency in the heart, which results in the new birth ultimately.

The two states or conditions of the believer in this world, and the world to come after the resurrection, are thus described by St. John: "We know that whosoever is born of God sinneth not; but he that is begotten of God keepeth himself, and that wicked one toucheth him not."—1 John 5: 18. The begotten state is one of trial under temptation, and not a perfect state above sinning; hence we need constant watchfulness—the resisting of Satan, and the overcoming of evil. "Pure religion and undefiled before God and the Father" (one part is) "to keep himself unspotted from the world" (James 1: 27), which one in the begotten state does, needing a constant "Advocate" through the infirmity of the flesh. 1 John 2: 1. "Now are we the sons of God" (being begotten of God); "and it doth not yet appear what we shall be: but we know that, when he shall appear, we shall be like him; for we shall see him as he is. And every man that hath this hope in him purifieth himself, even as he is pure."—1 John 3: 2, 3.

Now, in our begotten and growing state in grace and knowledge, we are "purified, made white and tried"; and are being perfected for an existence in a new world. We are to strive to attain a sinless and perfect state, by resisting Satan, crucifying and keeping self under, living lives of holiness and righteousness; but not until Christ appears to perfect and complete the work shall we be fully like him. "In him is no sin." And "whosoever is born of God doth not commit sin; he cannot sin, because he is born of God." "Whosoever is born of God sinneth not." 1 John 3: 5, 9; 5: 18.

The resurrection from the dead in the glorious image and likeness of our risen Lord, will place us beyond sinning and in a sinless state and world. As this is the character of that perfect world and perfect state, we are in this world to keep ourselves from committing sin and unrighteousness, and let not that wicked one touch us: for "he that committeth sin is of the devil; for the devil sinneth from the beginning." By and by, we shall be beyond the power and wiles of Satan, the infirmities of the flesh, and in a sinless world, needing no Advocate with the Father, no atoning sacrifice, no sanctifying influence of the word of God. Our entire natures, both moral and physical, are changed into the perfection of Him in whose likeness we shine forever and ever. Happy thought! How blessed the hope!

No one, therefore, can ever enter into the kingdom of God, or enjoy that kingdom, who has not first experienced conversion through "the belief of the truth," and "the renewing of the Holy Ghost," or been "begotten through the gospel" to that moral change in which he lives a pure and unspotted life. "There shall in no wise enter into it (the holy city, the metropolis of the new kingdom—on the new earth,) anything that defileth, neither whatso ever worketh abomination, or maketh a lie; but they which are written in the Lamb's book of life."—Rev. 21: 27. No one can ever enter into the kingdom of God except those who have experienced a physical change. The mortal body must be made immortal; the corruptible body incorruptible; "for corruption cannot inherit incorruption." The kingdom is "incorruptible, and fadeth not away," as well as "undefiled." "Marvel not . . . ye must be born again."—John 3: 7. All must be quickened by the Spirit of God to a moral and spiritual change, which will fit them to be quickened from under the dominion of death by the same Spirit, into that physical condition requisite to inherit the "incorruptible" and "undefiled" kingdom of God.

"Be not deceived; . . . he that soweth to his flesh shall of the flesh reap corruption." He will be raised in his corruptible and vile body, under the dominion of "the second death." "But he that soweth to the Spirit shall of the Spirit reap life everlasting."—Gal. 6: 7, 8. His body shall be changed, on his resurrection from the dead, to immortality, to die no more. His body, too, will have all the qualities and characteristics of the spiritual body. It will not become a spirit; but a spiritual body, like that of the Lord's, Enoch's, and Elijah's, who were translated and did not see death. His body, redeemed from under the curse and changed, will be highly electrical, or rather spiritized,—even charged with the Spirit, the highest electrical power in the universe. "Behold, O my people, I will open your graves, and cause you to come up out of your graves, . . . and put my spirit in you, and ye shall live."—Ezek. 37: 12–14.

This will make plain the language of Jesus, which follows in explanation, to Nicodemus: "The wind bloweth where it listeth, and thou hearest the sound thereof, but canst not tell whence it cometh, and whither it goeth: so is every one that is born of the Spirit."—v. 8. So was Enoch, Elijah, and Christ: appearing, and vanishing out of sight at pleasure after their change. "They that wait upon the Lord shall renew (change) their strength." They will have new power and activity given to them. "They shall mount up with wings as eagles; they shall run and not be weary; and they shall walk and not faint."—Isa. 40: 31.

May we all be born again, to behold and enjoy a new world—even a changed, renewed, or new-born world, fitted up surpassing Eden's happy bowers, to be unvisited again with sin and sorrow and death. "The former things are passed away." The Lord hasten the day when his word shall be fulfilled: "Behold, I make all things new." And may we be partakers of the "things" made "new," being first wholly, "soul, body, and spirit," "born again" to see and enjoy the light of that glorious new world, breathe its pure and heavenly atmosphere, and be participators of its eternal joys and pleasures, unsullied by sin, unvisited by the curse. O. R. FASSETT.

For the World's Crisis

O'ER THE HILL.

One morning as he wended
Through a path bedecked with flowers,
Where all delights were blended
To beguile the weary hours,
"Sweet youth, pray turn thee hither,"
Said a voice along the way,
Ere all these roses wither,
And these fair fruits decay."
But the youth paused not to ponder
If the voice were good or ill,
For he said, "My home is yonder,
O'er the hill there, o'er the hill."

Again, high noon was glowing
On a wide and weary plain,
And there right onward going
Was that traveler again.
He seemed another being
Than the morning's rosy youth,
But I quickly knew him, seeing
His unaltered brow of truth.
"Rest, stranger, rest, till even,"
Sung alluring voices still,
But he cried, "My rest is Heaven,
O'er the hill there, o'er the hill."

Selected.

For the World's Crisis.

WAS CHRIST BORN BEFORE THE BEGINNING OF THE CHRISTIAN ERA?

This question is one of interest to students of prophecy, inasmuch as inspiration furnishes us with a measurement of sixty-nine prophetic weeks, or weeks of years, reaching from a specific "commandment to restore and to build Jerusalem, unto the Messiah the Prince;" and if we can fix upon the time when the Messiah appeared, we have only to trace this measurement of sixty-nine weeks, or 483 years back, to find the true chronology of the "going forth of the commandment," which, when found, will give us a reliable chronology from Christ back to Cyrus, because God said of Cyrus, "HE SHALL BUILD MY CITY" (Isa. 45: 13), and as a commandment to do a certain work must precede the work itself, it follows if God was correct in saying that Cyrus should build Jerusalem, that the "commandment" to do that work could not have been subsequent to Cyrus' day. Nothing can be clearer than this. Hence, here is a prophetic chain of 483 years, beginning with the decree under Cyrus, and reaching to the Messiah, "which being interpreted is the Christ," who was announced as the Messiah, or Christ, at his birth: "Unto you is BORN this day in the city of David, a Savior, which is Christ." Thus if we can find the true time of Christ's birth, we can rest assured that by measuring back 483 years, we shall reach the decree under Cyrus, despite conflicting human chronologies.

But when was Christ born? The Bible locates his birth prior to Herod's death, and numerous historic facts designate B. C. 4 as the year of Herod's death. Examine the evidence here adduced:

1st. Josephus affirms that thirty-four years of Herod's reign was subsequent to the taking of Jerusalem, or death of Antigonus, and that Jerusalem was taken in the 185th Olympiad, and also on a Sabbatic year, the third year of this Olympiad,—thus locating the taking of Jerusalem B. C. 37, and ending the reign of Herod B. C. 4. [See Josephus Ant., B. xvii., C. viii., S. 1. Wars, B. i., C. xxxiii., S. 8. Ant., B. xiv., C. xvi., S. 4. Ant., B. xv., C. i., S. 2.]

2nd. According to Josephus, in the 7th year of Herod's reign, from the taking of Jerusalem, the battle of Actium took place, which battle is astronomically and historically assigned to B. C. 31; thus the remaining twenty-seven years of his reign must have terminated B. C. 4. [Ant., B. xv., C. v., S. 2. Wars, B. i., C. xix., S. 3.]

3rd. Herod reigned three years prior to the taking of Jerusalem, being confirmed as king by the Roman Senate in the 184th Olympiad, which ended B. C. 40, from which epoch he reigned thirty-seven years, to B. C. 4. [Ant., B. xvii., C. viii., S. 1. Wars, B. i., C. xxxiii., S. 8. Ant., B. xiv., C. xiv., S. 5.]

4th. Archelaus, Herod's successor, who reigned ten years, was deposed in the 37th year from the battle of Actium, which battle was marked by an eclipse of the sun twelve days before the battle, B. C. 31; thus Archelaus was deposed A. D. 7, from which point measure back ten years, and we reach B. C. 4, as the time of Herod's death. [Ant., B. xvii., C. xiii., S. 2. Ant., B. xviii., C. ii., S. 1.]

5th. As Pompey took Jerusalem in the 179th Olympiad, and as Herod took it just twenty-seven years subsequently, three years after he was confirmed king in the 184th Olympiad, it follows that only twenty-four years intervened between the time in the 179th Olympiad when Pompey took Jerusalem, and the time in the 184th Olympiad when Herod was confirmed king, therefore Herod was confirmed in the last year of the 184th Olympiad, and Pompey took Jerusalem in the first year of the 179th Olympiad, which was B. C. 64. From this epoch twenty-seven years to the capture of Jerusalem by Herod, added to Herod's subsequent reign of thirty-four years, make sixty-one years from Pompey's capture of Jerusalem to the death of Herod, thus locating his death B. C. 4. [Ant., B. xiv., C. iv., S. 3. Ant., B. xiv., C. xvi., S. 4. Wars, B. i., C. xvii., S. 8. Ant., B. xiv., C. xiv., S. 5.]

6th. As Pompey took Jerusalem in the first year of the 179th Olympiad, and Herod took it "on the 185th Olympiad," twenty-seven years after, it must have been taken by Herod on the third year of the 185th Olympiad, B. C. 37, and as Herod lived but thirty-seven, and as Herod lived but thirty-four years after taking the city and procuring the death of Antigonus, he must have died B. C. 4. [Ant., B. xiv., C. xvi., S. 4. Ant., B. xvii., C. viii., S. 1.]

7th. As the battle of Actium, B. C. 31, was in the 7th year of Herod's reign, (counting from the capture of Jerusalem, or the death of Antigonus), and as Augustus Cæsar began his reign at that epoch, Herod's eighth year synchronized with Augustus' first year,—consequently, Herod's 34th year (the year of his death) must have synchronizhd with Augustus' 27th year; therefore Herod died in the 27th of Augustus' forty-three years reign, leaving only sixteen years of his reign in consort with Augustus, two years before Augustus' death; and in the 15th of Tiberias' reign Christ was thirty years old. Now let us count back to find the year of his birth—fifteen years for Tiberius, and fourteen for Augustus, carry us back to Herod's death B. C. 4, but make only twenty-nine years, therefore Christ must have been born a year earlier—in B. C. 5. It will avail nothing to say that perhaps Luke meant Tiberius' 15th year from the death of Augustus, instead of the fifteenth of his entire reign, for this would locate the birth of Christ a year after Herod's death, and thus contradict the Bible. Thus a stake is driven in B. C. 5, that cannot be pulled up, showing just where Christ was [Ant., B. xv., C. v., S. 2. Sac. Chro. p. 164. Luke 3: 1–3, 23.]

8th. As Augustus' reign of forty-three years commenced at the battle of Actium, which is astronomically and historically assigned to September 2, B. C. 31, it must have ended A. D. 14; and as Tiberius began to reign two years before Augustus' death, his reign must have commenced A. D. 12, consequently his "15th year" must have synchronized with A. D. 26, in which year Christ was thirty years old; and by measuring back thirty years from this date we learn that Christ was born B. C. 5.

9th. In an ancient note attached to the book of Nicodemus, we are informed that the crucifixion took place in the 202nd Olympiad. This Olympiad ended A. D. 31, but as the crucifixion eccurred at a Paschal full moon, and also three days before his resurrection, which was on Sunday morning, it also occurred on Thursday,—but as no Paschal full moon fell on Thursday in this Olympiad, except in its third year, we find that the crucifixion occurred A. D. 30,—from which epoch, we find that only four annual passovers passed between the crucifixion and baptism of Christ, and only thirty years between his baptism and birth, which locates his birth B. C. 5.

Thus we have endeavored to prove, first, that Herod died B. C. 4, and that Christ was born sometime previously; and, secondly, that Christ was born B. C. 5. If we have succeeded in doing this, sixty-nine weeks of years (483 years) will measure from B. C. 5, back to the decree of Cyrus, thus proving the "first of Cyrus" to have been B. C. 488, despite Ptolemy. W. SHELDON.

For the World's Crisis.

WHAT IS NEEDED.

I saw in the last Crisis, (of March 21st), under the above heading, some very excellent remarks and timely advice given. And in reading it, and knowing the existing state of things, I thought something more might be added.

We need as a people to be more united in our effort in saving men and women, and preparing them for the judgment. We need more plain gospel preaching concerning the kingdom of God,—such as characterized the apostles' preaching, not forgetting to tell them that when they believe the things concerning the kingdom of God, to be baptized. (Some leave baptism out of their preaching.) We need less of theory, in making certain questions, (no matter how truthful they may be), the one great sanctifying truth which must be believed in the head, if not practised in our lives, until a new party is started, and then they must needs have a paper for their organ so that all brethren can be properly instructed in the faith, and earnestly contend for it. We need less disputing (or arguing) about questions which tend to alienate the feelings of brethren, and drive them farther apart than before, and to less practical godliness, and more of the spirit of disputation about words of no profit.

We need to have stronger faith in what God has spoken, and less in what man says: and then we shall have no trouble in believing whether the kingdom of God will be established in the land of Palestine (Jerusalem), where David's kingdom was, or whether it will be among the hemlocks on some little hill in Pennsylvania, and then we need not spend time in teasing God to tell us whichs truth.

We as a people need to search the Scriptures more closely, and dig deep in its precious mine, and lay our foundation on prophets, apostles and Christ, the Corner Stone, and then when the sweeping floods come we shall be safe, and the refuge of lies swept away. We need more men who have strong faith in God and are filled with the Holy Spirit,—who are ready to go everywhere preaching the gospel of the kingdom, and are not so careful about chasing somebody else, to preach against what they have preached.

We need more men and women who are ready to cut loose their purse strings, and sustain the worthy laborer, so that he will not have to quit the field which is now ready for the harvest, and labor with his hands for a living,—and then truth can be scattered in regions beyond.

We need more men who not only believe in the TIME, which God has given, but are practicing it in their lives; who possess more of the spirit of by-gone days, when they were not so careful about having their treasure secured in rail-road stock, or farm added to farm, or a good pile of money in the bank, a fine house, and everything corresponding, as to have it laid up in heaven.

The truth is brethren, there needs to be more of a returning to our former love, and then we shall not care so much about our church and our party, and what our preachers preach, but our interests and efforts will all be thrown together, and we all LOVE as brethren. Well, says one, we all need to be of "the one faith," to work together and throw our interests together. Very true; but do you suppose that "the one faith," spoken of by the apostle, has incorporated in it all that some believe who profess to be looking for the same blessed hope that you are looking for? Oh no! We understand "the one faith" embraces the gospel proclamation, as revealed by prophets, and taught by Christ and his apostles, viz., the first advent of Christ; his work while here as prophet; his death, resurrection, and ascension to the right hand of the Father; his work as high priest within the vail; his coming again; the resurrection life of his church, to take the kingdom and throne of David, and give it to the blessed of his Father, and with them to rule and govern this world in righteousness, to "execute justice and judgment in the earth," to make an end of sin and sinners, that every creature in heaven and earth can praise him. And can any one object to such a time?

Now if this is incorporated in "the one faith," can there not be a union in this great proclamation, and in showing the fulfillment of prophecy, and where we are? If there can, then let every one who wishes to be presented to the Father by his beloved Son, without spot or wrinkle, at once place their foot on this sectarian beast, that is growing to be such a crooked serpent, and soon will be unmanageable. Let the news of its death soon be published, never to have a resurrection to LIFE.

We need more honest men, who are willing to pay their honest debts, to pay for their papers, so that the Lord's worthy poor can be helped, and have the papers to cheer them in their lone pilgrimage. May the Lord help us all to see our real need, and prepare for his soon coming. G. DILLABAUGH.

Seneca Falls, N. Y.

For the World's Crisis.

CHRISTIAN UNION; Or, Schism in the Church of Christ a Sin against God.

NUMBER FOUR.

"The kindred links of life are bright,
Yet not so bright as those
In which Christ's favored friends unite,
And each on each repose;
When all the hearts in union cling
With Him, the center and the spring."

When did the spirit of the sects and of sectarianism arise? At what period did the snaky, grizzly head first make its appearance? In times apostolical, in seasons of refreshing from the Lord, when all things were common, and every brother loved as a brother? When Paul resolutely stamped the Hydra under his feet, did this evil then take root? Nay, but in times of declension, grievous backsliding, in forgetting God, his love, mercy and truth. Then it was that Satan embraced this favorable moment to instil the poison of the devilish, cause divisions and sub-divisions, jarring discords, heart-burnings and heart-rendings. How shall we cast him out, slay the Agag, destroy the reptile? By depicting the evils, portraying them, declaiming against them? This we may do, must do—but will this suffice? We must return to our first love, do our first works, repent, make restitution, confess our guilt, return to the apostolical, the holy, the harmless, the undefiled, drink into one spirit, the spirit of the gospel, the purifying, the sanctifying. Then, and not till shall we see eye to eye.

The N. Y. Independent, speaking of the primitive churches, says:

"What we did say was, that there was no such thing as denominationalism among those churches, and no provision for this in their constitution. If in some minor points the church at Antioch differed from that at Jerusalem, that church did not send Paul and Barnabas to establish Antiochian churches in Asia Minor and Greece. The church at Jerusalem did not attempt to set up Jerusalem churches throughout Palestine. The church at Corinth did not propagate Corinthianism. The primitive churches had no denominationalism, 'sectarian' or 'unsectarian.' They were simply associations of believers. The primitive christians never dreamed of 'church extension,' of planting 'the church,' or 'our church.' They preached the gospel, and wherever converts multiplied churches arose, as a matter of course."

Says the Rev. A. Prynne—"We know of but one or two denominations in America that will attempt to defend their peculiarities from the New Testament. They plead necessity or worldly wisdom for their form of government and denominational practices, rather than the Bible. Sectarianism, in the abstract, they all condemn, but continue to practice it. They look upon such practices as an unfortunate necessity, but not as a sin. Is it not a sin to disregard primitive order, especially where that order involves a fundamental principle? If the New Testament is authority, and the apostles are inspired guides, anywhere, are they not as worthy of being followed in this matter, as any other, especially while the whole honor and ultimate success of the church depends upon its unity?"

We turn to the Epistle to the Romans, and find it addressed "to all that be in Rome, beloved of God, and called to be saints," as the church of Rome. How differently would a church epistle be directed in our times! One would write to all the Baptists, another to all the Methodists, and still another, to the Presbyterians. Where Paul wrote to saints, modern ministers must write to sectaries, or have their epistles disregarded.

On looking at each one of the epistles, the reader will perceive that they are all addressed to the christians of the place where directed. This shows that under the apostles there was but one church in each place, and that all the christians were members of that church. There is not in the whole New Testament a single instance where there were two churches in the same place. So clear and full were the teachings of Christ and his immediate followers on this point, that they were not misunderstood, until long after they had passed away from earth. The very first indication of a disposition to divide, which showed itself in the day of the apostles, was most promptly rebuked. In the last chapter of Romans, Paul says (verse 17), "Now I beseech you, brethren, mark them which cause division among you, and avoid them." Every denomination builder in the world would, if he could, have "caused division" in the church of Rome, had he been in Rome at that time. Each Baptist would have done his best to build up his sect, and each Presbyterian or Methodist, or other sectarian, would have done the same; and hence, these are the classes of persons whom Paul exhorts the Romans to avoid. Wherever these sectarians go, if christians were united before, they cause and sanction divisions. It is their peculiar work. They cannot build up their denominations without pursuing this course.

The church at Corinth showed some disposition to divide on men. One says, I am of Paul; another, I of Apollos; and another, I of Cephas. Paul promptly and sharply rebuked them as "carnal," and says, "Is Christ divided? Was Paul crucified for you? Were ye baptized in the name of Paul?" Now if these Corinthians were wrong, and to be thus sharply rebuked as "carnal" for dividing on Paul and Cephas, are not modern christians guilty of sin for dividing Luther, Calvin or Wesley? Does the lapse of time diminish the sin? Nay, does it not rather increase it, because these moderns have more light?

There are a large number of figures used in the Scriptures in describing the church, which argue the duty of all christians to continue in union. 1 Cor. 12: 12, we read as follows: "For as the body is one and hath many members, and all the members of that one body, being many, are one body, so also is Christ. For by one spirit are we all baptized into one body, whether we be Jews or Gentiles—whether we be bond or free; and have been all made to drink into one spirit." Verse 27: "Now ye are the body of Christ, and members in particular." Here, the human body is the figure by which the unity of the church is represented. And as it is a crime to cut away a member, or in any way mutilate the natural body, so is it a crime against the church, to exclude a christian from it, and thus cut off a member of the spiritual body of Christ. And as every member is needed to make the natural body powerful and useful, so every christian is needed in the one church of each place, to secure the power and usefulness of the spiritual body.

The church is represented under the figures of a household, a city and a commonwealth, all of which teach its unity, and condemn denominationalism. Then there are a great number of passages which teach this sentiment more or less directly, a few of which we will quote. Matt. 12: 25: "And Jesus knew their thoughts and said unto them, every city or house divided against itself is brought to desolation, and every city or house divided against itself shall not stand." 1 Cor. 1: 10: "Now I beseech you, brethren, by the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, that ye all speak the same thing, and that there be no divisions among you." 1 Cor. 12: 25: "That there be no schism in the body." Eph. 4: 3, 4: "Endeavoring to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bonds of peace. There is one body and one spirit, even as ye are called in one hope of your calling." Verse 13: "Till we all come into the unity of the faith."

We might multiply these quotations, but one plain Scripture is all sufficient to him who believes the Bible. D. F. N.

THE HEART AND THE TONGUE.—The cure of an evil tongue must be done at the heart. The weights and wheels are there, and the clock strikes according to their motion. A guileful heart makes a guileful tongue and lips. It is the workhouse where is the forge of deceits and slanders, and the tongue is only the outer shop where they are vended, and the door of it. Such ware as is made within, such, and no other, can come out.—Leighton.

☞ A woman who used to attend public worship with the greatest punctuality, and took care always to be in time, was asked how it was she could always come so early. She answered, very wisely, that it was a part of her religion not to disturb the religion of others.

The World's Crisis

AND SECOND ADVENT MESSENGER.

"BEHOLD, I COME QUICKLY; AND MY REWARD IS WITH ME."

WHOLE NO. 497. BOSTON, TUESDAY, APRIL 11, 1865. VOL. XXI.—NO. 4.

The World's Crisis

AND SECOND ADVENT MESSENGER,

Issued every Tuesday Afternoon, at

167 HANOVER STREET, BOSTON.

MILES GRANT, EDITOR.

EDITORIAL COMMITTEE:

S. G. MATHEWSON, I. C. WELLCOME, H. F. CARPENTER.

PUBLISHING COMMITTEE:

C. F. HUDSON, H. V. DAVIS, S. S. BREWER, J. G. HAMBLIN, D. MATHEWSON.

GEORGE T. ADAMS, TREASURER AND BUSINESS AGENT.

☞ THE CRISIS is devoted to the exposition of all Bible truth; especially the doctrine of the immediate, personal coming and reign of Christ on the earth; holiness of heart; the unconscious state of the dead; their literal resurrection, and final destruction of the wicked.

For the World's Crisis.

MARANATHA.

BY D. T. TAYLOR.

Hark! a mighty swelling sound
Filleth all the air around;
Voices shrill and lifted high,
Waft it upward to the sky.
Higher yet the strains ascend,
And with angel anthems blend;
Heaven and earth repeat the strain:
"Jesus comes, and comes to reign."

Sun, in solemn darkness veiled,
Moon, whose midnight glory paled,
Stars, in myriads falling fast,
As the leaves 'mid autumn's blast,
Roarings of the storm-waked sea,
Kingdoms in perplexity,—
All take up the rushing strain:
"Jesus comes, and comes to reign."

Deep with sin the world is stained;
Long the tyrant Death has reigned;
Long the earth has groaned aloud;
Long the church has sadly bowed;
Soon the absent Lord will come,
And reveal the Eden home.
All creation wakes the strain:
"Jesus comes, and comes to reign."

Haste the day and speed the hour,
When in awful pomp and power,
And with trumpet's rolling sound,
Christ shall come with glory crowned.
Then shall Paradise be here;
Then shall beauty bless and cheer.
Voices ring o'er earth and main:
"Jesus now has come to reign."

Rouses Point, N. Y.

For the World's Crisis.

THE NEW BIRTH.—No. 2.

"Verily, verily I say unto thee, except a man be born again, he cannot see the kingdom of God."—JOHN 3: 3.

Having alluded to the darkness which prevails in respect to the declaration of our Master, "Except a man be born again, he cannot see the kingdom of God" (John 3: 3), we will now, by the aid of the Scriptures, and the Holy Spirit illuminating our minds, endeavor to ascertain the meaning. There are two limbs to this statement, and they are equal. It is said of a parable, "The legs of a parable are not equal"; and that "a parable cannot be made to go on all fours." That is, all things in a parable are not designed for illustration. To make use of all the figures or parts in a parable to illustrate the one or more ideas designed to be made plain, would embarrass the truth designed to be brought out or illustrated. But it is not so with this declaration of our Lord;—the legs of this passage are equal, and needful, and on them the truth designed to be taught runs without limping. The two main and distinct points of the text are,—"born again"—"the kingdom of God." By determining the meaning of these, the other parts of the text are plain and forcible. We will first notice

"THE KINGDOM OF GOD."

This is not "the gospel church below," nor "the church triumphant above." The Scriptures do not teach the doctrine. Those frequently quoted to support it are perverted from their meaning and true import.

To make "the kingdom of God" the church below or on earth in its present state, would make the Scriptures to teach the grossest absurdities. Suppose we quote the following few texts, among the many which might be quoted, with the idea which prevails respecting this passage, that the new birth means conversion, and the kingdom of God "the gospel church"; and substituting these words for "born again," and "the kingdom of God."

"Except a man be converted, he cannot see the gospel church below." "Except a man be converted, he cannot enter into the church below." Now is this true? Are there no unconverted persons in the gospel church? "How hardly shall they that have riches enter into the gospel church." "It is easier for a camel to go through the eye of a needle, than for a rich man to enter into the gospel church." Is this true, that covetous men and those who make riches their trust are not able to get into the church? How is it, then, that there are so many of this class within the church? "Verily I say unto you, among them that are born of women, there hath not risen a greater than John the Baptist; notwithstanding, he that is least in the church below is greater than he." Can this be possible, that the least in the gospel church below is greater than the greatest born of women? Absurd in the extreme would this make the Bible! To make "the kingdom of God" refer to "the church triumphant above," would dispute and contradict the Scriptures, which affirm every where that is is

"Under the whole heaven." "And the kingdom and dominion, and greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven shall be given to the people of the saints of the Most High, whose kingdom is an everlasting kingdom, and all dominions shall serve and obey Him" (Christ). Dan. 7: 27. And those which teach that it is on

"The whole earth." The stone kingdom, or kingdom of the stone, or kingdom of God represented or symbolized by "the stone," "became a great mountain, and filled the whole earth, Dan. 2: 35. Not all the "above," or "sky." As the golden kingdom filled the whole earth (Dan. 2: 37); as the silver kingdom also (ver. 39); as the brazen kingdom "bore rule over all the earth" (ver. 39); as the iron kingdom also, and its subsequent divisions as symbolized (Dan. 2: 40–43); so will the stone kingdom in subsequent order and time "fill the whole earth," being a greater mountain or kingdom than either of its predecessors.—Dan. 2: 44. Hence we are taught to pray, "Thy kingdom come; thy will be done in earth, as it is in heaven."—Matt. 6: 10. Not above; not in our hearts; but "in earth." Who can ever suppose God's will and kingdom can come in earth, and be done in earth as in heaven, as universally and perfectly, while men are mortal and fallen in natures? It cannot be; and the kingdom of God is therefore the Glorified and immortal state on earth. Jesus Christ is the King of this kingdom, who will be "King over all the earth," and who when He comes "with the clouds of heaven" has "given him the dominion and kingdom" of the earth, which "dominion is an everlasting dominion, which shall not pass away." Zech. 14; Dan. 7: 13, 14. Therefore "His flesh did not see corruption." Acts 2: 31. He has been made immortal.

The saints are to "reign with him on the earth" (Rev. 5: 9, 10), and "reign for ever and ever."—Rev. 22: 5. Therefore they must be made immortal and be glorified. "Flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God." And why? For the plain reason that "corruption" doth not "inherit incorruption." The kingdom of God is "incorruptible." Hence we must "all be changed." "The dead shall be raised incorruptible," and the living, too, "be changed to immortality." "This corruptible must put on incorruption, and this mortal must put on immortality" "at the last trump." 1 Cor. 15: 50–58. "Abraham, and Isaac, and Jacob, and all the prophets," are to be "in the kingdom of God," with many "from the east, and from the west, and from the north, and from the south," who "shall sit down in the kingdom of God." Luke 13: 28, 29. And mark! the kingdom of God is to "fill the whole earth." This cannot be until "the tares are gathered out of the kingdom." "Then shall the righteous shine forth as the sun in the kingdom of their Father." Matt. 13: 38–43.

What kingdom is this "kingdom of the Father," to be given the righteous? "Then shall the King say unto them on his right hand, Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world." Not "before the foundation of the world," as often quoted. What kingdom was this? The kingdom fitted up and given to Adam, and constituting "the kingdom" now given to men; but to be finally given to the Second Adam and his people "for ever, even for ever and ever." Dan. 7: 18.

The kingdom of God is made up of Christ, or the Messiah, as the King; the saints of the Most High, as the subjects; the earth renewed, or new earth, after the final conflagration (2 Pet. 3; Rev. 21), as the locality; the New Jerusalem, the city of God, which is to come down from God out of heaven upon the earth, on its regenesis, the celestial metropolis of this kingdom; and this kingdom is to endure eternal ages, "world without end." Now "except a man be born again, he cannot see (enjoy, or inherit) the kingdom of God"; "he cannot enter into the kingdom of God."

We consider next

THE NEW BIRTH.

What is it to be "born again"?

1st. It is evident that it is not a repetition of natural birth, as Nicodemus inquires, v. 4. And the Savior replies, "That which is born of flesh is flesh; and that which is born of the Spirit is spirit."

2nd. It is a spiritual birth, or a birth effected by the Spirit. This, I regard, includes both conversion and the resurrection,—the moral and the physical change fitting one to inherit glory. There are two extremes in the views entertained on this being "born again." One is, that it refers to conversion wholly; the other, the resurrection wholly. My opinion is, and I think the Scriptures I shall quote will show, that it implies both, and the complete and entire regeneration of the individual. By the Holy Spirit and the word of God we are begotten to a new and spiritual life in this world,—made new creatures in Christ Jesus; but this work goes on to perfection, and is only completed in an entire physical change and conformation, by a resurrection from the dead at the last day.

As in the natural, so it is in the spiritual world. We are first begotten, or conceived, then our organism grows into form and symmetry, and in due time we are born into the world to see its light and be subject to its sorrows and know its joys. So are we begotten by the Spirit through the Word of God, and grow up into Jesus Christ, in conformity to his moral image, and in due time we are born from the grave by a glorious resurrection and by the power of God to see the light and enjoy the blessedness of the new world to come. As Adam begat sons and daughters in his own likeness, and after his own image, so the second man, the Lord from heaven, begets sons and daughters in his own likeness, and after his own image. "And as we have borne the image of the earthy, we shall also bear the image of the heavenly."—1 Cor. 15: 49.

The apostle Paul makes the resurrection to be the period when the work of the new birth is completed, and when we arrive at the stature of perfect ones. "Not as though I had already attained; either were already perfect: but I follow after, if that I may apprehend that for which also I am apprehended of Christ Jesus." This was to "attain unto the resurrection of the dead." Towards this prize and hope he urges his brethren with himself to press forward, looking for the Savior, the Lord Jesus Christ; "who shall change our vile body, that it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body." Phil. 3.

As soon as one believes "the word of truth," or "the gospel," he is "sealed with the Holy Spirit of promise, which is the earnest of our inheritance, until the redemption of the purchased possession unto the praise of his glory." Eph. 1: 13, 14. Under the Spirit's influence we grow in grace and in knowledge; and finally he quickens us to immortality. "If the Spirit of Him that raised up Jesus from the dead dwell in you," he that raised up Christ from the dead shall also quicken your mortal bodies by his Spirit that dwelleth in you."—Rom. 8: 11.

On conversion, the Spirit begins its work, quickening us to a new spiritual and moral life and existence; and on the resurrection, he completes the work by the marvelous physical change effected in our vile and mortal bodies. Jesus Christ is "the first born from the dead"; and all the sleepers in the dust of the earth, who sleep in Jesus, are to be born like him from the dead. "The earth" shall "be made to bring forth in one day."—"a nation be born at once."—Isa. 66: 8. This is the nation of the righteous who shall be redeemed from the dead at the last day, as is evident by the context. Vers. 5–16.

The following scriptures will make this subject still plainer: "For though ye have ten thousand instructors in Christ, yet have ye not many fathers: for in Christ Jesus I have begotten you through the gospel."—1 Cor. 4: 15. "By the word of the gospel souls are begotten through the agency of the Holy Spirit. "Of his own will BEGAT he us with the word of truth."—James 1: 18. "Being born again, not of corruptible seed, but of incorruptible, by the word of God, which liveth and abideth for ever." 1 Pet. 1: 23. In this passage "the word of God" is represented as "the seed" sown by the Holy Spirit's agency in the heart, which results in the new birth ultimately.

The two states or conditions of the believer in this world, and the world to come after the resurrection, are thus described by St. John: "We know that whosoever is born of God sinneth not; but he that is begotten of God keepeth himself, and that wicked one toucheth him not."—1 John 5: 18. The begotten state is one of trial under temptation, and not a perfect state above sinning; hence we need constant watchfulness—the resisting of Satan, and the overcoming of evil. "Pure religion and undefiled before God and the Father" (one part is) "to keep himself unspotted from the world" (James 1: 27), which one in the begotten state does, needing a constant "Advocate" through the infirmity of the flesh. 1 John 2: 1. "Now are we the sons of God" (being begotten of God); "and it doth not yet appear what we shall be: but we know that, when he shall appear, we shall be like him; for we shall see him as he is. And every man that hath this hope in him purifieth himself, even as he is pure."—1 John 3: 2, 3.

Now, in our begotten and growing state in grace and knowledge, we are "purified, made white and tried"; and are being perfected for an existence in a new world. We are to strive to attain a sinless and perfect state, by resisting Satan, crucifying and keeping self under, living lives of holiness and righteousness; but not until Christ appears to perfect and complete the work shall we be fully like him. "In him is no sin." And "whosoever is born of God doth not commit sin; he cannot sin, because he is born of God." "Whosoever is born of God sinneth not." 1 John 3: 5, 9; 5: 18.

The resurrection from the dead in the glorious image and likeness of our risen Lord, will place us beyond sinning and in a sinless state and world. As this is the character of that perfect world and perfect state, we are in this world to keep ourselves from committing sin and unrighteousness, and let not that wicked one touch us: for "he that committeth sin is of the devil; for the devil sinneth from the beginning." By and by, we shall be beyond the power and wiles of Satan, the infirmities of the flesh, and in a sinless world, needing no Advocate with the Father, no atoning sacrifice, no sanctifying influence of the word of God. Our entire natures, both moral and physical, are changed into the perfection of Him in whose likeness we shine forever and ever. Happy thought! How blessed the hope!

No one, therefore, can ever enter into the kingdom of God, or enjoy that kingdom, who has not first experienced conversion through "the belief of the truth," and "the renewing of the Holy Ghost," or been "begotten through the gospel" to that moral change in which he lives a pure and unspotted life. "There shall in no wise enter into it (the holy city, the metropolis of the new kingdom—on the new earth,) anything that defileth, neither whatsoever worketh abomination, or maketh a lie; but they which are written in the Lamb's book of life."—Rev. 21: 27. No one can ever enter into the kingdom of God except those who have experienced a physical change. The mortal body must be made immortal; the corruptible body incorruptible; "for corruption cannot inherit incorruption." The kingdom is "incorruptible, and fadeth not away," as well as "undefiled." "Marvel not . . . ye must be born again."—John 3: 7. All must be quickened by the Spirit of God to a moral and spiritual change, which will fit them to be quickened from under the dominion of death by the same Spirit, into that physical condition requisite to inherit the "incorruptible" and "undefiled" kingdom of God.

"Be not deceived; . . . he that soweth to his flesh shall of the flesh reap corruption." He will be raised in his corruptible and vile body, under the dominion of "the second death." "But he that soweth to the Spirit shall of the Spirit reap life everlasting."—Gal. 6: 7, 8. His body shall be changed, on his resurrection from the dead, to immortality, to die no more. His body, too, will have all the qualities and characteristics of the spiritual body. It will not become a spirit; but a spiritual body, like that of the Lord's, Enoch's, and Elijah's, who were translated and did not see death. His body, redeemed from under the curse and changed, will be highly electrical, or rather spiritized,—even charged with the Spirit, the highest electrical power in the universe. "Behold, O my people, I will open your graves, and cause you to come up out of your graves, . . . and put my spirit in you, and ye shall live."—Ezek. 37: 12–14.

This will make plain the language of Jesus, which follows in explanation, to Nicodemus: "The wind bloweth where it listeth, and thou hearest the sound thereof, but canst not tell whence it cometh, and whither it goeth: so is every one that is born of the Spirit."—v. 8. So was Enoch, Elijah, and Christ: appearing, and vanishing out of sight at pleasure after their change. "They that wait upon the Lord shall renew (change) their strength." They will have new power and activity given to them. "They shall mount up with wings as eagles; they shall run and not be weary; and they shall walk and not faint."—Isa. 40: 31:

May we all be born again, to behold and enjoy a new world—even a changed, renewed, or new-born world, fitted up surpassing Eden's happy bowers, to be unvisited again with sin and sorrow and death. "The former things are passed away." The Lord hasten the day when his word shall be fulfilled: "Behold, I make all things new." And may we be partakers of the "things" made "new," being first wholly, "soul, body, and spirit," "born again" to see and enjoy the light of that glorious new world, breathe its pure and heavenly atmosphere, and be participators of its eternal joys and pleasures, unsullied by sin, unvisited by the curse. O. R. FASSETT.

For the World's Crisis.

O'ER THE HILL.

One morning as he wended
Through a path bedecked with flowers,
Where all delights were blended
To beguile the weary hours,
"Sweet youth, pray turn thee hither,"
Said a voice along the way,
Ere all these roses wither,
And these fair fruits decay."
But the youth paused not to ponder
If the voice were good or ill,
For he said, "My home is yonder,
O'er the hill there, o'er the hill."

Again, high noon was glowing
On a wide and weary plain,
And there right onward going
Was that traveler again.
He seemed another being
Than the morning's rosy youth,
But I quickly knew him, seeing
His unaltered brow of truth.
"Rest, stranger, rest, till even,"
Sung alluring voices still,
But he cried, "My rest is Heaven,
O'er the hill there, o'er the hill."

Selected.

For the World's Crisis.

WAS CHRIST BORN BEFORE THE BEGINNING OF THE CHRISTIAN ERA?

This question is one of interest to students of prophecy, inasmuch as inspiration furnishes us with a measurement of sixty-nine prophetic weeks, or weeks of years, reaching from a specific "commandment to restore and to build Jerusalem, unto the Messiah the Prince;" and if we can fix upon the time when the Messiah appeared, we have only to trace this measurement of sixty-nine weeks, or 483 years back, to find the true chronology of the "going forth of the commandment," which, when found, will give us a reliable chronology from Christ back to Cyrus, because God said of Cyrus, "HE SHALL BUILD MY CITY" (Isa. 45: 13), and as a commandment to do a certain work must precede the work itself, it follows if God was correct in saying that Cyrus should build Jerusalem, that the "commandment" to do that work could not have been subsequent to Cyrus' day. Nothing can be clearer than this. Hence, here is a prophetic chain of 483 years, beginning with the decree under Cyrus, and reaching to the Messiah, "which being interpreted is the Christ," who was announced as the Messiah, or Christ, at his birth: "Unto you is BORN this day in the city of David, a Savior, which is Christ." Thus if we can find the true time of Christ's birth, we can rest assured that by measuring back 483 years, we shall reach the decree under Cyrus, despite conflicting human chronologies.

But when was Christ born? The Bible locates his birth prior to Herod's death, and numerous historic facts designate B. C. 4 as the year of Herod's death. Examine the evidence here adduced:

1st. Josephus affirms that thirty-four years of Herod's reign was subsequent to the taking of Jerusalem, or death of Antigonus, and that Jerusalem was taken in the 185th Olympiad, and also on a Sabbatic year, the third year of this Olympiad,—thus locating the taking of Jerusalem B. C. 37, and ending the reign of Herod B. C. 4. [See Josephus Ant., B. xvii., C. viii., S. 1. Wars, B. i., C. xxxiii., S. 8. Ant., B. xiv., C. xvi., S. 4. Ant., B. xv., C. i., S. 2.]

2nd. According to Josephus, in the 7th year of Herod's reign, from the taking of Jerusalem, the battle of Actium took place, which battle is astronomically and historically assigned to B. C. 31; thus the remaining twenty-seven years of his reign must have terminated B. C. 4. [Ant., B. xv., C. v., S. 2. Wars, B. i., C. xix., S. 3.]

3rd. Herod reigned three years prior to the taking of Jerusalem, being confirmed as king by the Roman Senate in the 184th Olympiad, which ended B. C. 40, from which epoch he reigned thirty-seven years, to B. C. 4. [Ant., B. xvii., C. viii., S. 1. Wars, B. i., C. xxxiii., S. 8. Ant., B. xiv., C. xiv., S. 5.]

4th. Archelaus, Herod's successor, who reigned ten years, was deposed in the 37th year from the battle of Actium, which battle was marked by an eclipse of the sun twelve days before the battle, B. C. 31; thus Archelaus was deposed A. D. 7, from which point measure back ten years, and we reach B. C. 4, as the time of Herod's death. [Ant., B. xvii., C. xiii., S. 2. Ant., B. xviii., C. ii., S. 1.]

5th. As Pompey took Jerusalem in the 179th Olympiad, and as Herod took it just twenty-seven years subsequently, three years after he was confirmed king in the 184th Olympiad, it follows that only twenty-four years intervened between the time in the 179th Olympiad when Pompey took Jerusalem, and the time in the 184th Olympiad when Herod was confirmed king, therefore Herod was confirmed in the last year of the 184th Olympiad, and Pompey took Jerusalem in the first year of the 179th Olympiad, which was B. C. 64. From this epoch twenty-seven years to the capture of Jerusalem by Herod, added to Herod's subsequent reign of thirty-four years, make sixty-one years from Pompey's capture of Jerusalem to the death of Herod, thus locating his death B. C. 4. [Ant., B. xiv., C. iv., S. 3. Ant., B. xiv., C. xvi., S. 4. Wars, B. i., C. xvii., S. 8. Ant., B. xiv., C. xiv., S. 5.]

6th. As Pompey took Jerusalem in the first year of the 179th Olympiad, and Herod took it "on the 185th Olympiad," twenty-seven years after, it must have been taken by Herod on the third year of the 185th Olympiad, B. C. 37, and as Herod lived but thirty-seven, and as Herod lived but thirty-four years after taking the city and procuring the death of Antigonus, he must have died B. C. 4. [Ant., B. xiv., C. xvi., S. 4. Ant., B. xvii., C. viii., S. 1.]

7th. As the battle of Actium, B. C. 31, was in the 7th year of Herod's reign, (counting from the capture of Jerusalem, or the death of Antigonus), and as Augustus Cæsar began his reign at that epoch, Herod's eighth year synchronized with Augustus' first year,—consequently, Herod's 34th year (the year of his death) must have synchronizhd with Augustus' 27th year; therefore Herod died in the 27th of Augustus' forty-three years reign, leaving only sixteen years of his reign in consort with Augustus, two years before Augustus' death; and in the 15th of Tiberias' reign Christ was thirty years old. Now let us count back to find the year of his birth—fifteen years for Tiberius, and fourteen for Augustus, carry us back to Herod's death B. C. 4, but make only twenty-nine years, therefore Christ must have been born a year earlier—in B. C. 5. It will avail nothing to say that perhaps Luke meant Tiberius' 15th year from the death of Augustus, instead of the fifteenth of his entire reign, for this would locate the birth of Christ a year after Herod's death, and thus contradict the Bible. Thus a stake is driven in B. C. 5, that cannot be pulled up, showing just where Christ was [Ant., B. xv., C. v., S. 2. Sac. Chro. p. 164. Luke 3: 1–3, 23.]

8th. As 'Augustus' reign of forty-three years commenced at the battle of Actium, which is astronomically and historically assigned to September 2, B. C. 31, it must have ended A. D. 14; and as Tiberius began to reign two years before Augustus' death, his reign must have commenced A. D. 12, consequently his "15th year" must have synchronized with A. D. 26, in which year Christ was thirty years old; and by measuring back thirty years from this date we learn that Christ was born B. C. 5.

9th. In an ancient note attached to the book of Nicodemus, we are informed that the crucifixion took place in the 202nd Olympiad. This Olympiad ended A. D. 31, but as the crucifixion occurred at a Paschal full moon, and also three days before his resurrection, which was on Sunday morning, it also occurred on Thursday,—but as no Paschal full moon fell on Thursday in this Olympiad, except in its third year, we find that the crucifixion occurred A. D. 30,—from which epoch, we find that only four annual passovers passed between the crucifixion and baptism of Christ, and only thirty years between his baptism and birth, which locates his birth B. C. 5.

Thus we have endeavored to prove, first, that Herod died B. C. 4, and that Christ was born sometime previously; and, secondly, that Christ was born B. C. 5. If we have succeeded in doing this, sixty-nine weeks of years (483 years) will measure from B. C. 5, back to the decree of Cyrus, thus proving the "first of Cyrus" to have been B. C. 488, despite Ptolemy. W. SHELDON.

For the World's Crisis.

WHAT IS NEEDED.

I saw in the last Crisis, (of March 21st), under the above heading, some very excellent remarks and timely advice given. And in reading it, and knowing the existing state of things, I thought something more might be added.

We need as a people to be more united in our effort in saving men and women, and preparing them for the judgment. We need more plain gospel preaching concerning the kingdom of God,—such as characterized the apostles' preaching, not forgetting to tell them that when they believe the things concerning the kingdom of God, to be baptized. (Some leave baptism out of their preaching.) We need less of theory, in making certain questions, (no matter how truthful they may be), the one great sanctifying truth which must be believed in the head, if not practised in our lives, until a new party is started, and then they must needs have a paper for their organ so that all brethren can be properly instructed in the faith, and earnestly contend for it. We need less disputing (or arguing) about questions which tend to alienate the feelings of brethren, and drive them farther apart than before, and to less practical godliness, and more of the spirit of disputation about words of no profit.

We need to have stronger faith in what God has spoken, and less in what man says: and then we shall have no trouble in believing whether the kingdom of God will be established in the land of Palestine (Jerusalem), where David's kingdom was, or whether it will be among the hemlocks on some little hill in Pennsylvania, and then we need not spend time in teasing God to tell us whichs truth.

We as a people need to search the Scriptures more closely, and dig deep in its precious mine, and lay our foundation on prophets, apostles and Christ, the Corner Stone, and then when the sweeping floods come we shall be safe, and the refuge of lies swept away. We need more men who have strong faith in God and are filled with the Holy Spirit,—who are ready to go everywhere preaching the gospel of the kingdom, and are not so careful about chasing somebody else, to preach against what they have preached.

We need more men and women who are ready to cut loose their purse strings, and sustain the worthy laborer, so that he will not have to quit the field which is now ready for the harvest, and labor with his hands for a living,—and then truth can be scattered in regions beyond.

We need more men who not only believe in the TIME, which God has given, but are practicing it in their lives; who possess more of the spirit of by-gone days, when they were not so careful about having their treasure secured in rail-road stock, or farm added to farm, or a good pile of money in the bank, a fine house, and everything corresponding, as to have it laid up in heaven.

The truth is brethren, there needs to be more of a returning to our former love, and then we shall not care so much about our church and our party, and what our preachers preach, but our interests and efforts will all be thrown together, and we all LOVE as brethren. Well, says one, we all need to be of "the one faith," to work together and throw our interests together. Very true; but do you suppose that "the one faith," spoken of by the apostle, has incorporated in it all that some believe who profess to be looking for the same blessed hope that you are looking for? Oh no! We understand "the one faith" embraces the gospel proclamation, as revealed by prophets, and taught by Christ and his apostles, viz., the first advent of Christ; his work while here as prophet; his death, resurrection, and ascension to the right hand of the Father; his work as high priest within the vail; his coming again; the resurrection life of his church, to take the kingdom and throne of David, and give it to the blessed of his Father, and with them to rule and govern this world in righteousness, to "execute justice and judgment in the earth," to make an end of sin and sinners, that every creature in heaven and earth can praise him. And can any one object to such a time?

Now if this is incorporated in "the one faith," can there not be a union in this great proclamation, and in showing the fulfillment of prophecy, and where we are? If there can, then let every one who wishes to be presented to the Father by his beloved Son, without spot or wrinkle, at once place their foot on this sectarian beast, that is growing to be such a crooked serpent, and soon will be unmanageable. Let the news of its death soon be published, never to have a resurrection to LIFE.

We need more honest men, who are willing to pay their honest debts, to pay for their papers, so that the Lord's worthy poor can be helped, and have the papers to cheer them in their lone pilgrimage. May the Lord help us all to see our real need, and prepare for his soon coming. G. DILLABAUGH.

Seneca Falls, N. Y.

For the World's Crisis.

CHRISTIAN UNION;
Or, Schism in the Church of Christ a Sin against God.

NUMBER FOUR.

"The kindred links of life are bright,
Yet not so bright as those
In which Christ's favored friends unite,
And each on each repose;
When all the hearts in union cling
With Him, the center and the spring."

When did the spirit of the sects and of sectarianism arise? At what period did the snaky, grizzly head first make its appearance? In times apostolical, in seasons of refreshing from the Lord, when all things were common, and every brother loved as a brother? When Paul resolutely stamped the Hydra under his feet, did this evil then take root? Nay, but in times of declension, grievous backsliding, in forgetting God, his love, mercy and truth. Then it was that Satan embraced this favorable moment to instil the poison of the devilish, cause divisions and sub-divisions, jarring discords, heart-burnings and heart-rendings. How shall we cast him out, slay the Agag, destroy the reptile? By depicting the evils, portraying them, declaiming against them? This we may do, must do—but will this suffice? We must return to our first love, do our first works, repent, make restitution, confess our guilt, return to the apostolical, the holy, the harmless, the undefiled, drink into one spirit, the spirit of the gospel, the purifying, the sanctifying. Then, and not till shall we see eye to eye.

The N. Y. Independent, speaking of the primitive churches, says:

"What we did say was, that there was no such thing as denominationalism among those churches, and no provision for this in their constitution. If in some minor points the church at Antioch differed from that at Jerusalem, that church did not send Paul and Barnabas to establish Antiochian churches in Asia Minor and Greece. The church at Jerusalem did not attempt to set up Jerusalem churches throughout Palestine. The church at Corinth did not propagate Corinthianism. The primitive churches had no denominationalism, 'sectarian' or 'unsectarian.' They were simply associations of believers. The primitive christians never dreamed of 'church extension,' of planting 'the church,' or 'our church.' They preached the gospel, and wherever converts multiplied churches arose, as a matter of course."

Says the Rev. A. Prynne—"We know of but one or two denominations in America that will attempt to defend their peculiarities from the New Testament. They plead necessity or worldly wisdom for their form of government and denominational practices, rather than the Bible. Sectarianism, in the abstract, they all condemn, but continue to practice it. They look upon such practices as an unfortunate necessity, but not as a sin. Is it not a sin to disregard primitive order, especially where that order involves a fundamental principle? If the New Testament is authority, and the apostles are inspired guides, anywhere, are they not as worthy of being followed in this matter, as any other, especially while the whole honor and ultimate success of the church depends upon its unity?"

We turn to the Epistle to the Romans, and find it addressed "to all that be in Rome, beloved of God, and called to be saints," as the church of Rome. How differently would a church epistle be directed in our times! One would write to all the Baptists, another to all the Methodists, and still another, to the Presbyterians. Where Paul wrote to saints, modern ministers must write to sectaries, or have their epistles disregarded.

On looking at each one of the epistles, the reader will perceive that they are all addressed to the christians of the place where directed. This shows that under the apostles there was but one church in each place, and that all the christians were members of that church. There is not in the whole New Testament a single instance where there were two churches in the same place. So clear and full were the teachings of Christ and his immediate followers on this point, that they were not misunderstood, until long after they had passed away from earth. The very first indication of a disposition to divide, which showed itself in the day of the apostles, was most promptly rebuked. In the last chapter of Romans, Paul says (verse 17), "Now I beseech you, brethren, mark them which cause division among you, and avoid them." Every denomination builder in the world would, if he could, have "caused division" in the church of Rome, had he been in Rome at that time. Each Baptist would have done his best to build up his sect, and each Presbyterian or Methodist, or other sectarian, would have done the same; and hence, these are the classes of persons whom Paul exhorts the Romans to avoid. Wherever these sectarians go, if christians were united before, they cause and sanction divisions. It is their peculiar work. They cannot build up their denominations without pursuing this course.

The church at Corinth showed some disposition to divide on men. One says, I am of Paul; another, I of Apollos; and another, I of Cephas. Paul promptly and sharply rebuked them as "carnal," and says, "Is Christ divided? Was Paul crucified for you? Were ye baptized in the name of Paul?" Now if these Corinthians were wrong, and to be thus sharply rebuked as "carnal" for dividing on Paul and Cephas, are not modern christians guilty of sin for dividing Luther, Calvin or Wesley? Does the lapse of time diminish the sin? Nay, does it not rather increase it, because these moderns have more light?

There are a large number of figures used in the Scriptures in describing the church, which argue the duty of all christians to continue in union. 1 Cor. 12: 12, we read as follows: "For as the body is one and hath many members, and all the members of that one body, being many, are one body, so also is Christ. For by one spirit are we all baptized into one body, whether we be Jews or Gentiles—whether we be bond or free; and have been all made to drink into one spirit." Verse 27: "Now ye are the body of Christ, and members in particular." Here, the human body is the figure by which the unity of the church is represented. And as it is a crime to cut away a member, or in any way mutilate the natural body, so is it a crime against the church, to exclude a christian from it, and thus cut off a member of the spiritual body of Christ. And as every member is needed to make the natural body powerful and useful, so every christian is needed in the one church of each place, to secure the power and usefulness of the spiritual body.

The church is represented under the figures of a household, a city and a commonwealth, all of which teach its unity, and condemn denominationalism. Then there are a great number of passages which teach this sentiment more or less directly, a few of which we will quote. Matt. 12: 25: "And Jesus knew their thoughts and said unto them, every city or house divided against itself is brought to desolation, and every city or house divided against itself shall not stand." 1 Cor. 1: 10: "Now I beseech you, brethren, by the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, that ye all speak the same thing, and that there be no divisions among you." 1 Cor. 12: 25: "That there be no schism in the body." Eph. 4: 3, 4: "Endeavoring to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bonds of peace. There is one body and one spirit, even as ye are called in one hope of your calling." Verse 13: "Till we all come into the unity of the faith."

We might multiply these quotations, but one plain Scripture is all sufficient to him who believes the Bible. D. F. N.

THE HEART AND THE TONGUE.—The cure of an evil tongue must be done at the heart. The weights and wheels are there, and the clock strikes according to their motion. A guileful heart makes a guileful tongue and lips. It is the workhouse where is the forge of deceits and slanders, and the tongue is only the outer shop where they are vended, and the door of it. Such ware as is made within, such, and no other, can come out.—Leighton.

☞ A woman who used to attend public worship with the greatest punctuality, and took care always to be in time, was asked how it was she could always come so early. She answered, very wisely, that it was a part of her religion not to disturb the religion of others.

For the World's Crisis.

PROCEEDINGS OF THE SECOND QUARTERLY CONFERENCE,

HELD AT BOYLAN'S GROVE, MARCH 24th, 25th, 26th.

In the absence of the President and Secretary, Bro. Wm. H. Connell was elected President, and Bro. A. Durand Secretary. Met at seven P. M., Friday. Eld. P. W. Hough preached from Rom. 13 : 11, 12. On motion of Bro. Hough, business was deferred until next afternoon. As the streams were high, but few of the churches were represented.

Saturday, 25th. Met in the afternoon for the transaction of business. The reports of the churches were then called for. Bro. Hough reported church in Cascade, and also in Manchester, in a prosperous condition.

Bro. Connell, delegate, reported church in New Hartford as growing in grace. Have meetings every Lord's day. Elds. P. S. W. Depo and P. W. Hough, preachers. Through the blessing of God sixteen have united, and others are expected to obey the Lord in baptism. Bro. Sawyer represented the church in Boylan's Grove in a prosperous condition.

Moved that we request the annual conference to state the time and place of the quarterly conferences for the ensuing year.

Whereas, the signs of the times and the sure word of prophecy give unmistakable evidence that the coming of our blessed Lord is even at the door; and, Whereas, God always works by his people, and warns the world of approaching judgment by them, therefore,

Resolved, That we recommend to all our brethren, where there are churches, to meet as soon as possible, and adopt such measures as will secure to them a pastor for one fourth or one half of the time, to go into effect after our Annual Conference, and also to raise funds to assist in defraying the expenses of the same; also to raise a fund to defray the expense of an evangelist, to labor in harmony with the churches within the bounds of this conference.

Resolved, That the Annual Conference request some of the preaching brethren to discourse on the first principles of the gospel; also some Bro. to discourse on the twentieth chapter of Revelation, subject to the criticism of the conference in Bible class. The conference then adjourned by prayer, by Bro. W. P. Woodworth.

Resolved, That the proceedings of this conference be sent to the World's Crisis for publication, to be copied by the Voice of the West.

Lord's day, 26th. Bro. Hough preached from Rev. 5 : 7, 8, to a large and attentive audience. Met again in the evening. Bro. R. Merrill, a Presbyterian minister, preached from Rom. 8 : 28. He noticed particularly the prosperous providences of God in bestowing riches on his chosen; said it was no sign he was not a christian because God had blessed him with riches, any more than with natural talent and influence; that riches brought humility, especially in a minister. Bro. Hough, by request, then rose and acquiesced in part with the discourse, but said it was the duty of one so blessed with riches to follow the example of Zaccheus; that the young man who wanted eternal life was told by the Savior to sell all that he had and give to the poor, and he should have a treasure in heaven; that if we desired eternal life, we must obey the requirements of the Savior, and if necessary, to forsake all for Christ; for he that loved riches, etc., more than Christ, was not worthy of him. He then requested those who were in a backslidden state, who were determined to return to their Master's house, to manifest it by rising. Three arose. Also those who had not obeyed all the ordinances of God, who were determined to do so. Seven arose.

Thus ended our conference at Boylan's Grove. The church were edified. May they continue faithful to the end.

A. DURAND, Sec. pro tem.

For the World's Crisis.

HOW TO GET TRACTS READ.

I have learned by experience to select the tract that will throw light on the subject upon which I am going to preach; and at the close of the sermon inform the congregation, for further information, to walk up and buy five or ten cents' worth of tracts, which will point out the passages they can find in their own Bibles at home, and they will all know whether I have preached the truth, without asking their priests. I always exempt the stingy and poor publicly, by a special request for all to get a tract, and never have but one kind at once, and that upon the subjects preached. This saves looking them over and asking questions. There will be ten tracts carefully read that are bought, to one given away to outsiders.

I took last month, for which Bro. Herron charged the Tract Fund $2.00, for free distribution. I tried the above plan, and disposed of over fifty at the first effort, telling the people to make their own change and ask me no questions, for I had done my talking while recommending the tract, and now come and get and read them. Some started while I was talking, and waited around the desk until the meeting closed, taking every one I had. A rumseller took three, left twenty-five cents, and said he should read every word, and then send away. I understood he did, and became so interested as to attend our meetings regularly. Many similar cases I could relate. How much better this way would be than to turn out a whole peck at once, and scare or cloy the congregation. It is like throwing the whole mixture of all the food the house affords at a child at once. One kind at a time, and that selected, is the best way to feed and get pay for it, secure the reading, scatter light, and save much for the Publication Fund. I will send you the $2.00 you gave me in tracts, and have something left, and get them read by those that would not take one as a gift and read it. I have good proof of this.

One thing more about tracts. One more is much needed, i. e., on the evidences of the Lord's coming very soon,—the whole argument condensed, made simple, justifying the other "cry" by Scripture, etc. Some one ought to be about it. Where is Bro. Sheldon? He is short and pointed; or Bro. Thurman, or Himes, or some tract man who loves the coming of the Lord better than a great name. I would block one out, but I had rather distribute others' work, if we had the right thing. I think I could sell ten thousand in six months, for five or ten cents each.

HIRAM MUNGER.

☞ Broken resolutions are worse than none at all; it only proves to us we do not carry out the dictates of our conscience, and expose our weakness.

The World's Crisis AND SECOND ADVENT MESSENGER.

Boston, Tuesday, April 11, 1865.

☞ TAKE NOTICE.

All subscriptions for the Crisis are payable in advance, at the rate of $2.50 a year; but if delayed six months beyond the time of payment, the rate is $3.00 a year, or $1.50 for six months. Thus 50 cents a year is saved by paying in advance.

WORCESTER.

The results of our discussion in Worcester were beyond our expectation. The interest was such that it was thought best to have our meetings in the City Hall on Saturday evening, and over the Lord's day. The hall is said to seat about twelve hundred. At our last meeting, Sunday evening, many had to go away for want of seats. It was stated that there had not been so much interest before in W., on the great truths of the Bible for ten years. A large number of intelligent members of different churches were present all day, and listened with the best attention to sermons on the creation, death and resurrection of man, and the coming kingdom. The truth found a welcome in many honest hearts, and caused some to rejoice and thank the Lord for the clear light on his word. We saw good evidence that some seed had fallen on good ground.

DISCUSSION IN BOSTON.

In this article we conclude our report of the discussion held with Bro. Wendell, at Kast Hall, Boston, evenings of March 14th to 17th inclusive, and 21st to 24th inclusive, on the question, "Do the Scriptures teach the non-resurrection of the wicked?"

We trust that the cause of truth has been richly benefitted by the debate on this important question.

At the close of our last report, we introduced the criticism of Bro. Stephen M. Vail, one of the best Hebrew scholars in our country. His testimony on Dan. 12 : 2, was very emphatic, that the passage, "Many of them that sleep in the dust of the earth shall awake; some to everlasting life, and some to shame and everlasting contempt," most clearly teaches that both classes will awake. So said Dr. Noyes, Prof. of Hebrew in Harvard college.

Since publishing the article containing Prof. Vail's statement, we have received another from Prof. N. N. Whiting, who is said to be second, as a Hebrew scholar, to only one man in the United States. He is one employed by the American Bible Union in translating the Bible at the present time.

He says:—"No man acquainted with Hebrew (if honest), would hesitate to apply yakimoo, the verb properly rendered 'will or shall arise,' to both classes. The English version is accurate as to sense, though a more literal (not more correct) rendering is this:—'Many sleeping in the dust of the earth shall arise; these to everlasting life, and those to reproach, to everlasting abhorrence.'

The following versions give the same sense as the English, viz., the Septuagint, Schmidt's Latin, Pagnin's Latin, Vatablus' Latin, Junius' and Tremellius' Latin, Luther's and De Wette's (German), the Low Dutch (Holland), Martin's Protestant French Translation, Danish, Diodati's Italian. The Vulgate presents the same sense, but it has an addition (spurious beyond a doubt) in these words:—'ut videant semper' —'that they may always see.' The Douay Catholic Version made from the Vulgate inserts the supplement it, rendering this interpolated phrase—'to see it always.'... To your postscript I say, that Daniel 12 : 2 does, by every sound principle of interpretation, teach the resurrection of that class whose portion is 'shame and everlasting contempt.'"

Here we leave this passage, which teaches the resurrection of both the righteous and wicked, in a manner too plain, we think, to be misunderstood.

We now turn to Acts 24 : 15, where Paul says he has "hope towards God, which they themselves also allow, that there shall be a resurrection of the dead, both of the just and unjust." This Scripture seemed so plain to us that we thought no language could be used that would be any more simple and plain, provided Paul wished to teach the people that the wicked would as certainly arise as the just. But little was said by our opponent on this Scripture.

We introduced the following translations of the passage, showing that the common version expresses the correct idea of the original:

"Have hope towards God, that the same resurrection from death (which they themselves look for also) shall be both of the just and unjust."—Wm. Tyndale.

"Having hope in God, that there shall be a resurrection of the dead, both of the just and of the unjust, which they themselves also expect."—John Wesley.

"I have the same expectation from the Deity, which they themselves entertain, that of the resurrection, both of the just and of the unjust."—Mace.

"And I have a hope in God, which they also themselves expect,—that there is to be a resurrection of the dead, both of the righteous and the wicked."—Syriac.

"Having a hope in God, which even they themselves are looking for, that there is to be a resurrection, both of the righteous and unrighteous."—Emphatic Diaglott.

"Having a hope in God, which they also entertain, that there will be a resurrection from death, both of righteous and unrighteous men."—Wakefield.

"And have hope towards God, that the same resurrection of the dead (which they themselves look for also,) shall be both of just and unjust."—Cranmer and Geneva.

"I have the same hope in God that they have, which is the resurrection of the good and of the wicked."—Webster.

It will be seen from even a hasty notice of the passage of Scripture under examination, that it cannot be made to mean that only the just shall rise from the dead. We see no possible chance to sustain such a view for one moment. If Paul believed the wicked dead would have no resurrection, why did he not say, that he had a hope that there should be a resurrection only of the just? But instead of this, he says, "BOTH OF THE JUST AND THE UNJUST." We can see no ground on which to raise an argument against such a plain statement.

We come next to John 5 : 28–29. "Marvel not at this; for the hour is coming, in the which all that are in the graves shall hear his voice, and shall come forth; they that have done good unto the resurrection of life; and they that have done evil, unto the resurrection of damnation." Here, again, we found our Savior expressing himself in the very plainest manner, so that even a child could understand him. If we wished to declare the truth that both the righteous and wicked will be raised, we do not know how we could express the fact in a clearer manner than our Savior has done in the scripture just quoted. There seems to be no room for a misunderstanding of his meaning. The truth in this text was kept before the mind of our opponent during almost the entire debate, but it only received a passing glance, the last part of the last evening, when he stated that one preacher thought it might have reference to a moral resurrection, and another, Bro. J. T. Curry, thought it referred to the return of the Jews. Our opponent did not tell us which of these views he adopted.

It will be seen at a moment's glance, that it cannot refer to a moral resurrection, because "they that have done good" are to rise from the dead as truly as those who have done evil; or "both of the just and unjust." Thus we found Jesus, Paul and Daniel all agree, and express themselves so very plainly, that we dare not call the witnesses in question.

We repeatedly called the attention of our opponent to the consideration of the following propositions, based on plain scripture statements; but they were scarcely noticed:—

1. The wicked are not punished before the day of judgment.
The day of judgment is yet future.
Therefore they are not NOW being punished.

This he ADMITS.

2. They are not now being punished.
But they are now in their reserved state.
Hence the reserved state is not one of punishment.

3. Their reserved state is not one of punishment.
But my opponent says they will be reserved in death eternally.
Consequently will not be punished at ALL!!!

4. "ALL that are in the GRAVES SHALL HEAR HIS VOICE."—John 5. 28.
They that hear shall LIVE.—John 5 : 25.
Therefore, "ALL that are in the graves" "shall live."—Jno. 5 : 28, 25.

5. They that HEAR SHALL LIVE."—John 5 : 25.
"ALL that are the GRAVES shall HEAR his voice."—Jno. 5 : 28.
Therefore, "ALL that are in the GRAVES," "shall LIVE."—Jno. 5 : 28, 25.

6. "All that . . . HEAR shall COME FORTH."—John 5. 28, 25.
"ALL that are in the GRAVES shall HEAR his voice."—Jno. 5 : 28.
Therefore, "ALL that are in the GRAVES . . . shall come forth."—Jno. 5 : 28, 25.

7. Men CANNOT HEAR when DEAD.
ALL that are in the GRAVES shall HEAR his VOICE."—Jno. 5 : 28.
Therefore, "ALL that are in the GRAVES" "shall live."—Jno. 5. 28 25.

8. "ALL that are in the graves" "shall live."—Jno. 5 : 28, 25.
ALL the WICKED "are in the GRAVES."
Therefore ALL the WICKED "shall live."

CAUSE FOR REJOICING.

The late news from the army confirming the statement that Gen. Lee has surrendered with all his army, affords much cause for rejoicing, because there is now a bright prospect that the bloody scenes of the battle field will soon be stopped in our land, and the soldiers have a rest. We have rarely known of a greater outburst of joy than was manifested when the tidings first came—"Lee has surrendered."

EXPLANATION.

The following extract from Bro. Himes' Journal, published in the Voice of the West, is given by request, to explain a statement made in the Crisis a few weeks since:—

Monday, Feb. 27. Attended a Bible class in Lowell Street Chapel. This was the fifth of a series following the discussion of Brn. Thurman and Stevenson. Bro. Hastings, Hudson, Stevenson, and others were invited to attend them in the beginning. They were free for the discussion of the subjects introduced relating to the Bible; and, also, the astronomical argument, each in their place. Bro. Hudson wished to know if he could speak on the astronomical argument on the first evening. I told him that we had arranged for a special Bible lesson, but that the subject would come up in its proper place, when he could give his views of Mr. Thurman's ability to calculate eclipses; or, he could have a private interview with him on the subject. For myself, I was satisfied that Mr. T. was not an imposter. A competent person had made sufficient examination to satisfy me in this matter; that Mr. T. had nothing to fear from the most critical examination. We gave Bro. Hudson and all who were disposed to criticise Bro. T., both during the discussion and afterwards, the liberty to question him, so that the whole audience were satisfied with the impartiality and fairness with which things were conducted.

Our class this evening took up the evidence of the birth of Christ in B. C. 5. And from Scripture, history, and astronomy it was made clear to all present that our Savior was born four years before the common era called Anno Domini. This being settled, the sixty-nine weeks, or 483 years, carried back from B. C. 5 bring us to B. C. 488, which is the first year of Cyrus, in which he gave the decree to restore and build Jerusalem. This to the class was clear of doubt. But Ptolemy's Canon, on the contrary, gives us B. C. 536 for the first year of Cyrus, which is an error of forty-eight years.

Note by Bro. Hudson.

Bro. Himes speaks as if I wished to speak in the Bible class "on the first evening." I am sure that there is a misapprehension. If the first evening was named, I certainly did not insist on it. I was willing to accept any evening of the Bible class. And Bro. Hastings, who was present, so understood me.

WHERE IS "THE SPIRIT LAND?"

We hear much in these days about a "spirit land" where people go at death; but it was not till quite recently that we have learned its locality. In the Banner of Light for Feb. 18th, 1865, we have a report a conversation with a Spirit on the subject, in the course of which the following question and answer are given:

Q.—Spirits teach us there is a spirit land, an emanation from this earth, outside of the earth-atmosphere. If so, will the controlling intelligence please tell us if said spirit land revolves in harmony with this earth? If not how do spirits always find just the precise spot they wish to go to in returning to earth?

A.—The spirit land is within you, not outside of you. You are not compelled to go sixty or seventy, or even a thousand miles, to find your spirit land. It is within you; consequently it is in harmony with you and your universal surroundings."

What kind of land must that be which is in a man? We wonder what the spirits will teach next.

RATHER IGNORANT.

In Bro. J. T. Curry's report of our discussion with Bro. Wendell, as published in the Herald of Life, when referring to Bro. Wendell's opponent, he says:—"He does not seem capable of understanding the simplest argument."

Is there no remedy, unless we embrace the non-resurrection of the wicked? What a blessing it must be to those who are "capable of understanding" a simple "argument." Shall we ever have that rich pleasure?

THE NEW BIRTH.

BRO. GRANT:—Will you, or some one of the many able contributors of the World's Crisis, write an article on the new birth, spoken of by our Savior to Nicodemus? John 3 : 3. If the above request is complied with, it will confer a favor upon many inquirers after truth. J. N. WILLIAMS.

Ottawa, Minnesota.

If Bro. Williams will read carefully the two articles in the Crisis, April 4th and 11th, from Bro. O. R. Fassett, we think he will find a clear and satisfactory answer to his inquiry.

SHOULD SINNERS FIGHT?

BRO. GRANT:—I wish to know if it is the doctrine of the Crisis, "That while christians ought not to fight," it is not wrong for sinners? I have heard that it was not as bad for sinners to fight as christians; and that they ought to do the fighting. Now, I hold that the principle of right and wrong is as binding on sinner as saint. One is as accountable before God as the other. Please state very plainly your views.

I still think the Crisis the best paper I can find, and should be very sorry if it advanced such sentiments, which I think it does not.

E. T. DAY.

We have often remarked on this point that we do not find evidence that Jesus has given two standards of right and wrong. If it is wrong for christians to lie, swear, steal, and murder, we believe it is wrong also for sinners to do it; if not, then what constitutes them sinners and others righteous? If it is wrong for christians to fight, then we cannot see why it is not for every one else. If the ways of sinners were right, then they must be righteous. We do not see how any one could defend such a position, unless he should claim there is no such thing as sin, as advocated by the demons and their followers.

THE SUEZ CANAL.

For many years the nations of Europe have felt anxious to have a road of navigation from the Mediterranean to the Red Sea. This great work has finally been accomplished by Napoleon III., which gives him much advantage over other powers. Truly, he is the master spirit of the times before whom the kings of other nations tremble; but he is on the rising tide. Says the Tribune:—

"M. Ferdinand de Lesseps gives public notice that his projected Ship Canal, uniting the Red Sea with the Mediterranean, was so far completed in 1864 that a daily boat has been run from Port Said to Suez since the first of last month—a large bark, towed by a steamer, and conveying twenty to thirty passengers, having passed from sea to sea within twenty-four hours. As yet, the depth of water would seem to be but four or five feet, with a width of thirty to forty; but it is confidently calculated that the canal will be prepared for effective transportation by April, when six steam-tugs are to be ready for service upon it.

This canal is ninety miles long, and is to have when completed, a minimum depth of twenty feet, with a width of 330 feet at the surface. It was commenced in 1859 by a private company, on a subscribed capital of $40,000,000. We infer that M. de Lesseps does not expect to complete it immediately, but to deepen it by degrees without interfering with its use. A British railroad, 222 miles long, passing from Alexandria through Cairo to Suez, has for some years afforded expeditious transit between the two seas."

INCREASE OF CRIME.

It is a notorious fact that wickedness and infidelity are on a rapid increase in our country, and every civilized land. Facts to sustain such a statement are abundant. And yet, many blind guides cry "peace and safety," and would try to persuade people that the world is growing better, instead of admitting the sad fact that nominal christendom is fast becoming so conformed to the world, that the difference is more in name than in reality. The word of the Lord declares that "in the last days" "evil men and seducers shall wax worse and worse." If it was not so, the prophecy could not be true.

Says the New York Mercury of April 1st, '65, under the head of "MANY MURDERS:"—

"It is noticeable, how in this fifth year of the war, the number of civil crimes is increasing. Some of the tragedies recently enacted in both the East and the West are of a terrible character, and the details of the executions succeeding them are almost as revolting as the original bloodshed. Cases where whole families have been butchered, and many of the crimes committed have been treacherous and unnatural beyond parallel. All this shows the slow, but certain demoralization of war, when life becomes so cheap, that bad men take it without compunction. We cannot now redeem the evil, and must be contented with remarking it, and regretting it."

Our Volunteer Agents.

REPORT FOR WEEK ENDING MARCH 25TH.

Whole number of new subscribers in the week, 37. By the efforts of the following brethren, 23:—

ONE EACH.—By A. Amos, H. B. Bradley, J. A Blake, D Chase, J Garr, W S Farr, M. Grant, J Gay, S Hammond, S Nye, T W Piper, H D Reed, J Richardson, J Small, A Struve, I. J. Stedman, Martha Shaw, Mrs. M. W. Thrall, C. Willoughby.

TWO EACH—By S. P. Clark, I. K. Lombard.

FOR WEEK ENDING APRIL 1ST.

Total new subscribers in the week, 40. By the following brethren, 32:—

ONE EACH.—By L. Boutell, Lydia M. Collins, C. Colburn, H. V. Davis, J. T. Dixon, Clarissa E. Danks, L. Fellows, S Harding, Mrs. N M Henry, J G Hook, I K Lombard, A Persons, H D Reed, Julia M Slayer, J N Williams, J Wilbur, H G Whitaker.

TWO.—Mrs. A. E. Smith.

THIRTEEN—A. N. Seymour.

For the World's Crisis.

SOCIAL HYMNS.

The edition of this book has long been exhausted. I am now revising it, and intend to enlarge it to about twice its former size. Hope to issue it in May, and the price will be fifteen cents single. Orders will be filled as soon as possible. It has been delayed by my long absence. H. L. HASTINGS.

THE NEW SECOND TRACT FUND.

We, the undersigned, agree to give the sums affixed to our names, for the purpose of raising TWO THOUSAND DOLLARS for the Publication Society in the gratuitous distribution of tracts.

Previous donations	$730.35
J. Wilson	2.50
Mrs. M. A.	4.25
C. L. Burdick	2.50
Wellfare	1.00
H. Hibbard	2.45
J. C. Boston	1.00
I. Loomis	.50

POOR FUND DONATIONS.

To pay for Papers sent to the Poor.

Whole number sent free 800. Amount $2000.00.

Previous donations	$368.22
Mrs. C. B. Knight	.50
Z. A. Waterhouse	2.00
C. L. Burdick	2.50
Wellfare	1.00
Mrs. E. W. Ayer	.50
C. C. Dow	2.50

My Opinion of the World's Crisis.

Through the kindness of a christian neighbor, I have the privilege of reading the above paper. A privilege I do esteem it; for while it does not represent my views of the manner of Christ's second coming, I am pleased with its beautiful face, its learning, its christian spirit, its ability, and the choice character of its selections. I am not aware of any religious publication that more faithfully sets forth the evils of our times from which we are to flee, that more pointedly presents the graces of the spirit which we should cultivate, or has more timely suggestions for the family, for the young, and upon the wofully neglected subject of health. It gives me pleasure to write this brief, humble testimonial for any eye that may chance to read it.

LUCIUS HOLMES, Pastor.

Orange, Mass.

LIFE OF HIRAM MUNGER.

The Life and Religious Experience of Hiram Munger, including many singular circumstances connected with Campmeetings and Revivals. Written by Himself. 225 pages. Price 30 cents, postpaid.

This interesting autobiography of one of the most eccentric and original preachers among us has for some time been out of print, and it was doubtful whether another edition would be issued, especially while the present increased expenses of publishing continue. To meet the public demand, however, a neat pamphlet edition is now published, and ready for delivery, at about half the price of the former. This is probably the last edition that will ever be printed, as the plates are soon to be sold and melted. All, therefore, who would secure a copy of an entertaining and instructive book, will order in season, as but a small edition of five hundred is printed, for which we anticipate a rapid sale.

For the World's Crisis.

SICKNESS HAS HINDERED.

BRO. GRANT:—I wish to say through the Crisis, to the friends interested for us, that Mother Eaton has so far recovered from her severe illness of lung fever, that she is beginning to get about the house again. For some two weeks we all thought she must soon leave us—but the Lord is good.

Mother's sickness has delayed me somewhat in my work on the Sabbath question; but it is all right, as I now resume my work afresh. Some may think me slow in the preparation of this work for the press; but if I am a suitable judge, I am doing well, with the blessing of God. Since I gave notice several months ago, in regard to the probable time that would elapse before I could get the work ready, I have been reading Church History, and important works on the Sabbath question, for some four months of this time; taking notes, and collecting material which all lovers of truth, I hope, will be glad to see when arranged into a book. I can see the Lord's hand in leading me for a year or two past, especially. I did not take up this question of the Sabbath from personal choice, but by the earnest solicitation of friends. But I can now see the hand of the Lord in preparing this work for me, during my long confinement at home, in consequence of the sickness and death of my late beloved wife, and the old age and infirmities of Mother Eaton. Just one year and two days since I was called to bid farewell to my dear wife till the resurrection morn! And during this period, as I have been confined at home the most of the time, I have had my attention occupied with this work of the Sabbath, which I hope in the end will do more good to the cause of Christ, than though I had been out in the gospel field as in former years. Please, friends, wait patiently. It will pay. Pray for us, in this important hour, as I am now engaged in preparing and arranging the matter for the review of "J. N. Andrews'" history of the Sabbath. T. M. PREBLE.

East Weare, N. H. March 31, 1865.

For the World's Crisis.

LETTER FROM THE WEST.

Dear Brn. and Srs. of the household of faith: My labors this winter have been mostly confined to the churches at Big Creek, Cassel's Prairie, and West Point, in Sauk Co.; and most of the intervening time has been spent in the regions beyond, with encouraging results. The humble few rejoice, and the conviction seems to be settling down upon them more than ever, that redemption's day is nigh. The worldling for the moment stands in awe and amazement at the truths we preach, only to plunge again deeper into the all-absorbing themes of this world reserved unto fire. And the cold-hearted Pharisee as ever stands in his sanctified robes, and says, Heresy, heresy! Crucify him, crucify him! But I thank our heavenly Father, that although we are obliged to preach Christ to one class a stumbling-block, and to another foolishness, yet to a very few the power of God and the wisdom of God. I Cor. 1 : 23, 24. And on the whole, children, I think the world is about ready for harvest. The latter rains are truly ripening the tares, and God grant that they may prepare the wheat for the garner of the Lord.

Perhaps a few words of experience with the military powers that be will be interesting, if not instructive. Last Nov. three of our brethren from the Big Creek church were drafted into the service of our country. Two of them, poor men and unable to raise $300, reported in time with papers, as they supposed, sufficient to admit them to other service than to bear arms; but their papers were found fault with, and they were forced into the service. Bro. Andrews, who was drafted on a supplementary draft, and was to report at another place, concluded there was no chance for him, and as he was decided not to bear arms, would let the law take its course; but subsequently thought that he would raise the commutation fee, get up the papers and try to get the benefit of the ... of the conscription act; but, however, till after Caesar had sent his officers after him at his home, and he was held as a deserter and sent forward.

Under these circumstances I was sent for by Sr. Andrews, to make the trial to free him. But not to be tedious, I will simply add that, after a constant effort of two weeks, and a cost of nearly $400, Bro. A. is at home again, to the inexpressible joy of his dear family, and brethren and sisters in that place. In the mean time, I had the privilege of contending for the faith once delivered to the saints before the State Provost, at Madison, and also District Provost, at La Crosse; and I would say to the brethren in that district, that I think if you report in time to Capt. Cooper, Provost Marshal, with sufficient evidence that you are consistent non-combatants, you can have the benefit of the law. And I would still add, that it is a great deal better to be subject to the powers, than to try to evade them in any sense. Let us be peaceful subjects, and bear all things, hoping for that kingdom to come where there will be no more war.

Now, brethren, suffer a word further on the time question. Some eighteen years ago I became interested in the great truths that concern us as a people, and ever since then I have had an increasing faith that the time of the Lord's second coming is revealed, as well as the first, and that some time before the end somebody will know it. And I supposed we as a people were agreed on this; also, that according to the twenty-fifth of Matthew, some will expect him and be disappointed before the true time is understood. Has not this been fulfilled? And yet in all of this what is there to lessen our faith in the belief that true time is in the Bible, and that the wise shall understand? Therefore I have been a little surprised, to hear some of our brethren handling the seeming light that has been looming up from Bro. Thurman in the manner they have, even without investigation. Now, brethren, if I know anything of myself, I am not of an excitable nature, and abhor fanaticism, and believe that hundreds have made shipwreck of faith, and the devil has pushed them clear over the mark, on account of time failures. And yet I believe it is the duty of God's children still, when intelligently convinced, as they will be if the wise shall understand, to believe it again, and leave the consequences with Him whose we are. I am afraid, brethren, some of you want to steady the ark too much, and have stopped digging to know what God has revealed on this all-important subject. If you have, of course God must raise up some one else out of the ranks to do it. God is no respecter of persons, and his work must be done; and if in no other way, the stones would preach; and when his professed people get too big to know and preach what he commands, for fear of consequences, as has been the case in past days, he will raise up some one else. Brethren, we must not be jealous if he does, but be willing to take light from any source. The great Head of the church will give us light, and we shall be children of the light and of the day. God grant it. Amen.

G. W. TURNER.

For the World's Crisis.

SECOND QUARTERLY SESSION Of the N. H. State Conference of 1865.

This session was held, according to appointment, in Concord, N. H., March 16th, 17th, 18th and 19th. The following ministers, who are members, were present:—J. Couch, J. W. White, J Knowles, S. S. Moony, A. Bean, B. P. Manning, A. W. Sibley. In the absence of the President and Vice President, the Secretary called the meeting to order, and Eld. J. Couch was chosen Chairman pro tem.

After the usual devotional exercises, a motion was made that the visiting brethren be invited to a seat, and participate in our deliberations, which was carried.

On motion, Bro. J. W. White, who was chosen Secretary pro tem at the last quarterly session, read the minutes of that session, which were adopted.

Bro. J. W. White, being chairman of the committee on the "Tract Fund," appointed at the last session held at Portsmouth, N. H., was called upon to report, which he did as follows: That they had received towards the Tract Fund of $200, $57.38, and that $55.85 had been expended for tracts, leaving a balance in their hands of $1.53.

The following resolutions were then presented by the Secretary, and adopted:

1st. Resolved, That a committee of three be appointed to supervise relative to raising the "Tract Fund" of $200, and purchasing and distributing such tracts as they deem proper.

2nd. Resolved, That the members of this conference act as a general committee in collecting money to make up the Tract Fund, and that they make a vigorous effort in this direction, and that they remit the money received to the committee of supervisors.

In accordance with the above resolutions, Elds. J. Couch, J. W. White and J. G. Smith were appointed as supervisors.

It was moved and carried that we commence our next quarterly session on the first day of next June. Then, on motion, the meeting adjourned till June 1st, 1865.

This was one of the best conferences that we ever attended. The spirit of the Master was indeed in our midst. There were those at this meeting who sought the Lord for the first time; and some in a backslidden state, that resolved to make another effort to serve the Lord anew, and were blessed in so doing. There was preaching during the meeting by the following Brn.:—J. W. White, Friday P. M.; A. W. Sibley, Friday evening; Saturday P. M., S. S. Mooney; Saturday evening, J. Couch; Sunday A. M., J. W. White; P. M., J. Couch; Sunday evening, A. W. Sibley. The rest of the time during the conference was improved in social meetings, and great blessings were the result. There was a love feast at nine o'clock Sunday morning, in which over fifty spoke of their love for Jesus, and of their determination to fight their way through to the kingdom. After the close of the sermon, Sunday P. M., a collection was taken, amounting to $18.00, for the purpose of making up the Tract Fund of two hundred dollars. Thus closed a good meeting with the tried friends of the cause in Concord.

A. W. SIBLEY, Secretary.

☞ When you have bought one fine thing, you must buy ten more, so that your appearance may be all of a piece.

For the World's Crisis.

OUR CONVENTION.

DEAR SISTERS:—As I have heard from many of our dear sisters, scattered abroad, who are laboring in the vineyard of the Lord, who desire to meet with us at this meeting, but have not the means to come, and as there are many who cannot come, but have means, I would propose that those who feel disposed to help these dear sisters to get to this meeting, would send what they feel it their duty to do, to the Editors of the World's Crisis and Voice of the West, so that these dear children who have been laboring through persecution and scoffings, and had their name cast out as evil, because they have dared to stand up for Jesus and his coming, and have labored without money and without price, may come to this feast of tabernacles, and speak for Jesus and his precious truth. I will give $5.00 to such a fund. Who will give $4.00, $3, $2, $1, 50 cts. or 25 cts.?

Say, who will come? Dear friends, you that have of this world's goods, don't be afraid to put it out to interest, for the Lord is sure to pay. You shall receive a hundred fold in this life, and when Jesus comes, life eternal. And you, my poor sister, come along to the convention. Work your passage; preach Jesus as you come, trust in God, and when you get there, the Lord will find the means to bring you home again. Don't be afraid to venture on the Lord. You know our Father is rich. He owns all the world. We intend to ask him to help us this one time. Several of our dear brethren have written to me, saying they would like to help on this great and good work.

Brethren, here is a chance for you to help. Don't let it pass without doing your duty. God will bless you for your work of love. Now, brethren and sisters, let us be up and doing. The judgment is right upon us, and let us do all the good we can before it overtakes the wicked. May the Lord bless this movement to the strengthening of our sisters, and his own honor and glory. Amen.

ANNA E. SMITH.

No. 128 East 27th St., New York.

For the World's Crisis.

WILL THE TIMES AND SEASONS EVER BE DEFINITELY KNOWN?

NUMBER THIRTEEN.

Then the quick and dead are judged at his appearing (Rev. 11 : 18), it being the time of the dead that they should be judged, "and that thou shouldst give reward (eternal life) unto thy servants the prophets, and to the saints." Jude 14, 15,—"Behold, the Lord cometh with ten thousand of his saints, to execute judgment upon all." Dan. 12 : 12, 13,—"Blessed is he that waiteth and cometh to the 1335 days (years). But go thou thy way till the end be, for thou shalt rest, and stand in thy lot at the end of the days."

We have also a clue to the time of the end by the observances of the passover; by the first fruits; by the feast of weeks; by the feast of tabernacles; by the feast of trumpets; and by the day of propitiation. It is also prophesied of by Hosea, 6 : 2,—"After two days will he revive us. In the third day he will raise us up, and we shall live in his sight" at the resurrection of the saints. John says, "We know that when he (Christ) shall appear, we shall be like him, for we shall see him as he is."

It is said in John by Christ (14 : 3), "I will come again, and receive you unto myself; that where I am, there ye may be also." As the days of Hosea could not mean natural days, they must be typical. As it reads in 2 Pet. 3 : 8,—"Be not ignorant of this one thing, that one day is with the Lord as a thousand years, and a thousand years as one day." Christ speaks as if one of them had already commenced. "To-day and to-morrow," etc., Luke 13 : 33. And if so, it must be between Hosea's prophesying and the time when Christ spake, about the time of the last of Daniel's monarchies began, one hundred and sixty years before Christ.

"After two days." "In the third day (the third thousand) he will revive us." "He will raise us up, and we shall live in his sight." God will bring his children from the dead at the glorious appearing of Jesus Christ. Some may say that God may have alluded to the time in an allegorical sense; but in that sense who can tell when they would end? It is enough that the wise will understand, and that God has revealed the time, and what is revealed is enough for us to know. Many say, Why did not God tell us in what year these events and numbers would end, or give such knowledge as all could understand? In Mark 4 : 11, 12, read, "And he said unto them (his disciples, children of the kingdom), Unto you it is given to know the mystery of the kingdom of God." "But unto them (children of the wicked one) that are without, all these things are done in parables; that seeing they may see, and not perceive; and hearing they may hear, and not understand." Isaiah 6 : 9:—"Hear ye indeed, but understand not, and see ye indeed, but perceive not." So also in Acts 28 : 26.

Time may be a problem to some, but it is not so to others; for Daniel says that the wise shall understand, but the wicked shall not understand. I believe it with all my heart. The wicked are booked in many things of the world, but in the wisdom of God, or a knowledge of his word, they know nothing and care less.

Said a Presidential Elector to me, when talking on the affairs of Italy, "he did not believe that the powers of Europe would allow the temporal power of the Pope to be destroyed." I told him that all the powers of the world could not prevent it, as it was a subject of prophecy. There were a number present, who felt surprised that the Bible should be called in to decide the question. The Elector replied that "he had not studied the Bible in reference to the subject, but if it was a Bible truth, of course it could not be prevented." He made an honest confession. Many do not study the Bible. They would study anything else in preference to it. One of the company, a noted politician, spoke up in a scoffing manner, "What has prophecy to do with it?" I asked him what prophecy had to do with the fall of Jerusalem? No response was made. Thus they are, as Peter says, "willingly ignorant." And it may be said also of the people by Isaiah, that they are destroyed for lack of knowledge. "A famine in the land for the word of the Lord"; for in these last days they do not always get "meat in due season" out of the pulpits, for it is—"Preach unto our itching ears 'smooth things,'" and the priests live by that means.

It may be said that the subject of time is dark. Says the Rev. C. H. Imbrie, in his sermon before the Presbyterian Synod of New Jersey, "Grant it dark, but remember the

For the World's Crisis.

PROCEEDINGS OF THE SECOND QUARTERLY CONFERENCE,

HELD AT BOYLAN'S GROVE, MARCH 24th, 25th, 26th.

In the absence of the President and Secretary, Bro. Wm. H. Connell was elected President, and Bro. A. Durand Secretary. Met at seven P. M., Friday. Eld. P. W. Hough preached from Rom. 13: 11, 12. On motion of Bro. Hough, business was deferred until next afternoon. As the streams were high, but few of the churches were represented.

Saturday, 25th. Met in the afternoon for the transaction of business. The reports of the churches were then called for. Bro. Hough reported church in Cascade, and also in Manchester, in a prosperous condition.

Bro. Connell, delegate, reported church in New Hartford as growing in grace. Have meetings every Lord's day. Elds. P. S. W. Depo and P. W. Hough, preachers. Through the blessing of God sixteen have united, and others are expected to obey the Lord in baptism. Bro. Sawyer represented the church in Boylan's Grove in a prosperous condition.

Moved that we request the annual conference to state the time and place of the quarterly conferences for the ensuing year.

Whereas, the signs of the times and the sure word of prophecy give unmistakable evidence that the coming of our blessed Lord is even at the door; and, Whereas, God always works by his people, and warns the world of approaching judgment by them, therefore,

Resolved, That we recommend to all our brethren, where there are churches, to meet as soon as possible, and adopt such measures as will secure to them a pastor for one fourth or one half of the time, to go into effect after our Annual Conference, and also to raise funds to assist in defraying the expenses of the same; also to raise a fund to defray the expense of an evangelist, to labor in harmony with the churches within the bounds of this conference.

Resolved, That the Annual Conference request some of the preaching brethren to discourse on the first principles of the gospel; also some Bro. to discourse on the twentieth chapter of Revelation, subject to the criticism of the conference in Bible class. The conference then adjourned by prayer, by Bro. W. P. Woodworth.

Resolved, That the proceedings of this conference be sent to the World's Crisis for publication, to be copied by the Voice of the West.

Lord's day, 26th. Bro. Hough preached from Rev. 5: 7, 8, to a large and attentive audience. Met again in the evening. Bro. R. Merrill, a Presbyterian minister, preached from Rom. 8: 28. He noticed particularly the prosperous providences of God in bestowing riches on his chosen; said it was no sign he was not a christian because God had blessed him with riches, any more than with natural talent and influence; that riches brought humility, especially in a minister. Bro. Hough, by request, then rose and acquiesced in part with the discourse, but said it was the duty of one so blessed with riches to follow the example of Zaccheus; that the young man who wanted eternal life was told by the Savior to sell all that he had and give to the poor, and he should have a treasure in heaven; that if we desired eternal life, we must obey the requirements of the Savior, and if necessary, to forsake all for Christ; for he that loved riches, etc., more than Christ, was not worthy of him. He then requested those who were in a backslidden state, who were determined to return to their Master's house, to manifest it by rising. Three arose. Also those who had not obeyed all the ordinances of God, who were determined to do so. Seven arose.

Thus ended our conference at Boylan's Grove. The church were edified. May they continue faithful to the end.

A. DURAND, Sec. pro tem.

For the World's Crisis.

HOW TO GET TRACTS READ.

I have learned by experience to select the tract that will throw light on the subject upon which I am going to preach; and at the close of the sermon inform the congregation, for further information, to walk up and buy five or ten cents' worth of tracts, which will point out the passages they can find in their own Bibles at home, and they will all know whether I have preached the truth, without asking their priests. I always exempt the stingy and poor publicly, by a special request for all to get a tract, and never have but one kind at once, and that upon the subjects preached. This saves looking them over and asking questions. There will be ten tracts carefully read that are bought, to one given away to outsiders.

I took last month, for which Bro. Herron charged the Tract Fund $2.00, for free distribution. I tried the above plan, and disposed of over fifty at the first effort, telling the people to make their own change and ask me no questions, for I had done my talking while recommending the tract, and now come and get and read them. Some started while I was talking, and waited around the desk until the meeting closed, taking every one I had. A rumseller took three, left twenty-five cents, and said he should read every word, and then send away. I understood he did, and became so interested as to attend our meetings regularly. Many similar cases I could relate. How much better this way would be than to turn out a whole peck at once, and scare or cloy the congregation. It is like throwing the whole mixture of all the food the house affords at a child at once. One kind at a time, and that selected, is the best way to feed and get pay for it, secure the reading, scatter light, and save much for the Publication Fund. I will send you the $2.00 you gave me in tracts, and have something left, and get them read by those that would not take one as a gift and read it. I have good proof of this.

One thing more about tracts. One more is much needed, i. e., on the evidences of the Lord's coming very soon,—the whole argument condensed, made simple, justifying the other "cry" by Scripture, etc. Some one ought to be about it. Where is Bro. Sheldon? He is short and pointed; or Bro. Thurman, or Himes, or some tract man who loves the coming of the Lord better than a great name. I would block one out, but I had rather distribute others' work, if we had the right thing. I think I could sell ten thousand in six months, for five or ten cents each.

HIRAM MUNGER.

☞ Broken resolutions are worse than none at all; it only proves to us we do not carry out the dictates of our conscience, and expose our weakness.

The World's Crisis
AND SECOND ADVENT MESSENGER.
Boston, Tuesday, April 11, 1865.

☞ TAKE NOTICE.

All subscriptions for the Crisis are payable in advance, at the rate of $2.50 a year; but if delayed six months beyond the time of payment, the rate is $3.00 a year, or $1.50 for six months. Thus 50 cents a year is saved by paying in advance.

WORCESTER.

The results of our discussion in Worcester were beyond our expectation. The interest was such that it was thought best to have our meetings in the City Hall on Saturday evening, and over the Lord's day. The hall is said to seat about twelve hundred. At our last meeting, Sunday evening, many had to go away for want of seats. It was stated that there had not been so much interest before in W., on the great truths of the Bible for ten years. A large number of intelligent members of different churches were present all day, and listened with the best attention to sermons on the creation, death and resurrection of man, and the coming kingdom. The truth found a welcome in many honest hearts, and caused some to rejoice and thank the Lord for the clear light on his word. We saw good evidence that some seed had fallen on good ground.

DISCUSSION IN BOSTON.

In this article we conclude our report of the discussion held with Bro. Wendell, at Kast Hall, Boston, evenings of March 14th to 17th inclusive, and 21st to 24th inclusive, on the question, "Do the Scriptures teach the non-resurrection of the wicked?"

We trust that the cause of truth has been richly benefitted by the debate on this important question.

At the close of our last report, we introduced the criticism of Bro. Stephen M. Vail, one of the best Hebrew scholars in our country. His testimony on Dan. 12: 2, was very emphatic, that the passage, "Many of them that sleep in the dust of the earth shall awake; some to everlasting life, and some to shame and everlasting contempt," most clearly teaches that both classes will awake. So said Dr. Noyes, Prof. of Hebrew in Harvard college.

Since publishing the article containing Prof. Vail's statement, we have received another from Prof. N. N. Whiting, who is said to be second, as a Hebrew scholar, to only one man in the United States. He is one employed by the American Bible Union in translating the Bible at the present time.

He says:—"No man acquainted with Hebrew (if honest), would hesitate to apply yakimoo, the verb properly rendered 'will or shall arise,' to both classes. The English version is accurate as to sense, though a more literal (not more correct) rendering is this:—'Many sleeping in the dust of the earth shall arise; these to everlasting life, and those to reproach, to everlasting abhorrence.'

The following versions give the same sense as the English, viz., the Septuagint, Schmidt's Latin, Pagnin's Latin, Vatablus' Latin, Junius' and Tremellius' Latin, Luther's and De Wette's (German), the Low Dutch (Holland), Martin's Protestant French Translation, Danish, Diodati's Italian. The Vulgate presents the same sense, but it has an addition (spurious beyond a doubt) in these words:—'ut videant semper'—'that they may always see.' The Douay Catholic Version made from the Vulgate inserts the supplement it, rendering this interpolated phrase—'to see it always.'... To your postscript I say, that Daniel 12: 2 does, by every sound principle of interpretation, teach the resurrection of that class whose portion is 'shame and everlasting contempt.'"

Here we leave this passage, which teaches the resurrection of both the righteous and wicked, in a manner too plain, we think, to be misunderstood.

We now turn to Acts 24: 15, where Paul says he has "hope towards God, which they themselves also allow, that there shall be a resurrection of the dead, both of the just and unjust." This Scripture seemed so plain to us that we thought no language could be used that would be any more simple and plain, provided Paul wished to teach the people that the wicked would as certainly arise as the just. But little was said by our opponent on this Scripture.

We introduced the following translations of the passage, showing that the common version expresses the correct idea of the original:

"Have hope towards God, that the same resurrection from death (which they themselves look for also) shall be both of the just and unjust."—Wm. Tyndale.

"Having hope in God, that there shall be a resurrection of the dead, both of the just and of the unjust, which they themselves also expect."—John Wesley.

"I have the same expectation from the Deity, which they themselves entertain, that of the resurrection, both of the just and of the unjust."—Mace.

"And I have a hope in God, which they also themselves expect,—that there is to be a resurrection of the dead, both of the righteous and the wicked."—Syriac.

"Having a hope in God, which even they themselves are looking for, that there is to be a resurrection, both of the righteous and unrighteous."—Emphatic Diaglott.

"Having a hope in God, which they also entertain, that there will be a resurrection from death, both of righteous and unrighteous men."—Wakefield.

"And have hope towards God, that the same resurrection of the dead (which they themselves look for also,) shall be both of just and unjust."—Cranmer and Geneva.

"I have the same hope in God that they have, which is the resurrection of the good and of the wicked."—Webster.

It will be seen from even a hasty notice of the passage of Scripture under examination, that it cannot be made to mean that only the just shall rise from the dead. We see no possible chance to sustain such a view for one moment. If Paul believed the wicked dead would have no resurrection, why did he not say, that he had a hope that there should be a resurrection only of the just? But instead of this, he says, "BOTH OF THE JUST AND THE UNJUST." We can see no ground on which to raise an argument against such a plain statement.

We come next to John 5: 28-29. "Marvel not at this; for the hour is coming, in the which all that are in the graves shall hear his voice, and shall come forth; they that have done good unto the resurrection of life; and they that have done evil, unto the resurrection of damnation." Here, again, we found our Savior expressing himself in the very plainest manner, so that even a child could understand him. If we wished to declare the truth that both the righteous and wicked will be raised, we do not know how we could express the fact in a clearer manner than our Savior has done in the scripture just quoted. There seems to be no room for a misunderstanding of his meaning. The truth in this text was kept before the mind of our opponent during almost the entire debate, but it only received a passing glance, the last part of the last evening, when he stated that one preacher thought it might have reference to a moral resurrection, and another, Bro. J. T. Curry, thought it referred to the return of the Jews. Our opponent did not tell us which of these views he adopted.

It will be seen at a moment's glance, that it cannot refer to a moral resurrection, because "they that have done good" are to rise from the dead as truly as those who have done evil; or "both of the just and unjust." Thus we found Jesus, Paul and Daniel all agree, and express themselves so very plainly, that we dare not call the witnesses in question.

We repeatedly called the attention of our opponent to the consideration of the following propositions, based on plain scripture statements; but they were scarcely noticed:—

1. The wicked are not punished before the day of judgment.
The day of judgment is yet future.
Therefore they are not NOW being punished.

This he ADMITS.

2. They are not now being punished.
But they are now in their reserved state.
Hence the reserved state is not one of punishment.

3. Their reserved state is not one of punishment.
But my opponent says they will be reserved in death eternally.
Consequently will not be punished at ALL!!!

4. "ALL that are in the GRAVES SHALL HEAR HIS VOICE."—John 5: 28.
They that hear shall LIVE.—John 5: 25.
Therefore, "ALL that are in the graves" "shall live."—Jno. 5: 28, 25.

5. They that HEAR SHALL LIVE.—John 5: 25.
"ALL that are in the GRAVES shall HEAR his voice."—Jno. 5: 28.
Therefore, "ALL that are in the GRAVES," "shall LIVE."—Jno. 5: 28, 25.

6. "ALL that ... HEAR shall COME FORTH."—John 5 28, 25.
"ALL that are in the GRAVES shall HEAR his voice."—Jno. 5: 28.
Therefore, "ALL that are in the GRAVES ... shall come forth."—Jno. 5 28, 25.

7. Men CANNOT HEAR when DEAD.
ALL that are in the GRAVES shall HEAR his VOICE."—Jno. 5. 28.
Therefore, "ALL that are in the GRAVES" "shall live."—Jno. 5. 28, 25.

8. "ALL that are in the graves" "shall live."—Jno. 5: 28, 25.
ALL the WICKED "are in the GRAVES."
Therefore ALL the WICKED "shall live."

CAUSE FOR REJOICING.

The late news from the army confirming the statement that Gen. Lee has surrendered with all his army, affords much cause for rejoicing, because there is now a bright prospect that the bloody scenes of the battle field will soon be stopped in our land, and the soldiers have a rest. We have rarely known of a greater outburst of joy than was manifested when the tidings first came—"Lee has surrendered."

EXPLANATION.

The following extract from Bro. Himes' Journal, published in the Voice of the West, is given by request, to explain a statement made in the Crisis a few weeks since:—

Monday, Feb. 27. Attended a Bible class in Lowell Street Chapel. This was the fifth of a series following the discussion of Brn. Thurman and Stevenson. Bro. Hastings, Hudson, Stevenson, and others were invited to attend them in the beginning. They were free for the discussion of the subjects introduced relating to the Bible; and, also, the astronomical argument, each in their place. Bro. Hudson wished to know if he could speak on the astronomical argument on the first evening. I told him that we had arranged for a special Bible lesson, but that the subject would come up in its proper place, when he could give his views of Mr. Thurman's ability to calculate eclipses; or, he could have a private interview with him on the subject. For myself, I was satisfied that Mr. T. was not an imposter. A competent person had made sufficient examination to satisfy me in this matter; that Mr. T. had nothing to fear from the most critical examination. We gave Bro. Hudson and all who were disposed to criticise Bro. T., both during the discussion and afterwards, the liberty to question him, so that the whole audience were satisfied with the impartiality and fairness with which things were conducted.

Our class this evening took up the evidence of the birth of Christ in B. C. 5. And from Scripture, history, and astronomy it was made clear to all present that our Savior was born four years before the common era called Anno Domini. This being settled, the sixty-nine weeks, or 483 years, carried back from B. C. 5 bring us to B. C. 488, which is the first year of Cyrus, in which he gave the decree to restore and build Jerusalem. This to the class was clear of doubt. But Ptolemy's Canon, on the contrary, gives us B. C. 536 for the first year of Cyrus, which is an error of forty-eight years.

Note by Bro. Hudson.

Bro. Himes speaks as if I wished to speak in the Bible class "on the first evening." I am sure that there is a misapprehension. If the first evening was named, I certainly did not insist on it. I was willing to accept any evening of the Bible class. And Bro. Hastings, who was present, so understood me.

WHERE IS "THE SPIRIT LAND?"

We hear much in these days about a "spirit land" where people go at death; but it was not till quite recently that we have learned its locality. In the Banner of Light for Feb. 18th, 1865, we have a report a conversation with a Spirit on the subject, in the course of which the following question and answer are given:

Q.—Spirits teach us there is a spirit land, an emanation from this earth, outside of the earth-atmosphere. If so, will the controlling intelligence please tell us if said spirit land revolves in harmony with this earth? If not how do spirits always find just the precise spot they wish to go to in returning to earth?

A.—The spirit land is within you, not outside of you. You are not compelled to go sixty or seventy, or even a thousand miles, to find your spirit land. It is within you; consequently it is in harmony with you and your universal surroundings."

What kind of land must that be which is in a man? We wonder what the spirits will teach next.

RATHER IGNORANT.

In Bro. J. T. Curry's report of our discussion with Bro. Wendell, as published in the Herald of Life, when referring to Bro. Wendell's opponent, he says:—"He does not seem capable of understanding the simplest argument."

Is there no remedy, unless we embrace the non-resurrection of the wicked? What a blessing it must be to those who are "capable of understanding" a simple "argument." Shall we ever have that rich pleasure?

THE NEW BIRTH.

BRO. GRANT:—Will you, or some one of the many able contributors of the World's Crisis, write an article on the new birth, spoken of by our Savior to Nicodemus? John 3: 3. If the above request is complied with, it will confer a favor upon many inquirers after truth. J. N. WILLIAMS.

Ottawa, Minnesota.

If Bro. Williams will read carefully the two articles in the Crisis, April 4th and 11th, from Bro. O. R. Fassett, we think he will find a clear and satisfactory answer to his inquiry.

SHOULD SINNERS FIGHT?

BRO. GRANT:—I wish to know if it is the doctrine of the Crisis, "That while christians ought not to fight," it is not wrong for sinners? I have heard, that it was not as bad for sinners to fight as christians; and that they ought to do the fighting. Now, I hold that the principle of right and wrong is as binding on sinner as saint. One is as accountable before God as the other. Please state very plainly your views.

I still think the Crisis the best paper I can find, and should be very sorry if it advanced such sentiments, which I think it does not.

E. T. DAY.

We have often remarked on this point that we do not find evidence that Jesus has given two standards of right and wrong. If it is wrong for christians to lie, swear, steal, and murder, we believe it is wrong also for sinners to do it; if not, then what constitutes them sinners and others righteous? If it is wrong for christians to fight, then we cannot see why it is not for every one else. If the ways of sinners were right, then they must be righteous. We do not see how any one could defend such a position, unless he should claim there is no such thing as sin, as advocated by the demons and their followers.

THE SUEZ CANAL.

For many years the nations of Europe have felt anxious to have a road of navigation from the Mediterranean to the Red Sea. This great work has finally been accomplished by Napoleon III., which gives him much advantage over other powers. Truly, he is the master spirit of the times before whom the kings of other nations tremble; but he is on the rising tide. Says the Tribune:—

"M. Ferdinand de Lesseps gives public notice that his projected Ship Canal, uniting the Red Sea with the Mediterranean, was so far completed in 1864 that a daily boat has been run from Port Said to Suez since the first of last month—a large bark, towed by a steamer, and conveying twenty to thirty passengers, having passed from sea to sea within twenty-four hours. As yet, the depth of water would seem to be but four or five feet, with a width of thirty to forty; but it is confidently calculated that the canal will be prepared for effective transportation by April, when six steam-tugs are to be ready for service upon it.

This canal is ninety miles long, and is to have when completed, a minimum depth of twenty feet, with a width of 330 feet at the surface. It was commenced in 1859 by a private company, on a subscribed capital of $40,000,000. We infer that M. de Lesseps does not expect to complete it immediately, but to deepen it by degrees without interfering with its use. A British railroad, 222 miles long, passing from Alexandria through Cairo to Suez, has for some years afforded expeditious transit between the two seas."

INCREASE OF CRIME.

It is a notorious fact that wickedness and infidelity are on a rapid increase in our country, and every civilized land. Facts to sustain such a statement are abundant. And yet, many blind guides cry "peace and safety," and would try to persuade people that the world is growing better, instead of admitting the sad fact that nominal christendom is fast becoming so conformed to the world, that the difference is more in name than in reality. The word of the Lord declares that "in the last days" "evil men and seducers shall wax worse and worse." If it was not so, the prophecy could not be true.

Says the New York Mercury of April 1st, '65, under the head of "MANY MURDERS:"—

"It is noticeable, how in this fifth year of the war, the number of civil crimes is increasing. Some of the tragedies recently enacted in both the East and the West are of a terrible character, and the details of the executions succeeding them are almost as revolting as the original bloodshed. Cases where whole families have been butchered, and many of the crimes committed have been treacherous and unnatural beyond parallel. All this shows the slow, but certain demoralization of war, when life becomes so cheap, that bad men take it without compunction. We cannot now redeem the evil, and must be contented with remarking it, and regretting it."

Our Volunteer Agents.

REPORT FOR WEEK ENDING MARCH 25TH.

Whole number of new subscribers in the week, 37. By the efforts of the following brethren, 23:—

ONE EACH—By A. Amos, H. B. Bradley, J. A Blake, D Chase, J Garr, W S Farr, M. Grant, J Gay, S Hammond, S Nye, T W Piper, H D Reed, J Richardson, J Small, A Struve, I. J. Stedman, Martha Shaw, Mrs. M. W. Thrall, C. Willoughby.

TWO EACH—By S. P. Clark, I. K. Lombard.

FOR WEEK ENDING APRIL 1ST.

Total new subscribers in the week, 40. By the following brethren, 22:—

ONE EACH—By L. Boutell, Lydia M. Collins, C. Colburn, H. V. Davis, J. T. Dixon, Clarissa R. Danks, L Fellows, S Harding, Mrs. N M Henry, J G Hook, I K Lombard, A Persons, H D Reed, Julia M Slayer, J N Williams, J Wilbur, R O Whitaker.

TWO.—Mrs. A. E. Smith.

THIRTEEN—A. N. Seymour.

For the World's Crisis.

SOCIAL HYMNS.

The edition of this book has long been exhausted. I am now revising it, and intend to enlarge it to about twice its former size. Hope to issue it in May, and the price will be fifteen cents single. Orders will be filled as soon as possible. It has been delayed by my long absence. H. L. HASTINGS.

THE NEW $2000 TRACT FUND.

We, the undersigned, agree to give the sums affixed to our names, for the purpose of raising TWO THOUSAND DOLLARS to the Advent Christian Publication Society in the gratuitous distribution of tracts.

Previous donations	$730.35
J. Wilson	2.50
Mrs. M. A.	4.25
C. L. Burdick	2.50
Wolfboro	1.00
H. Hibbard	2.46
J. C. Boston	1.00
I. Loomis	.50

POOR FUND DONATIONS.

To pay for Papers sent to the Poor.

Whole number sent free 800. Amount $2000.00.

Previous donations	$363.22
Mrs. C. B. Knight	.60
Z. A. Waterhouse	2.00
C. L. Burdick	2.50
Wolfboro	1.00
Mrs. E. W. Ayer	.50
C. C. Dow	2.50

My Opinion of the World's Crisis.

Through the kindness of a christian neighbor, I have the privilege of reading the above paper. A privilege I do esteem it; for while it does not represent my views of the manner of Christ's second coming, I am pleased with its beautiful face, its learning, its christian spirit, its ability, and the choice character of its selections. I am not aware of any religious publication that more faithfully sets forth the evils of our times from which we are to flee, that more pointedly presents the graces of the spirit which we should cultivate, or has more timely suggestions for the family, for the young, and upon the wofully neglected subject of health. It gives me pleasure to write this brief, humble testimonial for any eye that may chance to read it.

LUCIUS HOLMES, Pastor.

Orange, Mass.

LIFE OF HIRAM MUNGER.

The Life and Religious Experience of Hiram Munger, including many singular circumstances connected with Campmeetings and Revivals. Written by Himself. 225 pages. Price 30 cents, postpaid.

This interesting autobiography of one of the most eccentric and original preachers among us has for some time been out of print, and it was doubtful whether another edition would be issued, especially while the present increased expenses of publishing continue. To meet the public demand, however, a neat pamphlet edition is now published, and ready for delivery, at about half the price of the former. This is probably the last edition that will ever be printed, as the plates are soon to be sold and melted. All, therefore, who would secure a copy of an entertaining and instructive book, will order in season, as but a small edition of five hundred is printed, for which we anticipate a rapid sale.

For the World's Crisis.

SICKNESS HAS HINDERED.

BRO. GRANT:—I wish to say through the Crisis, to the friends interested for us, that Mother Eaton has so far recovered from her severe illness of lung fever, that she is beginning to get about the house again. For some two weeks we all thought she must soon leave us—but the Lord is good.

Mother's sickness has delayed me somewhat in my work on the Sabbath question; but it is all right, as I now resume my work afresh. Some may think me slow in the preparation of this work for the press; but if I am a suitable judge, I am doing well, with the blessing of God. Since I gave notice several months ago, in regard to the probable time that would elapse before I could get the work ready, I have been reading Church History, and important works on the Sabbath question, for some four months of this time; taking notes, and collecting material which all lovers of truth, I hope, will be glad to see when arranged into a book. I can see the Lord's hand in leading me for a year or two past, especially. I did not take up this question of the Sabbath from personal choice, but by the earnest solicitation of friends. But I can now see the hand of the Lord in preparing this work for me, during my long confinement at home, in consequence of the sickness and death of my late beloved wife, and the old age and infirmities of Mother Eaton. Just one year and two days since I was called to bid farewell to my dear wife till the resurrection morn! And during this period, as I have been confined at home the most of the time, I have had my attention occupied with this work of the Sabbath, which I hope in the end will do more good to the cause of Christ, than though I had been out in the gospel field as in former years. Please, friends, wait patiently. It will pay. Pray for us, in this important hour, as I am now engaged in preparing and arranging the matter for the review of "J. N. Andrews'" history of the Sabbath. T. M. PREBLE.

East Weare, N. H. March 31, 1865.

For the World's Crisis.

LETTER FROM THE WEST.

Dear Brn. and Srs. of the household of faith: My labors this winter have been mostly confined to the churches at Big Creek, Cassel's Prairie, and West Point, in Sauk Co.; and most of the intervening time has been spent in the regions beyond, with encouraging results. The humble few rejoice, and the conviction seems to be settling down upon them more than ever, that redemption's day is nigh. The worldling for the moment stands in awe and amazement at the truths we preach, only to plunge again deeper into the all-absorbing themes of this world reserved unto fire. And the cold-hearted Pharisee as ever stands in his sanctified robes, and says, Heresy, heresy! Crucify him, crucify him! But I thank our heavenly Father, that although we are obliged to preach Christ to one class a stumbling-block, and to another foolishness, yet to a very few the power of God and the wisdom of God. 1 Cor. 1: 23, 24. And on the whole, children, I think the world is about ready for harvest. The latter rains are truly ripening the tares, and God grant that they may prepare the wheat for the garner of the Lord.

Perhaps a few words of experience with the military powers that be will be interesting, if not instructive. Last Nov. three of our brethren from the Big Creek church were drafted into the service of our country. Two of them, poor men and unable to raise $300, reported in time with papers, as they supposed, sufficient to admit them to other service than to bear arms; but their papers were found fault with, and they were forced into the service. Bro. Andrews, who was drafted on a supplementary draft, and was to report at another place, concluded there was no chance for him, and as he was decided not to bear arms, would let the law take its course, but subsequently thought that he would raise the commutation fee, got up the papers, and try to get the benefit of the seventeenth clause of the constitution act; not, however, till after Cæsar had sent his officers after him at his home, and he was held as a deserter and sent forward.

Under these circumstances I was sent for by Sr. Andrews, to make the trial to free him. But not to be tedious, I will simply add that, after a constant effort of two weeks, and a cost of nearly $400, Bro. A. is at home again, to the inexpressible joy of his dear family, and brethren and sisters in that place. In the mean time, I had the privilege of contending for the faith once delivered to the saints before the State Provost, at Madison, and also District Provost, at La Crosse; and I would say to the brethren in that district, that I think if you report in time to Capt. Cooper, Provost Marshal, with sufficient evidence that you are consistent non combatants, you can have the benefit of the law. And I would still add, that, it is a great deal better to be subject to the powers, than to try to evade them in any sense. Let us be peaceful subjects, and bear all things, hoping for that kingdom to come where there will be no more war.

Now, brethren, suffer a word further on the time question. Some eighteen years ago I became interested in the great truths that concern us as a people, and ever since then I have had an increasing faith that the time of the Lord's second coming is revealed, as well as the first, and that some time before the end somebody will know it. And I supposed we as a people were agreed on this; also, that according to the twenty-fifth of Matthew, some will expect him and be disappointed before the true time is understood. Has not this been fulfilled? And yet in all of this what is there to lessen our faith in the belief that true time is in the Bible, and that the wise shall understand? Therefore I have been a little surprised, to hear some of our brethren handling the seeming light that has been looming up from Bro. Thurman in the manner they have, even without investigation. Now, brethren, if I know anything of myself, I am not of an excitable nature, and abhor fanaticism, and believe that hundreds have made shipwreck of faith, and the devil has pushed them clear over the mark, on account of time failures. And yet I believe it is the duty of God's children still, when intelligently convinced, as they will be if the wise shall understand, to believe it again, and leave the consequences with Him whose we are. I am afraid, brethren, some of you want to steady the ark too much, and have stopped digging to know what God has revealed on this all-important subject. If you have, of course God must raise up some one else out of the ranks to do it. God is no respecter of persons, and his work must be done; and if in no other way, the stones would preach; and when his professed people get too big to know and preach what he commands, for fear of consequences, as has been the case in past days, he will raise up some one else. Brethren, we must not be jealous if he does, but be willing to take light from any source. The great Head of the church will give us light, and we shall be children of the light and of the day. God grant it. Amen.

G. W. TURNER.

For the World's Crisis.

SECOND QUARTERLY SESSION

Of the N. H. State Conference of 1865.

This session was held, according to appointment, in Concord, N. H., March 16th, 17th, 18th and 19th. The following ministers, who are members, were present:—J. Couch, J. W. White, J Knowles, S. S. Moony, A. Bean, B. P. Manning, A. W. Sibley. In the absence of the President and Vice President, the Secretary called the meeting to order, and Eld. J. Couch was chosen Chairman pro tem.

After the usual devotional exercises, a motion was made that the visiting brethren be invited to a seat, and participate in our deliberations, which was carried.

On motion, Bro. J. W. White, who was chosen Secretary pro tem at the last quarterly session, read the minutes of that session, which were adopted.

Bro. J. W. White, being chairman of the committee on the "Tract Fund," appointed at the last session held at Portsmouth, N. H., was called upon to report, which he did as follows: That they had received towards the Tract Fund of $200, $57.38, and that $55.85 had been expended for tracts, leaving a balance in their hands of $1.53.

The following resolutions were then presented by the Secretary, and adopted:

1st. Resolved, That a committee of three be appointed to supervise relative to raising the "Tract Fund" of $200, and purchasing and distributing such tracts as they deem proper.

2nd. Resolved, That the members of this conference act as a general committee in collecting money to make up the Tract Fund, and that they make a vigorous effort in this direction, and that they remit the money received to the committee of supervisors.

In accordance with the above resolutions, Elds. J. Couch, J. W. White and J. G. Smith were appointed as supervisors.

It was moved and carried that we commence our next quarterly session on the first day of next June. Then, on motion, the meeting adjourned till June 1st, 1865.

This was one of the best conferences that we ever attended. The spirit of the Master was indeed in our midst. There were those at this meeting who sought the Lord for the first time; and some in a backslidden state, that resolved to make another effort to serve the Lord anew, and were blessed in so doing. There was preaching during the meeting by the following Brn.:—J. W. White, Friday P. M.; A. W. Sibley, Friday evening; Saturday P. M., S. S. Mooney; Saturday evening, J. Couch; Sunday A. M., J. W. White; P. M., J. Couch; Sunday evening, A. W. Sibley. The rest of the time during the conference was improved in social meetings, and great blessings were the result. There was a love feast at nine o'clock Sunday morning, in which over fifty spoke of their love for Jesus, and of their determination to fight their way through to the kingdom. After the close of the sermon, Sunday P. M., a collection was taken, amounting to $18.00, for the purpose of making up the Tract Fund of two hundred dollars. Thus closed a good meeting with the tried friends of the cause in Concord.

A. W. SIBLEY, Secretary.

☞ When you have bought one fine thing, you must buy ten more, so that your appearance may be all of a piece.

For the World's Crisis.

OUR CONVENTION.

DEAR SISTERS:—As I have heard from many of our dear sisters, scattered abroad, who are laboring in the vineyard of the Lord, who desire to meet with us at this meeting, but have not the means to come, and as there are many who cannot come, but have means, I would propose that those who feel disposed to help these dear sisters to get to this meeting, would send what they feel it their duty to do, to the Editors of the World's Crisis and Voice of the West, so that these dear children who have been laboring through persecution and scoffings, and had their name cast out as evil, because they have dared to stand up for Jesus and his coming, and have labored without money and without price, may come to this feast of tabernacles, and speak for Jesus and his precious truth. I will give $5.00 to such a fund. Who will give $4.00, $3, $2, $1, 50 cts. or 25 cts.?

Say, who will come? Dear friends, you that have of this world's goods, don't be afraid to put it out to interest, for the Lord is sure to pay. You shall receive a hundred fold in this life, and when Jesus comes, life eternal. And you, my poor sister, come along to the convention. Work your passage; preach Jesus as you come, trust in God, and when you get there, the Lord will find the means to bring you home again. Don't be afraid to venture on the Lord. You know our Father is rich. He owns all the world. We intend to ask him to help us this one time. Several of our dear brethren have written to me, saying they would like to help on this great and good work.

Brethren, here is a chance for you to help. Don't let it pass without doing your duty. God will bless you for your work of love. Now, brethren and sisters, let us be up and doing. The judgment is right upon us, and let us do all the good we can before it overtakes the wicked. May the Lord bless this movement to the strengthening of our sisters, and his own honor and glory. Amen.

ANNA E. SMITH.

No. 128 East 24th St., New York.

For the World's Crisis.

WILL THE TIMES AND SEASONS EVER BE DEFINITELY KNOWN?

NUMBER THIRTEEN.

Then the quick and dead are judged at his appearing (Rev. 11: 18), it being the time of the dead that they should be judged, "and that thou shouldst give reward (eternal life) unto thy servants the prophets, and to the saints." Jude 14, 15,—"Behold, the Lord cometh with ten thousand of his saints, to execute judgment upon all." Dan. 12: 12, 13,—"Blessed is he that waiteth and cometh to the 1335 days (years). But go thou thy way till the end be, for thou shalt rest, and stand in thy lot at the end of the days."

We have also a clue to the time of the end by the observances of the passover; by the first fruits; by the feast of weeks; by the feast of tabernacles; by the feast of trumpets; and by the day of propitiation. It is also prophesied of by Hosea, 6: 2,—"After two days will he revive us. In the third day he will raise us up, and we shall live in his sight" at the resurrection of the saints. John says, "We know that when he (Christ) shall appear, we shall be like him, for we shall see him as he is."

It is said in John by Christ (14: 3), "I will come again, and receive you unto myself; that where I am, there ye may be also." As the days of Hosea could not mean natural days, they must be typical. As it reads in 2 Pet. 3: 8,—"Be not ignorant of this one thing, that one day is with the Lord as a thousand years, and a thousand years as one day." Christ speaks as if one of them had already commenced. "To-day and to-morrow," etc., Luke 13: 33. And if so, it must be between Hosea's prophesying and the time when Christ spake, about the time of the last of Daniel's monarchies began, one hundred and sixty years before Christ.

"After two days." "In the third day (the third thousand) he will revive us." "He will raise us up, and we shall live in his sight." God will bring his children from the dead at the glorious appearing of Jesus Christ. Some may say that God may have alluded to the time in an allegorical sense; but in that sense who can tell when they would end? It is enough that the wise will understand, and that God has revealed the time, and what is revealed is enough for us to know. Many say, Why did not God tell us in what year these events and numbers would end, or give such knowledge as all could understand? In Mark 4: 11, 12, read, "And he said unto them (his disciples, children of the kingdom), Unto you it is given to know the mystery of the kingdom of God." "But unto them (children of the wicked one) that are without, all these things are done in parables; that seeing they may see, and not perceive; and hearing they may hear, and not understand." Isaiah 6: 9:—"Hear ye indeed, but understand not, and see ye indeed, but perceive not." So also in Acts 28: 26.

Time may be a problem to some, but it is not so to others; for Daniel says that the wise shall understand, but the wicked shall not understand. I believe it with all my heart. The wicked are booked in many things of the world, but in the wisdom of God, or a knowledge of his word, they know nothing and care less.

Said a Presidential Elector to me, when talking on the affairs of Italy, "he did not believe that the powers of Europe would allow the temporal power of the Pope to be destroyed." I told him that all the powers of the world could not prevent it, as it was a subject of prophecy. There were a number present, who felt surprised that the Bible should be called in to decide the question. The Elector replied that "he had not studied the Bible in reference to the subject, but if it was a Bible truth, of course it could not be prevented." He made an honest confession. Many do not study the Bible. They would study anything else in preference to it. One of the company, a noted politician, spoke up in a scoffing manner, "What has prophecy to do with it?" I asked him what prophecy had to do with the fall of Jerusalem? No response was made. Thus they are, as Peter says, "willingly ignorant." And it may be said also of the people by Isaiah, that they are destroyed for lack of knowledge. "A famine in the land for the word of the Lord"; for in these last days they do not always get "meat in due season" out of the pulpits, for it is—Preach unto our itching ears "smooth things," and the priests live by that means.

"It may be said that the subject of time is dark. Says the Rev. C. H. Imbrie, in his sermon before the Presbyterian Synod of New Jersey, "Grant it dark, but remember the promise, at the time of the end many shall seek and shall find knowledge." Grant it dark; yet even respecting dark prophecies, can we blot out that declaration of God found in Rev. 1: 3,—"Blessed is he that readeth and they that hear this prophecy, for the time is at hand." The prophecy of Israel's return from Babylon was a dark prophecy; but as the time drew near, Daniel turned to the Scriptures and understood by books the number of the years. See Daniel 9: 2; Jeremiah 25: 11, 12. The prophecy respecting the first coming of Christ was a dark prophecy; but did that hinder any from knowing? No. Many stood waiting for the consolation of Israel. Herod, when he had heard of the star being seen in the east by the wise men, called all the chief priests and scribes together, and inquired of them where Christ should be born. What was their reply? They referred him to the Scriptures, to the prophecy of Micah, 5: 2,—"But thou, Bethlehem Ephratah," (meaning abundance, house of bread,—Christ is our bread of life). This signification of the place well accords with his divine mission. It is written in Matt. 4: 4, and Deut. 8: 3, that "man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word which proceedeth out of the mouth of the Lord doth man live." Christ declares that he is that bread. John 6: 33, 48,—"I am that bread of life, ... which cometh down from heaven," and giveth life unto the world; and through him we live, and may not die. This life is everlasting life. It is the gift of God, and can only be obtained by a patient continuance in well doing, seeking for immortality and eternal life through Jesus Christ. It was for our life that he poured out his soul unto death. The Son of man came to save that which was lost, viz: the first dominion—Paradise, the inheritance of the earth, and eternal life). "Though thou be little among the thousands of Judah, yet out of thee shall come forth He that is to be ruler (governor) in Israel, whose goings forth have been from of old, from everlasting"; or, as the translation of the Latin Vulgate has it, executed by Jerome at the request of Pope Demasus in the year 384, "from the beginning, from the days of eternity"; in the Notes, "from all eternity." Was the prophecy then dark? No. He believed the then present truth, that a Savior, a Christ, had come into the world. For he gave orders to search diligently for the young child, that he might worship him also; not in spirit and in truth, mind you, but a kind of mock worship, so that he might have an opportunity of taking the young child's life. For when he found that he was foiled by the wise men, he sent forth and slew all the children of Bethlehem and the coasts, to the number of fourteen thousand five hundred, of two years and under, according to the time which he had diligently inquired of the wise men.

New Sharon, Me. JOHN TAYLOR.

Correspondence.

From Bro. F. Kies.

BRO. GRANT:—I have been engaged for the last six weeks in laboring for the coming of the kingdom of God, and that in a way more extensive than I had hitherto. I have accepted invitations to preach in German and in English, and wherever they came from. Besides preaching, I have ventured to make use of the apostolic doctrine: visit the sick, pray over them, and the Lord Jesus will manifest himself the same to-day as yesterday. The execution of this part of Christ's doctrine is regarded by some as a crime, by others as a great blessing, especially by those that are comforted thereby.

The apostle Paul tells us the kingdom of God consisted not in words, but in power, that is, we may know much about it, be able to write, to talk, to dispute, and argue much about it, and yet be far from it; the power of the Spirit, the gifts of the Spirit, must be acquired, must be sought for, must be had, to labor with them; then we shall be efficient laborers; the world will see our good works and praise our Heavenly Father. O that a united effort were made by all who uprightly and sincerely seek after God's kingdom and its righteousness, to pray and prepare themselves for a pouring out of God's Spirit. Can it not be effected? Does the Lord not promise it? Does he not say, "Ask what ye will, it shall be done unto you." Our time, the sad condition of the christian church, demand it. Christ's followers are to possess and to inherit, are to rule and govern, are to be the salt and light of the world. Babylon will fall and is falling already.

Let us then become united in the Spirit of Christ, to do the work that is entrusted unto us. Let us do manfully that work, and give the testimony that the Lord requires at all times, but more especially in these days of apostasy. Your brother in Christ,

Beaver, O. FREDERIC KIES.

From Bro. J. S. Hindes.

Brethren and sisters, especially those that have written for the Crisis, I wish to say a few words to you through the Crisis, which I esteem the best religious paper I have ever seen. What makes this paper so good to me? The contributions I find in the Crisis suit my mind, and express my feelings better than I can find words to do it for myself. Now of all the papers I have ever seen, that of Vol. XX., No. 26, of March 14, 1865, is the best I ever saw. In general way, when I have taken up a common newspaper, I would not read the poetry, could not afford the time. It is not so when I read the Crisis. But what affected me mostly, were those articles named Golden Offerings. They started tears from my eyes. God bless those precious souls, and I have no doubts they will have part in the first resurrection, if they hold out faithful. I am nearly sixty-two years old, and am trying to labor for the Lord in his vineyard, and he blesses me. Pray for me.

Wilmington. J. S. HINDES.

From Bro. E. Burnham.

DEAR FRIENDS:—All glory to God! I have had a blessed winter. We had a glorious time at Dansville, N. Y. Many came to Christ. At first it was hard, but God wrought! At Henrietta there were about two hundred who started for the kingdom. O that was a great work of God. At Malone God triumphed; a blessed good host came to Jesus. In this place, now, (Fort Covington) the whole community is astir. All the churches are co-operating with me. Crowds cannot all get into the chapel. Many are coming to Christ. Praise the Lord. I am full of all comfort, as well as labor. My boy Fred. has been brought home from the Front. He is getting well of his severe wounds. My cup is full. Amen. EDWIN BURNHAM.

BRO. Z. A. WATERHOUSE writes from South Poland, Me.: "I have been a member of the Congregational church for twenty-five years. About four years ago, after hearing an Advent sermon, I commenced reading the Bible, to see what were its teachings, and I soon became convinced that I had been in an error. I can now embrace the Advent faith with all my heart, and am trying to live as the word of God teaches."

From a Methodist Preacher.

BRO. MILES GRANT:—Dear Sir,—A few chance numbers of the Crisis have fallen into my hands recently, and, though you and I cannot agree upon several very important Scriptural points, yet I do admire your boldness, and the fair proposals which you extend to your opponents. The free and full discussion of all differences is the only sure road to safety and truth. E. B. S., M. D.

Married.

In Fisherville, N. H., March 15th, by Rev. J. A. Smith, Bro. E. D. DREW, of Alton, N. H., and Sr. J. A. DIXON, of Fisherville.

In Worcester, April 6th, C. PARKMAN HINDS, of Chelsea, and GEORGIA HAMILTON, of Worcester.

In South Windsor, Feb. 12th, 1865, by Eld. Oliver Loomis, GEORGE MARSH, of Hartford, and EMMA J. SQUIRREL, of South Windsor.

Obituaries.

F. H. PARTRIDGE.

Died in W. Poland, Me., March 6th, 1865, of consumption, Miss Frances H. Partridge, aged thirty-two years and seven months.

Miss P. from a child was naturally frail, and for this reason required and received much care from her two aunts, with whom she always lived. Her affection for them was strong, and they loved her, and this love prompted them to do all they could for her in life, and caused them to deeply lament her in death. She has also left a mother, who before this event has been deeply afflicted, and a brother and sisters to mourn. She never made a public profession, but always manifested a regard for it. Some weeks before her death she became earnestly thoughtful, and, I think, gave all for Christ. Her friends have this to console them. She sleeps in Jesus, and will awake ere long, no more to suffer and no more to die.

Funeral attended by the writer.

THE FAREWELL.

Composed by the bedside of Frances H. Partridge, a short time before she died.

Farewell, dear Fanny, thou must go,
We cannot wish thy longer stay,
'Tis hard to part with thee, we know,
Thy sufferings bid us break away.

Our love for thee still deep and strong,
Thy heart with ours doth intertwine;
But pain has wasted thee so long,
At death we cannot now repine.

Go, sleep in Jesus! rest in hope,
Till sounding from the upper skies,
The trump of God shall call thee up,
When all the sainted millions rise.

Could we restore health's freshness now,
And speak its lustre to thine eye,
How quickly should the monster go,
We could not give thee up to die.

But this, alas! we cannot do;
Yet Jesus can, he comes at length,
Thy wasting form he shall renew,
And fill it with immortal strength.

Then go, frail child! we give thee up;
Farewell! upon the other shore
We'll meet again—O blessed hope!
We'll meet again to part no more.

JAS. A. LIBBY.

FLORENCE A. RICE.

Died in Northfield, Rice Co., Minn., Sept. 22nd, 1864, Florence Adell, youngest daughter of Sylvester H. and Elizabeth J. Rice, aged eight months and fifteen days.

But nineteen months before her death we laid away in the cold grave a lovely little girl of nineteen months. O, it is like severing flesh from bone to part with them; and it makes us more earnestly long for the time when this vast charnel-house shall cast out its dead, when the innocent and good shall inherit that land, where the sigh of sorrow will no more cause the bosom to upheave, where grief and tears will no more leave their sad impress on the brow, where farewell words shall never be spoken.

Bright angels guard thy sacred dust,
And watch thy soft repose;
And when God makes his jewels up,
The grave shall thee disclose.

ELIZABETH J. S. RICE.

EDDIE G. COBURN.

Died at Lynn, Jan. 29th, 1865, Eddie G. Coburn, only remaining child of Gilman R. and Susie A. Coburn, aged three years, thirteen days.

"It is well with the child."

Gone from our fold our little lamb,
But though it from our sight remove,
Yet while it rests upon his arm,
The Shepherd watcheth it in love.

We follow on with grief oppress,
O'er rugged ways and mountains steep,
But gently through the wilderness
The Shepherd bears our lamb asleep.

Weary through this dark wild we stray,
With broken hearts and tearful eyes,
Yet the Good Shepherd leads the way,
And pastures green before us rise.

Shepherd divine, we long to see
Thy living streams, thy pastures fair,
There may we meet with thine and thee,
And find our lamb in safety there.

M. L. H.

SARAH O. LIBBY.

Died in Biddeford, Me., March 18, 1865, Sarah O., wife of Bro. John C. Libby, aged thirty-four years and six months.

Sister Libby, after suffering with a lingering disease for two years, bade adieu to her friends, and quietly fell asleep in Jesus. She bore her sufferings with christian fortitude and patience. The hope of a future life, freed from sufferings, was a great source of consolation to her during all her afflictions. She leaves a kind husband, brothers, and other relatives to mourn her departure. May this afflictive dispensation be sanctified to the good of all, so that we may meet her, with all the redeemed throng in the "world to come."

A. W. SIBLEY.

LUCY HAYNES.

Died in Richmond, N. B., March 8th, 1865, Lucy J., daughter of Bro. Peter and Sr. Mary A. Haynes, aged thirteen years and nine months.

Sr. Lucy was baptized by Bro. M. W. Corliss nearly three years ago. She bore her sickness cheerfully, and met the grim monster with a firm trust in God. May the Lord bless this bereavement to the good of the mourning circle. Sermon by the writer, March 16th, from Rev. 21: 4.

JOHN R. HALL.

SARAH MARSH.

Died, Sunday, April 2nd, 1865, Sarah A., wife of Zebuna Marsh, aged fifty-three years.

Sister Marsh has been a great sufferer for six years, but she bore it with christian fortitude, and died at last, in the full triumphs of faith in a resurrection from among the dead.

"And when that bright morning
In splendor shall dawn,
Our tears will be ended,
Our sorrows all gone."

Words of comfort were spoken by the writer, from Job 14: 10. GEO. CHAMPLIN.

ALZINA AND JOSEPHINE WALDRON.

Fell asleep in Jesus, in Portland, Me., on the 5th of February, of diphtheria, Alzina, aged thirteen years; and on the 23d of February, at the same place, of consumption, aged fifteen years, Josephine, daughters of Bro. S. H. Waldron.

They sleep in Jesus, and their friends are comforted with the blessed hope of a soon coming resurrection to life and immortality.

☞ The deficit in the pontifical budget for 1865 is calculated at six millions of Roman crowns (about £1,000,000 sterling).

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

Liverpool March 25th, Queenstown 26th.

Capt. Anderson of the China has been appointed to the command of the Great Eastern during the laying of the Atlantic Cable, and will sail from Valencia, Ireland, about the first of July. The British Admiralty have agreed to order two powerful steamers of the navy to accompany the great Eastern.

THE FENIANS IN LIVERPOOL.—From what has transpired during the last few days, and from what has come to the knowledge of our Liverpool correspondents, the Fenian Brotherhood in that town are fast extending their precious and revolutionary doctrines. Liverpool, it appears, has been selected by the head authorities of the Fenians in America, and Ireland as the "centre" of the brotherhood in England, and its position as a seaport renders the actions of the agents here of a very satisfactory nature—to themselves of course. There appears to be no mystery about their movements; everything appears to be done above board, with the exception of the "swearing" part of the business; and it is known in well informed quarters that the number of "sworn" Fenians now in Liverpool exceeds that of the town when it was the English centre in the palmiest days of Ribbonism.—English Paper.

DOMESTIC.

New York, April 6. The Herald's correspondence from the late mansion of Jeff. Davis in Richmond, says the evacuation of that city was seriously contemplated several days before it took place, but the final decision was not arrived at until Sunday afternoon last, when Lee telegraphed to Davis that Grant had rendered the holding of the city by him impossible. This telegram was read in the churches, and the departure of the leading rebels commenced at once and was continued through the night. Jeff. Davis left at 1 P. M. for Danville, and it is understood the government archives were sent to that place and Milton, N. C.

The city was fired by Gen. Ewell, and although Gen. Weitzel on reaching the city endeavored to extinguish the flames, one-third of the place was destroyed. Among the buildings burned were the War Department, Post-office, Treasury Department, several churches, two banks and three newspaper offices.

It was understood to have been Lee's design to reach Danville, Va., and there fortify and make another stand. This plan Sheridan's movement has frustrated, and Lee is now apparently endeavoring to get to Lynchburg.

The works in front of Richmond consist of three strong lines wholly enveloping the city. The outer ones are continuous, and the inner one consists of a series of strong redoubts and bastion forts. All these mounted upward of 300 guns, and would when properly garrisoned form an almost impassable series of defenses. Torpedoes were thickly strewn all over the ground, marked with little flags for the safety of the rebels, but which they neglected to remove in their hasty flight, and thus saved many of the lives of our men when marching into Richmond. The second line was found equally as strong as the first excepting as to abattis and torpedoes. The third line is just outside the edge of the town and situated on high ground. These works, like the others, mount heavy guns.

Davis received Lee's dispatch to evacuatate while in church. He took on the train on which he escaped horses and carriages, so as to take to the country in case the road was interrupted. He expressed himself as being yet determined not to give up, though it was certain he had but little hope left. Extra Billy Smith did not leave until after midnight. He left his wife behind, as also did Gen. Lee. The news of the death of her son, W. H. F. Lee, in the battles, has been received.

The Legislature was in session as late as 9 o'clock on Sunday evening, when the members started for Columbia by the canal and James River. Breckinridge left the city as late as 6¼ o'clock on Monday morning. A number of rebel officers were arrested in the city and paroled.

The Times' Richmond correspondent says the famous Libby prison is now filled with rebel prisoners captured on Monday morning.

It was reported that Lee expected to reach Danville, where he would be reinforced by Hardee and make another stand. Great suffering is caused to poor families by the rebels firing the city, many being rendered houseless.

The World's correspondence says the machinery of the famous Tredegar works in Richmond were sent Danvilleward a fortnight ago, also that of all the factories. Davis is said to have carried with him about $300,000 in specie. Gen. Lee was in Petersburg until the evacuation on Sunday, and was very fretful and despondent. The fighting was mainly under the direction of Longstreet. In the death of Hill, Lee lost a valuable Lieutenant, which aided much in depressing his spirits. Grant's pursuit is in three columns.

Memphis, Tenn., April 8. The Bulletin of this evening says a report prevails and is well authenticated that Selma, Ala., was captured and burned a few days ago by Gen. Thomas' cavalry force.

New York, April 10. The Goldsboro', N. C., correspondent of the associated press, under date of the 6th inst., states that rebel deserters and refugees report that the enemy have evacuated Raleigh, and there is no force of any account between Goldsboro' and Raleigh.

Philadelphia, April 10. Forney's Press has a report that Gen. Stoneman has cut the railroad between Danville and Greensboro', and Sherman has occupied Raleigh.

Surrender of Lee and his whole Army!

War Department, Washington, April 9, 1865—9 o'clock, P. M.

To Maj Gen. Dix, New York:

This Department has received the official report of the surrender this day of Gen. Lee and his army to Lieut. Gen. Grant, on the terms proposed by Gen. Grant. Details will be given as speedily as possible. EDWIN M. STANTON, Secretary of War.

CONDITIONS OF THE SURRENDER.

Headquarters Armies of the United States, 4.30 P. M., April 9.

Hon. Edwin M. Stanton, Secretary of War:

Gen. Lee surrendered the Army of Northern Virginia this afternoon upon the terms proposed by myself. The accompanying additional correspondence will show the conditions fully.

U. S. GRANT, Lieutenant-General.

April 9, 1865.

General—I received your note of this morning on the picket line whither I had come to meet you and ascertain what terms were embraced in your proposition of yesterday with reference to the surrender of this army. I now request an interview in accordance with the offer contained in your letter of yesterday for that purpose. Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

R. E. LEE, General.

To Lieutenant General Grant, Commanding United States Armies.

April 9, 1865.

Gen. R. E. Lee, Commanding Confederate States Armies.

Your note of this date is but this moment (11.50 A. M.) received, in consequence of my having passed from the Richmond and Lynchburg road. I am at this time writing about four miles west of Walter's Church, and will push forward to the front for the purpose of meeting you. Notice sent to me on this road where you wish the interview to take place will meet me. Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

U. S. GRANT, Lieutenant-General.

Appomattox Court House, April 9, 1865.

Gen. R. E. Lee, Commanding C. S. A.

In accordance with the substance of my letter to you of the 8th inst., I propose to receive the surrender of the Army of Northern Virginia on the following terms, to wit:

Rolls of all the officers and men to be made in duplicate, one copy to be given to an officer designated by me, the other to be retained by such officers as you may designate. Officers to give their individual parole not to take up arms against the Government of the United States until properly exchanged, and each company or regimental commander sign a like parole for the men of their commands. The arms, artillery and public property to be paraded and stacked and turned over to officers appointed by me to receive them. This will not embrace the side arms of the officers nor their private horses or baggage. This done, each officer and man will be allowed to return to their homes, not to be disturbed by the United States authority so long as they observe their parole and the laws in force where they may reside. Very respectfully, U. S. GRANT, Lieut. General.

Headquarters Army Northern Virginia, April 9, 1865.

Lieut. Gen. U. S. Grant, Commanding United States Armies.

General—I have received your letter of this date containing the terms of surrender of the Army of Northern Virginia as proposed by you. As they are substantially the same as those expressed in your letter of the 8th inst., they are accepted. I will proceed to designate the proper officers to carry the stipulation into effect. Very respectfully, your obedient servant, R. E. LEE, General.

The following is the previous correspondence between Lieut. Gen. Grant and Gen. Lee, referred to in the foregoing telegram to the Secretary of War.

Clifton House, Va., April 9, 1865.

Hon. Edwin M. Stanton, Secretary of War:

The following correspondence has taken place between Gen. Lee and myself. There has been no relaxation in the pursuit during its pendency.

U. S. GRANT, Lieutenant-General.

April 7, 1865.

Gen. R. E. Lee, Commanding C. S. A.:

General—The result of the last week must convince you of the hopelessness of further resistance on the part of the Army of Northern Virginia in the struggle. I feel that it is so, and regard it as my duty to shift from myself the responsibility of any further effusion of blood by asking of you the surrender of that portion of the Confederate States Army known as the Army of Northern Virginia. Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

U. S. GRANT, Lieutenant-General, Commanding Armies of the United States.

April 7, 1855.

General—I have received your note of this date. Though not entirely of the opinion you express of the hopelessness of further resistance on the part of the Army of Northern Virginia, I reciprocate your desire to avoid useless effusion of blood, and therefore, before considering your proposition, ask the terms you will offer on condition of its surrender. R. E. LEE, General.

To Lieut. Gen. Grant, Commanding Army of United States.

April 8, 1865.

To Gen. R. E. Lee, Commanding Confederate States Army:

General—Your note of last evening in reply to mine of the same date asking the conditions on which I will accept the surrender of the Army of Northern Virginia, is just received. In reply, I would say that, peace being my first desire, there is but one condition that I insist upon, viz., that the men surrendered shall be disqualified for taking up arms against the Government of the United States until properly exchanged. I will meet you, or designate any officers you may name for the same purpose, at any point agreeable to you, for the purpose of arranging definitely the terms upon which the surrender of the Army of Northern Virginia will be received. Very respectfully, your obedient servant, U. S. GRANT, Lieutenant-General, Commanding Armies of the United States.

April 8, 1865.

General—I received at a late hour your note of to-day in answer to mine of yesterday. I did not intend to propose the surrender of the Army of Northern Virginia, but to ask the terms of your proposition. To be frank, I do not think the emergency has arisen to call for the surrender, but as the restoration of peace should be the sole object of all, I desire to know whether your proposals would tend to that end. I cannot, therefore, meet you with a view to surrender the Army of Northern Virginia. But as far as your proposition may affect the Confederate State forces under my command and tend to the restoration of peace, I should be glad to meet you at 10 A. M., on the old stage road to Richmond, between the picket lines of the two armies. Very respectfully, your obedient servant, R. E. LEE,

General, Confederate States Armies.

To Lieut. Gen. Grant, Commanding Armies of the United States.

April 9, 1865.

To Gen. Lee, Commanding Confederate States Armies:

General—Your note of yesterday is received. As I have no authority to treat on the subject of peace the meeting proposed for 10 A. M. to-day could lead to no good. I will state, however, General, that I am equally anxious for peace with yourself, and the whole North entertain the same feeling. The terms upon which peace can be had are well understood. By the South laying down their arms, they will hasten that most desirable event, save some thousands of human lives, and hundreds of millions of property not yet destroyed. Sincerely hoping that all our difficulties may be settled without the loss of another life, I subscribe myself, your obedient servant,

U. S. GRANT, Lieutenant-General United States Army.

War Department, Washington, April 9, 1865.

Lieut. Gen. Grant:

Thanks be to Almighty God for the great victory which He has this day crowned you and the gallant armies under your command. The thanks of this Department and of the Government and of the people of the United States, their reverence and honor, have been deserved, and will be tendered to you and the brave and gallant officers and soldiers of your army for all time.

EDWIN M. STANTON, Secretary of War.

War Department, Washington, D. C., 10 o'clock P. M., April 9, 1865.

Ordered, That a salute of 200 guns be fired at the headquarters of every army post and arsenal in the United States, and at the Military Academy at West Point, on the day of the receipt of this Order, in commemoration of the surrender of Gen. R. E. Lee and the Army of Northern Virginia to Lieut. Gen. Grant and the army under his command. Report of the receipt and execution of this Order to be made to the Adjutant General, Washington. EDWIN M. STANTON, Secretary of War.

Capture of Richmond.

Of course our readers have all heard of the capture of Richmond, the rebel capitol, before this time, but the following account of the burning of the city by the rebels just before they evacuated it, will be read with interest. It was given by Carleton, the correspondent of the Boston Journal, April 7th. He says:—

"When Major Stevens entered the city, the flames were leaping from house to house, and devouring block after block in the centre of the town. Capt. Percy went to see about the Arsenal, but found it on fire. It contained several thousand shells, which began to explode, scattering firebrands in every direction, filling the air with iron fragments, driving the people from that section of the city.

The poor people helped themselves to the commissary supplies, broke open stores, and made free with whatever they saw. Some of the citizens rushed to the liquor stores, and with commendable forethought dashed in the heads of several hundred barrels of whiskey.

The prisoners in the Libby prison were removed on Saturday evening, being sent off by the Danville road. The flames spread towards the Penitentiary, and the convicts were set at liberty. The building was burned, and the city has now this class of depraved men at large.

On—on—from building to building—from warehouse to warehouse—from store to hotel from hotel to banks—to the newspaper offices—to churches—all along Main street from near the Spottswood House to the eastern end of the town—back to the river—to the bridges across the James—up to the large stone fire proof building, erected by the United States for a post office, now full of Confederate promises to pay—all around this building, on both sides of it—up to the Capitol square, the flames leaped, licking up all the business part of the city. Strange to say, the Spottswood Hotel is saved. I look out from my window upon a mass of ruin—of tall chimneys, of tottering walls, upon streets impassable from piles of brick and stones and rubbish, upon smoking ruins. Richmond is a sea of fire to-night. It is the most complete scene of devastation I ever beheld, excepting Charleston. There the streets echoed only to my own footsteps and to the cry of buzzards, but here I look down from my window to-night upon a woe-begone crowd of human beings, gazing at the ruins, moving here and there, gathering up broken furniture. Elaborate cornices, marble mantels, broken looking glasses, piles of bedding, chairs, tables, barrels and boxes, are piled in Capitol square. The ground is thick with feathers, with broken crockery, with scattered books and papers—debris of all kinds. Millions of dollars will not cover the loss. All the banks—all the newspaper offices except the Whig and the Examiner—the bridges across the Appomattox—Dr. Reed's Presbyterian Church—hundreds of houses and acres of ground—the heart of the city is eaten out.

Four years ago, on the second Sunday in April, there was great rejoicing in Richmond when the flame of war lighted around Sumter; but what a contrast is the scene of to-day! Men who swung their hats and hurrahed on that occasion, who celebrated it by drunken orgies, who looked forward to dominion and empire, walk these streets tonight penniless, poverty-stricken, broken-hearted, beholding a future illumined by no ray of hope. The flame of war has consumed them at last. Loud and long and terrible are their execrations of Jeff. Davis and Ewell, but they forget the part they have taken, that they urged on secession, hurrahed for it, prayed for it, gave thanks for the victory of Manassas. They forget that God's throne is built on justice—justice on earth as well as in heaven.

When Major Stevens entered the city the people were beholding the fire, and making little effort to stay its progress. He issued an order calling upon the police and fire department to set about extinguishing the flames. Citizens were pressed into the service, and thus the flames were stopped at last."

☞ The military districts of Utah, Colorado and Nebraska have been merged into one, and will be known as the District of the Plains. Brigadier General Conner is assigned to the command.

Notices.

Illinois Annual Conference.

The Illinois Second Advent Christian Conference will hold its annual session at New Rutland, La Salle Co., commencing on Wednesday, May 24th, 1865, and continuing during the week and over Sunday. As this is in some respects the most important conference during the year, it is desirable to have a FULL ATTENDANCE.

Rutland is on the Illinois Central Railroad, some forty miles below Mendota.

E. ROYCE, Secretary.

Notice.

The next annual meeting of the Iowa Christian Conference will be held at Manchester, Delaware Co., Iowa, commencing June 15th, 1865, and continuing over the first day. Strangers may call on Bro. Cooley near the depot. Dear brethren, let this be the largest gathering of the kind we have ever had. Come laden with grace, to work for the salvation of sinners.—Voice copy.

H. H. JANES, Pres.
P. S. W. DEYO, Conf. Clerk.

Notice.

Preaching brethren from abroad who wish to preach with the brethren at Dover, N. H., are requested to correspond with me, in relation to the subject, that their notice may not conflict with other appointments.

EDWARD BLAISDELL, Corresponding Secretary.

Dedication.

The new chapel in Chichester, N. H. (Pine Ground), will be dedicated on Saturday, Apr. 29th, 1 o'clock, P. M. Preaching on the following Sabbath. J. COUCH.

Appointments.

We would say to our preaching Brethren that it is necessary we should receive their appointments as early as TUESDAY MORNING, as our paper goes to press about noon; otherwise they will not be inserted till the week following.

LOWELL STREET CHAPEL, BOSTON, CORNER OF CAUSEWAY AND LOWELL STREETS. Meetings are held regularly three times every Sunday, and Tuesday and Friday evenings. Seats free.

LOWELL STREET CHAPEL.

J. S. White........Sunday, April 16th

EAST HALL, BOSTON.

Wm. C. Thurman........Sunday, April 16th
J. K. Bellows........Sunday, April 23d

Lowell, Mass., Friday and Saturday evenings, April 14th and 15th.
Cordaville, Mass........April 23d
Philadelphia, Pa........April 30th and May 7th
MILES GRANT.

Hartford, Ct........Sunday, April 16th
Wallingford, Ct........Monday evening, April 17th
Arrive on the second train from Hartford.
New Haven, Ct., (where Bro. Tompkins appoints), Tuesday evening, April 18th.
Bristol........Sunday, April 23d
M. BATCHELOR.

Worcester, Mass........April 16th
West Abington, Mass........May 7th
C. C. RAMSAY.

Manchester........April 23d
J. COUCH.

Warren, Ore Hill, N. H........April 23d
L. C. GLAZIER.

Portland........Sunday, April 16th
South Poland........April 23d
JESSE PARTRIDGE.

Clinton, Mass........Sunday, April 16th
Haverhill, Mass........Sunday, April 23d
Providence, R. I., (as Bro. Doughty may arrange), April 26th, and over Sunday. J. K. BELLOWS.

Chichester, N. H., (Dover (school-house)........April 16th
Northwood Narrows........April 23d
Z. FORD.

Springfield, Mass., (Barnes' Block)........April 16th
Meredith, N. H., (where the brethren may appoint), Sunday, April 23d.
Holden, Mass........Sunday, April 30th
Worcester, Mass........Sunday, May 7th
A. SIMPSON.

Elliot, Me........April 30th
Portsmouth, N. H........May 7th and 14th
Plymouth, Mass........May 21st
Westboro, Mass........May 28th
Philadelphia, Penn........June 4th
and remain as long as duty demands.
F. H. BURBANK.

Brookfield........April 15th and 16th
New Durham Ridge, N. H........Tuesday eve, April 18th
Dover, N. H........April 19th
Rye, N. H........April 23d
A. ROSS.

Pittsfield, N. H., (at New Chapel), Sunday, April 16th
Bare Hill (school-house), Saturday evening and Sunday evening, April 15th and 16th.
Sutton, N. H., (where Bro. Jesse A. Hazen may appoint), Saturday eve., and Sunday, April 22d and 23d
Waterloo, Warner, N. H........Monday eve., April 24th
East Canaan, N. H., Saturday evening, and Sunday, April 29th and 30th. JOHN O. HOOK.

Hinsdale, N. H........April 23d
Charlemont, Mass., (where Brn M. Hicks and Cudworth may appoint), Sunday, April 30th, and in the evening at Griswoldville. B. F. STREETER.

Waterloo, (Warner)........April 16th
Bradford, N. H........Sunday, April 23d
Concord, N. H........Sunday, April 30th
JOSEPH W. WHITE.

Agawam, Mass........Sunday, April 16th
West Stafford, Ct........Sunday, April 23d
Scitico, Ct........Sunday, April 30th
I. B. POTTER.

Portsmouth, N. H........Sundays, April 23d and 30th
Ashburnham, Mass........May 7th
Lunenberg, Mass........May 14th
S. S. BREWER.

FOR THE CHURCH IN GLOUCESTER.

Eld. H. Hopkins........Sunday, April 16th
Eld. E. Bellows........Sunday, April 23d
Eld. D. O. Hopkins........Sunday, May 7th
(If stormy, the next Sunday.)

West Gloucester, (in the neighborhood of Bro. Hawkins)........Sunday, April 16th
E. BELLOWS.

Sommersville, (Universalist Church)........April 23d
R. WILLIAMS.

Warehouse Point, Ct........Sunday, April 23d
Agawam........Sunday, April 30th
P. S. BUTLER.

North Canton, Conn........Sunday, April 16th
(Will Bro. Ripley meet me there?)
Wallingford Farms, Conn........Sunday, April 23d
B. HITCHCOCK.

Danielsonville, Ct........Sunday, April 16th
East Killingly........April 23d
H. PRATT.

Prospect, Ct., (at Bro. Mix's)........Sunday, April 23d
Yalesville, Ct........Sunday, April 30th
O. D. WOODRUFF.

Clark's Mills, R. I........Sunday, April 16th
H. L. HASTINGS.

Lawrence, Mass........Sunday, April 16th
C. F. HUDSON.

East Boston........Sunday, April 16th
A. W. SIBLEY.

Plainville, Ct........April 16th
Worcester, Mass........Sunday, April 29th
H. MUNGER.

Athol........Sunday, April 16th
J. HEMENWAY.

Haverhill........Sunday, April 16th
Lee, N. H........Sunday, April 23d
Kennebunk Port, Me........April 30th
A. MUSSEY.

West Hoosic, N. Y., (Advent Chapel)........April 29th and over the Sabbath.
Pittstown, N. Y........May 1st and 2nd
North Easton, N. Y........May 3d, 4th and 5th
North Bennington, Vt........May 6th and over the Sabbath.
South Shaftsboro........May 8th and 9th
WM. J. BLANCHARD.

Dover, N. H........April 16th
C. S. EMERSON.

North Salem, N. Y., (as brethren may arrange), Sunday, April 16th.
Plymouth Hollow, Ct........Sunday, April 30th
Wrightville........Wednesday evening, May 3d
GEO. L. TEEPLE.

North Springfield, Vt., (as Bro. Cook shall arrange), Sunday, April 16th.
Newfane, Vt........evenings of April 19th and 20th
West Brattleboro, Vt........Sunday, April 23d
Northfield Farms, Mass........Sunday, April 30th
WM. W. SUTHERLAND.

Lovely Street........April 16th
Bakerville, (as Bro. Harris may arrange)........April 23d
North End, (at the dwelling of D. Baker)........April 30th
H. ROCKWELL.

Biddeford........Sunday, April 16th
Hollis........Sunday, April 23d
South Windham........Sunday, April 30th
Windham Center........Tuesday, May 2d
and between as opportunities offer.
E. SPAULDING.

Kennebunk, Me........Sunday, April 16th
C. [illegible]

East Stoneham, Me........Sunday, April 16th
Bryant's Pond........Tuesday evening, April 18th
Franklin........Wednesday evening, April [illegible]
Hartford........Thursday evening, April [illegible]
South Livermore........Friday evening, April [illegible]
Wayne, (as Bro. Hanscome may appoint), Saturday and Sunday, April 29th and 30th.
Vienna, (as Bro. [illegible] may appoint) Monday, May 1st
Rome........Tuesday, May 2nd
Starks, (as Bro. Griffin may appoint), Wednesday, May 3d.
Exeter, (Greenbush school-house)........Sunday, May 7th
L. K. LOMBARD.

Holden, Mass........April 16th
GEO. A. STREETER.

Nottingham, (where Bro. Geo. Randall may appoint), Sunday, April 16th. J. PINKHAM.

Pine Swamp, Ct........Sunday, April 16th
C. GOODRICH.

Concord........Sunday, April 16th
South Candia, (meeting-house, where Eld. Reynolds formerly preached)........Sunday, April 23d
S. S. MOONEY.

Business.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

J. S. Moulton—Have none of the small hymn books on hand.

P. Rockwood—You are right. She had paid to 438. $2.50 due.

R. K. Benner—Received. Paid to No. 520.

CASH RECEIPTS FOR THE CRISIS.

To find how your account stands.

The present No. of the Crisis is 497. The No. which follows your name is the No. to which you have paid.

If the No. paid to, is greater than the present No., the difference shows how many weeks you have paid for in advance. If the No. paid to, is less than the present No., the difference shows for how many weeks you owe.

For every week of indebtedness before No. 468, charge (at the old rate) four cents; and, for every week of indebtedness since No. 468, charge (at the new rate) five cents,—and you have the amount due the office. (This, however, will give a trifle more than the amount due. To make it exact, deduct four cents for every dollar due before No. 468, and five cents for every dollar due since No. 468.)

$1.00 each.—S. McCluer 516, T. Perry 496, L. Allen 510, O Glines 539, A P Hyde 470, L Burgess 549, M A Clark 530, D B Salter 489, E Merrick 500, G W Atkins 515, M. Morehouse 523, P. Rockwood 491, D. K. Lyon 526, L Chamberlain (what P. O.?) M Saunders 512, R. Osborn 492.

$1.25 each.—B Sampson 513, W. Pullen 525, S Bradley 520, M E Blodgett 521, L T Marsh 517, G W Whiting 520, L S Ford 520, N. Lazell 520, W. G. Ruggles 527, C Brigham 521, C Walker 521, L C Collins 545, M Phillips 521, J. Morrill 546, J. Robinson 522, J. Stanley 487, L Allen 520, S P Goodsell 540, J Young 520, E G Emmons 520, E. G. Higgins 520, M. K. Drury 506, W Lucas 521, M McLanathan 520, P M Loudon 517, S Upson 521, J Roby 521, W O Churchill 546, J Mann 522, T Williams 522, G L Rice 520, J H Harding 521, A. G. Case 521, C H Pickering 520, G W Caverly 521, C Lovis 518, H. Tripp 536, E. J. Pennell 504, T. L. Hull 510, J. Lyle 536, G Hamilton 520, Mrs. L Darbee 520, W Kirby 517, E Bates 530, W Vreeland 520, T Woodward 515, J. Alexander 520, J J Pine 520.

$1.50 each—G. James 505, L. Bunker 524, Mrs. T. Clark 526, S O Parker 520, Mrs. J K Marshall 518, M G Wise 515, N G Ridley 520, G W Sherman 525.

$2.00 each—J. Huyck (what State?) H. J. Hunt 480, G W Foster 512, J C Lambert 526, H W Buxton 516, G W. Stevens 489, C Ware 496, L L Cross (what P. O.?) Mrs. O Young 616, A Davis 429, B F Wilkins 364, W. Calderwood 507, J N Hines 505, G R Tyzzer 549, H. C. Smith 534, E Oakes 522, H Towle 532, S Bray 529, Mrs A Kneeble 523, E A Ricker 523.

$2.50 each—S T Clark 534, F A Dorr 551, O Gould 548, G W Buckley 533, P K Towne 547, S Wright 547, J C Baston 546, E Jones 546 J B Burgess 517, H Chace 533, R Paul 549 Mrs E Sage 520, A A Adams 551, E Young 538, A Bowerman 540, J Devitt 535, S Kelsey 547, J Chickering 521, M Curtis 526, J B Fuller 518, M McCrimmon 537, J Wilson 540, J Thompson 546, W Jordan 520, N Smith 572, S E Pike 548, E F Darling 557, J B Morgan 533, M O French 544, J P Barnes 520, C H Nute 564, J H Harding 345, M G Page 551, R Hinkley 546, R B Smith 556, N F Berry 529, J W Elliot 546, S Bliss 546, G Wheeler 546, Mrs D Perry 546, N W Sanborn 525, C Colburn, 550, J Davis 538.

$3.00 each—S W Ames 531, J J Batchelder 505, E G Hobbs 561, N Horr 526, M Buxton 511, E Blood 499, W A S Smyth 531, B N Childs 522, E Merrill 557, W Elden 524, M Smith 531.

BOOKS AND TRACTS SENT.

BY MAIL.—J. C. Jackson, Mrs. H. Howe, H. Cole, J. White, E Graves, W Shepherd, J G Smith, W R Boyker, G W St. John, Mrs. T C Barber, B L Burnap, F. Platt, B J Burnett, Jr., D. M. Kinzer, S Wright, A H Madison, N S Bastion, H Stamp, Mrs M Litchenthaler, R Vandervoort, M M Hazard, F P Hunt, O D Woodruff, J C Perkins, E V C Bennett, S B Munn, J A Mayberry, J W Elliott, J W Purdy, H. J. Wilson, L. McEwen, C. Richardson.

BY EXPRESS—D Ellinwood, B Spaulding, W S Campbell, F H Burbank.

LETTERS RECEIVED.

B W Boothby, W R Boyker, D T Taylor, J E Clark, J A Thayer, B P H, F H Chamberlain, S Basford, A L Forrester, F Kies, J S Hinds, F S Bradford, G H Kimball, M B Chechouski, D F Newton, A E Smith, L Annis.

POST OFFICE ADDRESS.

P. A. Smith—After May 13th, San Francisco.
J. B. Potter—Warehousepoint, Ct., for the present.
H. K. Flagg—Holliston, Mass.
P. S. W. Deyo—Strawberry Point, Iowa.
L. K. Lombard—South Exeter, Me.
J. Couch—Concord, N. H.
C. Goodrich—West Winsted, Ct.
J. C. Wheeler—Carthage, Me.
H. F. Carpenter—Rutland, Vt.

BOOKS FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

THE EMPHATIC DIAGLOTT: containing the Original Greek Text of the New Testament, according to the Recension of Dr. J. J. Griesbach, with an Interlinear Word-for-Word English Translation, based on the renderings of eminent critics, and on the various readings of the Vatican Manuscript (No. 1209) in the Vatican Library; with Notes, References, and an Appendix. 880pp. 12mo. Price, plain leather, $4.00; extra, gilt, $4.50; Turkey morocco, $5.00. Postage, 16 cents.

THE NEW TESTAMENT of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ; with brief Notes and Instructions; containing the references and marginal readings of the Polyglott Bible, also the Psalms, Maps, and Harmony of the Gospels. Published by the American Tract Society. For family use. $1.75; by mail, $1.90.

DICTIONARY OF THE HOLY BIBLE, for general use in the study of the Scriptures, with Engravings, Maps, and Tables. Published by the Amer. Tract Society. This is one of the best. Cloth, $1.50; by mail, $1.75. Sheep, $2.00; by mail, $2.25.

WHY THE SHOE PINCHES. A useful little work, with cuts, showing the conditions of a healthy foot, the causes of deformities, and how to avoid those troublesome diseases and malformations, such as chilblains, corns, bunions, flat-foot, bent-up toes, grown-in nails, etc. Price, 30 cents.

CRUDEN'S COMPLETE CONCORDANCE to the Holy Scriptures. New and condensed edition. Edited by John Eadie, D. D., L.L.D. Cloth, $1.75; by mail, $1.80. Sheep, 2.00; by mail, $2.30.

THURMAN'S BIBLE CHRONOLOGY, or, The Sealed Book of Daniel Opened. A work for every Bible Student. $1.50; by mail, $1.75.

THE SCRIPTURAL QUESTION BOOK. "Sanctify them through thy truth: thy word is truth." A valuable help to Sunday School and family instruction. 127 pp. Price, 15 cts.; postage 4 cts. $1.50 per dozen; postage 8 cts. on every three copies.

THE TAKING OF HUMAN LIFE incompatible with Christianity; with remarks on the present crisis. By T. F. Tukesbury. Price, 8 cts.; postage 2 cts. A tract for the times.

THE SYRIAC NEW TESTAMENT. A literal translation from the Syriac Peshito Version. By James Murdock, D. D. Price $2.50. Postage 36 cts.

NON-RESISTANCE; or, the Spirit of Christianity restored. By W. C. Thurman. Price 20 cts.; postage 4 cts.

CHLOE LANKTON; or, Light beyond the Clouds. A Story of Real Life. 75 cents. By mail, 87 cts.

MULLER'S LIFE OF TRUST. A Narration of the Lord's dealings with George Muller, written by himself. $1.75; by mail, $2.00.

DIPHTHERIA: its Causes, Treatment, and Cure. By James C. Jackson, M. D. Price, 10 cts.; by mail, 12 cts.

C. F. HUDSON'S WORKS.

Debt and Grace. Or the Doctrine of a Future Life, by C. F. Hudson. [illegible] 1 vol. 12 mo., pp. 480, price $1.50—post paid.

Christ our Life. The Scriptural Argument for Immortality through Christ alone. [illegible]

Human Destiny. A Critique on Universalism. [illegible]

The Doctrine of Endless Misery an occasion of Scepticism. [illegible]

Eternal Death in the literal sense is Eternal Punishment. [illegible]

The Rich Man and Lazarus. With remarks on Josephus. [illegible]

The Rights of Wrong; or, is Evil Eternal? With Reply to Dr. [illegible]

Reviewers Reviewed. New edition with replies to articles in the [illegible]

ENGLISH BIBLES

FOR SALE BY H. L. HASTINGS, BOSTON.

1. MINION, references between the verses. Sheep $2.40; roan gilt, $2.80; Turkey morocco, gilt, $3.60.
2. NONPAREIL. Sheep, $2.00; Roan gilt, rims and clasps, $2.75.
3. PEARL BIBLES. Roan gilt, $2.00; Roan gilt, rims and clasps, $2.50; Morocco, $3; Circuit (Turkey), with flaps to protect the edges, $4.00.
4. DIAMOND. Flexible roan, $1.25; Rims and clasps, $2.00.

TESTAMENTS, flexible [illegible], cloth, 18 cts. Sent by mail, postpaid, on receipt of the price. Ten per cent discount to those who buy to sell again. [illegible]

Address all orders to H. L. [illegible]

BOOKS AND TRACTS.

All [illegible]

All orders for any of the following works must be addressed to

MILES GRANT,
Boston, Mass.

MILES GRANT'S WORKS.

Resurrection of the Wicked. Discussion with Eld. T. Curry. "Do the Scriptures teach the Resurrection of the Wicked?" [illegible]

Eternal Suffering. Discussion with Dr. J. Litch. "Do the Scriptures teach the eternal conscious suffering of the Wicked?" [illegible]

State of the Dead. Discussion with W. W. Clayton. "On the State of the Dead and the Punishment of the Wicked." [illegible]

Miles Grant's Tracts. 32 pages each. Price 5 cents [illegible]

What is Man? A Bible view of his creation; The meaning of Soul, Spirit, Death, and Hell.

The Soul, What is it? Or a careful examination of all the uses of the words soul and psuche as employed in the old and new Testaments.

The Spirit, What is it? Or a careful examination of all the uses of the words ruach and pneuma as found in the old and new Testaments.

The Rich Man and Lazarus. Thief on the Cross; [illegible]

EXPOSITORY WORKS ON PROPHECY, BY S. S. BREWER.

1. The Days in which we Live. This is a concise history of the Four Great Monarchies—Babylon, Media Persia, Grecia, Rome Pagan, Rome Papal—[illegible]

2. An Exposition of the Seven Seals. History [illegible]

3. The Slaying of the Witnesses. Showing that [illegible]

4. A Treatise on Revelation XIII, in Two Parts. [illegible]

5. The Kingdom of God and Signs of the Times. [illegible]

6. The Last Day Tokens. No. 1. This is an exposition [illegible]

7. Last Day Tokens. No. 2 is an answer to the question, "What shall be the sign of thy coming, and the end of the World?" [illegible]

8. Last Day Tokens. No. 3. This is a phenomenal compend, containing a history of the Signs in the Sun, in the Moon, and in the Stars; [illegible]

9. The Great Image soon to be dashed to pieces. Price 4 cts., postage 2 cts.

10. The History of an Immortal Soul. Mythology and Theology vs. Bible; [illegible]

11. Rich Man and Lazarus. New edition, [illegible]

One copy of each of the above works sent by mail for $1.25.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Cruden's Condensed Concordance, by which any passage of Scripture, of which only a single word is remembered, [illegible]

The Life of Trust. An account of the Lord's Dealings with George Müller, Director of the Orphan House at Bristol, England, [illegible] Price $1.75, postage 24c.

A Treatise on the 24th and 25th chapters of Matthew, [illegible] By I. C. Wellcome. Price 25c, postage 4c.

Should Christians Fight? A pamphlet on War, [illegible] By I. C. Wellcome. Price 10c, postage 2c.

The Bible from Heaven, or a dissertation on the Evidences of Christianity. By M. Hull. [illegible]

America in Prophecy. Exposition of the 18th chap. of Isaiah, [illegible]

The Celestial Railroad, or Modern Pilgrim's Progress. After the manner of Bunyan. [illegible]

The Three Kingdoms, or the Kingdom of God the Father, the kingdom of Satan, the kingdom of the Lord Jesus Christ; [illegible] By T. M. Preble. [illegible]

The Ten Virgins, or Wisdom and Folly contrasted. By T. M. Preble. [illegible]

The Two Adams. By T. M. Preble. An interesting tract. [illegible]

Messiah's Mission, or an exposition of the Gospel Covenant, [illegible]

The Excellency of the Lord's Anointed, or Christ the promised Messiah. By Mrs. Mary A. Seymour. [illegible]

Everybody's Book. The Bible View of the personality of God. The Devil; his origin, personality, power, and doom. [illegible]

Cook Book. By Dr. F. W. Hurd. This book gives instructions for preparing all the articles of food used at Dr. Jackson's celebrated health institution, denominated "Our Home," Dansville, N. Y. [illegible]

Premature Decay of American Youth. By Dr. A. Stone. This is a valuable work, and should be read by all the young. [illegible]

The Saint's Harvest, or an exposition of Matt. 24: [illegible] By H. K. Flagg. [illegible]

The Old and New Covenant. Superiority of the New. By A. W. Sibley. [illegible]

The Christian Lyre. A collection of Hymns and Tunes for Worship. [illegible]

A Disquisition on the Prophecies. By F. H. Berick. [illegible]

An Appeal to Pious Trinitarians. By H. Grew. [illegible]

IMPORTANT BOOKS WORTH BUYING, LENDING, READING, AND PRESERVING.

THE BIBLE STUDENT'S LIBRARY.

A Series of Volumes Edited and Published by

H. L. HASTINGS,
167 Hanover St., Boston, Mass.

Each vol. contains over 400 pages, uniformly bound in Cloth and in Paper Covers. Sold separately or in sets. Single volumes sent post-paid on receipt of the price.

I. THE SIGNS OF THE TIMES; or, a Glance at Christendom as it is. By H. L. Hastings. Cloth $1, paper 50 cts.

A sad exhibition of the predicted perils of the Last Days; the selfishness, hypocrisy, and crimes of Christendom, as shown in STATISTICAL ACCOUNTS of the slave trade, cotton trade, opium trade, Coolie trade, and the licentiousness, illegitimacy, child murder, bloodshed, and military preparations of this age.

II. THE VOICE OF THE CHURCH on the Coming and Kingdom of the Redeemer. By D. T. Taylor. Edited and prefaced by H. L. Hastings. Cloth $1, paper 50 cts.

A history of the doctrine of the reign of Christ on earth, containing the views and testimonies of nearly four hundred of the greatest preachers, reformers, and writers the church has ever known, concerning the establishment of the future glorious Kingdom of God, under the whole heaven.

III. THESSALONICA, OR THE MODEL CHURCH; A Sketch of Primitive Christianity; and REASONS FOR MY HOPE, or the Tokens of Speedy Redemption, by H. L. Hastings; and SPIRITUALISM A SATANIC DELUSION, by Wm. Ramsey, D.D. Cloth $1, paper 50 cts.

"Thessalonica," portraying the faith and practice of the early Christians; "Reasons," exhibiting the hope of the Church, the fulfilment of prophecy, the spread of the gospel through Missionaries, Bible and Tract Societies, etc.; and "Spiritualism," unveiling and exposing the monster delusion of Satan in these latter times.

IV. THE GREAT CONTROVERSY BETWEEN GOD AND MAN; its Origin, Progress, and End; with numerous TRACTS on Prophetical and Practical Subjects. By H. L. Hastings. Cloth $1, paper 50 cts.

The "Controversy" sketches the History of the World since man's revolt from God, narrates the judgments already inflicted upon the nations of the earth for their iniquities, and those more terrible and exterminating calamities yet to overwhelm the nations, and prepare the way for the establishment of a divine government upon the earth. The TRACTS are, "The Church not in Darkness," "The Three Worlds," "The Last Days," "Plain Truths," "Ancient Landmarks," "Important Questions," "Olive Leaves," etc. etc.; a valuable and spirited collection.

V. FUTURE PUNISHMENT, as Taught in the Scriptures; with the various Doctrines of Men upon this subject. By H. L. Hastings. Cloth $1, paper 50 cts.

Containing "Pauline Theology," or Future Punishment as Taught by Paul; "The Old Paths," or the Doctrines of the Apostolical Fathers; "Retribution," or the Resurrection and Punishment of the Wicked; "Will all Men be Saved?" an Antidote for Universalism; "The Destiny of the Wicked," a Scripture Tract; "The Decrees of Popes and Councils on the Immortality of the Soul;" with the Views of Justin Martyr, Luther, Jeremy Taylor, Milton, and Bishop Law on the state of the dead, etc.

CASH PRICES.

By MAIL: 1 Book, cloth $1.00, paper 50 cts. 5 Books, cloth $5.00, paper 2.50. By EXPRESS: 5 Books, cloth $4.00, paper 2.00; 20 Books, cloth $15.00, paper $7.50. 50 Books, cloth $35, paper $16; 100 Books, cloth $65, paper $31.

☞ 5 Books, paper, sent to any three ministers for $1.

SEPARATE PAMPHLETS NOT BOUND IN CLOTH.

1. THESSALONICA; or, the Model Church, 25 cts. 2. THE GREAT CONTROVERSY, 25 cts. 3. REASONS FOR MY HOPE, 20 cts. 4. SPIRITUALISM, 20 cts. 5. Looking Forward, 10 cts. 6. SOCIAL HYMNS, original and selected. By H. L. H. 15 cts. single; $1 for 8 copies; $10 for 100 copies by mail,—post-paid to any address. [illegible] RETRIBUTION, or the Doom of the Wicked, 20 cts. PAULINE THEOLOGY, 10 c. 9. THE OLD PATHS, 10 c. TRACTS PRACTICAL AND SCRIPTURAL in great variety. 1800 pages for $1; by mail, 1200 pages for $1. Tracts and pamphlets free to the poor and to ministers [illegible]

Direct all orders, with the money, and plain directions [illegible]

H. L. HASTINGS, 167 Hanover St., Boston.
June, 1864.

For the World's Crisis.

ON THE DEATH OF A FRIEND.

Rest, weary one,
For thy work is done, thy sorrows are o'er,
Thy silent griefs and pains are no more;
God and wisdom have ordered all the past,
Lord, all our treasures at thy feet are cast,
Rest, sweetly rest.

Rest, weary one,
Lie down to slumber in the peaceful grave,
Life has struggled with eternity's wave;
We prayed and hoped, but still with fear,
For we felt the enemy death was near.
Rest, sweetly rest.

Rest, dear friend.
Where sin and sorrow can approach no more,
We hope to meet thee on the other shore;
Jesus, I know, will bear us through,
If we our Master's will still do.
Rest, sweetly rest.

Rest, weary heart.
In the earth where once thy Savior lay,
We leave thee, to waken on that day
When all our sorrows have an end,
Then may we in Jesus find a friend.
Rest, sweetly rest.

E. L. M.

For the World's Crisis.

KNOWING THE TIME!

Read me carefully through before you rashly conclude I claim too much. I am fully aware that this and similar "captions" have stood at the head of many able and some silly articles. I will say a few things to you under it.

Paul, the great apostle to us Gentiles, has said, "And that, knowing the time," etc., Rom. 13: 11. If he knew the time, did not the Roman church know it also? I think they did, and that we ought to. We are also taught that "the wise man's heart discerneth both time and judgment." Are we wise? When Jesus wept over the people of that doomed city, Jerusalem, and told what should befal them, he gave as the cause, "Because THOU KNEWEST NOT THE TIME of thy visitation."

With such plain and positive Scripture declarations before us, it does appear to me that no intelligent christian should neglect to become acquainted with Bible time. And here I wish to raise an inquiry as to the extent of the meaning of the texts I have quoted. They are not arbitrary or stiff in their meaning, nor do they at all sustain a sophistical course of reasoning to which they are sometimes applied.

Is it not Paul's intent to state that he and his brethren knew in what age of the world's history they were, what part of the course of fulfillment of prophecy they were connected with, and fulfilling? So it appears to me. With this view of their understanding "the time," season, age, and the events of prophetic announcement, it does not require that we should strain the language by making it say that they knew the year of the age of the world, and the number of months from the first day of the creation. Or am I wrong, and is the latter idea the true one?

That "the wise man's heart discerneth both time and judgment," is clearly stated. God has revealed his purposes of grace, mercy and judgment, with the times of their special developments, in such a manner that he who wishes to understand them, and "applies his heart unto wisdom," can "discern" them as clearly as we can discern that summer is nigh at hand when the trees put forth their leaves. By learning and watching the events of nature, we can know the time or season of the year, even without a calendar.

In the case of the ignorance of the inhabitants of Jerusalem, we learn from the announcement made by the Lord, that their destruction came because they "knew not the time of their visitation." This ignorance was inexcusable; they had enjoyed every facility to learn and know the time of God's visiting them by his Son, "to make reconciliation for iniquity." These facilities were Dan. 8: 11, and 9: 24, and 11: 20–24; Isa. 7: 14, 16; Micah 5: 2, 3; Zech. 9: 9; Mal. 3: 1. By these they ought to have known the time in which they lived, and recognized the events of their time, as the fulfillments of these and other prophetic declarations. Then they would have occupied the position of Simeon and Anna, waiting for the Lord's Christ. This was not their position. They neglected to study and believe, to watch the events as fulfillments of prophecy, and the time which measured the Jewish nationality. These neglected, made them unbelieving, careless of the work of God, reckless and riotous, forming a character worthy of the dreadful doom which Christ pronounced, and which came upon them to the full.

Was it because they did not know the year the seventy weeks ended? or the sixty-nine weeks? or the sixty-two weeks? Rather was it not because they had neglected the study, and lost the knowledge, of the prophetic Scriptures generally, and thereby were ignorant of the time, season, age, and relation to passing events, and consequently of the decay of their theocracy, the closing of the age of the Mosaic institutions, and the proximity of the advent of their long promised Messiah. This last, we think, is the true idea of knowing the time, or of not knowing it.

It is a fearful position to be ignorant of the times and seasons which God has revealed for the instruction and guidance of his church. The mass of the professed church of Christ of our generation are thus ignorant, according to their own confessions, and, what is worse, they claim it necessary to remain thus ignorant. May the Lord enable us to know the time, and lead others to see and know it also, and watch for the return of Jesus to save us.

The above are my ideas of Bible time, and the duty of knowing it, by heeding the prophetic measurements, prophetic announcements, national conditions, religious and moral conduct of the church and world, the signs in the sun, moon and stars. All these preach in loud tones of the speedy coming of our blessed Savior, to establish his reign and give eternal rest to his people. I hope to rest with them.

I do not feel opposed to searching to know more definitely the point of time of the Savior's advent. It may be we shall know more, or that I shall know as definitely as some think they do. But I cannot use these texts I have quoted to teach time as some do, and as I did twenty years ago. The careful study of this subject has led me to the conclusions above stated. I think I know the time, and am not in darkness that that day should overtake me as a thief. I am watching for him year after year, and day after day, "knowing he is nigh, even at the door." This generation must meet him.

With the experience, and labor, and observation of over twenty years among Adventists, I have found that the most healthful influence has been exerted, the most extensive circulation of Bible truth, the most sound and Scriptural conversions seen, the best regulated and steady christian lives, under the labors of those holding this position, in distinction from the positions of knowing nothing and of knowing everything on time questions.

I. C. WELLCOME.

For the World's Crisis.

THE VOICE OF HISTORIANS.

"The Lord's Day"—The True Christian Sabbath.

NUMBER SIX.

From Peter Heylyn's "History of the Sabbath," published in London 1681, pp. 411–422. In copying I have followed the author's style of writing and spelling. T. M. P.

So in the Epistle to the Colossians, written in the sixtieth year after Christ's Nativity, he lays it positively down that the Sabbath was now abrogated with the other ceremonies, which were to vanish at Christ's coming. Let no man judge you, saith the Apostle, in meat and drink, or in respect of an holy day, or of the new moon, or of the Sabbath days, which are a shadow of things to come: but the body is of Christ. In which the Sabbath is well matched with meats and drinks, new moon and holy days, which were all temporary ordinances, and to go off the stage at our Savior's entrance. . . . 'There is (saith Hierom) no sermon of the Apostles, either delivered by epistles or by word of mouth, wherein he labors not to prove that all the burdens of the Law are now laid away; that all those things which were before in types and figures, namely the Sabbath, Circumcision, the new moons, and three solemn Festivals, did cease upon the preaching of the gospel.'

"And cease it did upon the preaching of the Gospel, insensibly and by degrees, as before we said; not being afterwards observed as it had been formerly, or counted any necessary part of God's public worship. Only some use was made thereof for the enlargement of God's church, by reason that the people had been accustomed to meet together on that day, for the performance of religious spiritual duties. This made it more regarded than it would have been, especially in the eastern parts of Greece and Asia, where the provincial Jews were somewhat thick dispersed; and being a great accession to the Gospel, could not so suddenly forsake their ancient customs. Yet so, that the first day of the week began to grow into some credit towards the ending of this Age; especially after the final desolation of Hierusalem and the Temple, which happened Anno 72 of Christ's Nativity. So that the religious observation of this day beginning in the Age of the Apostles, no doubt but with their approbation and authority, and since continuing in the same respect for so many Ages, may be very well accounted amongst those Apostolical traditions, which have been universally received in the church of God. For being it was the day which our Redeemer honored with his resurrection, it easily might attain unto that esteem, as to be honored by the christians with the public meetings; that so they might with greater comfort preserve and cherish the memorial of so great a mercy; in reference unto which, the World's Creation seemed not so considerable. By reason of which work wrought on it, it came in time to be entitled the LORD'S DAY; which attribute is first found in the Revelation, written by Saint John about the ninety-fourth year of our Savior's birth. . . . So that the greatest honor, which in this Age was given the first day of the week, or Sunday, is that about the close thereof they did begin to honor it with the name or title of the LORD'S DAY, and made it one of those set days whereon the people met together for religious exercises. . .

"We showed you in the former chapter, whatever doth occur in the acts and monuments of the apostles, touching the Lord's day and the Sabbath, how that the one of them was abrogated as a part of the Law of Moses; the other rising by degrees from the ruins of it, not by Authority divine, for ought appears, but by authority of the church. . . .

"The Ebionites, they stood hard for the Jewish Sabbath, and would by all means have it celebrated, as it had been formerly; observing yet the Lord's day, as the Christians did, in honor of the Resurrection of our Savior. . . And on the other side there was a sort of Heretics in the Eastern parts, who thought that this world, being corruptible, could not be made but by a very evil Author. Therefore as the Jews did by the festival solemnity of their Sabbath rejoice in God that created the world, as in the Author of all goodness; so they, in hatred of the Maker of the world, sorrowed and wept and fasted on that day, as being the birth-day of all evil. And whereas Christian men of sound belief did solemnize the Sunday in a joyful memory of Christ's resurrection: so likewise at that self-same time, such heretics as denied the resurrection did contrary to them that held it, and fasted when the rest rejoiced. . . . . If any one did fast (says Irenæus), either upon the Lord's day or the Sabbath, except one Sabbath in the year (which was Easter eve), he was a murderer of Christ. So he in his epistle ad Philippenses.

"The Canons attributed to the Apostles take notice of the misdemeanor, though they condemn it not with so high a censure; it being in them only ordered, that if a clergyman offended in that kind, he should be degraded; if any of the laity, they should be excommunicated. Which makes one marvel by the way, that those which take such pains to justify Ignatius as Baronius doth in Anno 57 of his grand Annales, should yet condemn this Canon of imposture, which is not so severe as Ignatius is, only because it speaks against the Saturdays fast. Whereof consult the Annales, Ann. 102. Now as Ignatius labors here to advance the Sabbath, in opposition of those heretics before remembered, making it equally a festival with the Lord's day: so being to deal with those which too much magnified the Sabbath, and thought the Christians bound unto it, as the Jews had been; he bends himself another way, and resolves it thus: 'Let us not keep the Sabbath in a Jewish manner, in sloth and idleness; for it is written that he that will not labor shall not eat, and in the sweat of thy brows shalt thou eat thy bread. But let us keep it after a spiritual fashion; not in bodily ease, but in the study of the Law: not eating meat drest yesterday, or drinking lukewarm drinks, or walking out a limited space, or settling our delights, as they did, or dancing; but in the contemplation of the works of God. And after we have so kept the Sabbath, let every one that loveth Christ keep the Lord's day Festival, the Resurrection day, the Queen and Empress of all days; in which our life was raised again, and death was overcome by our Lord and Savior.' So that we see that he would have both days observed: the Sabbath first, though not as would the Ebionites, in a Jewish sort; and after that the Lord's day, which he so much magnifieth, the better to abate that high esteem which some had cast upon the Sabbath. Agreeable unto this we find that in the Constitutions of the Apostles (for by that name they pass, though not made by them), both days are ordered to be kept holy, one in memorial of the Creation, the other of the Resurrection. . .

"And so it was observed in the Eastern parts, where those of the dispersion had took up their seats; and having long time had their meetings on the Sabbath day, could not so easily be persuaded from it. But in the Western churches, in the which the Jews were not so considerable, and where those heretics before remembered had been hardly heard of, it was plainly otherwise: that day not only not being honored with their public meetings, but destined to a settled or a constant fast. Some which have looked more nearly into the reasons of this difference, conceive that they appointed this day for fasting, in memory of Saint Peter's conflict with Simon Magus, which being to be done on a Sunday following, the Church of Rome ordained a solemn fast on that day before, the better to obtain God's blessing in so great a business: which falling out as they desired, they kept it for a fasting day for ever after. Saint Austin so relates it, as a general and received opinion, but then he adds, Quod eam esse falsam per hibeant plerique Romani; that very many of the Romans did take it only for a fable.

"As for St. Austin, he conceives the reason of it to be, the several uses which men made of our Savior's resting in the grave the whole Sabbath day. For thence it came to pass, saith he, that some, especially the Eastern people, ad requiem significandam mallent relaxare jejunium, to signify and denote that rest, did not use to fast; where on the other side, those of the Church of Rome, and some Western churches, kept it always fasting. Propter humilitatum mortis Domini, by reason that our Lord, that day, lay buried in the sleep of Death. But as the Father comes not home unto the reason of this usage, in the Eastern churches; so in my mind Pope Innocent gives a likelier reason for the contrary custom in the Western. For in a Decretal by him made touching the keeping of this Fast, he gives this reason of it unto Decentius Eugubinus who desired it of him; because that day and the day before were spent by the Apostles in grief and heaviness. Nam constat Apostolos biduo isto & in mœrore fuisse & propter metum judeorum se occuluisse, as his words there are. The like faith Platina, that Innocentius did ordain the Saturday or Sabbath to be always fasted, Quod tali die Christus in sepulchro jacuisset, & quod discipuli ejus jejunassent, because our Savior lay in the grave that day, and it was fasted by his disciples. Not that it was not fasted before Innocent's time, as some vainly think; but that being formerly an arbitrary practice only, it was by him intended for a binding law. Now as the African and the Western churches were severally devoted either to the Church of Rome or other churches in the East, so did they follow in this matter of the Sabbath's fast, the practice of those parts, to which they did most adhere. Millian, though near to Rome, followed the practice of the East; which shows how little power the Popes then had, even in Italy itself. Paulinus tells us also of Saint Ambrose, that he did never use to dine, nisi die sabbati & Dominico &c., but on the Sabbath, the Lord's day, and on the Anniversaries of the saints and martyrs. Yet so, that when he was at Rome, he used to do as they there did, submitting to the Orders of the Church in the which he was. Whence that so celebrated speech of his, cum hic sum, non jejuno sabbato; cum Rome sum jejuno sabbato: at Rome he did; at Millain he did not fast the Sabbath. Nay, which is more, Saint Augustine tells us that many times in Africa, one and the self-same church, at least the several churches in the self-same province, had some that dined upon the Sabbath, and some that fasted. And in this difference it stood a long time together, till in the end the Roman church obtained the cause, and Saturday became a Fast, almost through all the parts of the western world. I say the western world, and of that alone; the eastern churches being so far from altering their ancient custom, that in the sixth Council of Constantinople, Anno 692, they did admonish those of Rome to forbear fasting on that day, upon pain of censures; which I have noted here, in its proper place, that we might know the better how the matter stood between the Lord's day and the Sabbath; how hard a thing it was for one to get the mastery of the other; both days being in themselves indifferent for sacred uses; and holding by no other tenure than by the courtesie of the Church.

"Much of this kind was that great conflict between the east and western churches about keeping Easter; and much like conduced, as it was maintained, unto the honor of the Lord's Day, or neglect thereof. The passover of the Jews was changed in the Apostles' times to the Feast of Easter; the anniversary memorial of our Savior's resurrection; and not changed only in their times, but by their authority. Certain it is they observed it, for Polycarpus kept it, . . . both with Saint John, and with the rest of the Apostles, as Ireneus tells us in Eusebius's History. The like Polycarpus affirms of Saint Philip also; whereof see Euseb. l. 5: c. 14. Nor was the difference which arose in the times succeeding, about the Festival itself; but for the time, wherein it was to be observed. The Eastern Churches following the custom of Hierusalem, kept it directly at the same time the Jews did their Passover; and at Hierusalem they so kept it (the Bishops there for fifteen several successions, being of the circumcision) the better to content the Jews, their brethren, and to win upon them. But in the Churches of the West they did not celebrate this Feast decima quarta lunæ, upon what day soever it was, as the others did; but on some Sunday following after; partly in honor of the day, and partly to express some difference between Jews and Christians. A thing of great importance in the present case. For the christians of the East reflected not upon the Sunday in the annual return of so great a feast; but kept it on the fourteenth day of the month, be it what it will; it may be very strongly gathered, that they regarded not the Lord's day so highly, which was the weekly memory of the resurrection, as to prefer that day before any other in their public meetings. And thereupon Baronius pleads it very well that certainly Saint John was not the author of the contrary practice, as some gave it out. Nam quænam potuit esse ratio, etc. For what, saith he, might be the reason why in the Revelation he should make mention of the Lord's day as a day of note, and of good credit in the church, had it not got that name in reference to the resurrection. And if it were thought fit by the Apostles to celebrate the weekly memory thereof upon the Sunday; then to what purpose should they keep the anniversary on another day? And so far questionless we may join issue with the Cardinal, that either Sunday is not meant in the Revelation; or else Saint John was not the author of keeping Easter with the Jews, on what day soever. Rather we may conceive that Saint John gave way unto the current of the times, which in those places, as is said, were much intent upon the customs of the Jews; most of the christians of those parts being Jews originally. . . . .

"This (second) century affords us three particular writers that have made mention of this day. First, Justin Martyr, who then lived in Rome, doth thus relate: 'Upon the Sunday, all of us assemble in the congregation; as being that first day wherein God separating the light and darkness, did create the world; and Jesus Christ our Savior rose again from the dead.' This for the day; then for the service of the day, he describes it thus:—'Upon the day called Sunday, all that abide within the cities or about the fields, do meet together in some place, where the records of the Apostles and writings of the Prophets, as much as is appointed, are read unto us. The reader having done, the priest or prelate ministreth a word of exhortation, that we do imitate those good things which are there repeated. Then standing up together, we send up our prayers unto the Lord; which ended, there is delivered unto every one of us, bread and wine, with water. After all this the priest or prelate offers up our prayers and thanksgiving as much as in him is, to God; and all the people say Amen; those of the richer sort, every man as he would himself, contributing something towards the relief of the poorer brethren; which after the priest or prelate was disposed amongst them.' . . . . . .

"The second testimony of these times is that of Dionysus, Bishop of Corinth, who lived about 175, some nine years after Justin Martyr wrote his last Apology; who in an Epistle unto Soter, Pope of Rome, doth relate it thus: 'To-day,' saith he, 'we kept HOLY THE LORD'S DAY, wherein we read the Epistle which you wrote unto us, which we do always read for our instruction, as also the first Epistle writ by Clemens.' . . . .

The third and last writer of this century, which gives us any thing of the Lord's day, is Clemens Alexandrinus, (he flourished in the year 190) . . . ; "He that doth lead his life according to the ordinances of the gospel, then keeps the LORDS'S DAY, when he casts away every evil thought, and doing things with knowledge and understanding, doth glorify the Lord in his resurrection.' T. M. PREBLE.

East Weare, N. H.

For the World's Crisis.

THE DAY-STAR.

Beautiful Star of day, arise,
Show thy glory in the skies;
Let us now salvation see,
Life and immortality.

CHORUS.
Beautiful Star, beautiful Star,
Hope of the christian, beautiful, beautiful star.

Beautiful Star of hope, appear,
We know thy coming draweth near,
For we long have looked for thee,
Star of immortality.

Beautiful Star, O quickly come,
And take thy faithful children home;
Long they've wished to see thy face,
Give them now this heavenly grace.

Bath, Me. J. A. S.

THE INFIDELITY OF THE DAY.

Amongst the recent charges of the English Bishops and Archdeacons, we have seen none which touches upon the infidelity of the day with more force and spirit than that of Archdeacon Garbett. He thus speaks of the times in which we live:

"And now forgive me if for a moment I direct your attention to the times in which we live, nay, to the very days and hours passing over our heads, as eminently critical. They are big with results for Christ's church. They demand, therefore, a spirit and energy, and a yielding up of all our faculties, commensurate to their importance. This is the more to be insisted upon, because there is, oftentimes, among us, an indolent and abject submission of the soul to the present. Even in the midst of an extraordinary epoch, you find men living as in a dream, regarding the present as the normal and necessary condition of the world, or as a mere repetition of the past. No doubt this indolence of assent, and easy submission to things as they are, is innocent enough in the periods of repose which are intercalated between those revolutionary paroxysms which shake, from time to time, as they are shaking now, commonwealths and churches. Such times are as necessary to evolve the destinies of the human race as they have been to evolve the structure and actual configuration of the planet in which we live. It does matter little, in these uncritical intervals of history, whether we underrate or exaggerate the present, or permit it to pass by us as in a vision, without a firm grasp of it at all. Not so, however, when a new intellectual, social, or religious phase, is being generated from the destruction or modification of the ancient elements, and of which a certain indefinite restlessness and termination of men's minds is an invariable prognostic. The duties which we have then to discharge, and the whole line in which our exertions are called upon to move, depend upon our understanding the true importance and real tendencies of passing events and measures. The final issue may be greatly modified by a clear and prophetic discernment of them. A misapprehension of them is ruin. And this, too, ought to be well observed; although the final issue of a great and tempestuous period appears, when it comes, sudden, as well as overwhelming, yet sudden it really never is. It seems, indeed, unaccountable to those who have been negligent of its symptoms, or inapt to discern the inexorable connection between cause and effect. But its preparation is really slow. Its advance is gradual. The result, from the previously given religious or political data, is perfectly assignable by a true and enlarged philosophy. Morever, theologically considered, in Almighty God's dealings with the world at large, with nations and individuals, there is the same patience and long-suffering, with indications and flashes of the coming judgment intermingled. There is the same withholding of the fatal blow, the like invitation and opportunities of repentance, the like trial of men's spirits, and of alternate repose and threatenings. These great revolutions, like that now in progress, silently mature their elements, and come on, in fact, like a great tempest in summer. There is a long gathering of the clouds, and the sky is obscured, and there are distant mutterings of thunder and droppings of rain. And then, for a time, there is sunshine again, and the vapors seem about to disperse and vanish into the clear firmament. We say to ourselves that, after all, our forebodings were groundless, and there will be at any rate no tempest to-day; and so we turn unconcernedly to our ordinary occupations again. And then, on a sudden, when men cry, 'Peace, peace,'—we know not how, the storm breaks. All the elements are let loose; and the lightnings, and the mighty thunderings and hail, are upon us, and there is no escape. It is needless to point the moral. There may be bright intervals in these most perilous times for Christ's church. But let no man deceive himself, or the hour of sure destruction will come upon him like a thief in the night on the helpless and foolish sleeper. There is only one safety,—to be ever on the watch, and armed. Una salus nullam sperare salutem. We must look for it, and be ready for the worst. God will help them who, in faith and in the path of obedience, are ready to help themselves."—Western Episcopalian.

For the World's Crisis.

JOURNEYINGS.

BRO. GRANT:—I was disappointed in not being able to fulfill my appointment at Wallingford, on account of the rain and mud. At Bristol I found them steadfast in the "apostles' doctrine and fellowship," with a desire to see the work of God revived and a new interest aroused, so that others might come to the knowledge of the truth adapted to save in this day.

I spent one evening in New Britain, enjoying a meeting with them at their chapel. The church here has suffered from many causes, but mostly from its professed friends; yet there are good brethren, who love Jesus and his soon coming, and are hopeful in looking for a better state of things. They need help of the right kind, and I could but pray the Lord for their speedy prosperity.

There are many new ones out in the field feeding the flock. This is a great and responsible work. I hope they will meekly and faithfully learn of the good Shepherd, that their teachings may be in harmony with his blessed word, which makes all one. Then we could wish them abundant success, and a hearty welcome to every place. But it has been too often that they have run before they were sent, and sowed their own seed, instead of the good seed. Thus we have had discord and variance as the result. I really believe more divisions and discord among us have been made by those who profess to be teachers, than by all other causes put together. In the first place, a teacher should have a sound christian character, who can live religion at home. Then he can practically enforce the good word of life upon others, and his influence will be even felt and salutary.

From Conn., by the way of Springfield, I passed by railroad to Vernon, Vt., at the time of the great freshet, and after riding to Holyoke we found the road so obstructed by ice and the flooding off of bridges, that we returned to Springfield. But the next day, Saturday, we found the obstructions removed, and safely arrived at Vernon, where they were expecting us. With the church here I spent two Sundays, with meetings in the week. I found a good body of believers here, but not in a very lively condition, I thought. As our meetings continued, there was an increase of interest, and the last Sunday and Sunday evening was a time of special favor. The Spirit's power and melting influence were very apparent. It was really a blessed good time to the most of us. To God alone be all the glory.

It is a favored time to labor for Christ and the advancement of truth. The Advent cause, from personal observation, I think is, to say the least, in the best condition it has been for ten years. Bible truth is gaining foothold among the thinking ones. Some are giving up fables and taking hold of the word of God in every direction. Lord, speak the lifegiving word. Amen. Thine, L. BOUTELL.

Groton, Mar. 31st, 1865.

EDUCATION OUTSIDE OF BOOKS.

Do you know that your best educated women are the most economical without being mean. They stop to count costs. They only pay a decent respect to other people's opinions, and fit their garments by the length of their purses. They can give liberally to God's poor, and be happy with an ingrain carpet. They can look neat and be contented in a plain bonnet, because they love a wild rose better than one made by a French milliner. They can be intelligent and entertaining without reading more than one book a year, because, keeping their eyes and ears, and hearts open, rich and beautiful experiences are daily falling out to them. And, after all, this is the great secret of happiness and efficiency in life,—this is what you are to be educated up to—an earnest appreciation of the capabilities and treasured joys of the present. Your true learning, what makes others richer for being with you, are the golden sparks struck out of your own being. Your worthiest opinions are not borrowed from books, but those born of the thought and culture you have brought forward into your life-work. The symmetry and harmony of your character was not drilled into you at once by your teachers, but grew by daily accretions, until you had learned to live as if you were accountable to God, and not to man, for deeds done in the body.—Springfield Republican.

PURE WATER FOR STOCK.

A good draught of good water is probably as refreshing to beasts as it is to people. But in the month of August nearly all domestic animals suffer far more than we imagine for want of pure water. Sheep will thrive far better if they can have access to pure water. Teams will endure the heat far better if they can have plenty of clean pure water; and if milk cows must drink stagnant water wherever they can find it, how is it possible for them to give their usual flow of good milk. It is impracticable for them to do it.

Some people allow water to stand in troughs, day after day, many times, and compel their animals to drink it all up. Did such people ever drink water from an old dirty slop pail, after it had been allowed to stand in the sunshine for two or three days? Let them try the experiment of such water, and wait for the result; and then they will be prepared to express a correct opinion whether or not such water, is as good for stock in the sultry days of August, as pure cold water would be.

Water troughs and tanks should be cleaned frequently during the hot days of August, and fresh water pumped into them several times during the day. Milch cows require a vast quantity of pure water in hot weather, in order to produce their usual flow of good milk.

"Let me die," was the language of Jonah when dissatisfied with God's directions; and the same prayer is made now by modern Jonahs when in like predicaments.

The Children's Corner.

PLEDGE OF THE TRY COMPANY.

We, the Undersigned, hereby pledge ourselves to abstain from Tea, Coffee, Tobacco, and all Intoxicating Drinks as a Beverage.

For the World's Crisis.

TO THE CHILDREN.

Would you wear a crown of glory?
Would you meet the Savior's smile?
See the King in all his beauty?
Walk the "city's" golden aisle?

Would you meet the loved and lost ones?
See them clothed in spotless white?
Would you join their songs and praises,
In a land where is no night?

Would you see a second Eden?
Would you tread on Beulah's plain?
Would you gather flowers unfading?
Would you hear the angel's strains?

Would you meet with all the ransomed,
Who have suffered woe and shame?
Borne "the cross" and fallen martyrs,
By the sword and in the flame?

Keep like them "the words of Jesus,"
Bear like them "the cross" in sadness,
Watch and wait, though tempted often,
Grief will end in endless gladness.

Princeton, Ind. S. R. CHAPLIN.

For the World's Crisis.

NATURE'S TEACHINGS.

Johnny, four years of age, was very sick with the croup, and expected to die; and on being asked where he should go, said, Up to see Jesus, and he would let him walk in the garden. But soon after made this inquiry:

"Mother, when people die, they bury them up in the ground; does Jesus come down from heaven and get them, and take them up to live with him?"

This was a poser to mother, for she had never taught him this; and we learn from it that even children have an innate idea of the body constituting the identity of the soul, and if they were permitted to grow up without the traditions and doctrines of men being instilled into their minds, would have more scriptural theology.

Little Johnny was perfectly willing to go, but has recovered, and we hope will grow up, and continue to inquire into the whys and wherefores of the teaching of theologians of the present day. D. N. SMITH.

DAVID MATSON.

BY JOHN G. WHITTIER.

Who of my young friends have read the sorrowful story of "Enoch Arden," so sweetly and simply told by the great English poet? It is the story of a man who went to sea, leaving behind a sweet young wife and little daughter. He was cast away on a desert island, where he remained several years, when he was discovered, and taken off by a passing vessel. Coming back to his native town, he found his wife married to an old playmate—a good man, rich and honored, with whom she was living happily. The poor man, unwilling to cause her pain and perplexity, resolved not to make himself known to her, and lived and died alone. The poem has reminded me of a very similar story of my own New England neighborhood, which I have often heard, and which I will try to tell, not in poetry, like Alfred Tennyson's, but in my own poor prose. I can assure my readers that in its main particulars it is a true tale.

One bright summer morning, more than threescore years ago, David Matson, with his young wife and his two healthy, barefooted boys, stood on the bank of the river near their dwelling. They were waiting there for Pelatiah Curtis to come round the Point with his wherry, and take the husband and father to the port, a few miles below. The Lively Turtle was about to sail on a voyage to Spain, and David was to go in her as mate. They stood there in the lovely morning sunshine, talking cheerfully; but, had you been near enough, you could have seen tears in Anna Matson's blue eyes, for she loved her husband, and knew there was always danger on the sea. And David's bluff, cheery voice trembled a little now and then, for the honest sailor loved his snug home on the Merrimack, with the dear wife and her pretty boys. But presently the wherry came alongside, and David was just stepping into it, when he turned back to kiss his wife and children once more.

"In with you, man," said Pelatiah Curtis. "There's no time for kissing and such fooleries when the tide serves."

And so they parted. Anna and the boys went back to their home, and David to the Port, whence he sailed off in the Lively Turtle. And months passed, autumn followed the summer, and winter the autumn, and then spring came, and anon it was summer on the river-side, and he did not come back. And another year passed, and then the old sailors and fishermen shook their heads solemnly, and said the Lively Turtle was a lost ship, and would never come back to port. And poor Anna had her bombazine gown dyed black, and her straw bonnet trimmed in mourning ribbons, and thenceforth was known only as the Widow Matson.

And how was it all this time with David himself?

Now you must know that the Mohammedan people of Algiers and Tripoli, and Mogadore and Sallee, on the Barbary coast, had for a long time been in the habit of fitting out galleys and armed boats to seize upon merchant vessels of christian nations, and make slaves of their crews and passengers, just as men calling themselves christians in America were sending vessels to Africa to catch black slaves for their plantations. The Lively Turtle fell into the hands of one of these roving sea-robbers, and the crew were taken to Algiers, and sold in the market-place as slaves, poor David Matson among the rest.

When a boy he had learned the trade of ship-carpenter with his father on the Merrimack; and now he was set at work in the dock-yards. His master, who was naturally a kind man, did not overwork him. He had daily his three loaves of bread, and when his clothing was worn out, its place was supplied by the coarse cloth of wool and camel's-hair woven by the Berber women. Three hours before sunset he was released from work, and Friday, which is the Mohammedan Sabbath, was a day of entire rest. Once a year, at the season called Ramadan, he was left at leisure for a whole week. So time went on—days, weeks, months, and years. His dark hair became gray. He still dreamed of his old home on the Merrimack, and of his good Anna and the boys. He wondered whether they yet lived, what they thought of him, and what they were doing. The hope of ever seeing them again grew fainter and fainter, and at last nearly died out; and he resigned himself to his fate as a slave for life.

But one day a handsome, middle-aged gentleman, in the dress of one of his own countrymen, attended by a great officer of the Dey, entered the ship-yard, and called up before him the American captives. The stranger was none other than Joel Barlow, commissioner of the United States to procure the liberation of slaves belonging to that government. He took the men by the hand as they came up, and told them they were free. As you might expect, the poor fellows were very grateful; some laughed, some wept for joy, some shouted and sang, and threw up their caps, while others, with David Matson among them, knelt down on the chips, and thanked God for the great deliverance.

"This is a very affecting scene," said the commissioner, wiping his eyes. "I must keep the impression of it for my Columbiad;" and, drawing out his tablet, he proceeded to write on the spot an apostrophe to Freedom, which afterward found a place in his great epic.

David Matson had saved a little money during his captivity, by odd jobs and work on holidays. He got a passage to Malaga, where he bought a nice shawl for his wife and a watch for each of his boys. He then went to the quay, where an American ship was lying just ready to sail for Boston.

Almost the first man he saw on board was Pelatiah Curtis, who had rowed him down to the port seven years before. He found that his old neighbor did not know him, so changed was he with his long beard and Moorish dress, whereupon, without telling his name, he began to put questions about his old home, and finally asked him if he knew a Mrs. Matson.

"I rather think I do," said Pelatiah; "she's my wife."

"Your wife!" cried the other. "She is mine before God and man. I am David Matson, and she is the mother of my children."

"And mine too!" said Pelatiah. "I left her with a baby in her arms. If you are David Matson, your right to her is outlawed; at any rate, she is mine, and I am not the man to give her up."

"God is great!" said poor David Matson, unconsciously repeating the familiar words of Moslem submission. "His will be done. I loved her, but I shall never see her again. Give these, with my blessing, to the good woman and the boys," and he handed over, with a sigh, the little bundle containing the gifts for his wife and children.

He shook hands with his rival. "Pelatiah," he said, looking back as he left the ship, "be kind to Anna and my boys."

"Ay, ay, sir!" responded the sailor in a careless tone. He watched the poor man passing slowly up the narrow street until out of sight. "It's a hard case for old David," he said, helping himself to a fresh cud of tobacco; "but I'm glad I've seen the last of him."

When Pelatiah Curtis reached home he told Anna the story of her husband, and laid his gifts in her lap. She did not shriek nor faint, for she was a healthy woman, with strong nerves; but she stole away by herself and wept bitterly. She lived many years after, but could never be persuaded to wear the pretty shawl which the husband of her youth had sent as his farewell gift. There is however, a tradition that, in accordance with her dying wish, it was wrapped about her poor old shoulders in the coffin, and buried with her.

The little old bull's eye watch, which is still in the possession of one of her grandchildren is now all that remains to tell of David Matson—the lost man.—Our Young Folks.

KEEP CLEAR OF 'EM.

See here, boys! I want to say something to you. Do you know that Satan has a great many servants; and they are very busy running round, doing all the harm they can. They ride in the trains; they follow the soldiers; they do business in the city; they go into the country; they enter houses and break open shops; they visit our schools. Some of their favorite spots are colleges and academies, where our boys are. Boys do you hear that?

Indeed, they are very fond of young people every where. Some of their favorite spots are colleges and academies, where our boys are. Boys, do you hear that?

Indeed, they are very fond of young people everywhere. Some of Satan's servants are so "like roaring lions, going about seeking whom they may devour," that you are not much in danger from them, because you can keep out of their way. Some are so vile-looking, you would naturally turn from them in disgust; others are such fellows that you would not be seen in their company; and there are still others you would rather keep clear of, without exactly knowing why. You know they are not good, and that is enough. But all of Satan's followers are not so quick to show their colors. Some are cunning and pretend to be a great deal better than they are, in order to deceive people; and they do deceive people horribly. It makes my blood run cold to think of it. I know four of them, and some of the mischief which they have done. I found out their names, and I want to put you on your guard against them, for they are very sly. They will make you believe they are your friends. They appear sociable, easy, good-natured, and not too much in a hurry. They seem to wait your own time, and notice you when you least expect it.

"Oh, we want you to enjoy yourselves," they say, "and not to be so particular;" and the arguments they use are very taking; at least, I must think so, since so many of the young listen to them and are led away by them.

And all, I believe, because they did not know in the first place who was speaking to them. They did not see it was Satan's uniform they had on. Do you ask for their names? Here they are:

"There's no danger." That is one.
"Only this once." That is another.
"Every body does so," is the third; and
"By and by," is the fourth.

If you are tempted to leave God's house, and break the Sabbath day to go upon a sail or a ride, or to do a little work in the shop or counting-room, and "Only this once," or "Every body does so," whispers at your elbow, know it is false. The great evil of one sin is, that you bring your heart and conscience into such a state that you will be likely to go on sinning; for there is not half so much to stop you as there was to prevent you from setting out at first. Hold no parley with "Only this once," or "Everybody does so." Listen to their dangerous counsels not for a moment.

Are you thinking seriously about the welfare of your soul? Has the Holy Spirit fastened upon your conscience the solemn warnings of a faithful teacher, and brought to mind a tender mother's prayers for your conversion? That is a moment when "By and-by" hovers near to persuade you to put away serious things. It succeeded with poor Felix when Paul preached to him, and the Roman ruler was almost persuaded to become a christian. "By and by" whispered in his ear. He put off his soul's salvation to a more convenient season, and it never came.

"By and by" is a cheat as well as a liar. By putting you off he means to cheat your soul of heaven. God says now; "Now is the acceptable time and the day of salvation." He never asks you to postpone it. He makes no promises and no provisions for "By and by."

Dear children, be on your guard against these four servants of Satan, in little things as well as in great ones, for their only aim is to harm and ruin you.

The World's Crisis

AND SECOND ADVENT MESSENGER.

TERMS:

If paid in advance,— One year......$2.50 / Six months......$1.25
If not paid within six months,— One year......$3.00 / Six months......$1.50
Five copies, to one address, six months......$5.00
—same rate for any larger number under ten.
Ten copies, to one address, six months......$10.00
—same rate for any number over ten.

CLUB PRICES PAYABLE ALWAYS IN ADVANCE.

POSTAGE.—The postage, in the United States, on each single copy of the Crisis, is 20 cents a year, payable quarterly, in advance, at the office of delivery.

RULES FOR CORRESPONDENTS.—Over all matters not intended for publication, write PRIVATE. [illegible] and PLAINLY the Post Office, County and State at which [illegible] communications and remittances should be plainly directed to MILES GRANT, Boston, Mass.

The World's Crisis

AND SECOND ADVENT MESSENGER.

"BEHOLD, I COME QUICKLY; AND MY REWARD IS WITH ME."

WHOLE NO. 498. BOSTON, TUESDAY, APRIL 18, 1865. VOL. XXI.—NO. 5.

The World's Crisis
AND SECOND ADVENT MESSENGER,
Issued every Tuesday Afternoon, at
167 HANOVER STREET, BOSTON.

MILES GRANT, EDITOR.

EDITORIAL COMMITTEE:
S. G. MATHEWSON, I. C. WELLCOME, H. F. CARPENTER.

PUBLISHING COMMITTEE:
C. F. HUDSON, H. V. DAVIS, S. S. BREWER, J. G. HAMBLIN, D. MATHEWSON.

GEORGE T. ADAMS,
Treasurer and Business Agent.

☞ The Crisis is devoted to the exposition of all Bible truth; especially the doctrine of the immediate, personal coming and reign of Christ on the earth; holiness of heart; the unconscious state of the dead; their literal resurrection, and final destruction of the wicked.

For the World's Crisis.

"GOD IS LOVE."

Sinner, behold His love
In sending, thee to save,
His only and beloved Son
To die, and from the grave
Arise thy Friend and Advocate.
Behold him on the cross,
Dying and red with gore,
Redeeming thus thy loss.

Has friendship's love been thine?
Do human hearts display
Their care and kindness for your sake,
And you that love obey?
Is He devoid of love who thus
Implanteth love in man?
Ah! no, he loveth with a love
Which mortals never can.

All He hath made he loves,
Be it however vile;
His love's eternal as his name,
It frees the soul from guile.
He loves; and we can nothing do
To pay the debt we owe,
But praise His name, and to the world
His love and goodness show.

North Reading, N. Y. AMOS L. FORRESTER.

For the World's Crisis.

DEFINITE TIME.

A great number of times have been set for the advent of our Lord, during the period of nine hundred years past. Believers in those times have claimed that they had new light on the prophecies; that they could look into the "sealed book" and read and interpret its contents. Many have been so zealous for what they called the "present truth," they have proscribed and condemned all that did not believe in their time. Ministers who were very acceptable before, could not be allowed to preach in those societies where the majority had embraced the "new light," because they did not believe the Bible. And if such ministers went into those "time meetings," as they were called, they were branded as "wolves in sheep's clothing."

For the last twenty years there have been those who have looked with interest to the years 1866 and '68 for the coming of Christ. Dr. Cumming has been a professed believer in the '68 time, as making that the last point to which we may look. This view he has published for some ten years. Others in this country have come to the same time, and have been preaching it about the same length of time. Of late several preachers have adopted the time of Dr. Cumming and others, advocating it as new light, new discovery, and as Bible truth.

In the time theory, a proper regard has not always been paid to what the Savior has said on this subject. Matt. 24: 42–44,—"Watch, therefore; for ye know not what hour your Lord doth come. But know this, that if the good man of the house had known in what watch the thief would come, he would have watched, and would not have suffered his house to be broken up. Therefore be ye also ready; for in such an hour as ye think not the Son of man cometh."

To this it is said that the Savior did not say they would never know. Of course he did not say they would never know; for that would be to say that they would not know even after he had come. But, says the objector, the Savior meant that they did not know at the time he was talking, although they might and should know at some future time. If this be true, then those persons who heard the Savior speak did know the time before they died, or else they were to know the time after they died before the Lord comes.

The objector replies, This is not what I mean. The Savior meant that those who heard him did not know but that those who would live at the time of his coming might know. But I ask if it is not evident that he included the whole church? "What I say unto you, I say unto all; watch."

Again, it is said that if we would be like the good man of the house, we must know the watch. The Savior does not say nor imply any such thing. He says that if the good man of the house had known in what watch the thief would come, he would have watched. Of course he would. In this case he would not need to be told to watch. Inasmuch as he did not know, he should have been on his guard. Not watching for the time, but for the thief. Says the Savior, "Be ye also ready"—as the good man would have been if he had known the watch. Now you do not know the time, therefore you should be on the watch, and if so, you will not be overtaken as a thief in the night, though you know not the watch when he will come.

Our Lord's remarks belong to those who will be here when he comes. This every one can and must see. They are to watch, for they know not the time. It has been said that we must watch for time. Watching for time may be no part of the watchman's duty. His duty is to watch for the enemy. This is plain in all that our Lord has said on this subject. The good man was to watch for the thief, and not for the time when he would come. "What is it?" was asked, "Watchman, [illegible] what of the night?" (a passage that had its fulfillment more than two thousand years ago), he was not asked, "Watchman, what hour of the night?" What of the night? what has taken place during the night? That was his business, to see that no harm should come upon the city. Nothing had taken place, so he had nothing to report save what everybody knew: "the morning cometh, and also the night."

Mark 13: 33–37. "Take ye heed, watch and pray; for ye know not when the time is. For the Son of man is as a man taking a far journey, who left his house, and gave authority to his servants, and to every man his work, and commanded the porter to watch. Watch ye, therefore; for ye know not when the master of the house cometh, at even, or at midnight, or at the cock-crowing, or in the morning: lest coming suddenly he find you sleeping. And what I say unto you, I say unto all, watch." Here the Savior has marked the four watches of the night, and most plainly says that those whose duty it is to watch do not know in which of these watches he will come, and has told his people to watch for the reason that they do not know.

Some in our day have supposed that they have found these watches, and have made each one cover a period of several years. So they have looked to see one after another of their watches pass, till they have come to the fourth, and then say they know the Lord will come now, and he must come, because we are in the last watch. Thus they have made themselves believe that they have found the time—the watch, and even the day or hour of the watch. Jesus says, "Ye know not in what watch the Lord cometh." Well, says one, we did not know once, but we know now, and he did not say we should never know. You know that what he said is addressed to those whom he commands to watch. If, then, you are told to watch, you are the ones that do not know when the time is.

We are told that Jesus said, "No man knoweth, no, not the angels, neither the Son, but my Father only"; and then we are asked with a sort of triumph, Do you suppose Jesus will come without knowing the time before he comes? Now whether he will know or not, it is not for me to interpret this passage so as to contradict what he has said of the watching ones not knowing. Some read this passage, "No man maketh known, neither the angels, nor the Son, but the Father." That is, the Father will make it known. With this reading, it follows that man will not make it known, so it is not man's province to preach it. If the Father is to make it known, we are not told how, nor when he will do it. He is to send his Son, and this will make known the time.

It may be said that the Father will make it known to some of his people by his Spirit, and that they will make it known to others. This view of it would make a contradiction, for no man maketh it known. Then read the passage in this way, or let it stand as it reads, it is not to be so applied as to make it appear that his people will know what he says they will not know.

As evidence that we are to know the time of the Advent, we are referred to the passage, "The Lord will do nothing but he revealeth his secret to his servants the prophets." A thing done, and the time in which it is done, come under different heads. The Lord may reveal an event, or something to be done, and say nothing of the time, which is made known only by the event. I think we find some events, and great ones, too, in the Bible revealed which have no time connected with them. The things were revealed, but not the time.

Again, some say, We do not pretend to know the day nor hour, but the year. I think that every argument that I have seen on the year time, has for its claim a definite day in the year by which the year is claimed. If, then, the year is established by that date, then the day in the year is equally established. So that, if a man knows the year, he equally knows the day.

Says the objector, What are the prophetic periods given for, if we can not know by them when the Lord will come? If we could not tell what they are given for, it is evident that they were not given for us so to use them as to make the Savior's sayings untrue. He said, "My words shall not pass away." Jesus was talking about his coming when he said, "Ye know not when the time is." Those periods which are supposed to reach to the Lord's coming do not have his coming named in their connection.

I have read Mr. Thurman's book on time. I find that nearly every point that he has introduced has been believed and preached years ago. He takes for granted that all believe that the "seventy weeks" are cut off from the "twenty-three hundred days." I would say that some of our Advent friends never believed this, and that others who once believed it gave it up more than twenty years ago. His application of the seventy weeks to Jerusalem was believed and preached more than ten years ago. Mr. T. tries to show that the armies in Luke 21 do not mean Roman armies, and as proof says Jesus did not say Roman armies. If he will apply this argument to his time, his whole argument falls to the ground. That is, the angel did not say that the seventy weeks are cut off from the twenty-three hundred days, therefore they were not cut off. This mode of reasoning may be original.

There are one or two points in Mr. T.'s book that may be new to us all. Reckoning forty-nine years for a whole jubilee period is certainly new to me, and to others, so far as I know. I think this computation of time may have originated with Mr. T. I have nothing now to say of his knowledge of Astronomy. He may know more about it than I do, for I confess that I am not prepared to correct some of the most learned men that [illegible] have lived in this branch of extensive and profound study.

That the Lord may come before '68 may be true. I expect the event to reveal the time.

Watch, therefore, for ye know not when the time is. J. S. WHITE.

For the World's Crisis.

WHO LOVE JESUS' COMING?

This is a question which every one should decide for him or herself with diligent care in a scriptural manner, for such, and such only, seem to be counted worthy to receive "a crown of (life) righteousness" when Jesus makes his appearing. See 2 Tim. 4: 8. That very many who profess to be the followers of Christ, do not love the doctrine of his coming, there is no reason to doubt, for their enmity to it, and efforts to prevent its publication, fully establish their hatred, instead of love of his coming.

But because of the position of this class we should not make a proper classification in considering all opposed to Jesus' coming who do not see and acknowledge all the evidences and arguments some of us may see, of his immediate coming, or of the specific time of his coming. This is not unfrequently done by some who, in their zeal for truth, reckon all as opposers who do not learn as fast as they, or have not had the advantages to see and learn, or who perhaps may be able to see and show defects in some of the positions offered as infallible truths.

It seems to be a characteristic of some to so look upon all who do not see with them on any point; but it seems to be a principle, especially connected with the message of Christ's second advent, by the Devil, which some otherwise excellent minds imbibe and use to the injury of the cause they wish to promote. Let us be on our guard.

The doctrine of Christ's second coming is one of most vital importance, in its theoretical and practical character, and the Devil uses his most potent weapons to destroy its influence. Should we not learn to avoid the evils of the past movements? Certainly we should. Some of those who are now in our ranks are but young converts in this cause, while others have experienced much, and still others began with the beginning of the proclamation. I read some things and hear others, which make me cry to God to keep his children from acting over their past errors. While some are full of zeal on what they think they know, and full of interpretations which have often been made before them, and proved fallacious, and applications which are unwarrantable, others are giving words of caution, which seem not pleasantly received. Some are venturing to give their faith, and the reasons of it, in very strong language and confidence.

This may be all right, and it should not be thought improper that those who have been often told by others that the true light was found, the true time made out, and has as often proved untrue, should now examine, and test every new theory and testimony in the chain of arguments, without being considered opposed to the Lord's coming, or being charged with fear of investigation. As Bro. Munger has said, "we need no caution about investigating the time of Jesus' coming;" but we do need caution about rejecting any real fact, or accepting any illogical and sophistical arguments.

We need caution about receiving as facts what good men may call facts demonstrated, and so "pin our faith on another man's sleeve." We need caution in regard to the spirit of confidence we imbibe where we have not the means of knowing the facts, and in regard to the treatment of those who do not form the same conclusions we do. Some of us heard that Jesus was coming in 1843. We rejoiced for gladness, hoping it was so. We then knew but little of historical and chronological arguments; we thought others did know, and we put what little we could learn with our confidence in the knowledge of others, into the scale, and concluded all was right. Yet it proved otherwise.

Again we tried 1844, in the same way. It failed. We were sadly disappointed and afflicted. We tried 1847 less confidently, but in hope. That passed. Then I, and some others, began in good earnest to learn what we could on this subject for ourselves. We, however, concluded that if the Lord did not come before 1866, '67, '68, that Messrs. Faber, Cunningham or Bickersteth, who ended the periods there, had it right. Some rested on 1850, '51, '52, '53, '54, '55, others on 1860. Some have been so confident as not to admit of an if in the matter, and have concluded that those who could not see their light did not love Jesus' coming, were worldly or wicked. We have been waiting and investigating all along, constantly laboring for the salvation of men, hoping each year might bring our long looked for, and much desired Lord, determined to look and wait for HIM, (not for his sign, or the Jews' return, or Napoleon to do some magic work), until he come, watching signs and events.

New men have come among us, highly commended for piety, wisdom and learning, with new arguments and much zeal, with strong confidence they are right. Shall we refuse to hear them? No. We are glad of all their help, glad to hear what they know and think. But we shall investigate for ourselves, and carefully test, according to our several abilities, whatever they call facts and demonstrations. We have become used to such claims and terms, and while we grant them the right to judge for themselves what are facts, we claim and take the same right to decide for ourselves what is truth, finding that men are but men, and those of moderate pretensions have generally proved the most sound in wisdom.

Candid investigation brings out very important facts. Thus much is gained. Let us study the will of God, and be found obeying it; then we shall love to see Jesus, and he and his Father will love us, and will soon come and make their abode with us.

I. C. WELLCOME.

For the World's Crisis.

WILL THE TIMES AND SEASONS EVER BE DEFINITELY KNOWN?

NUMBER FOURTEEN.—Concluded.

Prophecies of present truth are only dark to those who will not investigate. It is only concerning his glorious coming the second time without sin unto salvation, that all is so dark we hardly know whether we are to be patiently waiting under the assurance that yet a little while and he that shall come, will come, and will not tarry. No, brethren, for what are ministers, the watchmen of the flock, placed on their watch-towers, but to assure the church in an unbelieving age that we have not followed cunningly devised fables respecting the coming of the Lord Jesus Christ? Let not professors or the world say that the preaching of the time is not practical. For surely the apostles felt that if the members of a church would come behind in no gift, they must stand waiting for the coming of Christ.

A certain writer says, that "It is one thing to know the day of the second coming of the Son of man, and another to know the approach of so remarkable an event." God is resolved that we may not know the day, but he wishes also, with the view that we may not be taken by surprise, that we should be aware of its approach. And it is even with the view that we may not deceive ourselves, that not content with promising signs by which we may recognize its approach, and for fear that we should not be able to distinguish these signs from many others very similar, he has condescended to point out for us the time when these last signs begin to show themselves.

"It may be supposed that these times are marked in an obscure way, but it is this very obscurity which should awaken our attention and render us more careful to study them, that we may not be exposed to the reproach to which God's people were formerly exposed, when he addressed them by the mouth of the prophet Jeremiah (8: 7), 'The stork of the heavens knoweth her appointed times, and the turtle and the crane; but my people know not the judgment of the Lord.' It was because they had not known the time of the first advent, or coming of the Lord, marked out in Scripture, that the Jews despised his miracles, that they were unwilling to recognize him, and that they were surprised by the misfortunes which had been predicted against them. And it will be also because they have not recognized the time of his second coming that the majority of the inhabitants of the earth will not be struck with the signs which shall precede it; and that the great day of the Lord will surprise them, will come upon them like a snare, and find them unprepared. These last signs will make no more impression on mankind, than all those have made which have appeared in the natural world up to this time. Mankind will easily persuade themselves that in all the great events which will succeed each other, by intervals, that there is nothing of which we have not in past times seen instances, or as Peter says they would say, 'For since the fathers fell asleep, all things continue as they were from the beginning of the creation.'—2 Peter 3: 4. So whatever might be the signs which are determined to precede the end of this dispensation, and however extraordinary they may be in their nature and multitude, it is certain that the greatest part of the inhabitants of the earth will not look on them as the forerunners of the last coming of the Son of man. For it is a matter on which we can have no doubt after the assurance given us by Jesus Christ, that the Son of man will come as a thief, when men little expect it, and he will surprise them as a net. How few did the supernatural darkness of the sun at the time of our Lord's crucifixion affect savingly. This eclipse or supernatural darkness commenced at the eastern limb of the sun, and proceeded west, and then came right back again. It was observed in Egypt, by Dionysius, the illustrious convert of Paul. Acts 17: 34. At Athens, speaking of the event, he says, 'The Deity was sympathizing with the sufferer, and the sufferer, according to tradition recorded by Syncellus of Jerusalem, he declared to be the unknown God; for whose sufferings all nature was darkened and convulsed.' See Hale's New Analytical Chronology, Vol. 2nd, Page 897.

Christ said if they would not believe Moses and the prophets, neither would they believe one from the dead. How many of the world believed when Lazarus was raised from the dead, think you? The reason for this stupidity on the part of mankind, and their insensiblity at the sight of those signs of which they are witnesses, is that they will be ignorant that such signs have been predicted, and will not take pains to recognize these last times, which are destined to precede the coming of the Son of Man. Such being the case, I leave the professors of religion and the world to conclude, if it be useful, if it be prudent, or rather if it is not absolutely necessary, to study the times and seasons in which we live, and how blind are those who under pretence that God has reserved to himself alone the knowledge of the day of retribution will not give themselves the trouble to acknowledge its approach.

I believe that if God has not already revealed, he will reveal all that is essentially necessary or important for the church to know for its growth in grace and knowledge. He is still a revealing God. Daniel (2: 22) says He "revealeth the deep and secret things," and in the twenty-eighth verse gives us the reason, that we might "know what shall be in the latter days."

In conclusion, we have passed the prophetic universal monarchies of Daniel; the Babylonian, the Medo-Persian and Grecian kingdoms have passed away. We have seen the Roman power in all its glory, and also in its divided state of ten parts. We have seen the glory and decadence of the Papal power. We have passed the first and second woes, or fifth and sixth trumpets, and the third woe cometh quickly, or seventh trumpet, which, as Paul says, raises the dead to life. We have passed the signs given by Christ; the sun and moon have fulfilled their purposes as signs, May 19th, 1780. The stars have fallen as described by John, like untimely figs, shaken by a mighty wind, Nov. 13th, 1833. And distress of nations, with perplexity, has ruled since 1848 (when thirty-six independent forms of government, were changed), down to the present time, and soon we may hear of the world's last battle.

In this breathless time may we find our watch-towers strongly manned by trusty watchmen, and all our outposts guarded. Let us all be "kindly affectioned one to another, with brotherly love, in honor preferring one another."—Romans 12: 10. In view of the events just before us, let us "live soberly, righteously and godly . . . looking for that blessed hope and the glorious appearing . . . of Jesus Christ."—Titus 2: 12, 13.

New Sharon, Me. JOHN TAYLOR.

For the World's Crisis.

FRIENDSHIP'S OFFERING.

To the beloved in Christ scattered abroad.

BY S. S. BREWER.

With thankfulness to God above,
And gratitude to ye,
For all your acts of tender love
Extended unto me;
Up to our Head enthroned above
I'll lift my feeble prayer,
That ye may ever know his love,
His kind protection share.

Few 'mong the multitudes that live
Are willing to believe
It is more blessed still to give
Than in return receive.
This be your portion e'er to know
That precious promise giv'n,
Which God upon such still bestows,
And love, like dews from heav'n.

How good and precious is a friend.
Mine most of early years
Have reached life's frail and weary end,
And quit this vale of tears.
And as I totter down the hill,
Infirmities increase,
'Tis sweet to do my Master's will,
And thus be kept in peace.

Accept this offering from my heart;
'Tis pure, my Father sees,
And ever let me share a part
Before Him on your knees.
And when the smilings of his face
Are lighted down on me,
In secret at his throne of grace,
Dear ones, I'll think of ye.

O, may the love of God be thine
As months and years increase,
And brighter on your pathway shine
His precious bow of peace.
I wait with patience for the hour
When our blest Lord shall come
With shining myriads clothed in power,
To take his exiles home.

O, then amid those clad in white,
Who enter Canaan's land,
With crowns of glory dazzling bright,
May you as victors stand.
Then all the ransomed host shall sing,
When there brought home to see
The glories of their conquering King,
To all eternity.

Ashburnham Depot, Mass.

For the World's Crisis.

"TESTIMONY."

"Bless the Lord, oh my soul! and all that is within me, bless his holy name!" He hath cleansed me from all sin, and hath sent his Spirit into my heart, crying Abba, Father! Glory be to God! I am no longer left to grope in unbelief and darkness, but am enabled by the grace of God to rejoice in hope; and what a blessed hope is the hope of the christian—even eternal life with Jesus Christ our Lord. It is good to labor in the service of our Master, and although in the world we have tribulation, we know that our light affliction, which is but for a moment, worketh for us a far more exceeding and ETERNAL weight of glory. We should lay aside every weight, and the sin which doth so easily beset us, and with our eyes fixed immovably on Jesus, would run with patience the race which is set before us. The Lord has indeed blessed me, and instead of evil thoughts and imaginations, and clouds of unbelief and sin, I have now a quiet and peaceful mind.

"I found this treasure at the cross;
And there, to every kind
Of weary, heavy laden souls,
Christ gives a quiet mind."

May God give us grace and strength to do his will, and when the trump shall sound, may we be found with our lamps trimmed and burning, and we be caught up to meet the Lord in the air. Amen.

Hammonton, N. J. ELLA S. BENTON.

For the World's Crisis.

A QUESTION.

What will be the consequence if an irresistible force should come in contact with an immovable body? would it knock a hole in it? I mean, would the irresistible force knock a hole in the immovable body? I suppose it is impossible to do such a thing, and if the hole is knocked in the body, some part will give way, which will show it is not immovable. I could not help thinking that immortal-soulists are puzzling themselvves in a similar way. We will state the puzzle for them.

What will be the consequence if an unquenchable and devouring fire should come in contact with an indestructible, or, which is the same thing, an immortal soul? Would it burn a hole in it? or, what would it do? You know "the fire cannot go out," and it is a devouring fire; but it cannot devour itself; if it did, it would go out. It cannot devour the soul, for that is indestructible; and if it should produce any effect upon it, that would prove it not immortal, or indestructible. Pray, my friend, what will you do with your immortal-soul theory?

"The soul that sinneth, it shall die." Ezek. 18: 20. "That thou shouldst reward them that fear thy name, small and great, and shouldst destroy them which destroy the earth." Rev. 11: 18. "Broad is the way that leadeth to destruction." Matt. 7: 13. "When all the workers of iniquity do flourish, it is that they shall be destroyed." Ps. 92: 7. "If any man defile the temple of God (which temples ye are), him shall God destroy." 1 Cor. 3: 17. Had you not better own the truth, and be in harmony with God's word?

JAS. E. CLARK.

For the World's Crisis.

CHRISTIAN UNION;

OR, THE DISCOURAGING TENDENCY OF SCHISM IN THE CHURCH OF CHRIST.—No. 5.

"Let discord, child of hell,
Be banished far away;
Those should in strictest friendship dwell,
Who the same Lord obey.
Thus will the church below
Resemble that above,
Where streams of pleasure ever flow,
And every heart is love."

Says Elder A. Pryne,—"The church of God has a natural organization, which grows out of the very nature of true religion. The principles of the gospel can be fully developed through such as organizations only. Any departure from such an organization is a loss of power, just in the ratio of such departure. There is an order in the structure of all things which must be observed, or ruin is the consequence. The human body is beautiful and strong, because the natural laws of mechanism and of mind are obeyed in its formation. Every departure from these laws begets a deformity and a weakness. It will not do to separate the eyes, or to cut off one of the hands, or to exclude any member of the body from its appropriate place. By such a process we produce a monster or a cripple. Great nature will be obeyed, or she punishes appropriately all who ruthlessly invade her dominions, and interfere with her works. Her organizations are simple, but quite essential to her power. There is a law of natural development, which governs all science, and fills the universe with harmony and beauty. The agriculturist must fulfill the laws which govern the growth of fruits and grains, or however industriously he labors, he will fail in results. The navigator cannot make the laws that govern tides and storms, but must conform to them, or be wrecked.

"When the astronomer, in his researches or experiments, varies a hair's breadth from the principle of his science, that variation is increased a thousand-fold in the result. The physician, who interferes with the laws of health, under the pretense of aiding nature, mars her work, and, in the end, destroys his silly patient. The political economist who would force a commerce here, or create a manufactory there, where the state of society and the natural law of supply and demand do not ask for either, is sadly in the way of beneficent results. The statesman who forgets to study the laws of government, as they are inscribed upon the moral constitution of man, and revealed in the nature of the divine rule, and attempts to organize government on a plan of his own, constructs a murderous engine of oppression and civil misrule.

"God, through the deep voices of nature, is ever calling us back to first principles, whether we are engaged in the cultivation of the earth, or the founding of empires. There is a simple, divine order underlying all things, from the construction of the simplest instrument of labor, to the establishment and triumph of Christ's kingdom on earth. To this rule, the organization of the church is by no means an exception. The higher we ascend in the scale of divine forces, the more indispensable the rule. A single meteoric stone may do but little harm by being forced to disobey the law of gravitation; but a planet, forgetting the laws of its motion, would carry wide desolation in its pathway through the heavens.

"So a man might depart from the law of natural order in mechanics or agriculture, and the evil would be unimportant; but when the church—God's army—'the light of the world,'—the visible hope of human redemption,—forgets the natural laws of its own order and power, and breaks into ungoverned rebellion against the divine law of its own constitution, the ruin wrought must be immeasurable.

"Under the power of sectarianism, and in bondage to factious leaders, God's people have been wandering in anarchy, and violating the organic laws of Christ's kingdom for ages. These laws are fountains of growth, strength and power; and never, until good men and women come back to them, can earth be saved by their instrumentality. Sectarianism tramples these laws under foot, and seeks religious results in defiance of them.

"We will point out a few of the laws of religious social life, violated by modern sectarianism, and show the importance of their observance.

"One of the simplest, most obvious, and yet most important of these laws is, that there should be but one church in the same locality. Every careful reader of the New Testament must be aware of the fact, that this rule was most faithfully observed for a number of ages after the death of the Savior. Of the church at Jerusalem, it is said, 'All that believed were together.' The 'saints' at Rome are spoken of as the church in Rome. The reason why, in Corinth, by Paul, shows that he insisted upon there being but one church in each place. His addresses to the churches at Colosse and Ephesus develop and urge the same truth upon the membership. Indeed, it is not necessary for us to quote texts to this point, because, as yet, we never heard it denied.

"As a question of Bible or church history, it will not be disputed that, for several centuries after the Savior's ascension, the principle of but one church in each place was adhered to most strictly. There is not a single instance of the violation of this rule, and the organization of two churches in the same place, down to the end of New Testament history, nor for many generations afterwards. The most pointed and unqualified rebukes of every attempt to violate this law, are to be found, not only in the epistles, but they abound throughout the writings of the early fathers.

"But how remorselessly and universally is this principle violated by the religious organizations of our day! Each country village rears its rival spires toward heaven, in utter disregard of the Bible rule. Where there are a thousand worshipers, there are from five to ten rival sects. So far from regarding such a state of things as criminal, the great mass of persons regard the number of steeples in a place, as the guage of its godliness. So completely is the first law of church order trampled out of sight, that good men and women in every place are found to plot industriously against its restoration, and to treat as heretics those who would urge them to return to its observance. This being the case, we propose to show the practical evils resulting from building rival churches in the same place.

"It must be obvious to every one, on a moment's reflection, that the grand purpose of the true church is to call out, combine and direct the talents and graces of the individual christian in a community. Whatever organism it adopts, that organism can be valuable only as it aids in reaching this result. If it waste the talents, or moneyed power of the brotherhood, or in any way misdirects their energies, it is a curse rather than a blessing. If the machinery is quadruple what is needed for the work, and much of its force is wasted by friction, there must be a corresponding failure in results. A proper organization of labor is as indispensable to a church, as to a family, or a State. Without it, power may be foolishly and disastrously expended.

"Take for illustration, the interests of education and the organization of schools, and it is easy to see how a misdirection of forces and means will prove disastrous. Suppose in a hamlet where there are fifty scholars who can all be accommodated in one house and taught by one teacher, the people, from a difference in taste and judgment about the details, divide and build five school-houses and hire five teachers. Each teacher spends his time with ten pupils, while he might have taught fifty quite as well. There are five committees where but one is needed. All the appointmnets of the school-rooms are multiplied by five in addition to what would have been necessary, if these silly people could have combined their strength and means. A neighborhood that should act thus, would be ridiculed by all the world, and pointed at as a standing illustration of the childish folly of the spirit of faction. There would be no peace in such a neighborhood. The spirit of a wide-spread feud would underlie the whole educational operations of the people, and would break out on every tempting occasion. The children, thus educated, would become clannish and ill-natured neighbors. Every one can easily see how foolish and disastrous all this would be, as a plan for conducting education. But it is precisely analagous, even in detail, with the modern plan of teaching and spreading christianity.

"In a village of less than one thousand worshipers, it is common to find five sects. One minister could do all the work of preaching in such a place, quite as profitably as five; but the people cannot agree who he shall be; and the minority will not submit to the majority in choosing a preacher; and so they must have five preachers, where but one is needed. In the same manner, and for the same reasons, all the appointments of these worshiping assemblies are multiplied five-fold. Now, looked at as a business transaction,—a scheme for spreading religion,—can anything be more palpably foolish and wasteful than all this? Add to this the fact, that according to all these factionists, there is no essential difference—nothing that invalidates christian character—between them, and it seems to us, we have reached the climax of human folly and weakness, as developed by the spirit of religious faction. This folly could not be perpetrated with impunity under any other name than that of religion.

"A proposition to establish five courts of justice in a village of two thousand people, and to have it understood that their decisions in a given case should often conflict, would be regarded with scorn in any community, but that of mere brawlers. But the establishment of five conflicting ecclesiastical courts, is gravely entered upon by ministers and people. And the collisions consequent upon this state of things, they mourn over as "unfortunate." The conflicting civil courts would be denounced as a sham, and an outrage upon the very name of justice. But the conflicting church courts must not be spoken of disrespectfully. Of course, in such a state of society there is neither religious law or justice, but party bias and prejudice rule the community. As between such civil courts, thieves and incendiaries would manage to escape by a judicious use of the party wires, so, amid the conflicting interests of such religious courts, slaveholders, wicked rulers and rich hypocrites, find but little difficulty in escaping just treatment. If one court condemns them, they have only to flee to another and have the decision reversed. Sectarianism repeats this farce a thousand times over, throughout Christendom. As such a state of things would effectually disorganize all arrangements for securing civil justice, so does it destroy all hope of religious justice among and between the sects."

D. F. NEWTON.

WHAT DON'T PAY.—A great long string of verses, ground out through a ringing machine, that makes one think of filing saws to read it, and this sent to a religious paper to be printed! We are not all poets.

A long obituary of little Susie, who died when she was just two years, three months, six days and one half old. Sermon on the occasion, by the writer, to a very quiet and deeply interested congregation. [illegible] printed for the special benefit of ten thousand readers.—Ex.

The World's Crisis
AND SECOND ADVENT MESSENGER.

"BEHOLD, I COME QUICKLY; AND MY REWARD IS WITH ME."

WHOLE NO. 498. BOSTON, TUESDAY, APRIL 18, 1865. VOL. XXI.—NO. 5.

The World's Crisis
AND SECOND ADVENT MESSENGER,
Issued every Tuesday Afternoon, at
167 HANOVER STREET, BOSTON.

MILES GRANT, EDITOR.

EDITORIAL COMMITTEE:
S. G. MATHEWSON, I. C. WELLCOME,
H. F. CARPENTER.

PUBLISHING COMMITTEE:
C. F. HUDSON, H. V. DAVIS,
S. S. BREWER, J. G. HAMBLIN,
D. MATHEWSON.

GEORGE T. ADAMS,
Treasurer and Business Agent.

☞ The Crisis is devoted to the exposition of all Bible truth; especially the doctrine of the immediate, personal coming and reign of Christ on the earth; holiness of heart; the unconscious state of the dead; their literal resurrection, and final destruction of the wicked.

For the World's Crisis.

"GOD IS LOVE."

Sinner, behold His love
In sending, thee to save,
His only and beloved Son
To die, and from the grave
Arise thy Friend and Advocate.
Behold him on the cross,
Dying and red with gore,
Redeeming thus thy loss.

Has friendship's love been thine?
Do human hearts display
Their care and kindness for your sake,
And you that love obey?
Is He devoid of love who thus
Implanteth love in man?
Ah! no, he loveth with a love
Which mortals never can.

All He hath made he loves,
Be it however vile;
His love's eternal as his name,
It frees the soul from guile.
He loves; and we can nothing do
To pay the debt we owe,
But praise His name, and to the world
His love and goodness show.

North Reading, N. Y. AMOS L. FORRESTER.

For the World's Crisis.

DEFINITE TIME.

A great number of times have been set for the advent of our Lord, during the period of nine hundred years past. Believers in those times have claimed that they had new light on the prophecies; that they could look into the "sealed book" and read and interpret its contents. Many have been so zealous for what they called the "present truth," they have proscribed and condemned all that did not believe in their time. Ministers who were very acceptable before, could not be allowed to preach in those societies where the majority had embraced the "new light," because they did not believe the Bible. And if such ministers went into those "time meetings," as they were called, they were branded as "wolves in sheep's clothing."

For the last twenty years there have been those who have looked with interest to the years 1866 and '68 for the coming of Christ. Dr. Cumming has been a professed believer in the '68 time, as making that the last point to which we may look. This view he has published for some ten years. Others in this country have come to the same time, and have been preaching it about the same length of time. Of late several preachers have adopted the time of Dr. Cumming and others, advocating it as new light, new discovery, and as Bible truth.

In the time theory, a proper regard has not always been paid to what the Savior has said on this subject. Matt. 24: 42-44,—"Watch, therefore; for ye know not what hour your Lord doth come. But know this, that if the good man of the house had known in what watch the thief would come, he would have watched, and would not have suffered his house to be broken up. Therefore be ye also ready; for in such an hour as ye think not the Son of man cometh."

To this it is said that the Savior did not say they would never know. Of course he did not say they would never know; for that would be to say that they would not know even after he had come. But, says the objector, the Savior meant that they did not know at the time he was talking, although they might and should know at some future time. If this be true, then those persons who heard the Savior speak did know the time before they died, or else they were to know the time after they died before the Lord comes.

The objector replies, This is not what I mean. The Savior meant that those who heard him did not know but that those who would live at the time of his coming might know. But I ask if it is not evident that he included the whole church? "What I say unto you, I say unto all; watch."

Again, it is said that if we would be like the good man of the house, we must know the watch. The Savior does not say nor imply any such thing. He says that if the good man of the house had known in what watch the thief would come, he would have watched. Of course he would. In this case he would not need to be told to watch. Inasmuch as he did not know, he should have been on his guard. Not watching for the time, but for the thief. Says the Savior, "Be ye also ready"—as the good man would have been if he had known the watch. Now you do not know the time, therefore you should be on the watch, and if so, you will not be overtaken as a thief in the night, though you know not the watch when he will come.

Our Lord's remarks belong to those who will be here when he comes. This every one can and must see. They are to watch, for they know not the time. It has been said that we must watch for time. Watching for time may be no part of the watchman's duty. His duty is to watch for the event. This is plain in all that our Lord has said on this subject. The good man was to watch for the thief, and not for the time when he would come. When it was asked,—"Watchman, what of the night?" (a passage that had its fulfillment more than two thousand years ago), he was not asked, "Watchman, what hour of the night?" What of the night? what has taken place during the night? That was his business, to see that no harm should come upon the city. Nothing had taken place, so he had nothing to report save what everybody knew: "the morning cometh, and also the night."

Mark 13: 33-37. "Take ye heed, watch and pray; for ye know not when the time is. For the Son of man is as a man taking a far journey, who left his house, and gave authority to his servants, and to every man his work, and commanded the porter to watch. Watch ye, therefore; for ye know not when the master of the house cometh, at even, or at midnight, or at the cock-crowing, or in the morning: lest coming suddenly he find you sleeping. And what I say unto you, I say unto all, watch." Here the Savior has marked the four watches of the night, and most plainly says that those whose duty it is to watch do not know in which of these watches he will come, and has told his people to watch for the reason that they do not know.

Some in our day have supposed that they have found these watches, and have made each one cover a period of several years. So they have looked to see one after another of their watches pass, till they have come to the fourth, and then say they know the Lord will come now, and he must come, because we are in the last watch. Thus they have made themselves believe that they have found the time—the watch, and even the day or hour of the watch. Jesus says, "Ye know not in what watch the Lord cometh." Well, says one, we did not know once, but we know now, and he did not say we should never know. You know that what he said is addressed to those whom he commands to watch. If, then, you are told to watch, you are the ones that do not know when the time is.

We are told that Jesus said, "No man knoweth, no, not the angels, neither the Son, but my Father only"; and then we are asked with a sort of triumph, Do you suppose Jesus will come without knowing the time before he comes? Now whether he will know or not, it is not for me to interpret this passage so as to contradict what he has said of the watching ones not knowing. Some read this passage, "No man maketh known, neither the angels, nor the Son, but the Father." That is, the Father will make it known. With this reading, it follows that man will not make it known, so it is not man's province to preach it. If the Father is to make it known, we are not told how, nor when he will do it. He is to send his Son, and this will make known the time.

It may be said that the Father will make it known to some of his people by his Spirit, and that they will make it known to others. This view of it would make a contradiction, for no man maketh it known. Then read the passage in this way, or let it stand as it reads, it is not to be so applied as to make it appear that his people will know what he says they will not know.

As evidence that we are to know the time of the Advent, we are referred to the passage, "The Lord will do nothing but he revealeth his secret to his servants the prophets." A thing done, and the time in which it is done, come under different heads. The Lord may reveal an event, or something to be done, and say nothing of the time, which is made known only by the event. I think we find some events, and great ones, too, in the Bible revealed which have no time connected with them. The things were revealed, but not the time.

Again, some say, We do not pretend to know the day nor hour, but the year. I think that every argument that I have seen on the year time, has for its claim a definite day in the year by which the year is claimed. If, then, the year is established by that date, then the day in the year is equally established. So that, if a man knows the year, he equally knows the day.

Says the objector, What are the prophetic periods given for, if we can not know by them when the Lord will come? If we could not tell what they are given for, it is evident that they were not given for us so to use them as to make the Savior's sayings untrue. He said, "My words shall not pass away." Jesus was talking about his coming when he said, "Ye know not when the time is." Those periods which are supposed to reach to the Lord's coming do not have his coming named in their connection.

I have read Mr. Thurman's book on time. I find that nearly every point that he has introduced has been believed and preached years ago. He takes for granted that all believe that the "seventy weeks" are cut off from the "twenty-three hundred days." I would say that some of our Advent friends never believed this, and that others who once believed it gave it up more than twenty years ago. His application of the seventy weeks to Jerusalem was believed and preached more than ten years ago. Mr. T. tries to show that the armies in Luke 21 do not mean Roman armies, and as proof says Jesus did not say Roman armies. If he will apply this argument to his time, his whole argument falls to the ground. That is, the angel did not say that the seventy weeks are cut off from the twenty-three hundred days, therefore they were not cut off. This mode of reasoning may be original.

There are one or two points in Mr. T.'s book that may be new to us all. Reckoning forty-nine years for a whole jubilee period is certainly new to me, and to others, so far as I know. I think this computation of time may have originated with Mr. T. I have nothing now to say of his knowledge of Astronomy. He may know more about it than I do, for I confess that I am not prepared to correct some of the most learned men that have lived in this branch of extensive and profound study.

That the Lord may come before '68 may be true. I expect the event to reveal the time.

Watch, therefore, for ye know not when the time is. J. S. WHITE.

For the World's Crisis.

WHO LOVE JESUS' COMING?

This is a question which every one should decide for him or herself with diligent care in a scriptural manner, for such, and such only, seem to be counted worthy to receive "a crown of (life) righteousness" when Jesus makes his appearing. See 2 Tim. 4: 8. That very many who profess to be the followers of Christ, do not love the doctrine of his coming, there is no reason to doubt, for their enmity to it, and efforts to prevent its publication, fully establish their hatred, instead of love of his coming.

But because of the position of this class we should not make a proper classification in considering all opposed to Jesus' coming who do not see and acknowledge all the evidences and arguments some of us may see, of his immediate coming, or of the specific time of his coming. This is not unfrequently done by some who, in their zeal for truth, reckon all as opposers who do not learn as fast as they, or have not had the advantages to see and learn, or who perhaps may be able to see and show defects in some of the positions offered as infallible truths.

It seems to be a characteristic of some to so look upon all who do not see with them on any point; but it seems to be a principle, especially connected with the message of Christ's second advent, by the Devil, which some otherwise excellent minds imbibe and use to the injury of the cause they wish to promote. Let us be on our guard.

The doctrine of Christ's second coming is one of most vital importance, in its theoretical and practical character, and the Devil uses his most potent weapons to destroy its influence. Should we not learn to avoid the evils of the past movements? Certainly we should. Some of those who are now in our ranks are but young converts in this cause, while others have experienced much, and still others began with the beginning of the proclamation. I read some things and hear others, which make me cry to God to keep his children from acting over their past errors. While some are full of zeal on what they think they know, and full of interpretations which have often been made before them, and proved fallacious, and applications which are unwarrantable, others are giving words of caution, which seem not pleasantly received. Some are venturing to give their faith, and the reasons of it, in very strong language and confidence.

This may be all right, and it should not be thought improper that those who have been often told by others that the true light was found, the true time made out, and has as often proved untrue, should now examine, and test every new theory and testimony in the chain of arguments, without being considered opposed to the Lord's coming, or being charged with fear of investigation. As Bro. Munger has said, "we need no caution about investigating the time of Jesus' coming;" but we do need caution about rejecting any real fact, or accepting any illogical and sophistical arguments.

We need caution about receiving as facts what good men may call facts demonstrated, and so "pin our faith on another man's sleeve." We need caution in regard to the spirit of confidence we imbibe where we have not the means of knowing the facts, and in regard to the treatment of those who do not form the same conclusions we do. Some of us heard that Jesus was coming in 1843. We rejoiced for gladness, hoping it was so. We then knew but little of historical and chronological arguments; we thought others did know, and we put what little we could learn with our confidence in the knowledge of others, into the scale, and concluded all was right. Yet it proved otherwise.

Again we tried 1844, in the same way. It failed. We were sadly disappointed and afflicted. We tried 1847 less confidently, but in hope. That passed. Then I, and some others, began in good earnest to learn what we could on this subject for ourselves. We, however, concluded that if the Lord did not come before 1866, '67, '68, that Messrs. Faber, Cunningham or Bickersteth, who ended the periods there, had it right. Some rested on 1850, '51, '52, '53, '54, '55, others on 1860. Some have been so confident as not to admit of an if in the matter, and have concluded that those who could not see their light did not love Jesus' coming, were worldly or wicked. We have been waiting and investigating all along, constantly laboring for the salvation of men, hoping each year might bring our long looked for, and much desired Lord, determined to look and wait for HIM, (not for his sign, or the Jews' return, or Napoleon to do some magic work), until he come, watching signs and events.

New men have come among us, highly commended for piety, wisdom and learning, with new arguments and much zeal, with strong confidence they are right. Shall we refuse to hear them? No. We are glad of all their help, glad to hear what they know and think. But we shall investigate for ourselves, and carefully test, according to our several abilities, whatever they call facts and demonstrations. We have become used to such claims and terms, and while we grant them the right to judge for themselves what are facts, we claim and take the same right to decide for ourselves what is truth, finding that men are but men, and those of moderate pretensions have generally proved the most sound in wisdom.

Candid investigation brings out very important facts. Thus much is gained. Let us study the will of God, and be found obeying it; then we shall love to see Jesus, and he and his Father will love us, and will soon come and make their abode with us.

I. C. WELLCOME.

For the World's Crisis.

WILL THE TIMES AND SEASONS EVER BE DEFINITELY KNOWN?

NUMBER FOURTEEN.—Concluded.

Prophecies of present truth are only dark to those who will not investigate. It is only concerning his glorious coming the second time without sin unto salvation, that all is so dark we hardly know whether we are to be patiently waiting under the assurance that yet a little while and he that shall come, will come, and will not tarry. No, brethren, for what are ministers, the watchmen of the flock, placed on their watch-towers, but to assure the church in an unbelieving age that we have not followed cunningly devised fables respecting the coming of the Lord Jesus Christ? Let not professors or the world say that the preaching of the time is not practical. For surely the apostles felt that if the members of a church would come behind in no gift, they must stand waiting for the coming of Christ.

A certain writer says, that "It is one thing to know the day of the second coming of the Son of man, and another to know the approach of so remarkable an event." God is resolved that we may not know the day, but he wishes also, with the view that we may not be taken by surprise, that we should be aware of its approach. And it is even with the view that we may not deceive ourselves, that not content with promising signs by which we may recognize its approach, and for fear that we should not be able to distinguish these signs from many others very similar, he has condescended to point out for us the time when these last signs begin to show themselves.

"It may be supposed that these times are marked in an obscure way, but it is this very obscurity which should awaken our attention and render us more careful to study them, that we may not be exposed to the reproach to which God's people were formerly exposed, when he addressed them by the mouth of the prophet Jeremiah (8: 7), 'The stork of the heavens knoweth her appointed times, and the turtle and the crane; but my people know not the judgment of the Lord.' It was because they had not known the time of the first advent, or coming of the Lord, marked out in Scripture, that the Jews despised his miracles, that they were unwilling to recognize him, and that they were surprised by the misfortunes which had been predicted against them. And it will be also because they have not recognized the time of his second coming that the majority of the inhabitants of the earth will not be struck with the signs which shall precede it; and that the great day of the Lord will surprise them, will come upon them like a snare, and find them unprepared. These last signs will make no more impression on mankind, than all those have made which have appeared in the natural world up to this time. Mankind will easily persuade themselves that in all the great events which will succeed each other, by intervals, that there is nothing of which we have not in past times seen instances, or as Peter says they would say, 'For since the fathers fell asleep, all things continue as they were from the beginning of the creation.'—2 Peter 3: 4. So whatever might be the signs which are determined to precede the end of this dispensation, and however extraordinary they may be in their nature and multitude, it is certain that the greatest part of the inhabitants of the earth will not look on them as the forerunners of the last coming of the Son of man. For it is a matter on which we can have no doubt after the assurance given us by Jesus Christ, that the Son of man will come as a thief, when men little expect it, and he will surprise them as a net. How few did the supernatural darkness of the sun at the time of our Lord's crucifixion affect savingly. This eclipse or supernatural darkness commenced at the eastern limb of the sun, and proceeded west, and then came right back again. It was observed in Egypt, by Dionysius, the illustrious convert of Paul. Acts 17: 34. At Athens, speaking of the event, he says, 'The Deity was sympathizing with the sufferer, and the sufferer, according to tradition recorded by Syncellus of Jerusalem, he declared to be the unknown God; for whose sufferings all nature was darkened and convulsed.' See Hale's New Analytical Chronology, Vol. 2nd, Page 897.

Christ said if they would not believe Moses and the prophets, neither would they believe one from the dead. How many of the world believed when Lazarus was raised from the dead, think you? The reason for this stupidity on the part of mankind, and their insensiblity at the sight of those signs of which they are witnesses, is that they will be ignorant that such signs have been predicted, and will not take pains to recognize these last times, which are destined to precede the coming of the Son of Man. Such being the case, I leave the professors of religion and the world to conclude, if it be useful, if it be prudent, or rather if it is not absolutely necessary, to study the times and seasons in which we live, and how blind are those who under pretence that God has reserved to himself, alone the knowledge of the day of retribution will not give themselves the trouble to acknowledge its approach.

I believe that if God has not already revealed, he will reveal all that is essentially necessary or important for the church to know for its growth in grace and knowledge. He is still a revealing God. Daniel (2: 22) says He "revealeth the deep and secret things," and in the twenty-eighth verse gives us the reason, that we might "know what shall be in the latter days."

In conclusion, we have passed the prophetic universal monarchies of Daniel; the Babylonian, the Medo-Persian and Grecian kingdoms have passed away. We have seen the Roman power in all its glory, and also in its divided state of ten parts. We have seen the glory and decadence of the Papal power. We have passed the first and second woes, or fifth and sixth trumpets, and the third woe cometh quickly, or seventh trumpet, which, as Paul says, raises the dead to life. We have passed the signs given by Christ; the sun and moon have fulfilled their purposes as signs, May 19th, 1780. The stars have fallen as described by John, like untimely figs, shaken by a mighty wind, Nov. 13th, 1833. And distress of nations, with perplexity, has ruled since 1848 (when thirty-six independent forms of government, were changed), down to the present time, and soon we may hear of the world's last battle.

In this breathless time may we find our watch-towers strongly manned by trusty watchmen, and all our outposts guarded. Let us all be "kindly affectioned one to another, with brotherly love, in honor preferring one another."—Romans 12: 10. In view of the events just before us, let us "live soberly, righteously and godly . . . looking for that blessed hope and the glorious appearing . . . of Jesus Christ."—Titus 2: 12, 13.

New Sharon, Me. JOHN TAYLOR.

For the World's Crisis.

FRIENDSHIP'S OFFERING.

To the beloved in Christ scattered abroad.

BY S. S. BREWER.

With thankfulness to God above,
And gratitude to ye,
For all your acts of tender love
Extended unto me;
Up to our Head enthroned above
I'll lift my feeble prayer,
That ye may ever know his love,
His kind protection share.

Few 'mong the multitudes that live
Are willing to believe
It is more blessed still to give
Than in return receive.
This be your portion e'er to know
That precious promise giv'n,
Which God upon such still bestows,
And love, like dews from heav'n.

How good and precious is a friend.
Mine most of early years
Have reached life's frail and weary end,
And quit this vale of tears.
And as I totter down the hill,
Infirmities increase,
'Tis sweet to do my Master's will,
And thus be kept in peace.

Accept this offering from my heart;
'Tis pure, my Father sees,
And ever let me share a part
Before Him on your knees.
And when the smilings of his face
Are lighted down on me,
In secret at his throne of grace,
Dear ones, I'll think of ye.

O, may the love of God be thine
As months and years increase,
And brighter on your pathway shine
His precious bow of peace.
I wait with patience for the hour
When our blest Lord shall come
With shining myriads clothed in power,
To take his exiles home.

O, then amid those clad in white,
Who enter Canaan's land,
With crowns of glory dazzling bright,
May you as victors stand.
Then all the ransomed host shall sing,
When there brought home to see
The glories of their conquering King,
To all eternity.

Ashburnham Depot, Mass.

For the World's Crisis.

"TESTIMONY."

"Bless the Lord, oh my soul! and all that is within me, bless his holy name!" He hath cleansed me from all sin, and hath sent his Spirit into my heart, crying Abba, Father! Glory be to God! I am no longer left to grope in unbelief and darkness, but am enabled by the grace of God to rejoice in hope; and what a blessed hope is the hope of the christian—even eternal life with Jesus Christ our Lord. It is good to labor in the service of our Master, and although in the world we have tribulation, we know that our light affliction, which is but for a moment, worketh for us a far more exceeding and ETERNAL weight of glory. We should lay aside every weight, and the sin which doth so easily beset us, and with our eyes fixed immovably on Jesus, would run with patience the race which is set before us. The Lord has indeed blessed me, and instead of evil thoughts and imaginations, and clouds of unbelief and sin, I have now a quiet and peaceful mind.

"I found this treasure at the cross;
And there, to every kind
Of weary, heavy laden souls,
Christ gives a quiet mind."

May God give us grace and strength to do his will, and when the trump shall sound, may we be found with our lamps trimmed and burning, and we be caught up to meet the Lord in the air. Amen.

Hammonton, N. J. ELLA S. BENTON.

For the World's Crisis.

A QUESTION.

What will be the consequence if an irresistible force should come in contact with an immovable body? would it knock a hole in it? I mean, would the irresistible force knock a hole in the immovable body? I suppose it is impossible to do such a thing, and if the hole is knocked in the body, some part will give way, which will show it is not immovable. I could not help thinking that immortal-soulists are puzzling themselvves in a similar way. We will state the puzzle for them.

What will be the consequence if an unquenchable and devouring fire should come in contact with an indestructible, or, which is the same thing, an immortal soul? Would it burn a hole in it? or, what would it do? You know "the fire cannot go out," and it is a devouring fire; but it cannot devour itself; if it did, it would go out. It cannot devour the soul, for that is indestructible; and if it should produce any effect upon it, that would prove it not immortal, or indestructible. Pray, my friend, what will you do with your immortal-soul theory?

"The soul that sinneth, it shall die." Ezek. 18: 4: 20. "That thou shouldst reward them that fear thy name, small and great, and shouldst destroy them which destroy the earth." Rev. 11: 18. "Broad is the way that leadeth to destruction." Matt. 7: 13. "When all the workers of iniquity do flourish, it is that they shall be destroyed." Ps. 92: 7. "If any man defile the temple of God (which temples ye are), him shall God destroy." 1 Cor. 3: 17. Had you not better own the truth, and be in harmony with God's word?

JAS. E. CLARK.

For the World's Crisis.

CHRISTIAN UNION;

OR, THE DISCOURAGING TENDENCY OF SCHISM IN THE CHURCH OF CHRIST.—No. 5.

"Let discord, child of hell,
Be banished far away;
Those should in strictest friendship dwell,
Who the same Lord obey.
Thus will the church below
Resemble that above,
Where streams of pleasure ever flow,
And every heart is love."

Says Elder A. Pryne,—"The church of God has a natural organization, which grows out of the very nature of true religion. The principles of the gospel can be fully developed through such as organizations only. Any departure from such an organization is a loss of power, just in the ratio of such departure. There is an order in the structure of all things which must be observed, or ruin is the consequence. The human body is beautiful and strong, because the natural laws of mechanism and of mind are obeyed in its formation. Every departure from these laws begets a deformity and a weakness. It will not do to separate the eyes, or to cut off one of the hands, or to exclude any member of the body from its appropriate place. By such a process we produce a monster or a cripple. Great nature will be obeyed, or she punishes appropriately all who ruthlessly invade her dominions, and interfere with her works. Her organizations are simple, but quite essential to her power. There is a law of natural development, which governs all science, and fills the universe with harmony and beauty. The agriculturist must fulfill the laws which govern the growth of fruits and grains, or however industriously he labors, he will fail in results. The navigator cannot make the laws that govern tides and storms, but must conform to them, or be wrecked.

"When the astronomer, in his researches or experiments, varies a hair's breadth from the principle of his science, that variation is increased a thousand-fold in the result. The physician, who interferes with the laws of health, under the pretense of aiding nature, mars her work, and, in the end, destroys his silly patient. The political economist who would force a commerce here, or create a manufactory there, where the state of society and the natural law of supply and demand do not ask for either, is sadly in the way of beneficent results. The statesman who forgets to study the laws of government, as they are inscribed upon the moral constitution of man, and revealed in the nature of the divine rule, and attempts to organize government on a plan of his own, constructs a murderous engine of oppression and civil misrule.

"God, through the deep voices of nature, is ever calling us back to first principles, whether we are engaged in the cultivation of the earth, or the founding of empires. There is a simple, divine order underlying all things, from the construction of the simplest instrument of labor, to the establishment and triumph of Christ's kingdom on earth. To this rule, the organization of the church is by no means an exception. The higher we ascend in the scale of divine forces, the more indispensable the rule. A single meteoric stone may do but little harm by being forced to disobey the law of gravitation; but a planet, forgetting the laws of its motion, would carry wide desolation in its pathway through the heavens.

"So a man might depart from the law of natural order in mechanics or agriculture, and the evil would be unimportant; but when the church—God's army—'the light of the world,'—the visible hope of human redemption,—forgets the natural laws of its own order and power, and breaks into ungoverned rebellion against the divine law of its own constitution, the ruin wrought must be immeasurable.

"Under the power of sectarianism, and in bondage to factious leaders, God's people have been wandering in anarchy, and violating the organic laws of Christ's kingdom for ages. These laws are fountains of growth, strength and power; and never, until good men and women come back to them, can earth be saved by their instrumentality. Sectarianism tramples these laws under foot, and seeks religious results in defiance of them.

"We will point out a few of the laws of religious social life, violated by modern sectarianism, and show the importance of their observance.

"One of the simplest, most obvious, and yet most important of these laws is, that there should be but one church in the same locality. Every careful reader of the New Testament must be aware of the fact, that this rule was most faithfully observed for a number of ages after the death of the Savior. Of the church at Jerusalem, it is said, 'All that believed were together.' The 'saints' at Rome are spoken of as the church in Rome. The rebuke of the first appearance of division at Corinth, by Paul, shows that he insisted upon there being but one church in each place. His addresses to the churches at Colosse and Ephesus develop and urge the same truth upon the membership. Indeed, it is not necessary for us to quote texts to this point, because, as yet, we never heard it denied.

"As a question of Bible or church history, it will not be disputed that, for several centuries after the Savior's ascension, the principle of but one church in each place was adhered to most strictly. There is not a single instance of the violation of this rule, and the organization of two churches in the same place, down to the end of New Testament history, nor for many generations afterwards. The most pointed and unqualified rebukes of every attempt to violate this law, are to be found, not only in the epistles, but they abound throughout the writings of the early fathers.

"But how remorselessly and universally is this principle violated by the religious organizations of our day! Each country village rears its rival spires toward heaven, in utter disregard of the Bible rule. Where there are a thousand worshipers, there are from five to ten rival sects. So far from regarding such a state of things as criminal, the great mass of persons regard the number of steeples in a place, as the guage of its godliness. So completely is the first law of church order trampled out of sight, that good men and women in every place are found to plot industriously against its restoration, and to treat as heretics those who would urge them to return to its observance. This being the case, we propose to show the practical evils resulting from building rival churches in the same place.

"It must be obvious to every one, on a moment's reflection, that the grand purpose of the true church is to call out, combine and direct the talents and graces of the individual christian in a community. Whatever organism it adopts, that organism can be valuable only as it aids in reaching this result. If it waste the talents, or moneyed power of the brotherhood, or in any way misdirects their energies, it is a curse rather than a blessing. If the machinery is quadruple what is needed for the work, and much of its force is wasted by friction, there must be a corresponding failure in results. A proper organization of labor is as indispensable to a church, as to a family, or a State. Without it, power may be foolishly and disastrously expended.

"Take for illustration, the interests of education and the organization of schools, and it is easy to see how a misdirection of forces and means will prove disastrous. Suppose in a hamlet where there are fifty scholars who can all be accommodated in one house and taught by one teacher, the people, from a difference in taste and judgment about the details, divide and build five school-houses and hire five teachers. Each teacher spends his time with ten pupils, while he might have taught fifty quite as well. There are five committees where but one is needed. All the appointmnets of the school-rooms are multiplied by five in addition to what would have been necessary, if these silly people could have combined their strength and means. A neighborhood that should act thus, would be ridiculed by all the world, and pointed at as a standing illustration of the childish folly of the spirit of faction. There would be no peace in such a neighborhood. The spirit of a wide-spread feud would underlie the whole educational operations of the people, and would break out on every tempting occasion. The children, thus educated, would become clannish and ill-natured neighbors. Every one can easily see how foolish and disastrous all this would be, as a plan for conducting education. But it is precisely analagous, even in detail, with the modern plan of teaching and spreading christianity.

"In a village of less than one thousand worshipers, it is common to find five sects. One minister could do all the work of preaching in such a place, quite as profitably as five; but the people cannot agree who he shall be; and the minority will not submit to the majority in choosing a preacher; and so they must have five preachers, where but one is needed. In the same manner, and for the same reasons, all the appointments of these worshiping assemblies are multiplied five-fold. Now, looked at as a business transaction,—a scheme for spreading religion,—can anything be more palpably foolish and wasteful than all this? Add to this the fact, that according to all these factionists, there is no essential difference—nothing that invalidates christian character—between them, and it seems to us, we have reached the climax of human folly and weakness, as developed by the spirit of religious faction. This folly could not be perpetrated with impunity under any other name than that of religion.

"A proposition to establish five courts of justice in a village of two thousand people, and to have it understood that their decisions in a given case should often conflict, would be regarded with scorn in any community, but that of mere brawlers. But the establishment of five conflicting ecclesiastical courts, is gravely entered upon by ministers and people. And the collisions consequent upon this state of things, they mourn over as "unfortunate." The conflicting civil courts would be denounced as a sham, and an outrage upon the very name of justice. But the conflicting church courts must not be spoken of disrespectfully. Of course, in such a state of society there is neither religious law or justice, but party bias and prejudice rule the community. As between such civil courts, thieves and incendiaries would manage to escape by a judicious use of the party wires, so, amid the conflicting interests of such religious courts, slaveholders, wicked rulers and rich hypocrites, find but little difficulty in escaping just treatment. If one court condemns them, they have only to flee to another and have the decision reversed. Sectarianism repeats this farce a thousand times over, throughout Christendom. As such a state of things would effectually disorganize all arrangements for securing civil justice, so does it destroy all hope of religious justice among and between the sects."

D. F. NEWTON.

WHAT DON'T PAY.—A great long string of verses, ground out through a ringing machine, that makes one think of filing saws to read it, and this sent to a religious paper to be printed! We are not all poets.

A long obituary of little Susie, who died when she was just two years, three months, six days and one half old. Sermon on the occasion by the writer, to a very quiet and deeply interested congregation. And then poetry that makes one's head ache. All this printed for the special benefit of ten thousand readers.—Ex.

For the World's Crisis.

PTOLEMY'S ECLIPSES.

WHEN THEY ACTUALLY OBSERVED?

In the Crisis of April 4th I gave the alleged record or history of numerous eclipses, as given by Ptolemy in his Almagest. I stated also, in general, the exceptions taken to the eclipses by Eld. Thurman, and proposed to examine his charges.

At the outset it is proper to remark that the record ought to be accounted for. If one of the eclipses never occurred, and if several occurred, but were too small to be seen or noticed, how came they to be recorded? How did it happen that any thing was said of them?

There are only three possible ways of accounting for the record. We may suppose,

1. That the disputed eclipses, though never seen, are computed, or calculated, by Hipparchus or Ptolemy, from their own knowledge of astronomy, i. e., these astronomers, by dint of figures, concluded that such eclipses must have occurred, and ought to have been seen; and they took it upon themselves to say they were seen so and so. But then why did they say they were seen at Babylon, and that some of them were so small that we ought to doubt if they were seen? People sometimes tell only part of the truth for fear the whole will not be believed. Did Ptolemy overdo the prudent thing in this matter?

2. We may suppose that the eclipses were seen and recorded, but the dates got disarranged. That either (1) the names and years of the kings are now incorrect, so that the astronomy may be all right, but the chronology based on it worthless. And if I had found occasion to dispute the chronology, I should probably have made this the point of attack. Or (2) that the eclipses themselves are dated wrong, though the chronology may be right. But then we must ask, Why are so many of the eclipses found by modern astronomers, at the dates assigned? And even when it is said that one of the eclipses did not happen, why is it that Eld. Thurman's tables come so near making an eclipse just then? A hundred miles is about the twentieth part of the moon's diameter, or little more than half a digit. The difference between so narrow an escape, and a tolerable eclipse, is less than differences made in old eclipses by very clever computers, who never think of rejecting the eclipses in their quarrel about the figures. In short, modern estimates find so much truth in Ptolemy's record, that very few have supposed, until lately, that Ptolemy wrote poetry or fiction, or other error.

3. We may suppose that Ptolemy's astronomy and even his chronology are correct, and seek some other method of reconciling them with the Bible than that which says one or the other must be renounced. We should not hastily pronounce such alternatives, of which hereafter.

But to proceed with Eld. T.'s charges against the eclipses. I have so much to say in reply that I hardly know where to begin. But he has said, and it has been so confidently repeated, that "no tables make all these old eclipses," that I think I must begin by examining this assertion. "No tables"? Has Mr. T. tried all the tables known to astronomers? The only tables he professes to have used are Ferguson's. These he found inadequate. What did he then do? Did he inquire if there were any more recent tables, which might be better? If so, he has not told us. The reader of his book might suppose that Ferguson's were the latest, and the best until they were improved by Mr. Thurman. To all appearance, the statement that no tables make all these eclipses is based, not on the trial and failure of the half dozen volumes of tables published since Ferguson's day. There is no proof that Eld. T. has tried any of these tables. The statement seems to be based on the fact that some of the old tables did not make all the eclipses in question, and they had to be made by using more than one sytem of tables, which Mr. T. regards as an unfair procedure.

To all this I reply, first, by asking the reader to wait until I report computations of the eclipses in question made by practical astronomers, with the best modern tables, which Eld. T. has not used.

Secondly, even if Ptolemy's eclipses were not found, by the best tables, precisely as he records them, that is deemed by astronomers generally no reason for rejecting the eclipses. They all say, we must not prove the eclipses by the tables, but the tables by the eclipses. This is the received doctrine of the relation of tables to old eclipses, given us in history generally reliable. It follows that if the tables do not make them accurately, so much the worse for the tables. If an eclipse is recorded as accurately and credibly as are reliable historical events generally, then it becomes a standard; and the tables will come nearer and nearer to it as they are made more and more accurate.

In this view of the case we can not censure Dr. Hales, as Eld. T. does in p. 34 of his book, for making out the eclipses of Ptolemy from various tables. If Dr. H. does this avowedly and openly, he does just right, unless I am much mistaken. He simply says that the tables are imperfect. Mr. Thurman seems to say quite as much. For, though he had just said, "Ferguson's tables come as near making all the ancient eclipses as it is possible for any to do" (p. 34), yet on p. 41 he says, "That my tables are more correct that Ferguson's is proven from the fact that they make all known eclipses on undisputed ground according to the express language of the historian, which his do not." The italics are Eld. T.'s, and they will be considered as I proceed.

C. F. H.

For the World's Crisis.

FORT COVINGTON, APRIL 10.

The work of God goes on gloriously here. The crowds that attend are almost wonderful. The Baptist chapel can no longer hold the people who are eager to hear; and therefore the Presbyterians have opened their larger house. Many sinners come daily to the Lord. The whole community seems to be moving. I hope to see more glorious results still. Yesterday I preached on the parable of the ten virgins in the morning, and on the final "gathering of the saints" in the afternoon, to a most deeply interested multitude. How much better it seems to me to be saving souls than to be riding hobbies! When shall we all learn that "Jesus Christ came into the world to save sinners," and not to establish abstractions?

EDWIN BURNHAM.

☞ When injured by any one, we should remember that God presents to us the most glorious opportunity of showing forth his own image—mercy and forgiveness.

The World's Crisis

AND SECOND ADVENT MESSENGER.

Boston, Tuesday, April 18, 1865.

☞ TAKE NOTICE.

All subscriptions for the Crisis are payable in advance, at the rate of $2.50 a year; but if delayed six months beyond the time of payment, the rate is $3.00 a year, or $1.50 for six months. Thus 50 cents a year is saved by paying in advance.

THE PRESIDENT IS DEAD.

Perhaps our nation was never more appalled than when the announcement flashed through our land,—"The President is mortally wounded,—is dead." People stood aghast at the intelligence, and scarcely uttered a word. Close upon this sad intelligence came the gloomy tidings,—"Secretary Seward is wounded"! We may well inquire, what will be the next scene in the drama? Who can tell what a day may bring forth! Thank God, there will be no such scenes in the new earth when Jesus reigns. We may well pray earnestly,—"Let thy kingdom come." By the death of Mr. Lincoln, we think our nation has lost one of the best men that has ever filled the Presidential chair.

MANCHESTER.

Our meeting in Manchester, N. H., April 9th, was one of much interest. Some thirty came seventeen miles by private conveyance, and others walked fourteen miles to be present. We had a good love-feast Lord's day morning, and three were baptized at noon. Our hall was full of attentive listeners. Some are under conviction, and are almost persuaded to be christians. There appears to be a new interest in many places, and we hope soon to see a general waking up among those looking for the coming of Jesus.

PTOLEMY OR THE BIBLE.

It is very evident that Ptolemy's Canon and the Bible are not in harmony with each other; and we think all endeavor to prove Ptolemy's Canon correct will be as futile as any effort to show that the prophecy of Daniel is untrue. We can conceive of no possible way to harmonize Ptolemy and Daniel, until it can be proved that 536 B. C. is the same year as 488 B. C., which, of course, is an absurdity. In order to make this point apparent to all our readers, we have only to call their attention to a few facts.

1. When a particular individual is mentioned by the prophet, who should do a certain work, no one else can fulfill that prophecy.

2. This is the case with Cyrus. In Isaiah 44: 28, we read, the Lord "saith of Cyrus, He is my shepherd, and shall perform all my pleasure; even saying to Jerusalem, Thou shalt be built; and to the temple, Thy foundation shall be laid." And in Isa. 45: 13, the Lord speaks again of Cyrus, and says, "He shall build my city, and he shall let go my captives." None but Cyrus can fulfill this prophecy, because he is called by name, as the one. In Ezra 1: 1–5, we have a record of its fulfillment. It reads as follows:—

"Now in the first year of Cyrus king of Persia, that the word of the Lord by the mouth of Jeremiah might be fulfilled, the Lord stirred up the spirit of Cyrus king of Persia, that he made a proclamation throughout all his kingdom, and put it also in writing, saying, Thus saith Cyrus king of Persia, The Lord God of heaven hath given me all the kingdoms of the earth; and he hath charged me to build him a house at Jerusalem, which is in Judah. Who is there among you of all his people? his God be with him, and let him go up to Jerusalem, which is in Judah, and build the house of the Lord God of Israel, (he is the God,) which is in Jerusalem. And whosoever remaineth in any place where he sojourneth, let the men of his place help him with silver, and with gold, and with goods, and with beasts, besides the freewill offering for the house of God that is in Jerusalem. Then rose up the chief of the fathers of Judah and Benjamim, and the priests, and the Levites, with all them whose spirit God God had raised, to go up to build the house of the Lord which is in Jerusalem."

The prophet Daniel was instructed to write as follows:—"Know, therefore, and understand, that from the going forth of the commandment to restore and to build Jerusalem, unto the Messiah the Prince, shall be seven weeks and threescore and two weeks." As Cyrus is specified as the individual to issue the command, and called by name 140 years before his birth, it is certain that no other person can fulfill the prophecy.

3. Cyrus must issue the commandment before his death, which took place in seven years after he became sole monarch of the Medo Persian kingdom.

4. His first year, in which he issued his "commandment to restore and to build Jerusalem," according to Ptolemy's Canon corrected, was B. C. 536.

5. Daniel says it shall be sixty-nine weeks, which are only 483 years, "from the going forth of the commandment to . . . Messiah the Prince," which would be 488 years B. C., as our A. D. did not begin till the fifth year after the birth of Christ.

6. As it is impossible to make the sixty-nine weeks, or 483 years, reach from B. C. 536, to B. C. 5; so it is impossible to harmonise Ptolemy's Canon with the Bible. Hence we repeat our statement at the beginning of this article, that "we think all endeavors to prove Ptolemy's Canon correct will prove as futile as any effort to show that the prophecy of Daniel is untrue." Shall a positive and plain prophecy of the Bible be set aside by an uncertain chronological arrangement made out by a heathen astronomer? If Ferguson's astronomical tables are not reliable because they were made out one hundred years ago, then what shall be said of those used by Ptolemy seventeen hundred years since? Must all the prophets bow to him? or shall the Holy Spirit from God, that moved Isaiah, Jeremiah and Daniel to write, and point out Cyrus as the one to give the "commandment to restore and to build Jerusalem," be accepted and believed? This is the question, we think, for each one to settle. Who knew best about this matter, the Lord, or Ptolemy?

ISRAEL'S SOJOURN,—430 YEARS.

BRO. GRANT:—In your answer to my letter, which appeared in the Crisis of Jan. 3d, showing that, what to my mind seemed to be a discrepancy in Bro. Thurman's Chronology, was, when rightly understood, in perfect harmony with the Bible; you quoted Paul and Josephus, also the Septuagint and Samaritan versions, to show that Bro. Thurman must be correct when he dates the commencement of the 430 years of the sojourning of the Hebrews at the time 'Abraham . . . . was called to go out into a place which he should after receive for an inheritance.' Also that 215 years of this sojourning was in Canaan, and the remaining half in Egypt. Now this testimony would seem to be sufficient, if God had not said to Abram in Gen. 15: 13, 'Know of a surety that thy seed shall be a stranger in a land that is not theirs, and shall serve them; and they shall afflict them four hundred years.' And the 14th verse of the same chapter declares, that the 'NATION whom they shall serve, will I judge.' As the children of Israel were not servants in the land of Canaan, so far as I can learn, and as no nation at this time was judged except the Egyptians, we conclude that Bro. Thurman, if in harmony with other chronologers on this point, is not quite in harmony with the Bible. Will Bro. Grant give us a little light on this subject.

From your Bro. in Christ,
CHARLES W. OSGOOD.

Two points should be observed which are mentioned in Gen. 15: 13. 1. The seed of Abraham was to be "a stranger in a land that is not theirs," for four hundred years. As the four hundred years did not begin till the seed of Abraham, then it follows that the time of Abraham's sojourn was not included in this period, which began, as learned writers show, from the birth of Isaac, from which it was four hundred years to the time the children of Israel left Egypt.

2. The four hundred years mark the time that the Egyptians were to "afflict them." It appears that the days of affliction did not begin with Abraham's sojourn, but the four hundred thirty years began with the call of Abraham, which, according to the book of Jasher, was when Abraham was seventy years of age. Abraham moved to Haran, or Charran, when first called, and remained there five years; "and from thence, when his father was dead, he removed" into the land of Canaan when he was seventy-five years of age. See Gen. 12: 1–4, and Acts 7: 1–6. When he was one hundred years of age, Isaac was born. Hence Araham's sojourn was thirty years before his seed was born, and from that time the sojourn was to be four hundred years; making the entire sojourn, from the call of Abraham, four hundred thirty years, in harmony with Ex. 12: 40, 41. From the foregoing facts it will appear that Bro. Thurman is not only in harmony with standard writers on this subject, but also with the Bible.

MAN-WORSHIP.

This is an age of man-worship. The Lord is almost forgotten, while man is becoming more and more the object of worship. We expect to see this spirit developing itself more fully as we approach the end of this dispensation. Infidelity is becoming very bold against the simplicity of the christian religion, and substituting a system but little removed from the Pagan hero-worship. We were reminded of this sad fact from the following, published in the Boston Daily Herald, April 10th, 1865:—

"Washington, April 9. Praise Grant, 'from whom all blessings flow.' The mighty news of the surrender of Lee and his army was received here to-night soon after nine o'clock, and among the few who are out on one of the stormiest of nights, the enthusiasm is tremendous. People meet and embrace each other, and general congratulation prevails that the Commander-in-Chief of the rebel armies, by his complete submission, has decided that the cause of the Union must prevail and peace reign evermore."

"WARS AND FIGHTINGS."—This is the title of a new tract of 12 pp., by Bro. John A. Best, Pittsburgh, Pa. Any who wish for a small and good tract to scatter on this subject, let them send to Bro. Best and get 25 cents or a dollar's worth, and circulate them among their neighbors.

AMERICAN AGRICULTURIST.—If any of our readers wish a good Agricultural paper, we would recommend to their notice the American Agriculturist, published by Orange Judd, 41 Park Row, New York. Price $1.50 per year, in advance. This is the best paper of the kind with which we are acquainted.

WHAT THE DEMONS SAY.

We purpose to keep our readers somewhat posted in the movements of the great delusion of these last days—Spiritualism. The following are records of conversations with demons, who claimed to be departed human spirits:—

"Q. I saw upon one occasion a hand, on which appeared to be India ink tattooing. Was that spirit hand a sailor's hand?

A. Very likely it was.

Q. How came the India ink upon the hand?

A. We do not believe the India ink was there, but only the representation of that which was on the owner's hand.

Q. How could the representation be transferred?

A. Precisely the same as symbols of flowers can be shown. It is no more difficult to produce those characters in India ink than it is to produce other symbols. The spirit remembers what its earthly wardrobe was when it clothes itself again with mortality. It copies that with which it was clothed as as nearly as possible, always. It cannot be otherwise.

Q. If we understand you, then, the philosophy of these appearances, in the case of the Allen boy and Davenport Brothers, is this: Some spirit abstracts from the medium certain qualites resembling its own when on the earth. Is that it?

A. Yes, you are right.

Q. Is this India ink tattooing carried into spirit-life with the person?

A. In remembrance only.

Q. Could it make itself manifest where the remembrance of the tattooing was lost by the spirit?

A. It might be possible to exhibit the marks, but it would be more natural to remember them. You will find if the spirit inhabited a deformed body while here on earth, and wished to exhibit itself to mortality, it would clothe itself in the same deformed shape.

Q. I observed once at a seance of the Davenport Brothers, that the spirit hand exhibited five fingers and one thumb. Was that an indication that another spirit used its power, too?

A. We believe generally there are some forty—between forty and fifty—intelligences controlling those lads."—Banner of Light, Jan. 28th, 1865.

Another spirit is asked the following questions:—

"Q. Will the controlling spirit please tell us in the parable of the ten virgins what is meant?

A. It is possible that it may have reference to the present time. In our opinion it does refer to the present time. . . .

Q. You say that the parable of the ten virgins applies to the present time. Please explain how it applies to us a little more in detail?

A. The signs of the times seem to be applying it more forcibly than it lies in our power to do. The voice of Truth, the bridegroom of Eternal Wisdom, has come to you. It may be in the form of modern Spiritualism. Some he finds that are wise enough to have their lamps ready for lighting. Some are foolish enough to have no oil in their lamps, and therefore cannot receive the truths that modern Spiritualism offers."

So it seems the foolish virgins are those who do not receive the teachings of the demons, or turn Spiritualists. We are glad to be numbered in the class whom Satan calls foolish.

Another spirit says: "We have no belief in miracles. Indeed, we know that there never was a miracle performed."—Banner, Jan. 28, 1865.

Another says, in answer to questions, as reported in the Banner of Light, March 25th, 1865:—

"Q. Is there, then, such a thing as the transmigration of souls?

A. Yes, in the largest sense. . . .

Q. How can soul be defined if it is a part of God?

A. Very well; then you may say soul is God. It is quite as proper as any other definition. . . . .

Q. It has been said, by the spirits of this circle, that God is a Principle, is our Father and Mother; that spirits never had a beginning. Now if this be truth, how can God be our Father? It seems to the inquirer, according to this teaching, that God and man are co-extensive as to duration.

A. That which has had a beginning must have an ending; that which is capable of being created is capable also of being destroyed. Now we have affirmed many times, and in all sincerity, that the soul or immortal part never had a beginning. . . . .

Q. If God be a principle, what good is there in addressing prayers to it or him? Can a principle answer prayer?

A. So far as the terms are considered, there is no use whatever, except the mere forms of expression. Now prayer becomes of use only in this way: inasmuch as it lifts the mental portion of your being above the things of material life, it puts you in a new atmosphere, opens the door to things spiritual and divine. Therefore it is good to pray. It matters not whether you address a principle or a personality; indeed, it is not necessary that you address any one. Only turn you thoughts beyond things that are sordid and material; lift them by the great stairway of prayer above the common standard, and you have accomplished all that man can accomplish."

Does this look like ancient christianity?

For the World's Crisis.

A TENT MEETING.

BRO. GRANT:—I have just been to Carlinville, Ill., presenting the gospel of the kingdom. A good impression was made on community at large. Some were converted, and baptized, and others are still under conviction. The present truth takes hold of the people everywhere. There is a power in it. Sister Prescott, from St. Louis, was with us a part of the time. She is laboring for the Lord.

I need a tent to preach in, but have not seen the way open to procure one. But the Lord has put it into the hearts of Brn. Brailey, Quimby, and Sargeant, to voluntarily offer one hundred dollars towards this enterprise, provided other friends will make up the balance. I will try to raise another hundred myself. Now shall the enterprise fail. Who will pledge $50, $25, or $10, to be paid before the first of June. Let no one hold back the Lord's money that aught to aid this enterprise. The King of glory is coming, and the warning must be given. Direct to me at Baraboo, Wisconsin, or to Bro. Grant at Boston.

W. SHELDON.

We hope the tent will be secured for Bro. Sheldon. It should be remembered that our Brn. in the West have not such convenient places for meetings as we have in the East. In the section where Bro. Sheldon labors it is difficult to find a grove where a meeting can be held. Besides, many more will come out to a tent meeting, than to an ordinary place of worship. Do not let Bro. Sheldon call in vain for help. The cause is a worthy one, and will be a safe investment for the cause of the Lord.—ED.

Our Volunteer Agents.

REPORT FOR WEEK ENDING APRIL 15TH.

Whole number of new subscribers in the week, 55. By the efforts of the following brethren, 28:—

One each.—By H A Arnold, S W Ames, N H Berry, C C Brown, H F Carpenter, S A Chaplin, P Greene, E B Grant, F. House, Caroline S. Holman, Mary K. Lambert, C W Low, N F Nason, C Newell, E Phelps, P A Smith, S Woodcock.
Two each.—By J. C Wheeler, M Warren.
Three—By M. Grant.
Four—By Mrs. R. T. Crowell.

Change of Price.

The prices of the following works, for sale at this office, have been advanced by the publishers as follows:—

BIBLE STUDENT'S LIBRARY (for the set), By mail—cloth, $5.00; paper, $2.50.
By express—cloth, $4.00; paper, $2.00.
DEBT AND GRACE, post paid, $1.50.
CHRIST OUR LIFE, post paid, cloth, 75c; paper, 45c.
HUDSON'S TRACTS, 6 cents each, postage 2 cts.
CHRISTIAN LYRE, 80c; by mail, 85c.
SOCIAL HYMNS, 15 cts; eight for $1.00.
COOK BOOK, 15 cts; postage 2c.
DIPHTHERIA, 10 cts; postage 2c.

Before ordering books, in these times of changing prices, it will be well to look at our latest price list, in the book column, and remit accordingly.

☞ The constitutional amendment abolishing slavery throughout the United States was unanimously ratified by both branches of the Tennessee Legislature on the 5th inst.

THE NEW [illegible] TRACT FUND.

We, the [illegible], agree to give the sums affixed to our names for the purpose of raising TWO THOUSAND DOLLARS to aid the Christian Publication Society in the gratuitous distribution of tracts.

Previous donations	$772.61
"A Sinner"	1.25
J. N. B.	.20
O. Loomis	.50

SR. CROWELL writes from Clear Lake, Iowa: "Bro. Janes, from Boylan's Grove, has been here and delivered quite a number of lectures and excited quite an interest on the subjects of our faith; and I think some tracts for distribution now would do a great deal of good. My great object and desire is to have my neighbors and friends prepare for the judgment. Pray that my efforts may not be in vain." ($2.50 enclosed.)

Have sent you $5.00 worth, and our prayers with them.

POOR FUND DONATIONS.

To pay for Papers sent to the Poor.
Whole number sent free 800. Amount $2000.00.

Previous donations	$877.22
"Woburn"	1.00
Mrs. L. Jones	.50
John Bayley	.75

THE ITALIAN MISSION.

Previous donations	$392.66
A widow's mite	20.00
A friend	1.00
G. L. Humphreville	5 00
Mrs. N. Smith	3.63

HIRAM MUNGER'S LIFE.

Are you interested in the early history of the Advent movement, and in the labors, persecutions and successes of its hardy pioneers? You will find many interesting reminiscences of the same, in the "Life of Hiram Munger."

Have you an interest in Campmeetings and Revivals? The hero of a hundred such will give you some account of his remarkable experience therein, in the "Life of Hiram Munger."

Do you believe in the wonderful efficacy of prayer? You will find singular exmples of it, in the "Life of Hiram Munger."

Are you fond of marvelous stories of the restraining and converting power of God over hardened sinners? Read the "Life of Hiram Munger."

It is a narrative of many curious incidents, from an experience of more than fifty years as a citizen, christian, classleader, campmeeting manager, and gospel minister; contains some sharp thrusts at rapology, church fiddling, and other corrupt fashions, follies, and false theologies of the day; and is all told in the author's own quaint, original style,—plain, pointed, blunt, unpolished, as the rough slabs from his own "Saw-Mill College," of which he is a graduate.

The reader will be interested, amused, profited; will enjoy many a hearty laugh at the unconscious oddities of speech and manner with which things are said and done; and will not regret that he sent thirty cents to this office for a copy of the "Life of Hiram Munger."

W. B. H.

CORRECTION.—In the notice of the new edition of Munger's Life and Experience, in last week's paper, the price, in part of our issue, was given, by mistake of the types, at 50 cents. It should have been 30 cents. The book will be sent by mail, postage paid, to any addres, for 30 cents,—half its former price.

For the World's Crisis.

THE ITALIAN MISSION.

BRO. ADAMS:—Your letter through Bro. Herron, including draft of 490 francs, is received, and to you and God's stewards who have contributed this much needed money, I wish to send many thanks. In answer to your inquiry, how I get along in the photograph business, I have the honor to answer that I have not entered at all into the business to this moment for these reasons. When I received the 321 francs from Bro. Grant in November last, as we had lived on credit since our arrival here, July 6th, there was nothing left after paying our debts and buying what was absolutely necessary, so of course as there remained no money, I could not buy a photographic instrument. Besides, after much investigation, I became much satisfied that it would not do for me to go into such business here, as it would in Europe ruin me as a missionary, it being considered here, incompatible for a regular minister to preach the gospel and follow any other calling. Again, I understand now much better than when we first came here, the circumstances of the people, that even those who own much land have no money, and as there is no commerce here, and the taxes are very heavy, nearly all the hard-eared money must go to pay the taxes, leaving but very little for the necessities of the people who live very poorly, with less of the comforts of life than poor day laborerers in the United States. As I wrote in my February report, we lived again three and one-half months before receiving the last draft from the United States, on credit; and now, after paying all debts, there remains twenty francs for future needs of my family of eight persons.

I see more and more clearly what an extensive field of missionary labor is spread out before me. Europe is destitute of the truth. The field is white, ready to harvest, and where are the laborers? Besides my correspondence with America and the papers which I receive from there, and which I know not how to do without, but which cost me from three to eight sous apiece—though I pay but a part of the postage on them,—I have very important correspondence with Italy, England, Germany, Poland and France, and I wish to commence with Austria and Hungary.

I have just read in a French daily paper of date March 13th, "L' Italic," published in Turin, that a criminal process was before the police tribunal of Vienna the 7th inst. It relates to a religious sect which is formed under the name of "True Believers." The author of the sect is a traitor from the north of Germany, who has spread the doctrines of his faith in Hungary, where two thousand profess a belief in the pure doctrine of Christ. There are not so many believers in Vienna, though it is difficult to fix the number. The accused are SCAGER, a tanner, and STRILL, a shoemaker,—the former aged forty-five, the latter forty-nine years. The Tribunal is crowded with people who listen to the debates with the liveliest interest. The following interrogatory shows the most characteristic features of these examinations:—

The President: "What is your religion?"

The Accused: "I was a Catholic and believed nothing; now I am a true believer."

Q. "What do you understand by a true believer?"

Ans. "One who believes in the principles of Jesus Christ, and which are those in the Old and New Testament."

Q. "Did you know that the formation and maintenance of new religious sects was not authorized by the States?"

Ans. "I know not why the principles which Jesus Christ himself taught should be interdicted."

Q. "You have held meetings, have you not?"

Ans. "Yes, sir."

Q. "Where are the members of this sect in the habit of assembling?"

Ans. "Sometimes at my house, sometimes with another faithful member, and sometimes under the canopy of heaven."

Q. "What is done at these meetings?"

Ans. "A brother reads the word of God in the Old and New Testament and explains it."

"Q. "How many persons attend these assemblies?"

Ans. "We are never counted."

Q. "Tell us nearly the number?"

Ans. "Thirty or forty persons."

Q. "Have you converted any?"

Ans. "Yes, certainly, I have converted sinners who came to seek me."

Q. "What are the ceremonies of your religion?"

Ans. "We have no ceremonies; we read the word of God; we pray and sing."

Q. "Can any one enter this association?"

Ans. "Not when one is in sin; but those are prepared who wish to enter it. One examines them to know if their hearts are pure."

Q. "Do you believe that a man can know if another's heart is pure and without stain?"

Ans. "Why would this be impossible? Mons. le procureur examines also, and is not he a man?"

Q. "Have you a sacrament of baptism?"

Ans. "We know nothing of baptism as now practised; but we believe in fluvial immersion such as God established and John the Baptist practised."

Q. "At what age do you baptize?"

Ans. "When a man can think, can comprehend religion, and is master of his own acts."

Q. "Have you the sacrament of the Eucharist?"

Ans. "We have no sacrament. We believe that Jesus Christ established none; but we have a Eucharist."

Q. In what does your Eucharist consist?"

Ans. "We give bread and wine."

Q. "Who administers the Eucharist?"

Ans. "A brother."

Q. "You ought to know that the Government does not tolerate a religious sect that it has not licensed."

Ans. "The Emperor has proclaimed liberty of belief and conscience."

Q. "It is true, but in this liberty the religions recognized by the Government are alone comprehended."

Ans. "Our religion is the pure doctrine of Jesus Christ."

Q. "How many members has your association?"

Ans. "I cannot inform you, for if I should, I should be a traitor and offend God."

Q. "To submit to authority is not to be a traitor. Do you not believe that authority is established by God?"

Ans. "Certainly."

Q. "Why then do you not wish to give the desired information?"

Ans. "Because we understand the question and do not wish to expose our brethren to persecution."

Q. Do you not believe in the justice of the judges?"

Ans. "The apostle has written, 'There is none righteous, no, not one.'—Rom. 3: 10."

Q. "Can this rule be applied to the members of your association?"

Ans. "They ought to be just because they should be without sin."

This simple and pithy response impressed the judges as well as the audience. The accused STRILL, responded in the same spirit.

The President. "Where do you hold your assemblies?"

Ans. "There is no fixed place."

Q "Why do you not choose a fixed place?"

Ans. "To avoid persecution."

Q. "You know then that you do wrong, and that you ought not to do it."

Ans. "It is written, If they persecute you in one city flee into another."

Q. "Have you ever been in conflict with the authority?"

Ans. "Yes; I did not think best to baptize my infant, but by order of the authority the Piarist (a religious order) took it and I suppose baptized it; I was not present."

Q. "Why did you refuse to baptize your child?"

Ans. "Because an infant can neither think nor will."

Q. "Your act falls under the penalty of the laws."

Ans. "Our Savior, Jesus Christ, did not sin, but he was nevertheless crucified. Following his sublime example I shall persevere and have patience! The pure word and doctrine of Jesus Christ will finish with triumph!"

SCAGER was condemned to imprisonment, with fasting, for three weeks, and STRILL to two weeks of the same punishment. May God bless them both.

M. B. CZECHOWSKI.

La Tour, Pellice, via Turin, Italy, March 15th, 1865.

☞ Advent papers please copy.

For the World's Crisis.

"KEEP THE GOOD SPIRIT."

Yes, Brn. and Srs., that's it; be sure and keep the spirit of the meek and lowly Jesus; then all is well. These thoughts have occupied my mind considerably since I left the meeting-house last evening, where the church had met to investigate God's holy word in regard to the time question, as believed and preached by Bro. Thurman and others, he being with us. There were those present who opposed Bro. Thurman's argument somewhat, one in particular, who has long since believed that the 2300 days of Daniel 8th chap. end in 1880. Not being present at the beginning of the meeting, when the objections were raised by the Bro. who believes in 1880 time, a sister informed me of it on our way home, but made the following remark: "But they kept the good Spirit." As much as to say there was no harm done. Though different views were held and advocated by the Brn., they did not get out of patience and abuse each other, nor let their zeal eat them up. They kept the good Spirit.

While different views exist among us, how necessary that we keep the good Spirit; for if we are not very careful we shall grieve the good, tender, dove-like Spirit of God, even when we are trying to do good in the name of Jesus; become impatient because others do not see as we see, and understand things as we do, or as soon. Do not be overbearing and harsh. Keep the good Spirit. Remember it is written, "If any man have not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of his."

We may spoil our influence and labor at times, by not keeping the good Spirit, and cause our good to be evil spoken of, while Christ is dishonored, and his precious cause languishes. The more we have of the good Spirit, the more certain we are of being led out of error into the truth; yea, into ALL TRUTH. John 16: 13. So if we would know and understand the time of deliverance, when Jesus the mighty one shall descend from heaven and gather his elect from one end of heaven to the other, let us not only keep the good Spirit, but see that we are filled with it, have it dwelling in us, that when the days end, and Daniel, the wonderful numberer, stands up in his lot, we may with him shine forth as the sun in our heavenly Master's kingdom.

Let us be sure we have the good Spirit, and keep it till by it we are changed from mortality to immortality.

JOHN G. HOOK.

Concord, N. H., March 30th.

For the World's Crisis.

THE PARIAN CHRONICLE.

NUMBER ONE.

Being informed that the chronology of our world was framed by following the conflicting and clashing historical opinions of heathen authors, I felt anxious to have one that was based on something more reliable, that I might be enabled to place confidence in, as being correct. And having been taught by my mother, in my youthful days, that the Bible is the highest authority to which any one can appeal, I was induced to disregard the conflicting opinions and wild conjectures of men, and arrange a chronology from the undoubted authority of the word of God, by following the dates as found in the Bible. This new method of arranging chronology brought me into contact with the wise and prudent men of this world, and my position was consequently unpopular. But being admonished to "trust in the Lord with all thine heart," with the promise, "He shall direct thy paths" (Prov. 3: 5, 6), I had faith to believe that I would not be led into error, confidently relying on the assurance of the apostle Paul, that "the holy Scriptures . . . are able to make" one "wise unto salvation."

Commencing with the beginning of creation, I arranged our Bible chronology down to A. M. 6000, which is as far as the prophetic dates or sacred chronology extends. This chronology has been examined by some of our most learned divines, who say of it, "Had those prophetic dates which point out the coming and kingdom of Christ been omitted, it would have been received in all of the colleges as the established chronology of the world." But those prophetic dates which show "the end of all things at hand," cuts it off from the favor it would have otherwise found in the estimation of our learned men; hence closing their eyes to the light of Bible truth, they fall back upon the Canon of Ptolemy, and the clashing opinion and dates of heathen authors.

At the time my chronology was arranged, by following the dates given in the Bible only, I was not aware that astronomical authority was claimed for Ptolemy's Canon. Hence on obtaining this information, I found it necessary to examine the claims of this man, whose authority men had exalted so far above that of the God of heaven by even saying, "The Canon of Ptolemy is not to be receded from for the authority of any writing whatsoever." After spending about seven years in examining the matter, I discovered that, so far from the Canon being established by astronomy, we could clearly point out by astronomical demonstration the fact of its incorrectness, and fully establish the strictest correctness of our Bible chronology. But since it has been discovered that astronomy establishes the Bible chronology, and can no longer be offered in support of Ptolemy's Canon, it is very strange to find those persons who, a few years since, thought astronomy was of such undoubted authority that the Bible and every thing else must give place to the so called "famous astronomical era," now resort to the opposite absurdity, and say, "astronomy is too complicated to be relied upon at all." Even Bro. Stevenson, who advocates the soon coming and kingdom of Christ, had, but a short time previous to our discussion in Boston, offered and relied upon astronomy as proof of the correctness of his position; but since finding that it proves his theory to be incorrect, he now chooses to throw it all away as being "a mass of unreliable rubbish." Hence it was that, in our debate, he preferred to bring forward a new argument in support of his theory of the correctness of the Canon, namely,

"THE PARIAN CHRONICLE."

This being something new to me, I was at that time unprepared to reply; for, believing with Paul that "the holy Scriptures are able to make one wise," etc., my study had been more confined to the Bible, supposing that we may thus be "thoroughly furnished unto all good works." Although I had at that time proven the Canon of Ptolemy to be incorrect in thirty-five instances, I then promised those who attended our discussion that I would examine the matter of this Chronicle, and give the result of that investigation to the public, whether it was for or against the position on which I claim to stand, since our only object is to get the truth. Since that time, I have examined them, and am now prepared to make known the result of my investigation, leaving the whole matter to the better judgment of the learned to determine which it favors most, the true Bible chronology, or the theory advocated by Bro. Stevenson.

The Parian Chronicle is said to have been "engraved upon a coarse kind of marble, or stone, either in the year B. C. 264 or 239." But unfortunately for Bro. Stevenson's position, "those celebrated marbles" did not come to light until about 1888 years after, that is, in A. D. 1624, being then purchased by William Petty. Hence the learned Robertson, in his dissertation on the Parian Chronicle, dated A. D. 1788, supposed that it might have been a spurious fabrication of some learned Greek, so late as the sixteenth century, and executed from a mercenary motive of gain, in order that it might be sold for a high price at Smyrna, a commodious emporium for such rarities, after he had artfully broken the block and defaced the inscriptions in several places, to give it an air of antiquity." The silence of all authors who wrote before the sixteenth century might be offered in proof of the correctness of Robertson's opinion.

But whether the Parian Chronicle is what it claims to be, or only a forgery of the sixteenth century, one thing is clearly evident: that is, no one can prove that it was in existence before the sixteenth century. And that which cannot be proven to be three hundred years old, is all that Bro. Stevenson claims in proof of his position as to the time and reign of Cyrus king of Persia. We say this is all the authority he claims, for during our discussion of the subject, he gave up all the astronomical authority, and also that part of Ptolemy's Canon which extends beyond the reign of Cyrus. Then, again, in a lecture which he delivered in Boston soon after the

For the World's Crisis.

PTOLEMY'S ECLIPSES.

WHEN THEY ACTUALLY OBSERVED?

In the Crisis of April 4th I gave the alleged record or history of numerous eclipses, as given by Ptolemy in his Almagest. I stated also, in general, the exceptions taken to the eclipses by Eld. Thurman, and proposed to examine his charges.

At the outset it is proper to remark that the record ought to be accounted for. If one of the eclipses never occurred, and if several occurred, but were too small to be seen or noticed, how came they to be recorded? How did it happen that any thing was said of them?

There are only three possible ways of accounting for the record. We may suppose,

1. That the disputed eclipses, though never seen, are computed, or calculated, by Hipparchus or Ptolemy, from their own knowledge of astronomy, i. e., these astronomers, by dint of figures, concluded that such eclipses must have occurred, and ought to have been seen; and they took it upon themselves to say they were seen so and so. But then why did they say they were seen at Babylon, and that some of them were so small that we ought to doubt if they were seen? People sometimes tell only part of the truth for fear the whole will not be believed. Did Ptolemy overdo the prudent thing in this matter?

2. We may suppose that the eclipses were seen and recorded, but the dates got disarranged. That either (1) the names and years of the kings are now incorrect, so that the astronomy may be all right, but the chronology based on it worthless. And if I had found occasion to dispute the chronology, I should probably have made this the point of attack. Or (2) that the eclipses themselves are dated wrong, though the chronology may be right. But then we must ask, Why are so many of the eclipses found by modern astronomers, at the dates assigned? And even when it is said that one of the eclipses did not happen, why is it that Eld. Thurman's tables come so near making an eclipse just then? A hundred miles is about the twentieth part of the moon's diameter, or little more than half a digit. The difference between so narrow an escape, and a tolerable eclipse, is less than differences made in old eclipses by very clever computers, who never think of rejecting the eclipses in their quarrel about the figures. In short, modern estimates find so much truth in Ptolemy's record, that very few have supposed, until lately, that Ptolemy wrote poetry or fiction, or other error.

3. We may suppose that Ptolemy's astronomy and even his chronology are correct, and seek some other method of reconciling them with the Bible than that which says one or the other must be renounced. We should not hastily pronounce such alternatives, of which hereafter.

But to proceed with Eld. T.'s charges against the eclipses. I have so much to say in reply that I hardly know where to begin. But he has said, and it has been so confidently repeated, that "no tables make all these old eclipses," that I think I must begin by examining this assertion. "No tables"? Has Mr. T. tried all the tables known to astronomers? The only tables he professes to have used are Ferguson's. These he found inadequate. What did he then do? Did he inquire if there were any more recent tables, which might be better? If so, he has not told us. The reader of his book might suppose that Ferguson's were the latest, and the best until they were improved by Mr. Thurman. To all appearance, the statement that no tables make all these eclipses is based, not on the trial and failure of the half dozen volumes of tables published since Ferguson's day. There is no proof that Eld. T. has tried any of these tables. The statement seems to be based on the fact that some of the old tables did not make all the eclipses in question, and they had to be made by using more than one sytem of tables, which Mr. T. regards as an unfair procedure.

To all this I reply, first, by asking the reader to wait until I report computations of the eclipses in question made by practical astronomers, with the best modern tables, which Eld. T. has not used.

Secondly, even if Ptolemy's eclipses were not found, by the best tables, precisely as he records them, that is deemed by astronomers generally no reason for rejecting the eclipses. They all say, we must not prove the eclipses by the tables, but the tables by the eclipses. This is the received doctrine of the relation of tables to old eclipses, given us in history generally reliable. It follows that if the tables do not make them accurately, so much the worse for the tables. If an eclipse is recorded as accurately and credibly as are reliable historical events generally, then it becomes a standard; and the tables will come nearer and nearer to it as they are made more and more accurate.

In this view of the case we can not censure Dr. Hales, as Eld. T. does in p. 34 of his book, for making out the eclipses of Ptolemy from various tables. If Dr. H. does this avowedly and openly, he does just right, unless I am much mistaken. He simply says that the tables are imperfect. Mr. Thurman seems to say quite as much. For, though he had just said, "Ferguson's tables come as near making all the ancient eclipses as it is possible for any to do" (p. 34), yet on p. 41 he says, "That my tables are more correct that Ferguson's is proven from the fact that they make all known eclipses on undisputed ground according to the express language of the historian, which his do not." The italics are Eld. T.'s, and they will be considered as I proceed.

C. F. H.

For the World's Crisis.

FORT COVINGTON, APRIL 10.

The work of God goes on gloriously here. The crowds that attend are almost wonderful. The Baptist chapel can no longer hold the people who are eager to hear; and therefore the Presbyterians have opened their larger house. Many sinners come daily to the Lord. The whole community seems to be moving. I hope to see more glorious results still. Yesterday I preached on the parable of the ten virgins in the morning, and on the final "gathering of the saints" in the afternoon, to a most deeply interested multitude. How much better it seems to me to be saving souls than to be riding hobbies! When shall we all learn that "Jesus Christ came into the world to save sinners," and not to establish abstractions?

EDWIN BURNHAM.

☞ When injured by any one, we should remember that God presents to us the most glorious opportunity of showing forth his own image—mercy and forgiveness.

The World's Crisis AND SECOND ADVENT MESSENGER.

Boston, Tuesday, April 18, 1865.

☞ TAKE NOTICE.

All subscriptions for the Crisis are payable in advance, at the rate of $2.50 a year; but if delayed six months beyond the time of payment, the rate is $3.00 a year, or $1.50 for six months. Thus 50 cents a year is saved by paying in advance.

THE PRESIDENT IS DEAD.

Perhaps our nation was never more appalled than when the announcement flashed through our land,—"The President is mortally wounded,—is dead." People stood aghast at the intelligence, and scarcely uttered a word. Close upon this sad intelligence came the gloomy tidings,—"Secretary Seward is wounded"! We may well inquire, what will be the next scene in the drama? Who can tell what a day may bring forth! Thank God, there will be no such scenes in the new earth when Jesus reigns. We may well pray earnestly,—"Let thy kingdom come." By the death of Mr. Lincoln, we think our nation has lost one of the best men that has ever filled the Presidential chair.

MANCHESTER.

Our meeting in Manchester, N. H., April 9th, was one of much interest. Some thirty came seventeen miles by private conveyance, and others walked fourteen miles to be present. We had a good love-feast Lord's day morning, and three were baptized at noon. Our hall was full of attentive listeners. Some are under conviction, and are almost persuaded to be christians. There appears to be a new interest in many places, and we hope soon to see a general waking up among those looking for the coming of Jesus.

PTOLEMY OR THE BIBLE.

It is very evident that Ptolemy's Canon and the Bible are not in harmony with each other; and we think all endeavor to prove Ptolemy's Canon correct will be as futile as any effort to show that the prophecy of Daniel is untrue. We can conceive of no possible way to harmonize Ptolemy and Daniel, until it can be proved that 536 B. C. is the same year as 488 B. C., which, of course, is an absurdity. In order to make this point apparent to all our readers, we have only to call their attention to a few facts.

1. When a particular individual is mentioned by the prophet, who should do a certain work, no one else can fulfill that prophecy.

2. This is the case with Cyrus. In Isaiah 44: 28, we read, the Lord "saith of Cyrus, He is my shepherd, and shall perform all my pleasure; even saying to Jerusalem, Thou shalt be built; and to the temple, Thy foundation shall be laid." And in Isa. 45: 13, the Lord speaks again of Cyrus, and says, "He shall build my city, and he shall let go my captives." None but Cyrus can fulfill this prophecy, because he is called by name, as the one. In Ezra 1: 1–5, we have a record of its fulfillment. It reads as follows:—

"Now in the first year of Cyrus king of Persia, that the word of the Lord by the mouth of Jeremiah might be fulfilled, the Lord stirred up the spirit of Cyrus king of Persia, that he made a proclamation throughout all his kingdom, and put it also in writing, saying, Thus saith Cyrus king of Persia, The Lord God of heaven hath given me all the kingdoms of the earth; and he hath charged me to build him a house at Jerusalem, which is in Judah. Who is there among you of all his people? his God be with him, and let him go up to Jerusalem, which is in Judah, and build the house of the Lord God of Israel, (he is the God,) which is in Jerusalem. And whosoever remaineth in any place where he sojourneth, let the men of his place help him with silver, and with gold, and with goods, and with beasts, besides the freewill offering for the house of God that is in Jerusalem. Then rose up the chief of the fathers of Judah and Benjamim, and the priests, and the Levites, with all them whose spirit God God had raised, to go up to build the house of the Lord which is in Jerusalem."

The prophet Daniel was instructed to write as follows:—"Know, therefore, and understand, that from the going forth of the commandment to restore and to build Jerusalem, unto the Messiah the Prince, shall be seven weeks and threescore and two weeks." As Cyrus is specified as the individual to issue the command, and called by name 140 years before his birth, it is certain that no other person can fulfill the prophecy.

3. Cyrus must issue the commandment before his death, which took place in seven years after he became sole monarch of the Medo Persian kingdom.

4. His first year, in which he issued his "commandment to restore and to build Jerusalem," according to Ptolemy's Canon corrected, was B. C. 536.

5. Daniel says it shall be sixty-nine weeks, which are only 483 years, "from the going forth of the commandment to . . . Messiah the Prince," which would be 488 years B. C., as our A. D. did not begin till the fifth year after the birth of Christ.

6. As it is impossible to make the sixty-nine weeks, or 483 years, reach from B. C. 536, to B. C. 5; so it is impossible to harmonize Ptolemy's Canon with the Bible. Hence we repeat our statement at the beginning of this article, that "we think all endeavors to prove Ptolemy's Canon correct will prove as futile as any effort to show that the prophecy of Daniel is untrue." Shall a positive and plain prophecy of the Bible be set aside by an uncertain chronological arrangement made out by a heathen astronomer? If Ferguson's astronomical tables are not reliable because they were made out one hundred years ago, then what shall be said of those used by Ptolemy seventeen hundred years since? Must all the prophets bow to him? or shall the Holy Spirit from God, [illegible] Jeremiah and Daniel to write, [illegible] out Cyrus as the one to give "the commandment to restore and to build Jerusalem," be accepted and believed? This is the question, we think, for each one to settle. Who knew best about this matter, the Lord, or Ptolemy?

ISRAEL'S SOJOURN,—430 YEARS.

BRO. GRANT:—In your answer to my letter, which appeared in the Crisis of Jan. 3d, showing that, what to my mind seemed to be a discrepancy in Bro. Thurman's Chronology, was, when rightly understood, in perfect harmony with the Bible; you quoted Paul and Josephus, also the Septuagint and Samaritan versions, to show that Bro. Thurman must be correct when he dates the commencement of the 430 years of the sojourning of the Hebrews at the time 'Abraham . . . . was called to go out into a place which he should after receive for an inheritance.' Also that 215 years of this sojourning was in Canaan, and the remaining half in Egypt. Now this testimony would seem to be sufficient, if God had not said to Abram in Gen. 15: 13, 'Know of a surety that thy seed shall be a stranger in a land that is not theirs, and shall serve them; and they shall afflict them four hundred years.' And the 14th verse of the same chapter declares, that the 'NATION whom they shall serve, will I judge.' As the children of Israel were not servants in the land of Canaan, so far as I can learn, and as no nation at this time was judged except the Egyptians, we conclude that Bro. Thurman, if in harmony with other chronologers on this point, is not quite in harmony with the Bible. Will Bro. Grant give us a little light on this subject.

From your Bro. in Christ,
CHARLES W. OSGOOD.

Two points should be observed which are mentioned in Gen. 15: 13. 1. The seed of Abraham was to be "a stranger in a land that is not theirs," for four hundred years. As the four hundred years did not begin till the seed of Abraham, then it follows that the time of Abraham's sojourn was not included in this period, which began, as learned writers show, from the birth of Isaac, from which it was four hundred years to the time the children of Israel left Egypt.

2. The four hundred years mark the time that the Egyptians were to "afflict them." It appears that the days of affliction did not begin with Abraham's sojourn, but the four hundred thirty years began with the call of Abraham, which, according to the book of Jasher, was when Abraham was seventy years of age. Abraham moved to Haran, or Charran, when first called, and remained there five years; "and from thence, when his father was dead, he removed" into the land of Canaan when he was seventy-five years of age. See Gen. 12: 1–4, and Acts 7: 1–6. When he was one hundred years of age, Isaac was born. Hence Araham's sojourn was thirty years before his seed was born, and from that time the sojourn was to be four hundred years; making the entire sojourn, from the call of Abraham, four hundred thirty years, in harmony with Ex. 12: 40, 41. From the foregoing facts it will appear that Bro. Thurman is not only in harmony with standard writers on this subject, but also with the Bible.

MAN-WORSHIP.

This is an age of man-worship. The Lord is almost forgotten, while man is becoming more and more the object of worship. We expect to see this spirit developing itself more fully as we approach the end of this dispensation. Infidelity is becoming very bold against the simplicity of the christian religion, and substituting a system but little removed from the Pagan hero-worship. We were reminded of this sad fact from the following, published in the Boston Daily Herald, April 10th, 1865:—

"Washington, April 9. Praise Grant, 'from whom all blessings flow.' The mighty news of the surrender of Lee and his army was received here to-night soon after nine o'clock, and among the few who are out on one of the stormiest of nights, the enthusiasm is tremendous. People meet and embrace each other, and general congratulation prevails that the Commander-in-Chief of the rebel armies, by his complete submission, has decided that the cause of the Union must prevail and peace reign evermore."

"WARS AND FIGHTINGS."—This is the title of a new tract of 12 pp., by Bro. John A. Best, Pittsburgh, Pa. Any who wish for a small and good tract to scatter on this subject, let them send to Bro. Best and get 25 cents or a dollar's worth, and circulate them among their neighbors.

AMERICAN AGRICULTURIST.—If any of our readers wish a good Agricultural paper, we would recommend to their notice the American Agriculturist, published by Orange Judd, 41 Park Row, New York. Price $1.50 per year, in advance. This is the best paper of the kind with which we are acquainted.

WHAT THE DEMONS SAY.

We purpose to keep our readers somewhat posted in the movements of the great delusion of these last days—Spiritualism. The following are records of conversations with demons, who claimed to be departed human spirits:—

"Q. I saw upon one occasion a hand, on which appeared to be India ink tattooing. Was that spirit hand a sailor's hand?

A. Very likely it was.

Q. How came the India ink upon the hand?

A. We do not believe the India ink was there, but only the representation of that which was on the owner's hand.

Q. How could the representation be transferred?

A. Precisely the same as symbols of flowers can be shown. It is no more difficult to produce those characters in India ink than it is to produce other symbols. The spirit remembers what its earthly wardrobe was when it clothes itself again with mortality. It copies that with which it was clothed as as nearly as possible, always. It cannot be otherwise.

Q. If we understand you, then, the philosophy of these appearances, in the case of the Allen boy and Davenport Brothers, is this: Some spirit abstracts from the medium certain qualites resembling its own when on the earth. Is that it?

A. Yes, you are right.

Q. Is this India ink tattooing [illegible] spirit-life [illegible]?

A. In [illegible] only.

Q. Could it make itself manif[illegible] where the remembrance of the tattooing was lost by the spirit?

A. It might be possible to exhibit the marks, but it would be more natural to remember them. You will find if the spirit inhabited a deformed body while here on earth, and wished to exhibit itself to mortality, it would clothe itself in the same deformed shape.

Q. I observed once at a seance of the Davenport Brothers, that the spirit hand exhibited five fingers and one thumb. Was that an indication that another spirit used its power, too?

A. We believe generally there are some forty—between forty and fifty—intelligences controlling those lads."—Banner of Light, Jan. 28th, 1865.

Another spirit is asked the following questions:—

"Q. Will the controlling spirit please tell us in the parable of the ten virgins what is meant?

A. It is possible that it may have reference to the present time. In our opinion it does refer to the present time. . . .

Q. You say that the parable of the ten virgins applies to the present time. Please explain how it applies to us a little more in detail?

A. The signs of the times seem to be applying it more forcibly than it lies in our power to do. The voice of Truth, the bridegroom of Eternal Wisdom, has come to you. It may be in the form of modern Spiritualism. Some he finds that are wise enough to have their lamps ready for lighting. Some are foolish enough to have no oil in their lamps, and therefore cannot receive the truths that modern Spiritualism offers."

So it seems the foolish virgins are those who do not receive the teachings of the demons, or turn Spiritualists. We are glad to be numbered in the class whom Satan calls foolish.

Another spirit says: "We have no belief in miracles. Indeed, we know that there never was a miracle performed."—Banner, Jan. 28, 1865.

Another says, in answer to questions, as reported in the Banner of Light, March 25th, 1865:—

"Q. Is there, then, such a thing as the transmigration of souls?

A. Yes, in the largest sense. . . .

Q. How can soul be defined if it is a part of God?

A. Very well; then you may say soul is God. It is quite as proper as any other definition. . . . .

Q. It has been said, by the spirits of this circle, that God is a Principle, is our Father and Mother; that spirits never had a beginning. Now if this be truth, how can God be our Father? It seems to the inquirer, according to this teaching, that God and man are co-extensive as to duration.

A. That which has had a beginning must have an ending; that which is capable of being created is capable also of being destroyed. Now we have affirmed many times, and in all sincerity, that the soul or immortal part never had a beginning. . . . .

Q. If God be a principle, what good is there in addressing prayers to it or him? Can a principle answer prayer?

A. So far as the terms are considered, there is no use whatever, except the mere forms of expression. Now prayer becomes of use only in this way: inasmuch as it lifts the mental portion of your being above the things of material life, it puts you in a new atmosphere, opens the door to things spiritual and divine. Therefore it is good to pray. It matters not whether you address a principle or a personality; indeed, it is not necessary that you address any one. Only turn you thoughts beyond things that are sordid and material; lift them by the great stairway of prayer above the common standard, and you have accomplished all that man can accomplish."

Does this look like ancient christianity?

For the World's Crisis.

A TENT MEETING.

BRO. GRANT:—I have just been to Carlinville, Ill., presenting the gospel of the kingdom. A good impression was made on community at large. Some were converted, and baptized, and others are still under conviction. The present truth takes hold of the people everywhere. There is a power in it. Sister Prescott, from St. Louis, was with us a part of the time. She is laboring for the Lord.

I need a tent to preach in, but have not seen the way open to procure one. But the Lord has put it into the hearts of Brn. Brailey, Quimby, and Sargeant, to voluntarily offer one hundred dollars towards this enterprise, provided other friends will make up the balance. I will try to raise another hundred myself. Now shall the enterprise fail. Who will pledge $50, $25, or $10, to be paid before the first of June. Let no one hold back the Lord's money that aught to aid this enterprise. The King of glory is coming, and the warning must be given. Direct to me at Baraboo, Wisconsin, or to Bro. Grant at Boston.

W. SHELDON.

We hope the tent will be secured for Bro. Sheldon. It should be remembered that our Brn. in the West have not such convenient places for meetings as we have in the East. In the section where Bro. Sheldon labors it is difficult to find a grove where a meeting can be held. Besides, many more will come out to a tent meeting, than to an ordinary place of worship. Do not let Bro. Sheldon call in vain for help. The cause is a worthy one, and will be a safe investment for the cause of the Lord.—ED.

Our Volunteer Agents.

REPORT FOR WEEK ENDING APRIL 15TH.

Whole number of new subscribers in the week, 55. By the efforts of the following brethren, 28:—

One each.—By H A Arnold, S W Ames, N H Berry, C C Brown, H P Carpenter, S A Chaplin, P Greene, E B Grant, F. House, Caroline S. Holman, Mary K. Lambert, C W Low, N F Nason, C Newell, E Phelps, P A Smith, S Woodcock.
Two each.—By J. C Wheeler, M Warren.
Three—By M. Grant.
Four—By Mrs. R. T. Crowell.

Change of Price.

The prices of the following works, for sale at this office, have been advanced by the publishers as follows:—

BIBLE STUDENT'S LIBRARY (for the set),
By mail—cloth, $5.00; paper, $2.50.
By express—cloth, $4.00; paper, $2.00.
DEBT AND GRACE, post paid, $1.50.
CHRIST OUR LIFE, post paid, cloth, 75c; paper, 45c.
HUDSON'S TRACTS, 6 cents each, postage 2 cts.
CHRISTIAN LYRE, 80c; by mail, 85c.
SOCIAL HYMNS, 15 cts; eight for $1.00.
COOK BOOK, 15 cts; postage 2c.
DIPHTHERIA, 10 cts; postage 2c.

Before ordering books, in these times of changing prices, it will be well to look at our latest price list, in the book column, and remit accordingly.

☞ The constitutional amendment abolishing slavery throughout the United States was unanimously ratified by both branches of the Tennessee Legislature on the 5th inst.

THE NEW [illegible] TRACT FUND.

We, the [illegible] to give the sums affixed to [illegible] raising TWO THOUSAND DOLLARS [illegible] Publication Society in the gratuitous distribution of tracts.

Previous donations	$772.51
"A Sinner"	1.25
J. N. B.	.20
O. Loomis	.50

Sr. Crowell writes from Clear Lake, Iowa: "Bro. Janes, from Boylan's Grove, has been here and delivered quite a number of lectures and excited quite an interest on the subjects of our faith; and I think some tracts for distribution now would do a great deal of good. My great object and desire is to have my neighbors and friends prepare for the judgment. Pray that my efforts may not be in vain." ($2.50 enclosed.)

Have sent you $5.00 worth, and our prayers with them.

POOR FUND DONATIONS,

To pay for Papers sent to the Poor.

Whole number sent free 800. Amount $2000.00.

Previous donations	$877.32
"Woburn"	1.00
Mrs. L. Jones	.50
John Bayley	.75

THE ITALIAN MISSION.

Previous donations	$392.66
A widow's mite	20.00
A friend	1.00
G. L. Humphreville	5 00
Mrs. N. Smith	3.62

HIRAM MUNGER'S LIFE.

Are you interested in the early history of the Advent movement, and in the labors, persecutions and successes of its hardy pioneers? You will find many interesting reminiscences of the same, in the "Life of Hiram Munger."

Have you an interest in Campmeetings and Revivals? The hero of a hundred such will give you some account of his remarkable experience therein, in the "Life of Hiram Munger."

Do you believe in the wonderful efficacy of prayer? You will find singular exemples of it, in the "Life of Hiram Munger."

Are you fond of marvelous stories of the restraining and converting power of God over hardened sinners? Read the "Life of Hiram Munger."

It is a narrative of many curious incidents, from an experience of more than fifty years as a citizen, christian, classleader, campmeeting manager, and gospel minister; contains some sharp thrusts at rapology, church fiddling, and other corrupt fashions, follies, and false theologies of the day; and is all told in the author's own quaint, original style,—plain, pointed, blunt, unpolished, as the rough slabs from his own "Saw-Mill College," of which he is a graduate.

The reader will be interested, amused, profited; will enjoy many a hearty laugh at the unconscious oddities of speech and manner with which things are said and done; and will not regret that he sent thirty cents to this office for a copy of the "Life of Hiram Munger."

W. B. H.

CORRECTION.—In the notice of the new edition of Munger's Life and Experience, in last week's paper, the price, in part of our issue, was given, by mistake of the types, at 50 cents. It should have been 30 cents. The book will be sent by mail, postage paid, to any addres, for 30 cents,—half its former price.

For the World's Crisis.

THE ITALIAN MISSION.

BRO. ADAMS:—Your letter through Bro. Herron, including draft of 490 francs, is received, and to you and God's stewards who have contributed this much needed money, I wish to send many thanks. In answer to your inquiry, how I get along in the photograph business, I have the honor to answer that I have not entered at all into the business to this moment for these reasons. When I received the 321 francs from Bro. Grant in November last, as we had lived on credit since our arrival here, July 6th, there was nothing left after paying our debts and buying what was absolutely necessary, so of course as there remained no money, I could not buy a photographic instrument. Besides, after much investigation, I became much satisfied that it would not do for me to go into such business here, as it would in Europe ruin me as a missionary, it being considered here, incompatible for a regular minister to preach the gospel and follow any other calling. Again, I understand now much better than when we first came here, the circumstances of the people, that even those who own much land have no money, and as there is no commerce here, and the taxes are very heavy, nearly all the hard-eared money must go to pay the taxes, leaving but very little for the necessities of the people who live very poorly, with less of the comforts of life than poor day laborerers in the United States. As I wrote in my February report, we lived again three and one-half months before receiving the last draft from the United States, on credit; and now, after paying all debts, there remains twenty francs for future needs of my family of eight persons.

I see more and more clearly what an extensive field of missionary labor is spread out before me. Europe is destitute of the truth. The field is white, ready to harvest, and where are the laborers? Besides my correspondence with America and the papers which I receive from there, and which I know not how to do without, but which cost me from three to eight sous apiece—though I pay but a part of the postage on them,—I have very important correspondence with Italy, England, Germany, Poland and France, and I wish to commence with Austria and Hungary.

I have just read in a French daily paper of date March 13th, "L' Italic," published in Turin, that a criminal process was before the police tribunal of Vienna the 7th inst. It relates to a religious sect which is formed under the name of "True Believers." The author of the sect is a traitor from the north of Germany, who has spread the doctrines of his faith in Hungary, where two thousand profess a belief in the pure doctrine of Christ. There are not so many believers in Vienna, though it is difficult to fix the number. The accused are SCAGER, a tanner, and STRILL, a shoemaker,—the former aged forty-five, the latter forty-nine years. The Tribunal is crowded with people who listen to the debates with the liveliest interest. The following interrogatory shows the most characteristic features of these examinations:

The President: "What is your religion?"

The Accused: "I was a Catholic and believed nothing; now I am a true believer."

Q. "What do you understand by a true believer?"

Ans. "One [illegible] of Jesus Christ, [illegible] Old and N[illegible]."

Q. "Did [illegible] know that the formation and maintenance of new religious sects was not authorized by the States?"

Ans. "I know not why the principles which Jesus Christ himself taught should be interdicted."

Q. "You have held meetings, have you not?"

Ans. "Yes, sir."

Q. "Where are the members of this sect in the habit of assembling?"

Ans. "Sometimes at my house, sometimes with another faithful member, and sometimes under the canopy of heaven."

Q. "What is done at these meetings?"

Ans. "A brother reads the word of God in the Old and New Testament and explains it."

"Q. "How many persons attend these assemblies?"

Ans. "We are never counted."

Q. "Tell us nearly the number?"

Ans. "Thirty or forty persons."

Q. "Have you converted any?"

Ans. "Yes, certainly, I have converted sinners who came to seek me."

Q. "What are the ceremonies of your religion?"

Ans. "We have no ceremonies; we read the word of God; we pray and sing."

Q. "Can any one enter this association?"

Ans. "Not when one is in sin; but those are prepared who wish to enter it. One examines them to know if their hearts are pure."

Q. "Do you believe that a man can know if another's heart is pure and without stain?"

Ans. "Why would this be impossible? Mons. le procureur examines also, and is not he a man?"

Q. "Have you a sacrament of baptism?"

Ans. "We know nothing of baptism as now practised; but we believe in fluvial immersion such as God established and John the Baptist practised."

Q. "At what age do you baptize?"

Ans. "When a man can think, can comprehend religion, and is master of his own acts."

Q. "Have you the sacrament of the Eucharist?"

Ans. "We have no sacrament. We believe that Jesus Christ established none; but we have a Eucharist."

Q. In what does your Eucharist consist?"

Ans. "We give bread and wine."

Q. "Who administers the Eucharist?"

Ans. "A brother."

Q. "You ought to know that the Government does not tolerate a religious sect that it has not licensed."

Ans. "The Emperor has proclaimed liberty of belief and conscience."

Q. "It is true, but in this liberty the religions recognized by the Government are alone comprehended."

Ans. "Our religion is the pure doctrine of Jesus Christ."

Q. "How many members has your association?"

Ans. "I cannot inform you, for if I should, I should be a traitor and offend God."

Q. "To submit to authority is not to be a traitor. Do you not believe that authority is established by God?"

Ans. "Certainly."

Q. "Why then do you not wish to give the desired information?"

Ans. "Because we understand the question and do not wish to expose our brethren to persecution."

Q. Do you not believe in the justice of the judges?"

Ans. "The apostle has written, 'There is none righteous, no, not one.'—Rom. 3: 10."

Q. "Can this rule be applied to the members of your association?"

Ans. "They ought to be just because they should be without sin."

This simple and pithy response impressed the judges as well as the audience. The accused STRILL, responded in the same spirit.

The President. "Where do you hold your assemblies?"

Ans. "There is no fixed place."

Q "Why do you not choose a fixed place?"

Ans. "To avoid persecution."

Q. "You know then that you do wrong, and that you ought not to do it."

Ans. "It is written, If they persecute you in one city flee into another."

Q. "Have you ever been in conflict with the authority?"

Ans. "Yes; I did not think best to baptize my infant, but by order of the authority the Piarist (a religious order) took it and I suppose baptized it; I was not present."

Q. "Why did you refuse to baptize your child?"

Ans. "Because an infant can neither think nor will."

Q. "Your act falls under the penalty of the laws."

Ans. "Our Savior, Jesus Christ, did not sin, but he was nevertheless crucified. Following his sublime example I shall persevere and have patience! The pure word and doctrine of Jesus Christ will finish with triumph!"

SCAGER was condemned to imprisonment, with fasting, for three weeks, and STRILL to two weeks of the same punishment. May God bless them both.

M. B. CZECHOWSKI.

La Tour, Pellice, via Turin, Italy, March 15th, 1865.

☞ Advent papers please copy.

For the World's Crisis.

"KEEP THE GOOD SPIRIT."

Yes, Brn. and Srs., that's it; be sure and keep the spirit of the meek and lowly Jesus; then all is well. These thoughts have occupied my mind considerably since I left the meeting-house last evening, where the church had met to investigate God's holy word in regard to the time question, as believed and preached by Bro. Thurman and others, he being with us. There were those present who opposed Bro. Thurman's argument somewhat, one in particular, who has long since believed that the 2300 days of Daniel 8th chap. end in 1880. Not being present at the beginning of the meeting, when the objections were raised by the Bro. who believes in 1880 time, a sister informed me of it on our way home, but made the following remark: "But they kept the good Spirit." As much as to say there was no harm done. Though different views were held and advocated by the Brn., they did not get out of patience and abuse each other, nor let their zeal eat them up. They kept the good Spirit.

While different views exist among us, how necessary that we keep the good Spirit; for if we are not very careful we shall grieve the good, tender, dove-like Spirit of God, even when we are trying to do good in the name of Jesus; become impatient because others do not see as we see, and understand things as we do, or as soon. Do not be overbearing and harsh. Keep the good Spirit. Remember it is written, "If any man have not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of his."

We may spoil our influence and labor at times, by not keeping the good Spirit, and cause our good to be evil spoken of, while Christ is dishonored, and his precious cause languishes. The more we have of the good Spirit, the more certain we are of being led out of error into the truth; yes, into ALL TRUTH. John 16: 13. So if we would know and understand the time of deliverance, when Jesus the mighty one shall descend from heaven and gather his elect from one end of heaven to the other, let us not only keep the good Spirit, but see that we are filled with it, have it dwelling in us, that when the days end, and Daniel, the wonderful numberer, stands up in his lot, we may with him shine forth as the sun in our heavenly Master's kingdom.

Let us be sure we have the good Spirit, and keep it till by it we are changed from mortality to immortality.

JOHN G. HOOK.

Concord, N. H., March 30th.

For the World's Crisis.

THE PARIAN CHRONICLE.

NUMBER ONE.

Being informed that the chronology of our world was framed by following the conflicting and clashing historical opinions of heathen authors, I felt anxious to have one that was based on something more reliable, that I might be enabled to place confidence in, as being correct. And having been taught by my mother, in my youthful days, that the Bible is the highest authority to which any one can appeal, I was induced to disregard the conflicting opinions and wild conjectures of men, and arrange a chronology from the undoubted authority of the word of God, by following the dates as found in the Bible. This new method of arranging chronology brought me into contact with the wise and prudent men of this world, and my position was consequently unpopular. But being admonished to "trust in the Lord with all thine heart," with the promise, "He shall direct thy paths" (Prov. 3: 5, 6), I had faith to believe that I would not be led into error, confidently relying on the assurance of the apostle Paul, that "the holy Scriptures . . . are able to make" one "wise unto salvation."

Commencing with the beginning of creation, I arranged our Bible chronology down to A. M. 6000, which is as far as the prophetic dates or sacred chronology extends. This chronology has been examined by some of our most learned divines, who say of it, "Had those prophetic dates which point out the coming and kingdom of Christ been omitted, it would have been received in all of the colleges as the established chronology of the world." But those prophetic dates which show "the end of all things at hand," cuts it off from the favor it would have otherwise found in the estimation of our learned men; hence closing their eyes to the light of Bible truth, they fall back upon the Canon of Ptolemy, and the clashing opinion and dates of heathen authors.

At the time my chronology was arranged, by following the dates given in the Bible only, I was not aware that astronomical authority was claimed for Ptolemy's Canon. Hence on obtaining this information, I found it necessary to examine the claims of this man, whose authority men had exalted so far above that of the God of heaven by even saying, "The Canon of Ptolemy is not to be receded from for the authority of any writing whatsoever." After spending about seven years in examining the matter, I discovered that, so far from the Canon being established by astronomy, we could clearly point out by astronomical demonstration the fact of its incorrectness, and fully establish the strictest correctness of our Bible chronology. But since it has been discovered that astronomy establishes the Bible chronology, and can no longer be offered in support of Ptolemy's Canon, it is very strange to find those persons who, a few years since, thought astronomy was of such undoubted authority that the Bible and every thing else must give place to the so called "famous astronomical era," now resort to the opposite absurdity, and say, "astronomy is too complicated to be relied upon at all." Even Bro. Stevenson, who advocates the soon coming and kingdom of Christ, had, but a short time previous to our discussion in Boston, offered and relied upon astronomy as proof of the correctness of his position; but since finding that it proves his theory to be incorrect, he now chooses to throw it all away as being "a mass of unreliable rubbish." Hence it was that, in our debate, he preferred to bring forward a new argument in support of his theory of the correctness of the Canon, namely,

"THE PARIAN CHRONICLE."

This being something new to me, I was at that time unprepared to reply; for, believing with Paul that "the holy Scriptures are able to make one wise," etc., my study had been more confined to the Bible, supposing that we may thus be "thoroughly furnished unto all good works." Although I had at that time proven the Canon of Ptolemy to be incorrect in thirty-five instances, I then promised those who attended our discussion that I would examine the matter of this Chronicle, and give the result of that investigation to the public, whether it was for or against the position on which I claim to stand, since our only object is to get the truth. Since that time, I have examined them, and am now prepared to make known the result of my investigation, leaving the whole matter to the better judgment of the learned to determine which it favors most, the true Bible chronology, or the theory advocated by Bro. Stevenson.

The Parian Chronicle is said to have been "engraved upon a coarse kind of marble, or stone, either in the year B. C. 264 or 239." But unfortunately for Bro. Stevenson's position, "those celebrated marbles" did not come to light until about 1888 years after, that is, in A. D. 1624, being then purchased by William Petty. Hence the learned Robertson, in his dissertation on the Parian Chronicle, dated A. D. 1788, supposed that it might have been a spurious fabrication of some learned Greek, so late as the sixteenth century, and executed from a mercenary motive of gain, in order that it might be sold for a high price at Smyrna, a commodious emporium for such rarities, after he had artfully broken the block and defaced the inscriptions in several places, to give it an air of antiquity." The silence of all authors who wrote before the sixteenth century might be offered in proof of the correctness of Robertson's opinion.

But whether the Parian Chronicle is what it claims to be, or only a forgery of the sixteenth century, one thing is clearly evident: that is, no one can prove that it was in existence before the sixteenth century. And that which cannot be proven to be three hundred years old, is all that Bro. Stevenson claims in proof of his position as to the time and reign of Cyrus king of Persia. We say this is all the authority he claims, for during our discussion of the subject he gave up all the astronomical authority, and also that part of Ptolemy's Canon which extends beyond the reign of Cyrus. Then, again, in a lecture which he delivered in Boston soon after the discussion had ended, in order to make room to get in his "sliding scale," he gave up all of the Canon after the reign of Cyrus, or at least all after the reign of Darius, for in sliding the reign of Artaxerxes ten years lower, the reign of Xerxes must also fall ten years lower than the Canon places it.

During the time of our discussion, Bro. Stevenson offered some historical authority in proof of his theory; but at the time of his lecture after the discussion, in order to get in his sliding scale, he was compelled to acknowledge that all of the historical authority which he had before offered, together with the Canon of Ptolemy, was erroneous. This was done in order to convince the audience that the reigns of Herod, Augustus, Tiberius, and all of the Roman Emperors and Consols, may be moved ten years lower than Ptolemy and other historians place them. He there openly declared, in the presence of a large and intelligent audience, that "none of the Roman historians could be relied upon, since they all wrote hundreds of years after the time of those kings, and that they too much clashed the one with the other for us to place any confidence in any of them." Hence, if Bro. Stevenson will admit that those historians are no more worthy of credit, concerning that which occurred some five or six hundred years before they wrote, than that which happened but a short time before their day, we do not misrepresent him when we say that the Parian Chronicle is all that he even claims as authority in proof of the time of the reign of Cyrus.

In our discussion, the question was, "Is Ptolemy's Canon correct? Stevenson affirms, Thurman denies. Hence, so soon as I had succeeded in proving the incorrectness of but a part of it, I supposed that I had done all that was required of me, and that my point was gained. And when I had in thirty-six separate and distinct ways proven its incorrectness, I thought that I had done thirty-five times more than I had promised. But to my astonishment, I learned that Bro. Stevenson had not as much confidence in Ptolemy's Canon as I had; for I was willing to admit that it was correct from B. C. 431 to A. D. 137, a period of 568 years, while he was only willing to admit that it was correct from the first year of Cyrus B. C. 538 to the end of the reign of Darius, or the utmost time which his theory can possibly admit of its being correct, would be the twenty-first year of Xerxes, B. C. 464, a period of only seventy-four years; and since his "sliding scale" slips Ptolemy's Canon down ten years lower, this period of seventy-four years is left hanging alone upon the authority of the Parian Chronicle, which Bro. Stevenson has not yet proven to be three hundred years old.

Then was not Bro. Litch, of the Advent Herald, rather hasty in supposing that the word of God concerning the time of the reign of Cyrus must give place to such wild and unreliable conjectures? Now, we offered no such uncertain authority in proof of the correctness of our chronology, but, on the contrary, we presented the highest authority to which man can appeal—the infallible word of God, and the eclipses of the sun and moon which were recorded by historians who were living when they occurred; hence our testimony is that to which no imposter can pretend.

Those who have so much confidence in the Parian Chronicles should bear in mind that they must first prove that the Chronicles are more than three hundred years old, before it can prove the incorrectness of the word of God, or the truth-testing power of astronomy. But on the supposition that it may have been written at the time the inscription claims it to have been, let us inquire as to what it is worth for authority. WM. C. THURMAN.

Correspondence.

From Sr. L. Annis.

BRO. GRANT:—I prize the Crisis, and gladly welcome its arrival. Have been scattering it around, hoping to do some little good; for truly these gentle whisperings often speak loudly to the guilty soul, pointing to redeeming love, which takes away the sins of the world.

Brn. D. S. Clark and Wm. McCullock were the pioneer laborers in this place three years ago last winter, when they organized a little church. By their occasional visits, and the labors of Bro. Hurd, our worthy pastor, we have been fed and nourished with the sincere milk of the word. May the good seed sown bring forth an abundant harvest. There have been twelve added to our number within the last six weeks, so there are upwards of forty names on our church book. We have interesting meetings, and large and attentive congregations, and great interest manifested. We have preaching every two weeks, Saturday evening, Sabbath and Sabbath evenings; prayer meeting every two weeks. It is truly cheering to see some of the pilgrims come six miles to meet in the prayer circle. May we be so unspeakably happy as to meet in the kingdom of our Lord and Savior, is the prayer of your unworthy sister, in hope of eternal life, LEAH ANNIS.

Victoria, Ill.

From Sr. F. S. Bradford.

BRO. GRANT:—The question is often asked me, "What do you think of Thurman's Chronology?" "I don't think much about it." The fact is, I do not think the good Lord ever designed that I should undertake to explain prophecy. He has given me another kind of work in his vineyard. Bro. Thurman may be right, or he may be wrong, for aught I know; but as I read the opinions of A, B and C on the subject, from week to week, I am fearful that amid so much agitation and difference of opinion our brethren may lose sight of the most important thing, viz., "Be ye . . . ready."

One might think to read our paper sometimes, that all depended on knowing the exact time that our Lord would make his second advent. But the question with me is, shall we serve the Lord any better by proving Bro. Thurman to be right in his reckoning? Or, in other words, should we love the Lord more were we sure of seeing him in 1868? If we should, then let us all set to and examine prophecy, study astronomy, and history, and give the subject a thorough investigation. But while we are doing it, I would suggest that we keep one eye on self, that we do not let contention, self-conceit, or any of their kindred, get possession of our hearts, and we fail of being ready.

I remember the "time table" which expired in '43. Perhaps some served the Lord better for believing that he would come in that year, and some, perhaps, felt that they served him too well; for, judging by their works, they quit his service then, and have served another master since.

Before our blessed Lord left this earth, he promised us certain "signs," after the fulfillment of which he would "come again." We have followed those signs, and find that they have been literally fulfilled, and now it remains for us to be ready to meet our Lord at any hour. Shall we be any more ready for knowing the exact time he will come?

Now it seems to me like this. I have an absent friend. I expect him to visit me at a given hour. In my preparations to receive him, I leave certain finishing touches till the last hour, that all may be fresh and bright for his reception. But if I know not the day or hour of his coming, merely that he will come soon, at any hour, I make ready at once, and keep all things in complete readiness till his arrival. Thus I am not likely to be disappointed. And is there not danger of leaving some preparation undone, while we are computing time, and death intervene, or our Lord come before we look for him, and we be found not ready? Yours, striving to be always ready. FANNIE S. BRADFORD.

Plympton, Mass.

From Bro. Wm. Walker.

BRO. GRANT:—In June '64, three or four of the dear saints joined with me in calling upon the great Physician, and to the praise of God, let me say, he came quicker than we could have got an unbelieving doctor, and did not stop to inquire about the symptoms, nor examine the pulse, nor give calomel, nor pepper, withall their concomitant paraphernalia, but at once touched me, and his glory seemed to fill the place. Glory to the Lamb! I was well in a moment. I am perfectly well, and have been ever since. I consulted a very noted doctor in this city, and he was suffering with the same trouble. His symptoms were not worse than mine, and he was under the treatment of the most noted physicians in Boston, and they could not cure him, and he died soon after my Physician undertook my case. Be encouraged as ye lift up your heads, knowing your redemption is near; and as ye read Mark 16: 17, believe, and ye have the things ye desire of the Lord. Amen. Glory to God! Yours, dear brethren, in hope,

Concord, N. H. W. WALKER.

From Bro. P. S. W. Deyo.

BRO. GRANT:—I returned home from New Hartford, and have held a meeting for little over two weeks. Six have already obeyed the Lord in baptism, and the work still goes on. Praise the Lord! I have lived here eight years, and never tried before to make an effort of this kind to save my neighbors. It has proved a success. It has been said by those in our church, and members of other churches, that these are the best meetings ever held in this town, or enjoyed by them. I never had such a hearing before. I never was so well prepared for the work. In the last two months I have preached, sung and prayed, and worked with my hands, more than for any three months before in the year.

PETER S. W. DEYO.

Strawberry Point, Iowa.

Obituaries.

SR. CYRENA CYPHERS.

Died in Skowhegan, Me., Dec. 7th, 1864, Sr. Cyrena, wife of Bro. M. B. Cyphers, and daughter of J. and S. Webler, aged thirty years.

Sister Cyphers experienced religion in 1854, and has ever maintained the character of a christian. When in trial, though painful and sorrowful, she always triumphed in Christ, looking to the end of all trials—the consummation of the christian's hope. Much might be said of her amiableness, goodness, and the love she evinced to the followers of Christ, as many will remember who have shared the hospitalities of her house. Her faith was strong in God to the last. She feared no evil, but was confident the One in whom she had believed was able to bring her from the dust to sing praises to him when death should be swallowed up in victory. May the husband, and other friends that are left to mourn, strive to check the unavailing tear, as they remember that it is well with her, and that he giveth his beloved sleep. We hope to meet this beloved sister soon in the resurrection morning, to part no more. Sermon by D. N. Hanscome.

CATHARINE DAGGETT.

SARAH T. STRAIGHT.

Died in Riverpoint, March 22nd, 1865, Sarah T. Straight, wife of Wm. P. Straight, aged forty-eight years, five months, twenty days.

She was a member of the Calvinist church twenty-six years, but for the last seven or eight years had believed in the Advent doctrine. In her sickness she was a great sufferer. Before she died Eld. H. K. Flagg was called to pray with her, but she did not seem to get relief in her mind until a few days before she died; then she seemed reconciled, and was willing to die. She gave her heart up to God, and finally sank into sleep, without a struggle and almost without warning. She leaves a husband and six children to mourn her loss. Eld. A. Durfee attended the funeral, and spoke words of consolation from Isa. 28: 18, 19.

Dear husband, I am now at rest,
My hands are folded on my breast;
I am safe from fear and care and pain,
And soon I'll wake to life again.
Husband, dry those tearful eyes,
Jesus watches from the skies;
All my sorrow and pain are o'er,
Soon we shall meet on the other shore.

WILLIAM P. STRAIGHT.

E. B. PECK.

Died at South Hardwick, Aug. 22d, 1862, Edmand B. Peck, aged thirty-one.

He fell asleep in Jesus with the blessed hope of being changed at the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ to take his church, and so to be "forever with the Lord." Discourse on the occasion by Eld. A. C. Cleveland.

ISAAC D. NELSON.

Died at South Hardwick, Caledonia Co., Vt., Aug. 25th, 1862, Isaac D. Nelson, aged forty-four years.

His life was devoted to the service of that Redeemer for whose coming he looked, having been led to see the truth concerning the personal premillenial appearing of the Savior at the period that this doctrine was first agitated in this country. His funeral discourse was preached by Eld. A. C. Cleveland.

G. A. NELSON.

Died at Wolcott, Lamoile Co., Vt., of diphtheria, George A. Nelson, youngest child of Sister O. Nelson, aged two years and six months.

Discourse on the occasion by Eld. Herrick, Congregational minister.

"Asleep in Jesus, blessed sleep,
From which none ever wake to weep."

C. P. NELSON.

Died at Wolcott, Lamoile Co., Vt., of diphtheria, Charles P. Nelson, aged seven years and five months.

Discourse on the occasion by James Morrison, of Philadelphia, from the words of Jesus in John 5: 24-29.

BENJAMIN F. GIFFORD.

Died at sea, Feb. 15th, 1865, between 25° and 35° north latitude, and 62° and 50° west longitude, on a voyage from New York to West Indies, Benjamin F. Gifford, son of Benj. R. and Betsy J. Gifford, aged twenty-nine years and seven months.

He was a good boy, and we hope to meet him when the sea gives up the dead.

BENJ. R. GIFFORD.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

Liverpool April 1st, Queenstown 2d.

FRANCE.

It is rumored that the Emperor is suffering from an indisposition.

CAPE OF GOOD HOPE.

The mails to the 23d of February are received. News unimportant. The fall in the price of wool in London was producing disastrous results. One of the largest shippers of wool failed for about £100,000 sterling.

The news by the City of Baltimore and Belgian was received on the 29th, and imparted increased expression to the Liverpool and Manchester markets. An impression gained ground that the war was near its termination.

Parliamentary proceedings unimportant.

It is rumored that the Danish ministry has resigned.

The Index suggests that should the Washington Government presume on the supposed inferiority of Portugal, and extort reparation in the case of the Sacramento and Niagara, the great powers will be placed under unavoidable obligations to protect her in the assertion of her rights.

Lisbon, March 30. The commanders of the Niagara and Sacramento state that they had no intention of sailing when fired upon from the forts; they were only shifting their anchorage. It is rumored that Diplomatic notes have been exchanged relative to the affair. It is supposed that the Stonewall will make for Gibraltar.

The Russian Ambassador at Rome gave a banquet to Gen. McClellan. Among the toasts proposed was one for the maintainance of friendly relations between Russia and America.

The Mohammedan rebellion is progressing rapidly.

The American Minister has demanded satisfaction of the Portuguese government for firing into the Niagara. He demands that the American flag shall be saluted by the forts which fired into our vessels and the dismissal of the Governor of the forts. The American commanders deny any intention of sailing when fired at.

Other European political news unimportant.

Hamburg April 5th, Southampton 6th.

Mr. Cobden died on the 2d inst.

FRANCE.

A judicial inquiry has been instituted into the conduct of certain persons accused of attempting to disturb the peace by aiding and abetting the armament of the Confederate cruiser Stonewall.

RUSSIA.

The plague continues unabated in St. Petersburg.

BRAZIL.

Montevideo has been surrendered to Flores. The Brazilian forces now occupy it. Peace has been re-established. Flores has assumed the Presidency of the Republic. The business prospects are good.

DOMESTIC.

Washington, April 12. Such has been the increase in the navy that the Navy Register for this year will contain 50 pages more than the one previously published. Sixty vessels have been added between Jan. 1, 1864 and Jan. 1, 1865. The names of 64 iron-clads are given. The entire number of vessels is 683. It appears that within the period above mentioned seven naval vessels have been destroyed by rebel torpedoes, and as many captured by the enemy.

The ports recently closed by the proclamation of the President will continue to be blockaded.

Philadelphia, April 13. The Herald's dispatch says Gen. Grant represents Lee as zealous in his efforts to stop the further effusion of blood, and instead of coming north is urging all other commanders of rebel armies to surrender without further resistance. Gen. Lee considers his work as important as Gen. Grant did his in coming to Washington to reduce the expenses of the government.

It appears that Jeff. Davis sent a message to inquire of Gen. Grant whether the government would allow him to leave the country never to return. Gen. Grant's reply was that his business was to fight down the rebellion and not to answer such questions.

New York, April 14. The Express has information from one of its editors in Richmond, that Jeff. Davis on the 5th inst. issued a proclamation at Danville, saying that Virginia has been re-occupied by the Federal forces, and that the war will be continued.

A rebel dispatch dated Augusta, April 5th, indicates that Alabama is overrun by Union cavalry under Wilson and other commanders, all moving toward Mobile. McCook's forces are reported to have burned the Red Mountain Iron Works and the village of Elaton and tapped the telegraph at several places, sending dispatches to rebel officers.

Two columns of Yankees are also reported moving on Columbus, Miss. The same dispatch says the rebel steamer Gertrude with a cargo valued at $2,000,000 was sunk in Spanish river near Mobile on the 31st ult. by collision with the Natchez.

April 16th. The Herald's correspondence from the City of Mexico of the 27th says Maximillian's subjects are much agitated over rumors that the Empire is shortly to be invaded by large numbers of soldiers who have heretofore been fighting for Jeff. Davis's Confederacy. General Price is said to be one of the leaders in the movement, and it is expected that during the coming summer an immense force of our rebels will cross the Rio Grande provided with arms, ammunition, and other necessary supplies, and march to the assistance of President Juarez for the purpose of expelling the Europeans from this country.

Much indignation was manifested in Mexico by the publication of a statement that United States troops had crossed the Rio Grande and destroyed four thousand bales of rebel cotton stored on Mexican soil.

New Orleans, April 6, via Cairo, April 12. Advices from the army about Mobile are to the 4th inst. They state that water communication between Spanish Fort and Mobile has been cut and a battery established above the fort. Rebel communication with Mobile is now entirely suspended. The siege progresses favorably.

War Department, Washington, April 12—2.30 P. M.

To Maj. Gen. Dix:

The capture of Selma by our forces is reported by Maj. Gen. George H. Thomas. The surrender of Lynchburg is also officially reported.

(Signed) E. M. STANTON, Secretary of War.

War Department, Washington, April 13—6 P. M.

To Maj. Gen. Dix:

This Department, after mature deliberation and consultation with the Lieutenant-General upon the recent campaign, has come to the following determinations, which will be carried into effect by appropriate orders to be issued immediately.

1. To stop all drafting and recruiting in the loyal States.

2. To curtail purchases for arms, ammunition, quartermaster and commissary supplies, and reduce the expenses of the military establishment in all its several branches.

3. To reduce the number of general and staff officers to the actual necessities of the service.

4. To remove all restrictions upon trade and commerce so far as may be consistent with the public orders.

(Signed) E. M. STANTON, Secretary of War.

Chicago, April 16. A special dispatch from Cairo says:

Our forces occupied Mobile on the 9th inst. The Spanish fort was captured with 3000 prisoners. Three hundred guns were captured in Mobile.

The Blockade Reaffirmed.

BY THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

A PROCLAMATION.

Whereas, by my proclamation of the 19th and 27th day of April, 1861, the ports of the United States in the States of Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana and Texas, were declared to be subject to blockade; but, whereas, the said blockade has, in consequence of actual military occupation by this Government, since been conditionally set aside or relaxed in respect to the ports of Norfolk and Alexandria, Port Royal, in the State of South Carolina, Pensacola and Fernandina in the State of Florida, and New Orleans in the State of Louisiana. And whereas, by the 4th section of the act of Congress, approved on the 13th of July, 1861, entitled "An act further to provide for the collection of duties on imports and for other purposes," the President, for the reasons therein set forth, is authorized to close certain ports of entry. Now, therefore, be it known that I, Abraham Lincoln, President of the United States, do hereby proclaim that the ports of Richmond, Tappahannock, Cherrystone, Yorktown and Petersburg, of Camden, Elizabeth City, Edenton, Plymouth, Washington, Newbern, Ocracoke and Wilmington in North Carolina; of Charleston, Georgetown and Beaufort in South Carolina, of Savannah, St. Marys, Brunswick and Darien in Georgia, of Mobile in Alabama, of Pearl River, Shieldsborough, Natchez and Vicksburg in Mississippi, of St. Augustine, Key West, St. Marks, Port Leon, St. Johns, Jacksonville and Apalachicola in Florida, of Teche and Franklin in Louisiana, of Galveston, Lasalle, Brazos De Santiago, Point Isabel in Texas, are hereby closed, and all right of importation, warehousing and other privileges shall, in respect to the ports aforesaid, cease, until they shall have again been opened by order of the President; and if, while the said ports are so closed, any ship or vessel from beyond the United States or having on board any articles subject to duties, shall attempt to enter any such port, the same, together with the tackle, apparel, furniture and cargo shall be forfeited to the United States.

In witness whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed.

Done at the city of Washington this 11th day of April, in the year of our Lord 1865, and of the Independence of the United States of America the 89th. ABRAHAM LINCOLN.

WM. H. SEWARD, Secretary of State.

BY THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

A Proclamation.

Whereas, for some time past vessels of war of the United States have been refused in certain ports the privileges and immunities to which they are entitled by treaty, public law, or the comity of nations, at the same time that vessels of war of that country wherein said privileges and immunities have been withheld have enjoyed them fully and uninterruptedly in ports of the United States, although, on the other hand, they have not at times failed to protest against and declare their dissatisfaction with the same. In the view of the United States, no condition of things any longer exists which can be claimed to justify the denial to them by any one of the said nations of the customary naval rights, such as has heretofore been so unnecessarily persisted in.

Now, therefore, I, Abraham Lincoln, President of the United States, do hereby make known that if, after a reasonable time shall have elapsed for the intelligence of this Proclamation to have reached any foreign country in whose ports the said privileges and immunities shall have been refused as aforesaid, they shall continue to be so refused, then and thenceforth the same privileges and immunities shall be refused to the vessels of war of the country in the ports of the United States, and this refusal shall continue until the war vessels of the United States shall have been placed upon an entire equality in the foreign ports aforesaid with similar vessels of other countries. The United States, whatever claim or pretense may have existed heretofore, are now at least entitled to claim and concede an entire and friendly equality of rights and hospitalities with all maritime nations.

In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed.

Done at the city of Washington this 11th day of April, in the year of our Lord 1865, and of the Independence of the United States of America the 89th. ABRAHAM LINCOLN.

By the President:

WM. H. SEWARD, Secretary of State.

Baltimore, April 13. The Richmond Whig of yesterday contains the following important document:

"To the People of Virginia:

The undersigned, members of the Legislature of the State of Virginia, in connection with a number of the citizens of the State, whose names are attached to this paper, in view of the evacuation of the city of Richmond by the Confederate Government and its occupation by the military authorities of the United States, the surrender of the army of Northern Virginia, and suspension of the jurisdiction of the civil power of the State, are of the opinion that an immediate meeting of the General Assembly of the State is asked for by the exigencies of the situation.

The consent of the military authorities of the United States to a session of the Legislature in Richmond, in connection with the Governor and Lieutenant Governor, to their free deliberation upon public affairs, and to the ingress and departure of all its members under safe conduct, has been obtained.

The United States authorities will afford transportation from any point under their control to any of the persons before mentioned.

The matters to be submitted to the Legislature are, the restoration of peace to Virginia and an adjustment of the questions involving life, liberty and property, that have arisen in the State as a consequence of war.

We therefore earnestly request the Governor, Lieut. Governor and members of the Legislature to repair to this city by the 25th of April instant.

We understand that full protection to persons and property will be afforded in the State, and we recommend to peaceful citizens to remain at their homes and pursue their usual avocations with confidence that they will not be interrupted.

We earnestly solicit the attendance in Richmond, on or before the 25th of April instant, of the following persons, citizens of Virginia, to confer with us as to the best means of restoring peace to the State of Virginia.

We have procured safe conduct from the military authorities of the United States for them to enter the city and depart without molestation.

Hons. R. M. Hunter, A. T. Carpenter, Wm. C. Rives, John Letcher, B. H. H. Stewart, R. L. Montague, Fayette M. Mullen, S. P. Holcombe, Alexander Rives, B. Johnson Barbour, Wm. L. Goggin, J. B. Baldwin, Thomas S. Gholson, Walter Staples, Thomas J. Randolph, Wm. T. Early, R. A. Claybrook, John Critcher Williams, T. H. Eppes, and and those other persons for whom passports have been procured, and especially others, whom we consider it unnecessary to mention.

A. J. Marshall, Senator from Farquier. John Wesson, Senator from Marion. James Venable, Senator elect from Petersburg. David J. Burr, of the House of Delegates, from Richmond. David J. Saunders, of the House of Delegates, Richmond City. D. S. Wall, of the House of Delegates, Wetzel County. J. J. English, of the House of Delegates, Henrico County. Mr. Ambles, of the House of Delegates, Chesterfield County.

The President Shot.

Washington, April 14.

The metropolis has been to-night the scene of a double attempt at assasination—President Lincoln and Secretary Seward having been the victims of an evidently deep-laid plot, which has no parallel in American history.

It has been the custom of President Lincoln to frequently attend the theatres here, to escape from the office-seekers and volunteer-advisers who have haunted him at the White House. In the papers of this afternoon it was announced that he, with Mrs. Lincoln and Lieut. Gen. Grant, would to-night attend Ford's Theatre, to witness Miss Laura Keene in the part of Alice Trenchard in "our American Cousin." The house was crowded. The President occupied what is termed the State box, composed of the two lower right-hand private boxes thrown into one, and ornamented with flags. Mr. Lincoln enjoyed the performance, and was in unusually good spirits, chatting with Mrs. Lincoln and Miss Harris, who was of the party, when he, without warning, received his death wound. The assassin passed the door of the box which had been used and fired through the closed door next the stage. He then rushed on the stage, brandishing a bowie knife, and exclaimed, "Sic semper tyrannis." Evidently acquainted with the stage, he made his way between the scenes to a side door, mounted a horse tied there, and escaped.

OFFICIAL ACCOUNT.

War Department, April 15—1.30 A. M.

Maj. Gen. Dix:

This evening at about 9.20 P. M., at Ford's Theatre, the President, while sitting in his private box with Mrs. Lincoln, Miss Harris and Maj. Rathbone, was shot by an assassin, who suddenly entered the box and approached behind the President.

The assassin then leaped upon the stage, brandishing a large dagger, or knife, and made his escape in the rear of the theatre.

The pistol ball entered the back of the President's head, and penetrated nearly though the head. The wound is mortal.

The President has been insensible ever since the wound was inflicted, and is now dying.

EDWIN M. STANTON, Secretary of War.

Another, or it may possibly have been the same, assassin rode to the house of Secretary Seward, where he represented himself as the bearer of a message from the Secretary's physician, and forcing his way in endeavored to cut Mr. Seward's throat.

The facts are substantially as follows:

About 10 o'clock a man rang the door bell, and the call having been answered by a colored servant, he said he had come from Dr. Verdi, Mr. Seward's family physician, with a prescription, at the same time holding in his hand a small piece of folded paper, and saying, in answer to a refusal, that he must see the Secretary, as he was entrusted with particular directions concerning the medicines. He still insisted on going up, although repeatedly informed that no one could enter the chamber. The man pushed the servant aside and walked heavily toward the Secretary's room, and was there met by Frederick Seward, of whom he demanded to see the Secretary, making the same representation which he did to the servant. What further passed in the way of colloquy is not known, but the man struck him on the head with a billy, severely injuring the skull and felling him almost senseless.

The assassin then rushed into the chamber and attacked Maj. Seward, Paymaster of U. S. Army, and Mr. Hansel, of the State Department and two male servants, disabling them all. He then rushed upon the Secretary, who was lying in bed in the same room, and inflicted three stabs in the neck.

The assassin then rushed down stairs unmolested, mounted his horse at the door, and rode off before an alarm could be sounded, and in the same manner as the assassin of the President.

War Department, Washington, April 15—8 A. M.

Maj. Gen. Dix:

Abraham Lincoln died this morning at twenty-two minutes after seven o'clock.

E. M. STANTON, Secretary of War.

War Department, Washington, April 15—4.10 A. M.

To Maj. Gen. Dix:

Secretary Seward remains without change.

Frederick Seward's skull is fractured in two places, besides a severe cut upon the head.

The attendant is still alive, but hopeless.

Maj. Seward's wounds are not dangerous.

It is now ascertained with reasonable certainty that two assassins were engaged in the horrible crime, Wilkes Booth being the one that shot the President. The other was a companion of his, whose name is not known, but whose description is so clear that he can hardly escape.

It appears from a letter found in Booth's trunk that the murder was planned before the 4th of March, but fell through then, because the accomplice backed out until Richmond could be heard from.

It would seem that they had for several days been seeking their chance, and for some unknown reason it was not carried into effect until last night.

One of them has evidently made his way to Baltimore.

The other has not yet been traced.

(Signed) E. M. STANTON, Secretary of War.

LATER.

Washington, April 15—11 A. M.

Vice President Johnson has been sworn in.

No trains are allowed to leave Washington.

The following is a private dispatch received by Col. E. S. Sanford in New York yesterday morning from C. A. Seward:

Washington, April 17—7 A. M.

To E. S. Sanford:

I have great hopes of Fred. this morning. He has recognized me with voice and eyes. The medical testimony is concurrent as to the favorableness of the change in his condition. Will send you word later as to the Secretary. C. A. SEWARD.

Washington, April 17—1.30 P. M.

To Jonathan Amory, U. S. Dispatch Agent:

Except a slight reaction, the Secretary is the same as yesterday. The Assistant Secretary has improved. GEO. E. BAKAR, Agent.

Appointments.

We would say to our preaching Brethren that it is necessary we should receive their appointments as early as TUESDAY MORNING, as our paper goes to press about noon; otherwise they will not be inserted till the week following.

LOWELL STREET CHAPEL, BOSTON, CORNER OF CAUSEWAY AND LOWELL STREETS. Meetings are held regularly three times every Sunday, and Tuesday and Friday evenings. Seats free.

LOWELL STREET CHAPEL.

J. S. White.............April 23d
J. Hemenway.............April 30th

EAST HALL, BOSTON.

J. K. Bellows.............Sunday, April 23d

Cordaville, Mass.............April 23d
Philadelphia, Pa.............April 30th and May 7th
MILES GRANT.

North Dana, Mass.............April 23d
Ware, Mass., (at school-house near Bro. Newcomb's), April 30th.
Westminster, Mass., (at Bro. Cruise's).............May 6th
Townsend, Mass.............May 7th
GEO. A. STREETER.

New Durham Ridge, N. H.............Saturday eve., April 22d and over the following Sunday.
W. C. THURMAN.

Lawrence, Mass.............April 23d and 30th
L. L. HOWARD.

Starks, Me., (where Bro. Griffin may appoint) April 23d
Rome, (Gellery school-house).............April 31st
Rome, Town House.............May 7th
Augusta.............May 14th
H. B. SEENY.

Bichmond, R. I.............Sunday, April 30th
A. DURFEE.

Canton Street, Ct.............Sunday, April 23d
North Canton, Ct.............Sunday, April 30th
NO NAME.

Ashburnham, Mass.............Tuesday evening, May 9th
Athol, Mass.............Wednesday evening, May 10th
Vernon, Vt.............Thursday evening, May 11th
North Springfield, Vt.............Friday evening, May 12th and over the following Sunday.
Rutland, Vt.............Thursday evening, May 18th and over the following Sunday.
Castleton, Vt.............Tuesday evening, May 23d till Friday evening.
Poultney, Vt., Saturday evening, May 27th, and over the following Sunday, and remain in that region as long as may be duty.
A. SIMPSON.

Newstead, (Benedict school-house), as Bro. W. Burnham and others may appoint, Sunday, April 23d, at 10½ o'clock, and in the west district, if arrangements are so made, in the P. M.

Darien, at the school-house near Bro. Geo. Strong's, at 11 A. M., Sunday, May 6th. Baptist meeting-house, near Bro. B. C. Simonds, at 5 o'clock, P. M.

I hope to see many brethren at these appointments, as we may make arrangements for a summer campaign. Let us all occupy until our Master shall return, for thus the Lord hath said.
C. F. SWEET.

Worcester, Mass.............Sunday, April 23d
J. HEMENWAY.

Lee, N. H., (Wednesday Hill school-house), Lord's day, April 30th.
GEO. W. BROWN.

New Britain, Ct.............Sunday, April 22d
Worcester, Mass.............Sunday, April 29th
May not engaged.
H. MUNGER.

Lafayette, R. I., Friday and Saturday evenings, and over Sunday, April 21st, 22d, and 23d, if the Lord will.
H. L. HASTINGS.

Champlain, N. Y.............Sunday, April 23d
D. T. TAYLOR.

Cheshire Street, Ct.............Sunday, May 7th
Yalesville and Cheshire Street.............Monday, May 8th through the week, and over Sunday, May 14th.
L. BOUTELL.

Abington, Ct.............Sunday, April 30th
M. R. PRETTEPLACE.

Providence, R. I., (as Bro. Doughty may arrange), April 26th, and over Sunday.
J. K. BELLOWS.

Northwood Narrows.............April 23d
Z. FORD.

Meredith, N. H., (where the brethren may appoint), Sunday, April 23d.
Holden, Mass.............Sunday, April 30th
Worcester, Mass.............Sunday, May 7th
A. SIMPSON.

Elliot, Me.............April 30th
Portsmouth, N. H.............May 7th and 14th
Plymouth, Mass.............May 21st
Westboro, Mass.............May 28th
Philadelphia, Penn.............June 4th
and remain as long as duty demands.
F. H. BURBANK.

Sutton, N. H., (where Bro. Jesse A. Hazen may appoint), Saturday eve., and Sunday, April 22d and 23d
Waterloo, Warner, N. H., Monday evening, April 24th
East Canaan, N. H., Saturday evening, and Sunday, April 29th and 30th.
JOHN G. HOOK.

Bristol.............Sunday, April 23d
M. BATCHELOR.

West Abington, Mass.............May 7th
C. C. RAMSAY.

Manchester.............April 23d
J. COUCH.

Warren, Ore Hill, N. H.............April 23d
L. C. GLAZIER.

South Poland.............April 23d
JESSE PARTRIDGE.

Rye, N. H.............April 23d
A. ROSS.

Hollis.............Sunday, April 23d
South Windham.............Sunday, April 30th
Windham Center.............Tuesday, May 2d
and between as opportunities offer.
B. SPAULDING.

Bakerville, (as Bro. Harris may arrange).............April 23d
North End, (at the dwelling of D. Baker).............April 30th
H. ROCKWELL.

West Brattleboro, Vt.............Sunday, April 23d
Northfield Farms, Mass.............Sunday, April 30th
WM. W. SUTHERLAND.

Plymouth Hollow, Ct.............Sunday, April 30th
Wrightville.............Wednesday evening, May 3d
GEO. L. TEEPLE.

Lee, N. H.............Sunday, April 23d
Kennebunk Port, Me.............April 30th
A. MUSSEY.

West Hoosic, N. Y., (Advent Chapel).............April 29th and over the Sabbath.
Pittstown, N. Y.............May 1st and 2nd
North Hoosic, N. Y.............May 3d, 4th and 5th
North Bennington, Vt.............May 6th and over the Sabbath.
South Shaftsbury.............May 8th and 9th
WM. J. BLANCHARD.

West Stafford, Ct.............Sunday, April 23d
[illegible], Ct.............Sunday, April 30th
I. H. POTTER.

Portsmouth, N. H.............Sundays, April 23d and 30th
Ashburnham, Mass.............May 7th
Lunenberg, Mass.............May 14th
S. S. BREWER.

FOR THE CHURCH IN GLOUCESTER.

Eld. E. Bellows.............Sunday, April 23d
Eld. D. O. Hopkins.............Sunday, May 7th
(If stormy, the next Sunday.)

Sommersville, (Universalist Church).............April 23d
R. WILLIAMS.

Warehouse Point, Ct.............Sunday, April 23d
Agawam.............Sunday, April 30th
P. S. BUTLER.

Wallingford Farms, Conn.............Sunday, April 23d
B. HITCHCOCK.

East Killingly.............April 23d
H. PRATT.

Prospect, Ct., (at Bro. Mix's).............Sunday, April 23d
Yalesville, Ct.............Sunday, April 30th
O. D. WOODRUFF.

Bradford, N. H.............Sunday, April 23d
Concord, N. H.............Sunday, April 30th
JOSEPH W. WHITE.

Notices.

Illinois Annual Conference.

The Illinois Second Advent Christian Conference will hold its annual session at New Rutland, La Salle Co., commencing on Wednesday, May 24th, 1865, and continuing during the week and over Sunday. As this is in some respects the most important conference during the year, it is desirable to have a FULL ATTENDANCE.

Rutland is on the Illinois Central Railroad, some forty miles below Mendota.

E. ROYCE, Secretary.

Notice.

The next annual meeting of the Iowa Christian Conference will be held at Manchester, Delaware Co., Iowa, commencing June 15th, 1865, and continuing over the first day. Strangers may call on Bro. Cooley near the depot. Dear brethren, let this be the largest gathering of the kind we have ever had. Come laden with grace, to work for the salvation of sinners.—Voice copy.

H. H. JANES, Pres.
P. S. W. DEYO, Conf. Clerk.

Book Notice.

The second edition of my treatise on Rev. XIII is exhausted. The Lord willing, there will be issued a third in a few days. It is a work in two parts, treating on "THE LEOPARD BEAST" and the "Two Horned Beast." Single copies, by mail, 20 cents.

I would solicit the attention of the readers of the Crisis to the list of my works on prophecy on the third page of this paper. My address is Ashburnham Depot, Mass. S. S. BREWER.

Western Grove Meetings.

For several years past I have practised holding several grove meetings each summer, which have been attended with blessed results. I intend to spend the coming summer in the same enterprise. Those who desire my services in this department will do well to give me timely notice. The King of glory is coming, and it becomes us to give the trumpet a certain sound, that a people may be prepared to meet him. Address me at Baraboo, Sauk Co., Wis. W. SHELDON.

Notice.

As I shall not be able to go into Vermont, as I expected, I will furnish a good substitute,—Bro. Andrew Simpson. Give him a good hearing, and you will be well rewarded. HIRAM MUNGER.

Dedication.

The new chapel in Chichester, N. H. (Pine Ground), will be dedicated on Saturday, Apr. 29th, 1 o'clock, P. M. Preaching on the following Sabbath. J. COUCH.

Business.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

H. E. Corbin—We do not know that they are for sale in the west. The price is $1.00, including handle. The mill is $8.00.

Mrs. R. L. Crowell—The Christian Lyre is the best we have.

J. A. Mayberry—See above.

S. A. Chaplin—We received it.

N. S. Bastion—I do not.

A. N. Seymour—The draft duplicate is just received. The papers were sent.

CASH RECEIPTS FOR THE CRISIS.

To find how your account stands.

The present No. of the Crisis is 498. The No. which follows your name is the No. to which you have paid. If the No. paid to, is greater than the present No., the difference shows how many weeks you have paid for in advance. If the No. paid to, is less than the present No., the difference shows for how many weeks you owe. For every week of indebtedness before No. 468, charge (at the old rate) four cents; and, for every week of indebtedness since No. 468, charge (at the new rate) five cents,—and you have the amount due the office. (This, however, will give a trifle more than the amount due. To make it exact, deduct four cents for every dollar due before No. 468, and five cents for every dollar due since No. 468.)

$1.00 each—E W Grant 486, M Whitaker 508, J Higgins 531, T F Killey 470, S B Bisbee 514, Mrs. E Welton 485, H G Thompson 513, M Stedman 435, S Blanchard 497, E W Hall 502, L J Marcy 518, M T Andrew 514.

$1.25 each—I K White 521, W Bragdon 520, J B Adams 522, S B Safford 511, S N Merrill 521, W Cook 521, A R Field 527, E Seal 521, R Chase 523, S Boardman 520, E J Fuller 515, J Schifferli 521, H Doescher 521, D M Kellogg 519, S Phelps 519, E Proctor 521, G W Colwell 521, W Tunmore 522, E Blaisdell 521, S Sanderson 521, T Bennett 521, J Decker 509, C Bern 521, B S Arlin 521, S A A Smith 521, E Wetherell 520, A Kingsbury 546, Joseph B Paine 517, A Benton 522, M Goodman 527, W Lucas 517, G Tracy 521, T I Munroe 521, C E Hasen 525, A Warren 520, H B Dunlap 520, T W Holbrook 521, W Shaw 520, H N White 518, H M Oyer 528, S Robbins 451, D Rider 520, I Piser 521, C H Sweet 521, L H Little 521.

$1.50 each—L C Utley 524, J Hatfield 537, L L Sanborn 478, W Wheeler 515, S Woodcock 547.

$2.00 each—R Cook 489, S Swett 531, P Babb 302, E Britton 504, D H Crocker 481, A Morgan 537, A Varney 498, B Harvey 537, J B Patterson 512, M T Carpenter 491, C F Whittier 485, F S Knowlton 536, A N Johnson 504, J Quimby 494.

$2.50 each—U Finn 514, Mrs. M E Piper 544, D Dow 558, M Saunders 536, I Davis 531, N A Purrington 540, R N Chaffee 546, S E Teeple 551, E. W. Ager 548, S. Blodgett 547, O. Loomis 531, J. S. Hutchins 529, W. R. Knightly 503, H Pratt 572, J B Hurd 554, G S Brewster 552, I Hubbard 538, C C Dow 546, C H Little 530, C B Keach 550, S Cutler 547, E Sanderson 536, C Burditt 522, R Plummer 546, I Greene 491, G Orr 547, S E Hullinger 547, C S Holman 447, S. W. Peterson 547, G. G Knowlton 537, W D Wood 494, M M Howtin 547, N E Cate 512, B Perkins 492, C Emerson 544, C C Crossman 538, J N Boxwell 533, R Jones 547, A Mosher 552, G. Taylor 540, G. A. Demont 547, C. Goodwin 547, B. L. Crowell 572.

$3.00 each—D C Jenness 527, D Mitchell 521, C Atherton 504, E. V. C. B. 531, J P Lougee 497, P F Willoughby 558, J P Catts 522, E Treadwell 542, A Strickland 546, W E Gordon 521, B B Hoitt 505, A F Ellinwood 550, L Bunting 549, E G Scott 551, J P Davis 528, W Beatly 537, A Wood 511.

$5.00—N. Bassett 578.

Various Sums.—N. Rawson $6.70, 494; L. Perkins $5.25, 515; S H Waldron $1.75, 371; N Atkins $10.25, 494; P. Smith 50c., 511; P. Howard $1.25, 546; Mrs. S E Griffin $2.70, 550; Mrs. D. Higby 62c., 494; F. L. Storrs 50c, 496; A. Barnes $3.00, 547; R. V. Hansom $1.60, 493; Geo. H. Kimball 63c, 508; S. Warner 25c, 520; C H Nuts $2.50, 564; L Johnson 1.35, 493; P. W. Jones $7.55, 494; S Bowen $2.75, 549; L D Pond $7.00, 520; W Pullen 50c, 501; A. B. Rice $3.25, 448; J. McClellan $1.45, 520; J G Pettis $5.00, 509; E Myers 50c, 516; D. B. Day $4.24, 496; H. Hibbard $2.68, 497; J. Frazier $4.85, 535; D Cohenour $2.70, 516; P P Brackett $5.00, 551; F P Hunt 50c, 490; J Nudd $2.75, 520; W. L. Parsons $3.50, 560; S. G. Wilson $7.50, 541; E. Loomis 50c, 547; E Flanders, Jr., $1.75, 531.

FOR BOOKS AND TRACTS.

N F Nason $20.00, J A Cleveland $3.00, P Smith 50c, J B Fuller $2.50, J K Bellows $1.00, A Lewis 50c, O D Woodruff $2.50, I C Perkins $5.00, J. M. M. Gernegal $4.00, W F Rollins 70c, W W Wales $4.46, D B Day $0.76, T G Newman $1.25, F Platt 5.20, D. M. Kinter $5.00, E. V. C. B. $1.00, S B Munn $3.00, D Ellinwood $1.00, W Shepherd 84c, E. Graves 27c, J A Mayberry 75c, A H Madison 25c, I Davis 25c, J W Purdy $3.25, H Stamp $1.70, W R Boyker $4.20, R Vandervoort 46c, A Lewis 50c, N S Bastion $5.00, T E Porter $2.90, G. W. St. John $1.02, M M Hasard 83c, H J Wilson 75c, L M McEwen $2.00, J Decker 25c, H P Carpenter $2.40, W S Campbell $16.88, F E Glidden 55c, A J Dow 25c, G H Cilley 85c, E Hill 50c, A F Ellinwood $2.00, C E Hasen 40c, J Umsted 20c, A. Hasen 85c, J Boswell $2.00, I Andrew $1.20, C A Trafton 25c, Mrs. P Mayberry 55c, G F Locke $1.50.

BOOKS AND TRACTS SENT.

BY MAIL—Mrs. C E Hasen, C S Holman, A F Ellinwood, G H Cilley, J Decker, S Hale, E Hill, F E Glidden, J Ulmsted, S J Boswell, A Hasen, I Andrew, G F Locke, J W Norris, P Mayberry, S L Wells, M A Weaver, E Metz, R T Crowell.

BY EXPRESS.—W S Campbell, H P Carpenter.

LETTERS RECEIVED.

E Burnham, F H Burbank, C. H. D., E. B., H Munger, C. F. H., Wm. Thurman, M. D. W., S. S. Brewer, P E Sanderson, W Sheldon, C A Knowles, J Wilson, S Sweet, H. A. S., A Lombard.

POST OFFICE ADDRESS.

N. F. Nason—After May 1st, North Herman, Me.

ACKNOWLEDGMENT.—Received of A. Parsons, $3.75; A Brother in Thorndike, $1.00; C. W. Richards, $2.00; A. and E. D—, $3.00. Please accept our thanks for the above donations. MRS. W. PRATT.

BOOKS AND TRACTS.

[illegible]

All orders for any of the following works must be addressed to

MILES GRANT, Boston, Mass.

MILES GRANT'S WORKS.

Resurrection of the Wicked. Discussion with [illegible]

Eternal Suffering. Discussion with Dr. J. Litch. [illegible]

State of the Dead. Discussion with W. W. Clayton, [illegible]

Miles Grant's Tracts. 32 pages each. Price 5 cents single, [illegible]

What is Man? A Bible view of his creation; The [illegible]

The Soul, What is it? Or a careful examination of [illegible]

The Spirit, What is it? Or a careful examination [illegible]

The Rich Man and Lazarus. Thief on the Cross; [illegible]

EXPOSITORY WORKS ON PROPHECY. BY S. S. BREWER.

1. The Days in which we Live. This is a concise [illegible]

2. An Exposition of the Seven Seals. History [illegible]

3. The Slaying of the Witnesses. Showing that [illegible]

4. A Treatise on Revelation XIII, in Two Parts. [illegible]

5. The Kingdom of God and Signs of the Times. [illegible]

6. The Last Day Tokens. No. 1. This is an argument [illegible]

7. Last Day Tokens. No. 2 is an answer to the question, [illegible]

8. Last Day Tokens. No. 3. This is a phenomenon [illegible]

9. The Great Image soon to be dashed to pieces. [illegible]

10. The History of an Immortal Soul. Mythology and Theology vs. Bible; [illegible]

11. Rich Man and Lazarus. New edition, [illegible]

One copy of each of the above works sent by mail for $1.25

MISCELLANEOUS.

Cruden's Condensed Concordance, by which any passage of Scripture, of which only a single word is remembered, [illegible]

The Life of Trust. An account of the Lord's Dealings with George Müller, Director of the Orphan Houses of Bristol, England, [illegible]

A Treatise on the 24th and 25th chapters of Matthew, [illegible] By I. C. Wellcome. [illegible]

Should Christians Fight? A pamphlet on War, [illegible] By I. C. Wellcome. [illegible]

The Bible from Heaven, or a dissertation on the Evidences of Christianity. By M. Hall. [illegible]

America in Prophecy. Exposition of the 18th chap. of Isaiah, [illegible] By O. R. Fassett. [illegible]

The Celestial Railroad, or Modern Pilgrim's Progress. [illegible]

The Three Kingdoms, or the Kingdom of God the Father, the kingdom of Satan, the kingdom of the Lord Jesus Christ; [illegible] By T. M. Preble. [illegible]

The Ten Virgins, or Wisdom and Folly contrasted. By T. M. Preble. [illegible]

The Two Adams. By T. M. Preble. An interesting tract. [illegible]

Messiah's Mission, or an exposition of the Gospel Covenant, as comprehended in the Scriptures of truth. By C. F. Sweet. [illegible]

The Excellency of the Lord's Anointed, or Christ the promised Messiah. By Mrs. Mary A. Seymour. [illegible]

Everybody's Book. The Bible View of the personality of God. The Devil; his origin, personality, power, and doom. [illegible]

Cook Book. By Dr. F. W. Hurd. This book gives instructions for preparing all the articles of food used at Dr. Jackson's celebrated health institution, denominated "Our Home," Dansville, N. Y. [illegible]

Premature Decay of American Youth. By Dr. A. Stone. [illegible]

The Saint's Harvest, or an exposition of Matt. 24: 14, in connection with Dan. 12: 11-13. By H. K. Flagg. [illegible]

The Old and New Covenant. Superiority of the New. By A. W. Sibley. [illegible]

The Christian Lyre. A collection of Hymns and Tunes for Worship. [illegible]

A Disquisition on the Prophecies. By F. H. Berick. [illegible]

An Appeal to Pious Trinitarians. By H. Grew. [illegible]

THE BIBLE STUDENT'S LIBRARY.

A Series of Volumes Edited and Published by

H. L. HASTINGS,

167 Hanover St., Boston, Mass.

Each vol. contains over 400 pages, uniformly bound in Cloth and in Paper Covers. Sold separately or in sets. Single volumes sent post-paid on receipt of the price.

IMPORTANT BOOKS WORTH BUYING, LENDING, READING, AND PRESERVING.

I. THE SIGNS OF THE TIMES; or, a Glance at Christendom as it is. By H. L. Hastings. Cloth $1, paper 50 cts.

A sad exhibition of the predicted perils of the Last Days; the selfishness, hypocrisy, and crimes of Christendom, as shown in STATISTICAL ACCOUNTS of the slave trade, cotton trade, opium trade, Coolie trade, and the licentiousness, illegitimacy, child murder, bloodshed, and military preparations of this age.

II. THE VOICE OF THE CHURCH on the Coming and Kingdom of the Redeemer. By D. T. Taylor. Edited and prefaced by H. L. Hastings. Cloth $1, paper 50 cts.

A history of the doctrine of the reign of Christ on earth, containing the views and testimonies of nearly four hundred of the greatest preachers, reformers, and writers the church has ever known, concerning the establishment of the future glorious Kingdom of God, under the whole heaven.

III. THESSALONICA; OR THE MODEL CHURCH; A Sketch of Primitive Christianity; and REASONS FOR MY HOPE, or the Tokens of Speedy Redemption, by H. L. Hastings; and SPIRITUALISM A SATANIC DELUSION, by Wm. Ramsey, D.D. Cloth $1, paper 50 cts.

"Thessalonica," portraying the faith and practice of the early Christians; "Reasons," exhibiting the hope of the Church, the fulfilment of prophecy, the spread of the gospel through Missionaries, Bible and Tract Societies, etc.; and "Spiritualism," unveiling and exposing the monster delusion of Satan in these latter times.

IV. THE GREAT CONTROVERSY BETWEEN GOD AND MAN; its Origin, Progress, and End; with numerous TRACTS on Prophetical and Practical subjects. By H. L. Hastings. Cloth $1, paper 50 cts.

The "Controversy" sketches the History of the World since man's revolt from God, narrates the judgments already inflicted upon the nations of the earth for their iniquities, and those more terrible and exterminating calamities yet to overwhelm the nations, and prepare the way for the establishment of a divine government upon the earth.

The TRACTS are, "The Church not in Darkness," "The Three Worlds," "The Last Days," "Plain Truths," "Ancient Landmarks," "Important Questions," "Olive Leaves," etc., etc.; a valuable and spirited collection.

V. FUTURE PUNISHMENT, as Taught in the Scriptures; with the various Doctrines of Men upon this subject. By H. L. Hastings. Cloth $1, paper 50 cts.

Containing "Pauline Theology," or Future Punishment as Taught by Paul; "The Old Paths," or the Doctrines of the Apostolical Fathers; "Retribution," or the Resurrection and Punishment of the Wicked; "Will all Men be Saved?" an Antidote for Universalism; "The Destiny of the Wicked," a Scripture Tract; "The Decrees of Popes and Councils on the Immortality of the Soul;" with The Views of Justin Martyr, Luther, Jeremy Taylor, Milton, and Bishop Law on the state of the dead, etc.

CASH PRICES.

BY MAIL: 1 Book, cloth $1.00, paper 50 cts.; 5 Books, cloth $5.00, paper 2.50. BY EXPRESS: 5 Books, cloth $4.00, paper 2.00; 20 Books, cloth $15.00, paper $7.50; 50 Books, cloth $35, paper $15; 100 Books, cloth $65, paper $25.

[illegible]

SEPARATE PAMPHLETS NOT BOUND IN CLOTH.

[illegible]

Direct all orders, with the money, and plain directions for sending the books, to

H. L. HASTINGS,

June, 1864. 167 Hanover St., Boston.

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

For the World's Crisis.

On attending the house of worship for the first time in fourteen years.

Is it a sweet, delicious dream,
Wove round me by some magic spell?
O! though I see no snowy gleam,
Seraphs are nigh I can but deem,
And touched with angel joy they seem,
The happy songs that round me swell.

Glad songs from lips late learned to sing
The joyful notes of pardoned sin;
My soul mounts up on Faith's glad wing
To heaven, where angel voices ring
Glad praises to our glorious King,
And finds an entrance in.

Glory to God! fills all the air,
Glory and praise! my soul replies.
In faith I prayed—He heard my prayer,
Hath raised me up, and set me where
My soul in sweet delight may share
Of praise to God, the melodies.

O, to this hour, through weary years,
True faith hath turned her waiting eye,
All undismayed by doubts or fears,
When smiles should banish sorrow's tears;
The prayer of faith God surely hears,
My soul can truly testify.

Trusting, believing in his word,
Through years of weary pain,
True faith sweet comfort did afford,
Believing I should be restored;
I prayed and trusted in the Lord,
Nor was my faith in vain.

Glory to God! with these I'll sing
All glory to his name!
Strike, strike anew the joyful string,
Let every voice unite to sing
The praises of the eternal King,
The glory of the Lamb!

East Roxbury, Vt. ANNA E. McELLISTER.

For the World's Crisis.

LETTERS ILLUSTRATIVE OF CHRISTIAN EXPERIENCE.

NUMBER SEVEN.

To BRO. C.:—Dear Brother,—Your letter is received, and having a quiet evening, I improve it in writing a reply. May the Spirit of the Lord so illumine my own mind as to enable me to inscribe words of light, and not of darkness.

The brother who has written you I think is in error in supposing the work to be a gradual one. I believe it to be instantaneous, and for proof shall appeal to the word of God. The Savior told his disciples, just as he was about to leave them to ascend on high, to tarry at Jerusalem till they were endued with power from on high. If this referred to a gradual work, if it only meant that they were to receive day by day that power which they needed to keep them from falling, and aid them in the work of soul-saving, then they must needs tarry at Jerusalem for life. But what does the history show? Why, that during the ten days that intervened between the Savior's ascension and the day of Pentecost, the disciples assembled together for united prayer, and when that day had fully come, as they were with one accord gathered together praying, the Holy Spirit came like a mighty rushing wind, and filled the room and their hearts. To them the "tongue of fire" was given, fit emblem of that divine power which enabled them to utter those burning words of truth which penetrated to the hearts of three thousand and won them to Christ.

Then was fulfilled the promise, "Ye shall be baptized with the Holy Ghost, not many days hence." That was the endowment of power, for which Jesus bade them "tarry at Jerusalem." That was the beginning of the fulfillment of the promise of the Father," which, saith Jesus, "ye have heard of me." Was it not instantaneous in its manifestation? Was it not powerful in its effects? Was it not transforming in its influence?

Again, on the occasion of its reception by the Gentiles at the house of Cornelius, it was sudden in its manifestation. Also by the disciples at Ephesus, as recorded in Acts 19: 1–6. I am aware that many, very many doubt the fact of its reception in these days, and the church is greatly in darkness on this point, and inefficient in her efforts to a great extent for the lack of it. How any one can doubt its attainability now is a mystery to me.

We are positively told that the being "endued with power from on high," or being baptized with the Holy Ghost, is the promise of the Father, i. e., this is what was promised by the Father. When did God promise to give this glorious manifestation of the Holy Spirit? Peter tells us it was given by Joel the prophet. Does the promise read as though it was to be limited in its outpouring to the day of Pentecost and the introduction of the gospel to the Gentiles! Is it not coextensive with the "last days"? Peter evidently did not believe this promise was limited, for he not only points to what has been seen, heard and experienced, as being that which was spoken by Joel, but he exhorts those who beheld these wonderful things to repent, believe, and be baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus, saying, "And ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost; for the promise (of the Father by Joel) is unto you, and to your children, and to ALL THAT ARE AFAR OFF, EVEN AS MANY AS THE LORD OUR GOD SHALL CALL." That ought to settle the question forever, that what Jesus calls the enduement of power from on high (Luke 24: 49), and the baptism of the Holy Ghost (Acts 1: 5), is co-extensive with the "last days." He calls the enduement of power "the promise of the Father." See Luke 24. He calls that promise the baptism, as recorded in Acts 1: 4, 5. Sophistry may try to evade this, but it cannot disprove the fact. This settled, then the declaration of Peter that the promise is unto those beholders, if they would become disciples of Christ, and to all afar off whom the Lord should call, demonstrates the fact that the enduement with power from on high, or, in other words, the baptism of the Spirit, does belong to the church to the end of time.

All those attempts to avoid the force of the apostle's language, by saying that the gift of the Holy Spirit is not the same as the baptism, are exceeding futile. Those who resort to such specious reasonings do not deny that the baptism of the Spirit was given at the house of Cornelius, yet it is not once denominated thus, but it is said that the Holy Ghost fell on all them which heard the word; on the Gentiles also was poured out the gift of the Holy Ghost. This shows that the pouring out of the Spirit, baptism of the Spirit, and gift of the Holy Ghost, are identical terms.

I have seen very many receive this "unction from the Holy One." Often its manifestation has been like the electric shock, sudden, thrilling the whole system with a divine power; frequently overwhelming the person so that they would fall as one dead, and for hours lie helpless, their countenances radiating the inward glory, and as soon as their tongues were unloosed, giving utterance to the bliss that filled their hearts in words of rejoicing. This, by some, is called enthusiasm, fanaticism, or mesmerism. Very many regard it as a Methodist infatuation, and hence ignore it. But some of the most thrilling experiences of this power from on high are from the lips and pen of Congregationalists. I will, if I have opportunity, cite you to some examples.

A few words and I will close. This "promise" is to be received by simple faith, as are all the promises. Look not to inward frames of feeling, but with simple trust rely on God, and when faith grasps the blessing, the Spirit will come and fill the entire soul. Then there is a realization of an inward Christ, a present Christ, and not one afar off.

May God bless you, and establish you in the way of faith, purity and love. Your sister in Christ, M. D. W.

THE STRANGE CLASS-LEADER.

AN INCIDENT IN A METHODIST CAMPMEETING.

"Just before leaving New Hampshire, I had occasion to go to the upper part of the State to visit a Dr. Kelly on business. But the doctor was not at home, and I was uneasy, for I could not get back that night, as the cars had gone the last time for that day. So I made myself as contented as I could. In conversation with the family, I learned that a campmeeting was being held about two miles further north, and, to pass the time I went up. I have forgotten the name of the place, but it was on the right hand track, from fifty to seventy miles from Concord. I arrived at the ground about five o'clock, P. M. It was rainy, and there was preaching in two or three tents. I listened to a sermon on holiness, which had much more of the letter in it than the spirit. After preaching I looked around the ground, but could see no one that I knew, or ever saw before. This was something new to have all strangers to me on a campground. I was homesick, and started to go back to Dr. Kelly's; but seeing a good fire, I stopped to warm me, and engaged in conversation with a good christian, no doubt, but rather a simple one. He said to me, 'It is rather rainy.' I answered, 'Yes.' He then asked me where I came from. I told him. He then wanted to know if I enjoyed religion. I evaded the question in part, seeing what he was. He then told his experience, and questioned me closely. I gave him to understand that I professed religion, but did not have much enjoyment there, for I was among strangers, etc. This made him the more interested in my case.

He said there was going to be a general class-meeting in the preachers' tent, and showed it to me. I learned that it was a class of young preachers from Concord. He was so anxious about me, that I told him I would go into the class-meeting a little while, as he thought I might get blessed. When the singing commenced we went in. There were three rows of seats, and I took one in the middle row, near the door. After prayer by one of the young preachers, the meeting commenced. I soon saw that it was no place for me. The preacher was a dandy-looking fellow; had a fine cane which he hooked on his arm, while leading the class.

Ten or fifteen spoke; but not one spoke of having any enjoyment. If they had, I should not have believed them, for their silks, bows and ribbons spoke as clearly as they did, of no religious enjoyment. In reply to any of them, the leader would say, 'Go on, brother,' or 'sister.' That was to encourage them in their backslidden state which they acknowledged they were then in. I thought "Good Lord, where is Methodism!" and was about starting to leave, when to my astonishment the leader touched me on the shoulder, and desired me to lead the rest of the class. He thought by my dress that I was a Methodist, I suppose.

I had to think quick; but I arose, and in short told my experience with Methodism, and soon felt the burden of the meeting upon me. I spoke to one, and she said that she did not enjoy anything. I told her that I knew it before she arose. I spoke to the second; she hesitated, but finally arose, and said that she must say what the first one did. I reproved her sharply, and called upon the third. This was a dead set; she would not stir. I felt like talking, and told them that I had not heard one speak of any religious enjoyment, and they were a pack of proud backsliders. God gave me great plainness of speech and liberty while talking. I looked at the fellow who was so anxious about my welfare, and you can judge how astonished he looked. I then proposed clearing one of the middle seats, and called all forward who said they wanted prayers; for when they spoke, they all closed by saying, 'I desire your prayers that I may be more faithful,' etc. This expression was a habit, not sincere, and unless they took that seat, it was proved that they didn't mean what they said, and honesty was the first step towards getting blessed; and I told the whole tent's company that God would work, if they would let him. I commenced singing, and they began coming forward. This young dandy preacher looked very strange, but I had got the meeting in hand, and he saw it. Soon the seat was nearly filled, and I told them that God would bless all that were willing to ask him, and that all could pray at once, for it was no confusion to the Lord. We knelt down before God, and I led in prayer. Soon the work of God broke out, and a number were praying at the same time. The work increased, and others came forward. There was a general cry all over the tent. Some were slain. I scarcely ever saw the power of God more manifest than on that occasion. The one that I spoke to, who would not come forward nor arise, was slain where she was. This was an old-fashiond Methodist meeting. It did me good to see the gauzes, ribbons, and starched dresses lay in the wet straw. Many came out happy and shouting, and went to praying for others.

I thought I would leave the tent, which I did, very suddenly, and no one noticed it, as I sat near the end. I started for Dr. Kelley's in the dark, and I never felt more sensibly the blessing of God, than I did all the way to the Dr's. I could hear them shout when a mile off. I was wet through, and the doctor wanted to give me some medicine, for fear that I should take cold. But I told him that God had so blessed me I should not take cold. I went to bed but could not sleep for rejoicing. I started home in the first morning train of cars. The whole encampment was searched over to find that stranger who led the class. He was described as a tall man, wore a broad-brimmed hat, etc. No one knew him nor where he came from, except the weak man, that I have mentioned, and he did not know when I went out, nor where I had gone. A great deal of anxiety was felt to know who that was that started the meeting where God blessed so many. But I was one hundred miles from there by two o'clock, and never saw but one man who was at that meeting, and that was about a week after. This man saw me in the city of Manchester, N. H., and knew me by my hat. He ventured into conversation, and asked me if I attended such a camp-meeting. I told him that I did, and then the mystery was revealed to him. He told me what took place after I left. The work did not stop, although they were all very anxious to know where that strange man was. The work continued that day, which was the last day of the meeting. God got all the glory that time, for no one knew who or where the instrument was."

From "The Life and Religious Experience of Hiram Munger." For sale at this office, for 30 cents.

ALL FOR THE BEST.—Dr. Johnson used to say that a habit of looking at the best side of every event is better than a thousand pounds a year. Bishop Hall quaintly remarks, "For every bad there might be a worse; and when a man breaks his leg, let him be thankful that it was not his neck."

For the World's Crisis.

THE VOICE OF HISTORIANS.

"The Lord's Day"—The True Christian Sabbath.

NUMBER SEVEN.

From Peter Heylyn's "History of the Sabbath," published in London 1681, pp. 411–422. In copying I have followed the author's style of writing and spelling. T. M. P.

....."In the third century, the first we meet with is Tertullian, who flourished in the very first beginning of it, by whom this day is called by three several names. For first he calls it Diessolis, Sunday, as commonly we now call it; and saith, that they did dedicate the same unto mirth and gladness, not to devotion altogether: Diem solis lætitiæ indulgemus, in his Apologetick. The same name is used by Justin Martyr in the passages before remembered; partly because being to write to an heathen magistrate, it had not been so proper to call it by the name of the Lord's day, which name they knew not; and partly that delivering the form and substance of their service done upon that day, they might the better quit themselves from being worshipers of the sun, as the Gentiles thought. For by their meetings on this day for religious exercises, in greater numbers than on others, in Africa and the West especially, and by their use of turning towards the East when they made their prayers, the world was sometimes so persuaded. Inde suspicio, quod innotuerit nos ad Orientis regionem precari, as he there informed us. Whereby we may perceive of what great antiquity that custom is, which is retained in the Church of England, of bowing, kneeling, and adoring towards the Eastern parts.

"The second name by which Tertullian calls this day, is the eighth day simply; Ethnicis semel annuus dies quis quis sextus est, tibi octavo quoque die. The third is, Dies Dominicus, or the Lord's day, which is frequent in him, as, Die Dominico jejunium nefas ducimus, we hold it utterly unlawful to fast the Lord's day, of which more hereafter. For their performances in their public meetings he describes them thus: Coimus in & cœtum congregationem, etc. We come together into the assembly or congregation to our common prayers, that being banded as it were in a troop or army, we may besiege God with our petitions. To him such violence is exceeding grateful. It followeth, Cogimur ad Sacrarum lit. commemorationem, etc. We meet to hear the holy Scriptures rehearsed unto us, that so according to the quality of the times, we may either be premonished or corrected by them. Questionless by these holy speeches our faith is nourished, our hopes erected, our assurance settled; and notwithstanding by inculcating the same, we are the better established in our obedience to God's precepts. A little after, Præsident probati quique seniores, etc. Now at these general meetings some priests or elders do preside, which have attained unto that honor, not by money, but by the good report that they have gotten in the church. And if there be a Poor-man's Box, every one cast in somewhat menstrua die, at least once a month, according as they would, and as they were able. .... So that as Sunday was a day which they used to meet on; so reading of the Scriptures was a special part of Sunday's exercise.

...."Before we end this chapter, there is one thing yet to be considered, which is the name whereby the christians of these first ages did use to call the day of the Resurrection; and consequently the other days of the week, according as they found the time divided. The rather because some are become offended that we retain those names amongst us, which were to us commended by our ancestors, and to them, by theirs. Where first we must take notice that the Jews in honor of their Sabbath, used to refer their times to that, distinguishing their days by Prima Sabbati, Secunda Sabbati, and so until they came to the Sabbath itself: As on the other side the Gentiles following the motions of the planets, gave to each day the name of that particular planet, by which the first hour of the day was governed, as the astrologers had taught them. Now the Apostles being Jews, retained the custom of the Jews; and for that reason called that day on which our Savior rose, mia sabbaton, una sabbati, the first day of the week, as our English reads it. The Fathers, many of them, followed their example. Saint Austin thereupon calls Thursday by the name of quintum Sabbati (Epist. 118), and so doth venerable Beda. Hist. bib. 4. c. 25. Saint Hierom, Tuesday, tertium sabbati, in Epitaph. Paulæ: Tertullian, Friday, by the old name, parasceve, l. 4. advers. marcian. Saturday they called generally the Sabbath; and Sunday, sometimes dies solis, and is sometimes Domincus..... The Saturday is called amongst them by no other name than that which formerly it had, the Sabbath. So that whenever, for a thousand years and upwards, we meet with sabbatum, in any writer, of what name soever, it must be understood of no day but Saturday.

"As for the other day, the day of the resurrection, all the Evangelists, and Saint Paul, take notice of no other name than of the first day of the week. Saint John, and after him Ignatius, call it the LORD'S DAY. But then again, Justin Martyr for the second century doth in two several passages call it no otherwise than Sunday, as then the Gentiles called it, and we call it now: and so Tertullian for the third, who useth both, and calls it sometimes diem solis, and sometimes Dominicum, as before we said. Which questionless neither of them would have done, on what respect soever, had it been either contrary to the word of God, or scandalous unto his church. So for the after ages, in the edicts of Constantine, Valentinian, Valens, Gratian, Honorius, Arcadius, Theodosius, christian princes all, it hath no other name than Sunday, or dies solis......

"They therefore are more nice than wise, who out of a desire to have all things new, would have new names for every day, or call them as sometimes they were, the first day of the week, the second day of the week, and all for fear lest it be thought that we do still adore those gods whom the Gentiles worshiped..... The Gentiles, saith the Father, gave unto every day of the week the name of one or other of their gods: and so they did also unto every month. If then we keep the name of March, and not think of Mars; why may we not, saith he, preserve the name of Saturday; and not think of Saturn. I add, why may we not then keep the name of Sunday, and not think of Phœbus, or Apollo, or by what other name soever the old poets call him?.....I presume it may give some reason why we retain the name of Sunday, not only in our common speech, but in the canons of the church, and our acts of Parliament, as being used indifferently by so many eminent persons in the primitive church."

East Weare, N. H. T. M. PREBLE.

For the World's Crisis.

YOUR HOME.

"I go to prepare a place for you."—JOHN 14: 2.

Weary pilgrim, have you been seeking here a place of rest? And have you been disappointed? Methinks I hear you sigh mournfully, as you say, "Here is no rest." But there is yet a rest for you. When the holy city comes down, "prepared as a bride adorned for her husband," you will find a place that will suit you in every particular. The description of this place in Rev. 21, is beyond all our present conception of beauty and glory. But I feel impressed to say to you that when the time fully comes, and you enter that blessed place, you will say with the queen of the south, "the half was not told me." F. H. CHAMBERLAIN.

"THY WILL BE DONE."—Matt. 26: 42.

Thy will, O Lord, I humbly pray,
Thy holy, heavenly will be done,
And on my knees from day to day,
Submit myself to thee alone.

However much I may desire
To have my way, I humbly bow;
Thy will I know is holier, higher,
And unto Thee I yield it now.

True, I feel anxious, deeply so,
And sometimes scarce can be denied;
But unto thee I love to go,
And in thy power and truth confide.

And while I live, and when I die,
Thy will I wish to make my choice,
And yield myself up cheerfully
To Thee the source of all my joys.

—Selected.

HOW TO PAPER A WALL.

Hanging wall-paper is light and easy work, which may be done by females as well as males, and as females are usually neater than the other sex in performing such manipulations, they should have the privilege of doing this work, instead of calling men from their urgent business. The materials necessary for papering are, a papering-board, ten or twelve feet long, and about two feet wide, planed smooth; a large paste-brush, a pan of paste, a pair of long shears, a light, straight-edged pole, and a soft brush-broom. Now take a roll of paper, and measure around the room, to ascertain how many whole strips are required for the walls. Cut the desired number of strips of the right length, so that the edges will match, and lay them all on the board, with the wrong side up. If the wall has been whitewashed, sweep it thoroughly, and wash it with vinegar and water. If the vinegar be strong, mingle three quarts of water with one of vinegar. When the wall is dry, sweep it again. Previous to putting on the paper, paste the wall. Then apply paste to a strip of paper, and turn up the lower end about two feet, the pasted sides together, and hang the strip as quickly as possible. As paste expands paper, and renders it tender, it must not be put on until the wall is ready to receive it. When the paper is so tender that it will hardly hold itself together, double the upper end of a strip over a smooth stick. Begin in one corner of the room, and let the strip hang perpendicularly, and as soon as it is right, stick the top fast to the wall. Instead of using a bunch of cloth to rub it on with, sweep it on with a soft brush-broom, by commencing at the top, and sweep downwards and outwards from the middle of the strip. A bunch of cloth will sometimes blot the colors, but a soft broom will not. Run the back of the shears along the upper edge of the base, or mop-board, and pull the lower end of the paper away from the wall, and cut it off, and afterwards sweep it on. When a strip does not hang exactly plumb, take hold of the bottom and pull it from the wall, until it hangs only by an inch or so at the top. Then adjust it, and sweep it on again. When there are uneven places in the wall, so that the paper will not adhere without a blister, or wrinkle, cut through the long way of the blister, and sweep it on again. When turning a corner of a room, it will be more convenient to cut a strip of paper in two, lengthways, so that the joint will come exactly in the corner, than to attempt to put on a whole strip by bending it in the corner. After all the whole strips have been put on, the piecing can be done around the doors and windows. New paper can be pasted over the old, if that be on firmly. Otherwise, it should be pulled off. Sometimes, by washing old paper with soap suds two or three times, it will peel off with little labor. New walls need not be pasted previous to papering. It is better to apply the paste to the paper than to the wall only, as dry paper is elastic, and will not adhere until it has become wet.—Amer. Agriculturist.

HOW TO WHITEWASH.

Procure fresh-burnt lime, not that partly air-slacked. The large lumps are best. The fine portions and small lumps will not make a wash that will stick well. For this reason, lime that has been burned several months is not as good as that just from the kiln. Put a pound or two into a vessel, and pour on boiling water slowly, until it is all slacked, and is about as thick as cream. Then add cold rain water until it will flow well from the brush. Stir often when using it. A few drops of bluing added will give it a more lively color. One or two table-spoonfuls of clean salt, and one-fourth pound of clean sugar to a gallon of the wash, will make it more adhesive. If the walls have been whitewashed, let them be swept thoroughly, and if colored with smoke, wash them clean with soap suds. A brush with long, thick hair, will hold fluid best, when applying it overhead. If a person has the wash of the right consistence, and a bood brush, he can whitewash a large parlor without allowing a drop to fall. When it appears streaked after drying it is too thick, and needs diluting with cold water. Apply the wash back and forth in one direction, and then go cross-wise, using a paint-brush at the corners, and a thin piece of board to keep the brush from the wood work, or the border of the paper. Coloring matter may be mingled with the wash, to give it any desired tint. To make a light peach-blow color, mingle a small quantity of Venetian-red. For a sky-blue, add any kind of dry, blue paint, stirring it well while mixing. To make a wash of a light straw-color, mingle a few ounces of yellow ochre, or chrome yellow. The coloring matter should be quite fine to prevent its settling to the bottom of the vessel.—American Agriculturist.

TAINTED MEAT, FISH, OR POULTRY.—The following directions in regard to the use of charcoal, in cookery, are given by "Perscrutatio." "When meat, fish, etc., from the heat of the weather, or long keeping, are likely to spoil, powdered charcoal, sprinkled over it, will not only stop the progress of putrefaction, but it will sweeten that which has already become tainted. If meat, or fish has acquired an unpleasant flavor, or does not smell perfectly fresh, when prepared to boil; by tying up a few pieces of charcoal in a small cloth, and putting them into the pot while boiling, it will remove everything disagreeable. The addition of a teaspoonful of saleratus, instead of the charcoal, will remove any unpleasant taste or smell, unless it is very bad. Poultry sometimes becomes tainted by being kept too long; to make it sweet and good, put some powdered charcoal in a cloth, and put it in the inside of the fowl for sometime before cooking: it will draw out all the bad smell, as may be perceived by smelling the cloth, which is often most offensive."—American Agriculturist.

☞ Profanity and politeness never associate together.

Hygiene.

"This is for your health."—Paul.

For the World's Crisis.

MANAGEMENT OF INFANTS.

BY IRA A. THAYER, M. D.

"As the twig is bent, so the tree inclines."

Once more, kind reader, I ask your attention to a few thoughts on the subject of health. I offer no apology for attempting to instruct mankind upon this important topic. I see around me the beings who are to take our places in the management of affairs in future. I see a generation to whom we are to commit the ship of state, the dissemination of truth, and the propagation of our species. I see, also, the most horrid abuse of those beings, resulting in an effeminated, sickly and vicious race. In behalf of these little victims, I am led to cry out against these evils, and to point out the course which should be pursued in the management of tender youth. My remarks will be confined, chiefly, to the management of the infant during the first year, especially during "the month."

At the moment of birth, the whole machinery of its little system, hitherto passive and dormant, starts forth into a beautiful performance of a harmonious series of vital actions. Hence when we contemplate this remarkable transition of a helpless and feeble being from a state of repose to a mode of existence which subjects its tender organism to the ceaseless influence of a vast multitude of agencies, it does not seem surprising that it should be attended with loud and vehement cries; and these first cries are healthful and necessary for the well-being of the child; for by them the respiratory muscles are brought into action, the blood is propelled through the lungs, the air cells are expanded and cleared of mucous, and the throat is cleared of that accumulation which exists to a greater or less extent in the new-born infant.

After the first shock passes away, after the infant is properly washed and dressed, and rationally nursed, it should seldom or never cry, unless from injury or abuse. But as they do cry, and continue to cry through infancy and childhood, mothers should inquire into the cause of this manifestation. The first cause is based in the existing state of society. The second arises from unhealthy mothers,—unhealthy mothers must necessarily give birth to unhealthy children, and unhealthy children will, as necessarily, continue to cry, as well as continue to die. Third, from mothers naturally healthy, but disobeying the laws of their species during utero-gestation. Fourth, from improperly nursing and dressing the child. Fifth, from improper feeding. Sixth, from negligence of its wants. A part of the above causes, only, we will at present examine.

The second cause cannot be removed after the birth of the child so as materially to influence its peculiarity of constitution, or essentially modify its sufferings at the commencement. But allow me to remark here, that no person, either male or female, should become a parent unless they possess a healthy action of body and mind; for it is an established law that "like begets like," that all things bring forth "after his kind, cattle and creeping things, and beasts of the earth after his kind." The product of the oak is an acorn, which reproduces an oak, but nothing else; and so of all seeds, grains, fruits, beasts and human beings. It is high time that man should be awake to this immutable law, and study, not only how he can best sustain and comfort himself, but how he can secure a powerful progeny. I cannot pass this point (although really out of the range of my subject) without giving a short extract from Fowler on Hereditary Descent. In the concluding appeal he says: "And now, prospective parents, be entreated to pause and consider this whole subject. Does it not commend itself to your investigation and application? And is it not the imperious duty of every prospective parent to study and apply it? As our possession of eyes, muscles, reason, speech, etc., imposes on us a solemn obligation to use them, so nature's proffer of such exalted blessings renders guilty if we neglect them. Are the temporal and eternal destinies of your dearly beloved children indeed so trifling? Though you may 'neither fear God nor regard man,' yet be entreated to regard 'the bone of your bone, and flesh of your flesh.' The destinies of your own prospective children lie completely at your control. Nay, you must control them. Behold in the bearing of these hereditary laws, how happy or how miserable you are compelled to render them. How, then, can you look them in the face if you entail evil passions or physical maladies on them? And how infinitely valuable the patrimony of high intellectual and moral endowments! Nor to them merely, but to your children's children, to the end of time."

But to return to the infant. Many infants at birth are too feeble to undergo the process of washing and dressing without an interval for repose. Hence it is best, after washing, to wrap it up in a soft, fine blanket, and lay it aside to sleep for a time—for it is naturally disposed to sleep; and to infancy, as well as to manhood, "sweet sleep is tired nature's wholesome balm"; and the new-born, if free from pain, may be said to sleep constantly. In fact its transition from the previous passive condition, to one which subjects its tender organization to a thousand surrounding influences, would be too sudden and powerful to be long endured were it not for the kindly interposition of sleep,—a passive condition peculiarly favorable to the healthy development of the organization, to the growth and expansion of every part of the infant's body. For it is a well-observed fact that those children who sleep most thrive best, with the least interruption to health; while, on the contrary, those whose sleep is disturbed by adverse circumstances, not only cease to grow, but become more or less emaciated and sickly in proportion to the degree of disturbance. This disturbance is attended by nervous movements, as jerking of the limbs, or a sudden starting with loud cries as in a fright, or a low moaning noise, evincing pain. Symptoms like these mark an unhealthy or artificial sleep; mainly the result of cold, improper nursing, washing or changing the infant, or other imprudences, through accident or carelessness on the part of the mother, or through the agency of laudanum, paregoric, Bateman's Drops, Godfrey's Cordial, or Winslow's Soothing Syrup, given by the nurse. The habit of resorting to these poisonous drugs upon every slight appearance of pain or uneasiness, is one fraught with the most ruinous and destructive consequences. Instances of outright infanticide, and many more of shortened existence, from the continuance of this unnatural custom, are of daily occurrence. Nurses possessed of but little moral sensibility, commence this nefarious practice of "giving drops" for fear the babe will be troublesome; and thus its healthy existence is changed into an unnatural dullness, or stupor, which is artfully imposed upon the unsuspecting mother as a mark of superior ability in her profession.

The rude manner in which it is handled during the first month by its newly-made Aunties and others, is deleterious in the extreme. The habit of tossing it in the air is a practice preposterous and dangerous; for its natural inclination to sleep constantly indicates that as uninterrupted a state as possible is the most conducive to health. The exercise consequent upon dressing and washing it is sufficient, and in performing these duties the nurse cannot be too cautious.

Bathing the infant is of much importance. Perspiration is a function of the skin deeply concerned in preserving a healthy state of the system. In fact, there is scarcely an organ that is not more or less deranged in function, when this particular one is impaired; while, on the contrary, if this remain undisturbed in function, the body will mostly be found in the enjoyment of health and comfort. Bathing should not be resorted to as a means of cleanliness only, but to preserve a healthy action of the skin by giving tone and vigor to the capillaries; for the want of which cutaneous eruptions, and protracted, troublesome sores are apt to arise. Mothers too frequently, and nurses still more frequently, are neglectful of these matters; and physicians, also, too often fail in the discharge of their duty in pointing out this shameful neglect. The tender infant is not unfrequently placed in bed between the parents, completely enveloped in quilts, blankets, etc., and there allowed to remain all night, with its clothing saturated with its excretion, for "fear of awaking it," until its own uncomfortable condition disturbs it. How often have we been disgusted by the filthiness of the child's bed and cradle. Yet the poor child can but endure it—it has no redress. See to it, mothers, that the infant is always dry and clean upon going to sleep; and never let a whole night pass without changing your tender offspring; and then will you be but seldom vexed by chafing of the groin, and not so much disturbed of your rest at night, while your child will be good, lively and healthful.

With regard to the dress for children, the general principles that I laid down in Hygiene, No. 4 (Crisis of Feb. 7th, '65), will apply here. And yet, in visiting the nurseries of our fashionable circles, beholding the embroidered lace, worked ruffles, and stiffly starched linen, scratching and chafing the tender skin of the infant, with some important parts of its body uncovered and exposed, and others wrapped with an excess of clothing, one is strongly impressed with the idea that the requirements of idle fashion, or the gratification of empty pride, constitute one great object in the making and arranging of the child's dress; while the health and comfort were the least of all consulted. And the fact that thousands of innocent and tender youth are annually sacrificed on the altar of empty pride and cruel fashion, is equally apparent.

"Such rearing 'mong the rich has thinned their house
In early life, and laid in silent ranks,
Successive with the dead, their infant race."

I deem it unnecessary to dwell upon the various articles of dress; a hint to the wise should be sufficient; and I therefore pass on to the consideration of a more important item in the management of the infant, viz:

ITS PROPER FOOD.

Almost the first cry is interpreted as a demand for food, and the nurse is urged to prepare for it something to keep the "poor little thing" from starving. Or some newly-made Auntie, surcharged with benevolent solicitude, bustles about to prepare a repast in order to prevent so terrible a catastrophe! Molasses and water are produced in huge quantities, and three, four, or a half dozen spoonfuls are thrust down the child's throat which is scarcely yet cleared of mucous. Nothing could be devised which would so readily produce flatulent colic and griping as this mixture of abominations. But unfortunately, Auntie is not satisfied with this, but immediately produces some pap, pomada, gruel, or brings out a portion of its mother's food with a "drop or two of mine" added, which, to say nothing of the quantity, is highly injurious in point of quality, containing spices and other stimulating articles which, if continued through childhood, as is generally the case, forms a taste that rapidly ripens into intemperance and excesses of all kinds.

A teaspoonful of cold water is all the child needs for the first six or eight hours after birth, and then, if the mother does not yet afford its natural food, fresh cow's milk and water, equal parts, with a very small quantity of sugar added, may be given in small quantities every two hours, until the excretion of the mother's milk has taken place. Give it no oil, no saffron, no molasses, nothing but the food mentioned, and if, after three or four hours from the time it has received the first secretion of the mother's breast, its bowels do not move properly, the meconium can be thrown off by the use of a warm water injection. But commence drugging the infant here, and you lay the foundation for disease and doctors' fees from its cradle to its grave. It will become a charge for the doctors soon enough without commencing at its birth.

I would most earnestly protest against the common practice of stuffing the infant upon every slight appearance of pain or uneasiness, though it be food of a proper quality. Most children are made gluttons during the first year. If it falls down and cries; if it has colic from a sour and overloaded stomach, or it cries from any other cause, it is immediately applied to the breast to "stop its noise." In fact, they become so habituated to it, that they cannot go to sleep unless at the breast. This practice is ruinous in the extreme. There should be a regular time for the child to take its nourishment, and it should never be allowed to eat "between meals." For the new-born, once in two or three hours is frequent enough. (See Mr. Newton's excellent remarks in Crisis of Feb. 7th, '65.)

Bristolville, O.

ANTIDOTE FOR POISON.—Mix two ounces of powdered chalk or magnesia, or one ounce of washing soda with a pint of milk, and swallow at one draught, then tickle the back of the throat with the finger or a feather, so as to produce vomiting. Afterwards drink freely of hot milk and water, and repeat the vomiting so as to thoroughly wash out the stomach. Any quantity of chalk or magnesia may be taken with safety, but soda in large quantities is injurious.

RESPIRATION.

One of the most interesting and instructive studies in physiology, is that branch which relates to breathing or respiration. To be best appreciated it should be investigated in all its relations to animal and vegetable life. The first and most constant want of all things endowed with life is air. Respiration goes on night and day in all things living, and cannot be long suspended without fatal consequences. This is particularly true of the higher order of animals.

One of the most important facts connected with this is, that the demand for air in every class of animals, is in proportion to the activity of the muscular and nervous action. Warm-blooded animals, are more active in their habits, and demand more air than those of cold blood. Animals that live fast, need more than those that live slow. Those with predominant development of vegetative functions over the muscular and nervous, breathe less than those where the development is the reverse. The active infusoria breathe more than the sluggish rozopodo. In the cephalopoda the most active of all the moluscs, there is a remarkable provision for the increased demand for air required by their increased activity. In fishes, the arrangement for respiration is very complete, but most perfect in those species which have great muscular power, and can maintain a high independent temperature.

In reptiles respiration and activity are proportionately increased by a certain increase of heat. If the temperature of the water in which a frog or fish is confined, is raised without allowing an increase of air, these animals soon die, because increased respiration requires a proportionate increase of air. The larvæ of insects breathe less than the perfect insects; infants less than adults. Birds consume a great quantity of air; those that have the most powerful flight, respire oftener than those that fly but little. These feathered creations suffer from deprivation of pure air more than almost any other animal....

In wild animals, those most vigorous and active have fine lungs and consume much air. This is particularly noticeable in the lion, tiger, panther, leopard, wild cat, the deer, etc. The best of race horses, and in fact the best of our horses of all varieties, have perfect means for breathing, and their vigor and endurance depend largely upon the proper execution of this function.

In the human race the great development of the muscular and nervous tissues demand perfection of the breathing apparatus as a means by which their complete exercise may be secured.

Men of average size, in good health, consume about twenty-five cubic inches of air in each respiration. Those with small lungs, who take little exercise, who are diseased, or who have great immobility of the shoulders and walls of the chest do not consume of necessity so much. We never expire from our lungs all the air they contain. Indeed, after the most vigorous effort at expiration, as much as one hundred cubic inches of air remains which is unable to be expelled, (and if it could the lungs would collapse, and death would be the result.) Nor do we in ordinary respiration, fill the lungs to their highest capacity; for after an ordinary breath, by effort, at least one hundred cubic inches may still be inspired. There are many exceedingly interesting facts connected with breathing, which may be found in all our text-books on physiology; but the most important of these facts—the one least dwelt upon by writers, and least understood by the people—is this: That the amount of life manifested by each individual is in almost exact proportion to the amount of his breathing.

We have already seen, in the lower forms of animals, that those which breathe most, live most, as in the case of the sluggish rozopodo and the active cephalopoda. This is equally true of the higher forms of life, and most true of man. Diminish the activity of his respiration and at the same time you diminish the activity of all his powers of body and mind. This is very easily illustrated by experiments on animals, and the same law is applicable to them. Take a wild bird, or any other animal, and place it under the bell-glass of an air-pump. It struggles and makes vigorous exertion to escape. Make a few strokes of the pump, thus exhausting the air from the chamber, and the animal falls dead. But if you do not consider this a fair experiment, place a bird in an air-tight glass-bell with a limited supply of air. At first he shows no signs of dullness, but, as the air becomes exhausted the creature becomes stupid, and, in a few hours, if the glass be a small one, dies. It is the same fact that is shown where a candle is placed in the glass, and no air allowed to enter. The light slowly but surely goes out. In proportion as we deprive the flame of air, it ceases to burn. It is so with human beings. As they are deprived of air, they are deprived of life. And in proportion as they are deprived of air, they are deprived of life. With plenty of fresh air, one is bright and active; without it, he is dull and stupid. With it, he is strong; without it he is weak. With it, he is bold; without it he is cowardly. Conversation, play, work, and study are all impossible to be pursued in rooms not well supplied with air. We can sit in rooms not well ventilated, and do nothing without inconvenience; but the moment we try to live in them, we consume rapidly the air, and become exhausted. The amount of life we are able to manifest will graduate itself to the amount of air consumed.—Herald of Health.

The World's Crisis

AND SECOND ADVENT MESSENGER.

TERMS:

If paid in advance,—	One year	$2.50
	Six months	$1.20
If not paid within six months,—	One year	$3.00
	Six months	$1.50
Five copies, to one address, six months		$5.60
—same rate for any larger number under ten.
Ten copies, to one address, six months		$10.00
—same rate for any number over ten.

CLUB PRICES PAYABLE ALWAYS IN ADVANCE.

POSTAGE.—The postage, in the United States, on each single copy of the Crisis, is 20 cents a year, payable quarterly, in advance, at the office of delivery.

RULES FOR CORRESPONDENTS.—Over all matters not intended for publication, write PRIVATE.

Over all business matters, write BUSINESS.

Over all articles for the paper, write FOR THE CRISIS.

All articles should be accompanied by the writer's name, for the Editor's information, even if it is not published.

When the names of new subscribers are sent, please say they are new, and it will save us much labor.

PRIVATE LETTERS.—Those wishing to address the Editor on matters not connected with the office, will please write the word PRIVATE on the outside of the envelope.

Please put the business matters and appointments on a piece of paper separate from other communications.

All persons writing to the office should give DISTINCTLY and PLAINLY the Post Office, County and State at which they wish to be addressed; and all orders, subscriptions, communications and remittances, should be plainly directed to MILES GRANT, BOSTON, MASS.

PUBLISHED ALSO AT THE SAME OFFICE, Semi-monthly:

THE YOUNG PILGRIM:

An Illustrated Sunday School Paper,

FOR CHILDREN AND YOUTH.

TERMS:

[illegible]

Payable always in advance.

POSTAGE.—[illegible]

For the World's Crisis.

On attending the house of worship for the first time in fourteen years.

Is it a sweet, delicious dream,
Wove round me by some magic spell?
O! though I see no snowy gleam,
Seraphs are nigh I can but deem,
And touched with angel joy they seem,
The happy songs that round me swell.

Glad songs from lips late learned to sing
The joyful notes of pardoned sin;
My soul mounts up on Faith's glad wing
To heaven, where angel voices ring
Glad praises to our glorious King,
And finds an entrance in.

Glory to God! fills all the air,
Glory and praise! my soul replies.
In faith I prayed—He heard my prayer,
Hath raised me up, and set me where
My soul in sweet delight may share
Of praise to God, the melodies.

O, to this hour, through weary years,
True faith hath turned her waiting eye,
All undismayed by doubts or fears,
When smiles should banish sorrow's tears;
The prayer of faith God surely hears,
My soul can truly testify.

Trusting, believing in his word,
Through years of weary pain,
True faith sweet comfort did afford,
Believing I should be restored;
I prayed and trusted in the Lord,
Nor was my faith in vain.

Glory to God! with these I'll sing
All glory to his name!
Strike, strike anew the joyful string,
Let every voice unite to sing
The praises of the eternal King,
The glory of the Lamb!

East Roxbury, Vt. ANNA E. MCELLISTER.

For the World's Crisis.

LETTERS ILLUSTRATIVE OF CHRISTIAN EXPERIENCE.

NUMBER SEVEN.

To BRO. C.:—Dear Brother,—Your letter is received, and having a quiet evening, I improve it in writing a reply. May the Spirit of the Lord so illumine my own mind as to enable me to inscribe words of light, and not of darkness.

The brother who has written you I think is in error in supposing the work to be a gradual one. I believe it to be instantaneous, and for proof shall appeal to the word of God. The Savior told his disciples, just as he was about to leave them to ascend on high, to tarry at Jerusalem till they were endued with power from on high. If this referred to a gradual work, if it only meant that they were to receive day by day that power which they needed to keep them from falling, and aid them in the work of soul-saving, then they must needs tarry at Jerusalem for life. But what does the history show? Why, that during the ten days that intervened between the Savior's ascension and the day of Pentecost, the disciples assembled together for united prayer, and when that day had fully come, as they were with one accord gathered together praying, the Holy Spirit came like a mighty rushing wind, and filled the room and their hearts. To them the "tongue of fire" was given, fit emblem of that divine power which enabled them to utter those burning words of truth which penetrated to the hearts of three thousand and won them to Christ.

Then was fulfilled the promise, "Ye shall be baptized with the Holy Ghost, not many days hence." That was the endowment of power, for which Jesus bade them "tarry at Jerusalem." That was the beginning of the fulfillment of the promise of the Father, which, saith Jesus, "ye have heard of me." Was it not instantaneous in its manifestation? Was it not powerful in its effects? Was it not transforming in its influence?

Again, on the occasion of its reception by the Gentiles at the house of Cornelius, it was sudden in its manifestation. Also by the disciples at Ephesus, as recorded in Acts 19: 1-6. I am aware that many, very many doubt the fact of its reception in these days, and the church is greatly in darkness on this point, and inefficient in her efforts to a great extent for the lack of it. How any one can doubt its attainability now is a mystery to me.

We are positively told that the being "endued with power from on high," or being baptized with the Holy Ghost, is the promise of the Father, i. e., this is what was promised by the Father. When did God promise to give this glorious manifestation of the Holy Spirit? Peter tells us it was given by Joel the prophet. Does the promise read as though it was to be limited in its outpouring to the day of Pentecost and the introduction of the gospel to the Gentiles! Is it not coextensive with the "last days"? Peter evidently did not believe this promise was limited, for he not only points to what has been seen, heard and experienced, as being that which was spoken by Joel, but he exhorts those who beheld these wonderful things to repent, believe, and be baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus, saying, "And ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost; for the promise (of the Father by Joel) is unto you, and to your children, and to ALL THAT ARE AFAR OFF, EVEN AS MANY AS THE LORD OUR GOD SHALL CALL." That ought to settle the question forever, that what Jesus calls the enduement of power from on high (Luke 24: 49), and the baptism of the Holy Ghost (Acts 1: 5), is co-extensive with the "last days." He calls the enduement of power "the promise of the Father." See Luke 24. He calls that promise the baptism, as recorded in Acts 1: 4, 5. Sophistry may try to evade this, but it cannot disprove the fact. This settled, then the declaration of Peter that the promise is unto those beholders, if they would become disciples of Christ, and to all afar off whom the Lord should call, demonstrates the fact that the enduement with power from on high, or, in other words, the baptism of the Spirit, does belong to the church to the end of time.

All those attempts to avoid the force of the apostle's language, by saying that the gift of the Holy Spirit is not the same as the baptism, are exceeding futile. Those who resort to such specious reasonings do not deny that the baptism of the Spirit was given at the house of Cornelius, yet it is not once denominated thus, but it is said that the Holy Ghost fell on all them which heard the word; on the Gentiles also was poured out the gift of the Holy Ghost. This shows that the pouring out of the Spirit, baptism of the Spirit, and gift of the Holy Ghost, are identical terms.

I have seen very many receive this "unction from the Holy One." Often its manifestation has been like the electric shock, suddenly thrilling the whole system with a divine power; frequently overwhelming the person so that they would fall as one dead, and for hours lie helpless; their countenances radiating the inward glory, and as soon as their tongues were unloosed, giving utterance to the bliss that filled their hearts in words of rejoicing. This, by some, is called enthusiasm, fanaticism, or mesmerism. Very many regard it as a Methodist institution, and hence ignore it. But some of the most thrilling experiences of this power from on high are from the lips and pen of Congregationalists. I will, if I have opportunity, cite you to some examples.

A few words and I will close. This "promise" is to be received by simple faith, as are all the promises. Look not to inward frames of feeling, but with simple trust rely on God, and when faith grasps the blessing, the Spirit will come and fill the entire soul. Then there is a realization of an inward Christ, a present Christ, and not one afar off.

May God bless you, and establish you in the way of faith, purity and love. Your sister in Christ, M. D. W.

THE STRANGE CLASS-LEADER.

AN INCIDENT IN A METHODIST CAMPMEETING.

"Just before leaving New Hampshire, I had occasion to go to the upper part of the State to visit a Dr. Kelly on business. But the doctor was not at home, and I was uneasy, for I could not get back that night, as the cars had gone the last time for that day. So I made myself as contented as I could. In conversation with the family, I learned that a campmeeting was being held about two miles further north, and, to pass the time I went up. I have forgotten the name of the place, but it was on the right hand track, from fifty to seventy miles from Concord. I arrived at the ground about five o'clock, P. M. It was rainy, and there was preaching in two or three tents. I listened to a sermon on holiness, which had much more of the letter in it than the spirit. After preaching I looked around the ground, but could see no one that I knew, or ever saw before. This was something new to have all strangers to me on a campground. I was homesick, and started to go back to Dr. Kelly's; but seeing a good fire, I stopped to warm me, and engaged in conversation with a good christian, no doubt, but rather a simple one. He said to me, 'It is rather rainy.' I answered, 'Yes.' He then asked me where I came from. I told him. He then wanted to know if I enjoyed religion. I evaded the question in part, seeing what he was. He then told his experience, and questioned me closely. I gave him to understand that I professed religion, but did not have much enjoyment there, for I was among strangers, etc. This made him the more interested in my case.

He said there was going to be a general class-meeting in the preachers' tent, and showed it to me. I learned that it was a class of young preachers from Concord. He was so anxious about me, that I told him I would go into the class-meeting a little while, as he thought I might get blessed. When the singing commenced we went in. There were three rows of seats, and I took one in the middle row, near the door. After prayer by one of the young preachers, the meeting commenced. I soon saw that it was no place for me. The preacher was a dandy-looking fellow; had a fine cane which he hooked on his arm, while leading the class.

Ten or fifteen spoke; but not one spoke of having any enjoyment. If they had, I should not have believed them, for their silks, bows and ribbons spoke as clearly as they did, of no religious enjoyment. In reply to any of them, the leader would say, 'Go on, brother,' or 'sister.' That was to encourage them in their backslidden state which they acknowledged they were then in. I thought "Good Lord, where is Methodism!" and was about starting to leave, when to my astonishment the leader touched me on the shoulder, and desired me to lead the rest of the class. He thought by my dress that I was a Methodist, I suppose.

I had to think quick; but I arose, and in short told my experience with Methodism, and soon felt the burden of the meeting upon me. I spoke to one, and she said that she did not enjoy anything. I told her that I knew it before she arose. I spoke to the second; she hesitated, but finally arose, and said that she must say what the first one did. I reproved her sharply, and called upon the third. This was a dead set; she would not stir. I felt like talking, and told them that I had not heard one speak of any religious enjoyment, and they were a pack of proud backsliders. God gave me great plainness of speech and liberty while talking. I looked at the fellow who was so anxious about my welfare, and you can judge how astonished he looked. I then proposed clearing one of the middle seats, and called all forward who said they wanted prayers; for when they spoke, they all closed by saying, 'I desire your prayers that I may be more faithful,' etc. This expression was a habit, not sincere, and unless they took that seat, it was proved that they didn't mean what they said, and honesty was the first step towards getting blessed; and I told the whole tent's company that God would work, if they would let him. I commenced singing, and they began coming forward. This young dandy preacher looked very strange, but I had got the meeting in hand, and he saw it. Soon the seat was nearly filled, and I told them that God would bless all that were willing to ask him, and that all could pray at once, for it was no confusion to the Lord. We knelt down before God, and I led in prayer. Soon the work of God broke out, and a number were praying at the same time. The work increased, and others came forward. There was a general cry all over the tent. Some were slain. I scarcely ever saw the power of God more manifest than on that occasion. The one that I spoke to, who would not come forward nor arise, was slain where she was. This was an old-fashiond Methodist meeting. It did me good to see the gauzes, ribbons, and starched dresses lay in the wet straw. Many came out happy and shouting, and went to praying for others.

I thought I would leave the tent, which I did, very suddenly, and no one noticed it, as I sat near the end. I started for Dr. Kelley's in the dark, and I never felt more sensibly the blessing of God, than I did all the way to the Dr's. I could hear them shout when a mile off. I was wet through, and the doctor wanted to give me some medicine, for fear that I should take cold. But I told him that God had so blessed me I should not take cold. I went to bed but could not sleep for rejoicing. I started home in the first morning train of cars. The whole encampment was searched over to find that stranger who led the class. He was described as a tall man, wore a broad-brimmed hat, etc. No one knew him nor where he came from, except the weak man, that I have mentioned, and he did not know when I went out, nor where I had gone. A great deal of anxiety was felt to know who that was that started the meeting where God blessed so many. But I was one hundred miles from there by two o'clock, and never saw but one man who was at that meeting, and that was about a week after. This man saw me in the city of Manchester, N. H., and knew me by my hat. He ventured into conversation, and asked me if I attended such a camp-meeting. I told him that I did, and then the mystery was revealed to him. He told me what took place after I left. The work did not stop, although they were all very anxious to know where that strange man was. The work continued that day, which was the last day of the meeting. God got all the glory that time, for no one knew who or where the instrument was."

From "The Life and Religious Experience of Hiram Munger." For sale at this office, for 30 cents.

ALL FOR THE BEST.—Dr. Johnson used to say that a habit of looking at the best side of every event is better than a thousand pounds a year. Bishop Hall quaintly remarks, "For every bad there might be a worse; and when a man breaks his leg, let him be thankful that it was not his neck."

For the World's Crisis.

THE VOICE OF HISTORIANS.

"The Lord's Day"—The True Christian Sabbath.

NUMBER SEVEN.

From Peter Heylyn's "History of the Sabbath," published in London 1631, pp. 411–422. In copying I have followed the author's style of writing and spelling. T. M. P.

. . . . "In the third century, the first we meet with is Tertullian, who flourished in the very first beginning of it, by whom this day is called by three several names. For first he calls it Diessolis, Sunday, as commonly we now call it; and saith, that they did dedicate the same unto mirth and gladness, not to devotion altogether: Diem solis lætitiæ indulgemus, in his Apologetick. The same name is used by Justin Martyr in the passages before remembered; partly because being to write to an heathen magistrate, it had not been so proper to call it by the name of the Lord's day, which name they knew not; and partly that delivering the form and substance of their service done upon that day, they might the better quit themselves from being worshipers of the sun, as the Gentiles thought. For by their meetings on this day for religious exercises, in greater numbers than on others, in Africa and the West especially, and by their use of turning towards the East when they made their prayers, the world was sometimes so persuaded. Inde suspicio, quod innotuerit nos ad Orientis regionem precari, as he there informed us. Whereby we may perceive of what great antiquity that custom is, which is retained in the Church of England, of bowing, kneeling, and adoring towards the Eastern parts.

"The second name by which Tertullian calls this day, is the eighth day simply; Ethnicis semel annuus dies quis quis sextus est, tibi octavo quoque die. The third is, Dies Dominicus, or the Lord's day, which is frequent in him, as, Die Dominico jejunium nefas dusimus, we hold it utterly unlawful to fast the Lord's day, of which more hereafter. For their performances in their public meetings he describes them thus: Coimus in & cœtum congregationem, etc. We come together into the assembly or congregation to our common prayers, that being banded as it were in a troop or army, we may besiege God with our petitions. To him such violence is exceeding grateful. It followeth, Cogimur ad Sacrarum lit. commemorationem, etc. We meet to hear the holy Scriptures rehearsed unto us, that so according to the quality of the times, we may either be premonished or corrected by them. Questionless by these holy speeches our faith is nourished, our hopes erected, our assurance settled; and notwithstanding by inculcating the same, we are the better established in our obedience to God's precepts. A little after, Præsident probati quique seniores, etc. Now at these general meetings some priests or elders do preside, which have attained unto that honor, not by money, but by the good report that they have gotten in the church. And if there be a Poor-man's Box, every one cast in somewhat menstrua die, at least once a month, according as they would, and as they were able. . . . . So that as Sunday was a day which they used to meet on; so reading of the Scriptures was a special part of Sunday's exercise.

. . . . "Before we end this chapter, there is one thing yet to be considered, which is the name whereby the christians of these first ages did use to call the day of the Resurrection; and consequently the other days of the week, according as they found the time divided. The rather because some are become offended that we retain those names amongst us, which were to us commended by our ancestors, and to them, by theirs. Where first we must take notice that the Jews in honor of their Sabbath, used to refer their times to that, distinguishing their days by Prima Sabbati, Secunda Sabbati, and so until they came to the Sabbath itself: As on the other side the Gentiles following the motions of the planets, gave to each day the name of that particular planet, by which the first hour of the day was governed, as the astrologers had taught them. Now the Apostles being Jews, retained the custom of the Jews; and for that reason called that day on which our Savior rose, mia sabbaton, una sabbati, the first day of the week, as our English reads it. The Fathers, many of them, followed their example. Saint Austin thereupon calls Thursday by the name of quintum Sabbati (Epist. 118), and so doth venerable Beda. Hist. bib. 4. c. 25. Saint Hierom, Tuesday, tertium sabbati, in Epitaph. Paulæ: Tertullian, Friday, by the old name, parasceve, l. 4. advers. marcian. Saturday they called generally the Sabbath; and Sunday, sometimes dies solis, and is sometimes Domincus. . . . . The Saturday is called amongst them by no other name than that which formerly it had, the Sabbath. So that whenever, for a thousand years and upwards, we meet with sabbatum, in any writer, of what name soever, it must be understood of no day but Saturday.

"As for the other day, the day of the resurrection, all the Evangelists, and Saint Paul, take notice of no other name than of the first day of the week. Saint John, and after him Ignatius, call it the LORD'S DAY. But then again, Justin Martyr for the second century doth in two several passages call it no otherwise than Sunday, as then the Gentiles called it, and we call it now: and so Tertullian for the third, who useth both, and calls it sometimes diem solis, and sometimes Dominicum, as before we said. Which questionless neither of them would have done, on what respect soever, had it been either contrary to the word of God, or scandalous unto his church. So for the after ages, in the edicts of Constantine, Valentinian, Valens, Gratian, Honorius, Arcadius, Theodosius, christian princes all, it hath no other name than Sunday, or dies solis. . . . .

"They therefore are more nice than wise, who out of a desire to have all things new, would have new names for every day, or call them as sometimes they were, the first day of the week, the second day of the week, and all for fear lest it be thought that we do still adore those gods whom the Gentiles worshiped. . . . The Gentiles, saith the Father, gave unto every day of the week the name of one or other of their gods: and so they did also unto every month. If then we keep the name of March, and not think of Mars; why may we not, saith he, preserve the name of Saturday; and not think of Saturn. I add, why may we not then keep the name of Sunday, and not think of Phœbus, or Apollo, or by what other name soever the old poets call him? . . . I presume it may give some reason why we retain the name of Sunday, not only in our common speech, but in the canons of the church, and our acts of Parliament, as being used indifferently by so many eminent persons in the primitive church."

East Weare, N. H. T. M. PREBLE.

For the World's Crisis.

YOUR HOME.

"I go to prepare a place for you."—JOHN 14: 2.

Weary pilgrim, have you been seeking here a place of rest? And have you been disappointed? Methinks I hear you sigh mournfully, as you say, "Here is no rest." But there is yet a rest for you. When the holy city comes down, "prepared as a bride adorned for her husband," you will find a place that will suit you in every particular. The description of this place in Rev. 21, is beyond all our present conception of beauty and glory. But I feel impressed to say to you that when the time fully comes, and you enter that blessed place, you will say with the queen of the south, "the half was not told me." F. H. CHAMBERLAIN.

"THY WILL BE DONE."—Matt. 26: 42.

Thy will, O Lord, I humbly pray,
Thy holy, heavenly will be done,
And on my knees from day to day,
Submit myself to thee alone.

However much I may desire
To have my way, I humbly bow;
Thy will I know is holier, higher,
And unto Thee I yield it now.

True, I feel anxious, deeply so,
And sometimes scarce can be denied;
But unto thee I love to go,
And in thy power and truth confide.

And while I live, and when I die,
Thy will I wish to make my choice,
And yield myself up cheerfully
To Thee the source of all my joys.
—Selected.

HOW TO PAPER A WALL.

Hanging wall-paper is light and easy work, which may be done by females as well as males, and as females are usually neater than the other sex in performing such manipulations, they should have the privilege of doing this work, instead of calling men from their urgent business. The materials necessary for papering are, a papering-board, ten or twelve feet long, and about two feet wide, planed smooth; a large paste-brush, a pan of paste, a pair of long shears, a light, straight-edged pole, and a soft brush-broom. Now take a roll of paper, and measure around the room, to ascertain how many whole strips are required for the walls. Cut the desired number of strips of the right length, so that the edges will match, and lay them all on the board, with the wrong side up. If the wall has been whitewashed, sweep it thoroughly, and wash it with vinegar and water. If the vinegar be strong, mingle three quarts of water with one of vinegar. When the wall is dry, sweep it again. Previous to putting on the paper, paste the wall. Then apply paste to a strip of paper, and turn up the lower end about two feet, the pasted sides together, and hang the strip as quickly as possible. As paste expands paper, and renders it tender, it must not be put on until the wall is ready to receive it. When the paper is so tender that it will hardly hold itself together, double the upper end of a strip over a smooth stick. Begin in one corner of the room, and let the strip hang perpendicularly, and as soon as it is right, stick the top fast to the wall. Instead of using a bunch of cloth to rub it on with, sweep it on with a soft brush-broom, by commencing at the top, and sweep downwards and outwards from the middle of the strip. A bunch of cloth will sometimes blot the colors, but a soft broom will not. Run the back of the shears along the upper edge of the base, or mop-board, and pull the lower end of the paper away from the wall, and cut it off, and afterwards sweep it on. When a strip does not hang exactly plumb, take hold of the bottom and pull it from the wall, until it hangs only by an inch or so at the top. Then adjust it, and sweep it on again. When there are uneven places in the wall, so that the paper will not adhere without a blister, or wrinkle, cut through the long way of the blister, and sweep it on again. When turning a corner of a room, it will be more convenient to cut a strip of paper in two, lengthways, so that the joint will come exactly in the corner, than to attempt to put on a whole strip by bending it in the corner. After all the whole strips have been put on, the piecing can be done around the doors and windows. New paper can be pasted over the old, if that be on firmly. Otherwise, it should be pulled off. Sometimes, by washing old paper with soap suds two or three times, it will peel off with little labor. New walls need not be pasted previous to papering. It is better to apply the paste to the paper than to the wall only, as dry paper is elastic, and will not adhere until it has become wet.—Amer. Agriculturist.

HOW TO WHITEWASH.

Procure fresh-burnt lime, not that partly air-slacked. The large lumps are best. The fine portions and small lumps will not make a wash that will stick well. For this reason, lime that has been burned several months is not as good as that just from the kiln. Put a pound or two into a vessel, and pour on boiling water slowly, until it is all slacked, and is about as thick as cream. Then add cold rain water until it will flow well from the brush. Stir often when using it. A few drops of bluing added will give it a more lively color. One or two table-spoonfuls of clean salt, and one-fourth pound of clean sugar to a gallon of the wash, will make it more adhesive. If the walls have been whitewashed, let them be swept thoroughly, and if colored with smoke, wash them clean with soap suds. A brush with long, thick hair, will hold fluid best, when applying it overhead. If a person has the wash of the right consistence, and a bood brush, he can whitewash a large parlor without allowing a drop to fall. When it appears streaked after drying it is too thick, and needs diluting with cold water. Apply the wash back and forth in one direction, and then go cross-wise, using a paint-brush at the corners, and a thin piece of board to keep the brush from the wood work, or the border of the paper. Coloring matter may be mingled with the wash, to give it any desired tint. To make a light peach-blow color, mingle a small quantity of Venetian-red. For a sky-blue, add any kind of dry, blue paint, stirring it well while mixing. To make a wash of a light straw-color, mingle a few ounces of yellow ochre, or chrome yellow. The coloring matter should be quite fine to prevent its settling to the bottom of the vessel.—American Agriculturist.

TAINTED MEAT, FISH, OR POULTRY.—The following directions in regard to the use of charcoal, in cookery, are given by "Perscrutatio." "When meat, fish, etc., from the heat of the weather, or long keeping, are likely to spoil, powdered charcoal, sprinkled over it, will not only stop the progress of putrefaction, but it will sweeten that which has already become tainted. If meat, or fish has acquired an unpleasant flavor, or does not smell perfectly fresh, when prepared to boil; by tying up a few pieces of charcoal in a small cloth, and putting them into the pot while boiling, it will remove everything disagreeable. The addition of a teaspoonful of saleratus, instead of the charcoal, will remove any unpleasant taste or smell, unless it is very bad. Poultry sometimes becomes tainted by being kept too long; to make it sweet and good, put some powdered charcoal in a cloth, and put it in the inside of the fowl for sometime before cooking: it will draw out all the bad smell, as may be perceived by smelling the cloth, which is often most offensive."—American Agriculturist.

☞ Profanity and politeness never associate together.

Hygiene.

"This is for your health."—Paul.

For the World's Crisis.

MANAGEMENT OF INFANTS.

BY IRA A. YEATES, M. D.

"As the twig is bent, so the tree inclines."

Once more, kind reader, I ask your attention to a few thoughts on the subject of health. I offer no apology for attempting to instruct mankind upon this important topic. I see around me the beings who are to take our places in the management of affairs in future. I see a generation to whom we are to commit the ship of state, the dissemination of truth, and the propagation of our species. I see, also, the most horrid abuse of those beings, resulting in an effeminated, sickly and vicious race. In behalf of these little victims, I am led to cry out against these evils, and to point out the course which should be pursued in the management of tender youth. My remarks will be confined, chiefly, to the management of the infant during the first year, especially during "the month."

At the moment of birth, the whole machinery of its little system, hitherto passive and dormant, starts forth into a beautiful performance of a harmonious series of vital actions. Hence when we contemplate this remarkable transition of a helpless and feeble being from a state of repose to a mode of existence which subjects its tender organism to the ceaseless influence of a vast multitude of agencies, it does not seem surprising that it should be attended with loud and vehement cries; and these first cries are healthful and necessary for the well-being of the child; for by them the respiratory muscles are brought into action, the blood is propelled through the lungs, the air cells are expanded and cleared of mucous, and the throat is cleared of that accumulation which exists to a greater or less extent in the new-born infant.

After the first shock passes away, after the infant is properly washed and dressed, and rationally nursed, it should seldom or never cry, unless from injury or abuse. But as they do cry, and continue to cry through infancy and childhood, mothers should inquire into the cause of this manifestation. The first cause is based in the existing state of society. The second arises from unhealthy mothers,—unhealthy mothers must necessarily give birth to unhealthy children, and unhealthy children will, as necessarily, continue to cry, as well as continue to die. Third, from mothers naturally healthy, but disobeying the laws of their species during utero-gestation. Fourth, from improperly nursing and dressing the child. Fifth, from improper feeding. Sixth, from negligence of its wants. A part of the above causes, only, we will at present examine.

The second cause cannot be removed after the birth of the child so as materially to influence its peculiarity of constitution, or essentially modify its sufferings at the commencement. But allow me to remark here, that no person, either male or female, should become a parent unless they possess a healthy action of body and mind; for it is an established law that "like begets like," that all things bring forth "after his kind, cattle and creeping things, and beasts of the earth after his kind." The product of the oak is an acorn, which reproduces an oak, but nothing else; and so of all seeds, grains, fruits, beasts and human beings. It is high time that man should be awake to this immutable law, and study, not only how he can best sustain and comfort himself, but how he can secure a powerful progeny. I cannot pass this point (although really out of the range of my subject) without giving a short extract from Fowler on Hereditary Descent. In the concluding appeal he says: "And now, prospective parents, be entreated to pause and consider this whole subject. Does it not commend itself to your investigation and application? And is it not the imperious duty of every prospective parent to study and apply it? As our possession of eyes, muscles, reason, speech, etc., imposes on us a solemn obligation to use them, so nature's proffer of such exalted blessings renders guilty if we neglect them. Are the temporal and eternal destinies of your dearly beloved children indeed so trifling? Though you may 'neither fear God nor regard man,' yet be entreated to regard 'the bone of your bone, and flesh of your flesh.' The destinies of your own prospective children lie completely at your control. Nay, you must control them. Behold in the bearing of these hereditary laws, how happy or how miserable you are compelled to render them. How, then, can you look them in the face if you entail evil passions or physical maladies on them? And how infinitely valuable the patrimony of high intellectual and moral endowments! Nor to them merely, but to your children's children, to the end of time."

But to return to the infant. Many infants at birth are too feeble to undergo the process of washing and dressing without an interval for repose. Hence it is best, after washing, to wrap it up in a soft, fine blanket, and lay it aside to sleep for a time—for it is naturally disposed to sleep; and to infancy, as well as to manhood, "sweet sleep is tired nature's wholesome balm"; and the new-born, if free from pain, may be said to sleep constantly. In fact its transition from the previous passive condition, to one which subjects its tender organization to a thousand surrounding influences, would be too sudden and powerful to be long endured were it not for the kindly interposition of sleep,—a passive condition peculiarly favorable to the healthy development of the organization, to the growth and expansion of every part of the infant's body. For it is a well-observed fact that those children who sleep most thrive best, with the least interruption to health; while, on the contrary, those whose sleep is disturbed by adverse circumstances, not only cease to grow, but become more or less emaciated and sickly in proportion to the degree of disturbance. This disturbance is attended by nervous movements, as jerking of the limbs, or a sudden starting with loud cries as in a fright, or a low moaning noise, evincing pain. Symptoms like these mark an unhealthy or artificial sleep; mainly the result of cold, improper nursing, washing or changing the infant, or other imprudences, through accident or carelessness on the part of the mother, or through the agency of laudanum, paregoric, Bateman's Drops, Godfrey's Cordial, or Winslow's Soothing Syrup, given by the nurse. The habit of resorting to these poisonous drugs upon every slight appearance of pain or uneasiness, is one fraught with the most ruinous and destructive consequences. Instances of outright infanticide, and many more of shortened existence, from the continuance of this unnatural custom, are of daily occurrence. Nurses, possessed of but little moral sensibility, commence this nefarious practice of "giving drops" for fear the babe will be troublesome; and thus its healthy existence is changed into an unnatural dullness, or stupor, which is artfully imposed upon the unsuspecting mother as a mark of superior ability in her profession.

The rude manner in which it is handled during the first month by its newly-made Aunties and others, is deleterious in the extreme. The habit of tossing it in the air is a practice preposterous and dangerous; for its natural inclination to sleep constantly indicates that as uninterrupted a state as possible is the most conducive to health. The exercise consequent upon dressing and washing it is sufficient, and in performing these duties the nurse cannot be too cautious.

Bathing the infant is of much importance. Perspiration is a function of the skin deeply concerned in preserving a healthy state of the system. In fact, there is scarcely an organ that is not more or less deranged in function, when this particular one is impaired; while, on the contrary, if this remain undisturbed in function, the body will mostly be found in the enjoyment of health and comfort. Bathing should not be resorted to as a means of cleanliness only, but to preserve a healthy action of the skin by giving tone and vigor to the capillaries; for the want of which cutaneous eruptions, and protracted, troublesome sores are apt to arise. Mothers too frequently, and nurses still more frequently, are neglectful of these matters; and physicians, also, too often fail in the discharge of their duty in pointing out this shameful neglect. The tender infant is not unfrequently placed in bed between the parents, completely enveloped in quilts, blankets, etc., and there allowed to remain all night, with its clothing saturated with its excretion, for "fear of awaking it," until its own uncomfortable condition disturbs it. How often have we been disgusted by the filthiness of the child's bed and cradle. Yet the poor child can but endure it—it has no redress. See to it, mothers, that the infant is always dry and clean upon going to sleep; and never let a whole night pass without changing your tender offspring; and then will you be but seldom vexed by chafing of the groin, and not so much disturbed of your rest at night, while your child will be good, lively and healthful.

With regard to the dress for children, the general principles that I laid down in Hygiene, No. 4 (Crisis of Feb. 7th, '65), will apply here. And yet, in visiting the nurseries of our fashionable circles, beholding the embroidered lace, worked ruffles, and stiffly starched linen, scratching and chafing the tender skin of the infant, with some important parts of its body uncovered and exposed, and others wrapped with an excess of clothing, one is strongly impressed with the idea that the requirements of idle fashion, or the gratification of empty pride, constitute one great object in the making and arranging of the child's dress; while the health and comfort were the least of all consulted. And the fact that thousands of innocent and tender youth are annually sacrificed on the altar of empty pride and cruel fashion, is equally apparent.

"Such rearing 'mong the rich has thinned their house
In early life, and laid in silent ranks,
Successive with the dead, their infant race."

I deem it unnecessary to dwell upon the various articles of dress; a hint to the wise should be sufficient; and I therefore pass on to the consideration of a more important item in the management of the infant, viz:

ITS PROPER FOOD.

Almost the first cry is interpreted as a demand for food, and the nurse is urged to prepare for it something to keep the "poor little thing" from starving. Or some newly-made Auntie, surcharged with benevolent solicitude, bustles about to prepare a repast in order to prevent so terrible a catastrophe! Molasses and water are produced in huge quantities, and three, four, or a half dozen spoonfuls are thrust down the child's throat which is scarcely yet cleared of mucous. Nothing could be devised which would so readily produce flatulent colic and griping as this mixture of abominations. But unfortunately, Auntie is not satisfied with this, but immediately produces some pap, pomada, gruel, or brings out a portion of its mother's food with a "drop or two of mine" added, which, to say nothing of the quantity, is highly injurious in point of quality, containing spices and other stimulating articles which, if continued through childhood, as is generally the case, forms a taste that rapidly ripens into intemperance and excesses of all kinds.

A teaspoonful of cold water is all the child needs for the first six or eight hours after birth, and then, if the mother does not yet afford its natural food, fresh cow's milk and water, equal parts, with a very small quantity of sugar added, may be given in small quantities every two hours, until the excretion of the mother's milk has taken place. Give it no oil, no saffron, no molasses, nothing but the food mentioned, and if, after three or four hours from the time it has received the first secretion of the mother's breast, its bowels do not move properly, the meconium can be thrown off by the use of a warm water injection. But commence drugging the infant here, and you lay the foundation for disease and doctors' fees from its cradle to its grave. It will become a charge for the doctors soon enough without commencing at its birth.

I would most earnestly protest against the common practice of stuffing the infant upon every slight appearance of pain or uneasiness, though it be food of a proper quality. Most children are made gluttons during the first year. If it falls down and cries; if it has colic from a sour and overloaded stomach, or it cries from any other cause, it is immediately applied to the breast to "stop its noise." In fact, they become so habituated to it, that they cannot go to sleep unless at the breast. This practice is ruinous in the extreme. There should be a regular time for the child to take its nourishment, and it should never be allowed to eat "between meals." For the new-born, once in two or three hours is frequent enough. (See Mr. Newton's excellent remarks in Crisis of Feb. 7th, '65.)

Bristolville, O.

ANTIDOTE FOR POISON.—Mix two ounces of powdered chalk or magnesia, or one ounce of washing soda with a pint of milk, and swallow at one draught, then tickle the back of the throat with the finger or a feather, so as to produce vomiting. Afterwards drink freely of hot milk and water, and repeat the vomiting so as to thoroughly wash out the stomach. Any quantity of chalk or magnesia may be taken with safety, but soda in large quantities is injurious.

RESPIRATION.

One of the most interesting and instructive studies in physiology, is that branch which relates to breathing or respiration. To be best appreciated it should be investigated in all its relations to animal and vegetable life. The first and most constant want of all things endowed with life is air. Respiration goes on night and day in all things living, and cannot be long suspended without fatal consequences. This is particularly true of the higher order of animals.

One of the most important facts connected with this is, that the demand for air in every class of animals, is in proportion to the activity of the muscular and nervous action. Warm-blooded animals, are more active in their habits, and demand more air than those of cold blood. Animals that live fast, need more than those that live slow. Those with predominant development of vegetative functions over the muscular and nervous, breathe less than those where the development is the reverse. The active infusoria breathe more than the sluggish rozopodo. In the cephalopoda the most active of all the moluscs, there is a remarkable provision for the increased demand for air required by their increased activity. In fishes, the arrangement for respiration is very complete, but most perfect in those species which have great muscular power, and can maintain a high independent temperature.

In reptiles respiration and activity are proportionately increased by a certain increase of heat. If the temperature of the water in which a frog or fish is confined, is raised without allowing an increase of air, these animals soon die, because increased respiration requires a proportionate increase of air. The larvæ of insects breathe less than the perfect insects; infants less than adults. Birds consume a great quantity of air; those that have the most powerful flight, respire oftener than those that fly but little. These feathered creations suffer from deprivation of pure air more than almost any other animal, . . .

In wild animals, those most vigorous and active have fine lungs and consume much air. This is particularly noticeable in the lion, tiger, panther, leopard, wild cat, the deer, etc. The best of race horses, and in fact the best of our horses of all varieties, have perfect means for breathing, and their vigor and endurance depend largely upon the proper execution of this function.

In the human race the great development of the muscular and nervous tissues demand perfection of the breathing apparatus as a means by which their complete exercise may be secured.

Men of average size, in good health, consume about twenty-five cubic inches of air in each respiration. Those with small lungs, who take little exercise, who are diseased, or who have great immobility of the shoulders and walls of the chest do not consume of necessity so much. We never expire from our lungs all the air they contain. Indeed, after the most vigorous effort at expiration, as much as one hundred cubic inches of air remains which is unable to be expelled, (and if it could the lungs would collapse, and death would be the result.) Nor do we in ordinary respiration, fill the lungs to their highest capacity; for after an ordinary breath, by effort, at least one hundred cubic inches may still be inspired. There are many exceedingly interesting facts connected with breathing, which may be found in all our text-books on physiology; but the most important of these facts—the one least dwelt upon by writers, and least understood by the people—is this: That the amount of life manifested by each individual is in almost exact proportion to the amount of his breathing.

We have already seen, in the lower forms of animals, that those which breathe most, live most, as in the case of the sluggish rozopodo and the active cephalopoda. This is equally true of the higher forms of life, and most true of man. Diminish the activity of his respiration and at the same time you diminish the activity of all his powers of body and mind. This is very easily illustrated by experiments on animals, and the same law is applicable to them. Take a wild bird, or any other animal, and place it under the bell-glass of an air-pump. It struggles and makes vigorous exertion to escape. Make a few strokes of the pump, thus exhausting the air from the chamber, and the animal falls dead. But if you do not consider this a fair experiment, place a bird in an air-tight glass-bell with a limited supply of air. At first he shows no signs of dullness, but, as the air becomes exhausted the creature becomes stupid, and, in a few hours, if the glass be a small one, dies. It is the same fact that is shown where a candle is placed in the glass, and no air allowed to enter. The light slowly but surely goes out. In proportion as we deprive the flame of air, it ceases to burn. It is so with human beings. As they are deprived of air, they are deprived of life. And in proportion as they are deprived of air, they are deprived of life. With plenty of fresh air, one is bright and active; without it, he is dull and stupid. With it, he is strong; without it he is weak. With it, he is bold; without it he is cowardly. Conversation, play, work, and study are all impossible to be pursued in rooms not well supplied with air. We can sit in rooms not well ventilated, and do nothing without inconvenience; but the moment we try to live in them, we consume rapidly the air, and become exhausted. The amount of life we are able to manifest will graduate itself to the amount of air consumed.—Herald of Health.

The World's Crisis

AND SECOND ADVENT MESSENGER.

TERMS:

If paid in advance,—One year	$2.50
Six months	$1.20
If not paid within six months,—One year	$3.00
Six months	$1.50
Five copies, to one address, six months —same rate for any larger number under ten.	$5.60
Ten copies, to one address, six months —same rate for any number over ten.	$10.00

CLUB PRICES PAYABLE ALWAYS IN ADVANCE.

POSTAGE.—The postage, in the United States, on each single copy of the Crisis, is 20 cents a year, payable quarterly, in advance, at the office of delivery.

RULES FOR CORRESPONDENTS.—Over all matters not intended for publication, write PRIVATE.

Over all business matters, write BUSINESS.

Over all articles for the paper, write FOR THE CRISIS.

All articles should be accompanied by the writer's name, for the Editor's information, even if it is not published.

When the names of new subscribers are sent, please say they are new, and it will save us much labor.

PRIVATE LETTERS.—Those wishing to address the Editor on matters not connected with the office, will please write the word PRIVATE on the outside of the envelope.

Please put the business matters and appointments on a piece of paper separate from other communications.

All persons writing to the office should give DISTINCTLY and PLAINLY the Post Office, County and State at which they wish to be addressed; and all orders, subscriptions, communications and remittances, should be plainly directed to MILES GRANT, BOSTON, MASS.

PUBLISHED ALSO AT THE SAME OFFICE, Semi-monthly:

THE YOUNG PILGRIM:

An Illustrated Sunday School Paper,

FOR CHILDREN AND YOUTH.

TERMS:

[illegible]

Payable always in advance.

POSTAGE.—[illegible]

The World's Crisis

AND SECOND ADVENT MESSENGER.

"BEHOLD, I COME QUICKLY; AND MY REWARD IS WITH ME."

WHOLE NO. 499. BOSTON, TUESDAY, APRIL 25, 1865. VOL. XXI.—NO. 6.

The World's Crisis
AND SECOND ADVENT MESSENGER,
Issued every Tuesday Afternoon, at
167 HANOVER STREET, BOSTON.

MILES GRANT, EDITOR.

EDITORIAL COMMITTEE:
S. G. MATHEWSON, I. C. WELLCOME,
H. F. CARPENTER.

PUBLISHING COMMITTEE:
C. F. HUDSON, H. V. DAVIS,
S. S. BREWER, J. G. HAMBLIN,
D. MATHEWSON.

GEORGE T. ADAMS,
TREASURER AND BUSINESS AGENT.

☞ THE CRISIS is devoted to the exposition of all Bible truth; especially the doctrine of the immediate, personal coming and reign of Christ on the earth; holiness of heart; the unconscious state of the dead; their literal resurrection, and final destruction of the wicked.

For the World's Crisis.

MY HOPE.

The Savior died!
On Calvary's height was crucified,
Was nailed to the accursed tree,
That we joint-heirs with him might be.

Within the tomb
They laid him low, amid the gloom;
Shut out the golden light of day,
But angels rolled the stone away.

And Christ arose
Triumphant over all his foes;
Dispelled the blackness of the tomb,
And backward rolled its waves of gloom.

And now we know,
When loved ones are by death laid low,
That soon a voice from yonder skies
Shall bid them from the dust arise.

For Jesus spoke
Words that a dormant world awoke,
That echoed on from sea to sea,
"There shall a RESURRECTION be."

"A few more days
Of wandering 'mid life's 'wildering maze,
A few more hours of toil and pain,
And all your dead shall live again."

And life's rough way
Is brightened by that heavenly ray,
That speaks of hope for those who sleep,
For they shall wake, but not to weep.

Now, when the grave
Engulphs the good, the true, the brave,
We dash the tears of pain away,
And wait the resurrection day.

O glorious hour!
Death shall relinquish all his power;
For when our dead shall live again,
Christ on this earth shall rule and reign.

MRS. CHARLES A. KNOWLES.

For the World's Crisis.

THE PARIAN CHRONICLE.

NUMBER TWO.

That the reader may be in possession of the facts in the whole matter, we will first give a copy of the Parian Chronicle as found in Dr. Hales' Chronology. Then we will call the attention of all, who are willing to receive the truth, to that part of it which Bro. Stevenson offers in support of his theory.

THE PARIAN CHRONICLE.

Says Dr. Hales, "The Chronicle was constructed upon two distinct and independent principles of computation. The former Analytic, reckoning upwards from B. C. 264, the fixed date or radix, at the bottom; the latter Synthetic, reckoning downwards from the reign of Cecrops, through the succeeding kings, and perpetual, decennial, and annual Archons. The former was an ingenious and compendious mode of reckoning, by adding to the fixed date, successively, supplemental numbers, expressed shortly by numeral letters. This was, probably, the invention of the compiler of the Chronicle, to save labor and expense in engraving it. The other, however, was the original mode employed by the authors from whose works the Chronicle was taken. And that this was the compiler's design, is evident from the omission of the years of each reign, for the most part, which, in the present epochs, so fortunately preserved, are expressed in words at full length, and took up much room.

It is observable, and has been remarked by Selden, and by all the editors of the Chronicle, that there is a difference of about twenty-five years between the two methods of computation; and that this difference is not accidental, but designed, running uniformly through all the dates of the heroic period, from Cecrops to the destruction of Troy; whereas, in the second or historic period, (according to the division here introduced, on Selden's authority), the two methods agree to the end.

The cause of this systematic difference has not been explained, nor even attempted to be explained, by any of the writers upon the Chronicle that have come to my knowledge. Nor will I presume to erect the following conjecture into certainty. Still, however, I flatter myself it will not be adjudged altogether fanciful or unfounded by those candid and skilful readers, who are most willing and most able to appreciate the profound difficulty and obscurity of the subject, in traversing 'the dark backward, and abyme of time.'

In order to prepare the way for this investigation, the first step necessary was to construct a table of the reigns of the Athenian kings, from Codrus downwards, which should critically correspond with the Chronicle, and give the precise year denoted by the twenty-second of Menestheus, in which Troy was taken. Such a table is, I trust, the XIVth, collected from careful comparison of the Chronicon of Eusebius, Petavius, Helvicus, Playfair, etc., with the Chronicle itself; by means of which, I at length discovered that the twenty-second of Menestheus corresponded to the year B. C. 1184, the very year assigned for the taking of Troy by Apollodorus, and the Greek Chronographers in general; and consequently that the Chronicle, in its primitive mode of computation by reigns, established the received date of this leading epoch of Greek chronology.

In constructing this table, I ascended from the fixed date of the appointment of annual Archons, B. C. 684, according to Prideaux and Playfair; and this process gave the commencement of the reign of Cecrops, B. C. 1558, the same year assigned by Petavius from Eusebius. And that it was rightly assigned may be collected from the following considerations:

1. Castor, of Rhodes, who flourished about B. C. 50, reckoned that Cecrops began his reign 780 years before the first Olympiad, B. C. 776, or B. C. 1556, two years later. This date is adopted by Usher.

2. Isagoras, the orator, born B. C. 436, reckoned that 'not less than one thousand years had intervened from the first settlement of the Athenian polity by Cecrops, till its subversion by Pisistratus, B. C. 561.' This would give the accession of Cecrops B. C. 1561, or three years earlier. Whence we are warranted to assume the mean date, B. C. 1558, as correct.

3. This is confirmed by the Chronicle itself:—

By the former method of computation, from the accession of Cecrops, B. C. 1582, to the destruction of Troy, B. C. 1209, was an interval of 373 years; but precisely the same interval results by the latter, from the first of Cecrops, B. C. 1558, to the twenty-second of Menestheus, B. C. 1185. Consequently, B. C. 1558, must have been the specific date upon which the table of reigns, adapted to the Chronicle, was originally constructed.

There appears, at first sight, a slight difference between the twenty-second of Menestheus B. C. 1185, and the received date of the capture of Troy, B. C. 1184. But this is only apparent, depending on the different commencement of the Attic year, about the summer solstice. Troy was taken, according to the Chronicle, on the 24th of Thargelion, or 26th of May, near the end of that Attic year, which therefore began in the Julian year, B. B. 1185, and ended in the succeeding, B. C. 1184. And the critical accuracy of the Chronicle, and correctness of the conjectural reading Thargelion, are vouched by Dion. Hal., who states, that 'Troy was taken near the end of the spring, seventeen days before the summer solstice, on the 23d of Thargelion, according to the Attic reckoning.".....

But how are we to account for this systematic difference between the two methods, of about twenty-five years, which pervades the upper part of the Chronicle, but vanishes in the lower, where both methods agree?

The leading date of the first period appears to be that of the capture of Troy, the established date of which, B. C. 1184, is furnished by the latter method of computation by reigns. But the compiler of the Chronicle, rejecting this date, adopted the earlier, of B. C. 1209, probably on the authority of authors that rated it higher, such as Dicæarchus, a celebrated historian and philosopher of the Aristotelian school, who flourished B. C. 310, or about fifty years before the Chronicle was engraved, and reckoned that Troy was taken B. C. 1212, three years sooner. Whence the compiler found it necessary to raise all the other dates of this period by the same difference of twenty-five years; and by so doing, has proved the inaccuracy of his assumed date, B. C. 1209; because several of the earlier epochs are thereby thrown out of their proper places an entire reign backwards. Thus, epoch 21, the political reform of Theseus, which, by the table of reigns adapted to the latter method, happened B. C. 1234, in the second year of his reign, as confirmed by the testimony of Plutarch and others, that he began his reform soon after his accession to the throne, is thrown back by the former method to B. C. 1259, the twenty-fourth year of the reign of his father Ægeus!"

We will now add the table of the revision of the Chronicle as found in Dr. Hales' Chronology. It stands thus:—Rectification of the Parian Chronicle. Page 227 to the period 31, on page 229, ending with the year B. C. 870.

1. Cecrops, first king of Athens, began to reign, 1558
2. Deucalion reigns in Lycoria, near Parnassus, in the ninth year of Cecrops, 1549
3. Trial of Mars at the Areopagus, for killing Halirrhothius, the son of Neptune, in the second year of Cranaus, 1507
4. Deucalion's flood, flight to Athens, and sacrifice, in the fourth year of Cranaus, 1504
5. The Amphictyons collected by Amphictyon, son of Deucalion, and their assembly at Thermopylæ, in the third year of Amphictyon, king of Athens, 1497
6. The Greeks, called Hellenes, from Hellen, son of Deucalion, and king of Phthiotis, in the fourth year of Amphictyon, 1496
7. The Cadmia, or citadel at Thebes, built by Cadmus, the son of Agenor, who came from Phœnicia in the sixth year of Amphictyon, 1494
8. [Eurotas and Lacedæmon] reign in Laconia, in the ninth year of Amphictyon, 1491
9. Flight of Danaus and his fifty daughters, from Egypt to Lyndus, in Rhodes, in the fourth year of Erichthonius, 1486
10. Erichthonius institutes the chariot-race at the first celebration of the Panathenean games, in the ninth year of his reign, 1481
11. Minos the First reigns in Crete; iron found there by the Dactyli, in the [thirty-third] year of Pandion, [1407]
12. Ceres teaches the sowing of corn at Athens, and
13. Triptolemus at Eleusis, in the sixteenth year of Erichtheus, 1384
14. The poem of Orpheus, on the rape of Proserpine, published in the twenty sixth year of Erichtheus, 1374
15. The Eleusinian mysteries celebrabrated by Eumolpus, ...
16. The Lustration first instituted, in the ninth year of Pandion II., 1301
17. The Gymnastic games instituted at Eleusis, ...
18. The Lycean rites instituted in Arcadia, in the — year of Pandion II., ...
19. Since Hercules [was initiated in the Eleusinian mysteries] in the [first] year of Ægeus, [1284]
20. A tribute of youths and virgins imposed on the Athenians, according to the Oracle, by Minos II. king of Crete, in the fifteenth year of Ægeus, 1270
21. Theseus collected the inhabitants of Attica to Athens, and instituted a popular government in the second year of his own reign, 1234
22. First celebration of the festival called Ammon, in the fifth of Theseus, 1231
23. Since the [Nemean] games were instituted at Athens, in the tenth year of Theseus, 1226
24. The expedition of the Greeks against Troy, in the thirteenth year of Menestheus, 1193
25. Troy taken by the Greeks on the twenty-fourth day of Thargelion, in the twenty-second year of Menestheus, and twenty-fourth day of the month Thargelion, 1184
26. Since the trial of Orestes for killing Ægisthus, at the Areopagus, in the second year of Demophon, 1181
27. Teucer founds Salamis in Cyprus, in the sixth year of Demophon, 1177
28. Athenian colonies planted in Ionia by Neleus, etc., namely, Ephesus, Erythræ, Clazomenæ, etc., in the eighth year of Acastus, according to Eusebius, and in the 140th year after the destruction of Troy, according to Eratosthenes, 1043
29. Hesiod, the poet, flourished in the [fourth] year of Megacles, the perpetual Archon, [919]
30. Homer, the poet, flourished in the ninth year of Diognetus, the perpetual Archon, 884
31. Phidon, king of the Argives, coined silver money at Ægina, in the twenty-third year of Diognetus, 870

If those who are not afraid of the light of truth will now take the Parian Chronicle, and lay it before them on the table, we will examine the matter. The first date that can be adjusted with sacred chronology, so as to have any bearing on the subject, either against or in support of our position, is found in epoch 36. It being imperfect, stands thus: "Since A——s reigned in ——a —— 51 years." Its defects being supplied by the so called "happy conjectures" of the learned, it is made to read thus:—"Since Alyattes reigned in Lydia 341 years," which being added to 264, gives B. C. 605 for the beginning of the reign of Alyattes, who according to Herodotus reigned 57 years (Herod. b. 1, c. 25) and his son Crœsus reigned fourteen years (Herod. b. 1, c. 86). Fourteen and fifty-seven are seventy-one years, which being subtracted from 605, leaves B. C. 534 for the time when Cyrus took Sardis. This was, according to Ptolemy's Canon, four years after the death of Belshazzar, the last king of Babylon, which contradicts Herodotus, who expressly says that Labynetus at this time, that is, when Cyrus took Sardis, reigned over the Babylonians. (Herod. b. 1, c. 77.) Herodotus says that Crœsus invaded Cappadocia, . . . to punish Cyrus, on account of Astyages; for Cyrus, son of Cambyses, had subjugated Astyages son of Cyaxares. . . . Crœsus alleging this against him, sent to consult the oracle, if he should make war on the Persians; and when an ambiguous answer came back, he, interpreting it to his own advantage, led his army against the territory of the Persians."—Herod. b. 1, c. 73—75. From this, it is evident that the war between Crœsus and Cyrus was commenced soon after the death of Astyages. But by following the Parian Chronicle, Bro. Stevenson commences the war about twenty-six years after the death of Astyages; for Cyrus reigned twenty-nine years after his (Astyages') death, and the war only continued for a short time.

But that which shows the impossibility of its being the correct date, is the fact that all admit that the eclipse of Thales occurred in the sixth year of the war between Abyattes and Cyaxares, and, according to Herodotus, the first six years of the reign of Alyattes were spent in a war against the Milesians, (b. 1, c. 19). Hence, even upon the the supposition that the war with the Medes commenced immediately after the ending of the war with the Milesians, the twelfth year of the reign of Alyattes is the earliest period at which we can possibly date the eclipse of Thales, and eleven from 605 leaves 594; hence, according to the Chronicle, B. C. 594 is the earliest period at which we can place this eclipse, which falls nine years below B. C. 603, in which year Dr. Hales and others date the eclipse of Thales, as having then occurred. So that if the Chronicle can be relied on as correct, it proves Bro. S's theory to be incorrect, but it does not interfere with the eclipse which we give, as being that of Thales; for, according to the Chronicle, the reign of Alyattes commenced B. C. 605, and as he reigned 57 years, it gives B. C. 548 for the end of his reign, while the eclipse of Thales occurred B. C. 549, as it is given in our list of eclipses, in the "Book of Daniel Opened."

Therefore while the Parian Chronicle, the only authority that Bro. Stevenson claims in support of his system, proves him to be incorrect, it does not at all interfere with our position. Dr. Hales and others have clearly proven, that at least thirty-one of the first periods in the Chronicle are just twenty-five years too high; hence they must be diminished twenty-five years. See the table called the "Rectification of the Parian Chronicle." That this rectification should have continued five years lower, that is, to the 36th period, we have this positive proof: as it now stands, it places the time when Cyrus took Sardis four years after the death of the last king of Babylon, while it is expressly stated by Herodotus that, when Cyrus took Sardis, Labynetus reigned over the Babylonians.—Herod. b. 1, c. 77. With this clear proof of the necessity of continuing Dr. Hales' rectification of the Chronicle, this period falls twenty-five years lower than it stands in the Chronicle, and 25 taken from 605, we have B. C. 580 for the beginning of the reign of Abyattes; and in the 31st year of his reign the eclipse of Thales occurred, on the 19th of June, B. C. 549, as we gave in our list of eclipses, page 234; and having reigned 57 years, he died B. C. 523. His son Crœsus reigned fourteen years, which gives us B. C. 509 for the time when Cyrus took Sardis. According to our table of chronology, in the "Sealed Book of Daniel Opened," the reign of Cyrus commenced B. C. 511, at which time he subjugated Astyages, son of Cyaxares, who was the brother-in-law of Crœsus, and king of the Medes. Crœsus, alleging this against Cyrus, sent to consult the oracle, if he should make war on the Persians; and when an ambiguous answer came back, he, interpreting it to his own advantage, led his army against the territory of the Persians (Herod. b. 1, c. 73—75). Hence, the war evidently commenced soon after Cyrus had subdued Astyages. The first battle was fought "on the plains of Pteria," and "on the following day" Crœsus "marched back to Sardis," and Cyrus marched "with all possible expedition on Sardis." "Fourteen days" after reaching there, Sardis was taken. (Herod. b. 1, c. 76, 77, 79, 86.)

This evidence clearly shows that Sardis was taken soon after the beginning of the reign of Cyrus, and the end of that of Astyages. According to our chronology, the second year of Cyrus was B. C. 509, which, according to the Parian Chronicle, was the year Cyrus took Sardis; and hence, after all, the Parian Chronicle, with Dr. Hales' method of rectification, proves the correctness of our Bible Chronology.

If the Parian Chronicle had been found in harmony with Ptolemy's Canon, or the chronology in use at the time it was brought to light in the 16th century, it would lack this evidence of its great antiquity. But when we call to mind the remarkable harmony with the correct Bible chronology, which, being then sealed up and closed, was at that time unknown, we herein discover an internal evidence that it was written at the time it claims to have been; or at least before the Jews had corrupted their chronology, and before Ptolemy's Canon was framed. And if it can be relied on as having been written at the time it claims to have been, we must (calling to mind the fact that no established era was in existence at that time) reckon as the Greeks did, in that age, by the Archons. But the list of Archons given in Dr. Hales' chronology is unreliable, and too full of error to be of any service to us, as will be shown in due time. Though we have no correct list of the Archons, as he had who framed the Parian Chronicle, yet, if we can establish a correct epoch from which to commence reckoning, we can, by counting the number of years between each period, get the interval in the same way that he did, by counting the Archons. With the use of the christian era, we can, by making B. C. 264 a fixed date, or radix, at the bottom, easily reckon upwards to the reign of Cecrops, by adding the date in the first period. Thus, 1318 to 264 gives B. C. 1582; but he who framed the Chronicle, having no such era by which to be governed, had to resort to the slow process of counting the number of Archons, as given in the list. And since it would be too tedious to resort to the slow method of counting a thousand Archons, in getting each period, we conclude that the method, as used by the engraver of the marble, was to reckon downwards from the above fixed epoch; for then he would only have to count the number of Archons which fill the interval from the last period he may have given.

Now the Parian Chronicle begins with the reign of Cecrops, the first king of Athens; and, inasmuch as the Greeks place the beginning of his reign in B. C. 1558, this must have been the fixed date from which the author commenced his reckoning; and if we admit that from the date B. C. 1558, the author reckoned downward, instead of upward, from B. C. 264, there will be no necessity of charging the author of the Chronicle of making a mistake of twenty-five years in each of the thirty-one periods, as Dr. Hales has done. From the reign of Cecrops to the destruction of Troy, the Chronicle gives an interval of 374 years; and if from B. C. 1558 we take 374, we have B. C. 1184, which is the fixed epoch for the destruction of Troy. This proves that an error of twenty-five years in each period was not really in the Chronicle, but in those who failed to notice the method on which it was arranged; for the dates on the left hand, giving the year B. C., do not belong to the Chronicle, being only added to point out the year which the Chronicle gives by adding the period in the Chronicle to the year B. C. 264.

WM. C. THURMAN.

For the World's Crisis.

THE COMPUTATION OF ECLIPSES.

WISDOM UNTO SALVATION.

The chronological Canon of Ptolemy has been impugned by Eld. Thurman, if I mistake not, in a mode never attempted before. While others have found difficulties with its chronology, and have stumbled at the discrepancies of the different copies of it, Eld. T. has professed to subvert it by "the truth-testing powers of astronomy," and to show that the eclipses on which it was supposed to rest are largely a tissue of errors;—that several of them either never happened, or they were not such as the record affirms, or they were were probably not seen when they happened. If Eld. T. has not shown this, then the leading and peculiar feature of his book is a fallacy, and must in due time bear the evil fruits of a fallacy wherever it is relied on.

Upon the publication of such a book it was perfectly natural and highly proper that the reader should ask what what were the astronomical attainments of the author. And the propriety of this question is fully recognized by the author. Although in the book itself no astronomical tables or other authority for his computations are cited since the time of Ferguson, yet he tells us in the Crisis, March 14, as follows: "To Ferguson's plan, which makes eclipses "very near the truth," we have added the later discoveries of modern astronomers, thus reducing his tables to a nicer precision; and having thereby, to the strictest correctness, established a meridian mark by which to regulate our time, we have been enabled to notice with some degree of exactness the beginning, ending and quantity of all the eclipses, both of the sun and moon, which have occurred during the last twelve years."

This statement must of course exclude all eclipses made invisible by a cloudy sky, and all eclipses of the sun occurring beyond the limits of our country. And we are also left to conjecture with what apparatus the eclipses were observed;—at what observatories, with telescopes duly mounted, and with good chronometers, measuring the size and place of each eclipse to the small fractions of a degree, and its time and duration to a second. Nor are we told what later discoveries of what modern astronomers have been employed for bringing his computations "to the strictest correctness."

In the Crisis of March 28 I did not know but my remaining curiosity on these points might be gratified. Our author reports, or supposes, several questions to have been asked, among which are the following: 4. "What proof have we that William Thurman is a competent astronomer?" 5. "What books has William Thurman studied?" 6. "What observations has be (Thurman) made?" Now, thought I, we shall probably be informed fully and in proper detail. And if we are not pretty well satisfied now, we are likely never to be satisfied at all.

What replies were given to these questions? If they were good and satisfactory, they are worth repeating. I subjoin the answers, with the numbers.

4. "In answer to which, we ask, which most becomes a humble seeker for the truth? is it to inquire whether Thurman has the worldly honor of being classed among the learned astronomers of the age? or whether he is correct in that which so much concerns the church of God? That which Thurman professes is not the honor of being called a learned astronomer, but to have proven that no astronomical tables can make all the ancient eclipses of the sun and moon in harmony with Ptolemy's canon." Etc.

But this reply, upon the face of it, gives us no new information, and can not be expected to gratify our curiosity. It is only a repeated assertion that he has proved so and so in his book. It does not even tell us whether more recent tables, a hundred times larger than Ferguson's, are any better than his; or even whether Mr. Thurman has examined modern computation to see if they profess, by improved tables, to find the eclipses in question. How can the most "humble seeker for the truth," who did not already accept Mr. T.'s asserted demonstration, be satisfied with this reply?

Besides, the very thing which it now "so much concerns the church of God to know," i. e., Christians concerned in this discussion, is, what are the precise and explicit grounds of confidence in the alleged demonstrations of one who does not profess to be known among astronomers? If one can not have their indorsement, and ought not to ask it, what credentials does he offer instead, beyond his own assertion that he has proved so and so?

But to the next question. 5. "We answer he has studied the books of Moses, Joshua, and indeed all of the books that claim to contain a revelation from God to man. And Paul, at least, thought they contained enough to make one 'wise unto salvation.'"

I do not know that any writer in this controversy has said that Mr. Thurman was not wise unto salvation. For my own part, it will be recollected that when, in November last, I spoke of his peculiar punctuation of Thucydides as "open to criticism if not open to censure," I also spoke of the man with respect bordering on reverence. And if I have used any severity since that time, it has been bestowed wholly upon his arguments. They are now public property; and if they can be pierced through and through with the arrows of refutation, Eld. T. is the first one who should be thankful. The pure gold of sound logic does not dread the fiery ordeal; and it is not worth any one's while to be anxious in behalf of alleged fallacies, unless to see them thoroughly tested, and exposed and abandoned if they are fallacies. The present business is with Mr. Thurman as the Reasoner. The days are gone by when men were put in peril for their reasonings and opinions. In this age, if it is doubted whether any one is a Christian, his modes of reasoning are let entirely alone, and his actions and conduct alone are examined. We hope to meet Mr. Thurman in the kingdom, and raise no question of the integrity and purity of his character and motives. But if men of the best intentions may sometimes err even in conduct, much more may very good men, confessedly unlearned, err in their reasonings.

Now the question, "What books has William Thurman studied?" was certainly a question about his astronomical attainments. And we had some right to expect an answer accordingly. We are only told that Mr. Thurman has studied those books which can make one wise unto salvation. We trust he has learned that lesson thoroughly. But I, for one, fail to see the logic of the reply. Millions of men have been "wise unto salvation," who supposed with Ptolemy that the earth was central, and the sun and stars all traveled round it. Myriads of men, some now living, have been "wise unto salvation," who supposed the earth is flat; who could only guess how the sun gets back from the west in the evening to the east in the morning, whether through a hole in the bottomless foundations of the earth, or by some other route; and whose minds, therefore, were in total eclipse respecting even the cause of eclipses. And, blessed be God, many children have been "wise unto salvation," whose brains would be racked and rent to comprehend the meaning of the word astronomy, and who could barely lisp and prattle the infant prayer,

"Now I lay me down to sleep;
I pray the Lord my soul to keep."

And now, if Eld. T.'s answer is at all pertinent, we are virtually told that any one who is wise unto salvation is competent to refute Ptolemy's Canon by astronomical computations! But of course he can not mean this. What then does he mean? I can only explain in one of three different ways; by supposing, 1, that the reply is designedly a piece of humor, a jeu d' esprit. 2. That it is made at random, or in a careless style of writing, and should pass as an inadvertence; not unlike his saying, apparently, that for twelve years he saw eclipses even behind clouds and eclipses in Asia; or not unlike his seeming to say, in this same article of reply to alleged blunders, that a leap year is sometimes shorter than the ordinary year. 3. That he means to say he has been better employd than in extended astronomical studies. Now such studies may be indeed a weariness to the flesh; but they may be absolutely essential to any trustworthy computation of eclipses, especially at so remote periods, and involving so nice points, as those in question.

To the next question (6) Eld T. answers as follows: "He has observed that though God's sacred book, which was to be 'sealed up till the time of the end,' is now opened, some who profess to be his servants do not manifest love enough for Christ even to inquire whether this be true or untrue."

Eld. T., of course, will not claim that this is an answer pertinent to the question. It is simply a charge against some class of persons as manifesting too little love for Christ. This class of persons is not described beyond all doubt or dispute. We are only told that they seem doubtful or indifferent about the opening of a sealed book; and we all know that Eld. T.'s work is called "The Sealed Book of Daniel Opened." If any reader thinks that Eld. T. here accuses his opponents, or even those who simply doubt his conclusions, as manifesting too little love for Christ, Eld. T. must not be surprised that his meaning is so taken or mistaken. I simply submit that this random style of accusation, however well intended, and made with whatever grief and tears, is entirely out of place in a discussion about the Canon of Ptolemy, and especially by one who is interrogated respecting his own astronomical qualifications for the work he professes to have done so thoroughly and completely.

In the presence of controversial temptation, which is one of the mightiest temptations and from which none of us is infallibly secure, we may say or do things not commendable; and it is simply a Christian kindness to point out such things, even to censure them, recognizing the general integrity of those who thus err. But it is quite another thing, in such a discussion as the present, to charge Mr. Somebody with not manifesting sufficient love for Christ, or for the truth. This is not to argue, but to criminate and accuse. And though no name is mentioned, it involves one of the worst features of personality. For personality in controversy consists, if I mistake not, in alluding to something in the antecedents, relations, opinions, or character of an opponent or of parties concerned, which, however true, may have nothing to do with the merits of the question in hand. Thus, in the present case, somebody may not be as good a Christian as somebody should be; but even all that will not begin to prove that Eld. Thurman is an astronomer competent for the work he alleges he has done.

And if it is at all necessary for me to apologize for my doubts, not of Mr. T.'s wisdom unto salvation, but of his competency to disprove Ptolemy's eclipses, I have designed from the first to give them, just as fully as they may seem to be required.

Meanwhile we shall all willingly hear the more precise and definite replies to the questions that have been asked.

C. F. H.

QUESTIONS TO BE ANSWERED.

1. Why commence the 2300 days at B. C. 426, when these days cover over the vision, and transgression of desolation; and in Daniel 8: 17 it says, "At the time of the end shall be the vision?"

2. As it is claimed that the time of the end commenced A. D. 1823, then somewhere this side of that date we will find the 2300 days: if so be these days cannot be years.

3. When it says in the margin "evenings and mornings," why should we call it years?

4. If 1868 is the Jubilee, what right have we to look for the Lord to come at that date, when it was only for the Jews to return to their own land?

5. May they not do so again?

6. When the whole argument hangs on the idea that the seventy weeks are cut off from the 2300 days, had we not better look again than make these days literal years, and have another great disappointment?

Respectfully submitted.
P. S. W. DEYO.

REPLY TO THE ABOVE.

1. We commence the 2300 days B. C. 426 because they measure the "vision" of the Medo-Persian Ram from the time his "two horns" were already "high," and he begins to "push" for the slaughter of God's ancient people; and also measure the history of the Grecian Goat, with his first "horn," and his subsequent "four horns," and the Roman "horn" that was to continue till "broken without hands." It is not a measurement of literal days, because 70 weeks of years were to be "cut off" from them. Says, Hales, "The word which is translated 'determined' is found only in Daniel 9: 24. Not another instance of its use can be traced in the Hebrew Testament. It has the single signification of cutting, or cutting off." A long measure could not be cut off from a short one; therefore 70 weeks of years could not be cut off from 2300 literal days: hence, the days are prophetic, and span the duration of long-lived kingdoms. "At the time of the end shall be the vision," or, in the language of Prof. Stuart, "The vision is for the time of the end"—to be understood then—not that the component elements of the vision, the Ram, the Goat, the Horn, and the days are to be located exclusively in "the time of the end." If we locate one part of "the vision" there on the strength of this statement, we must every part: for it is "THE VISION," and not a mere part of it, that is for "the time of the end."

2. If the "vision" is to be located in "the time of the end," then somewhere this side of 1823 we must find the "Ram" pushing, the Goat destroying the Ram, the first "horn" of of the Goat broken, its "four" subsequent "horns" springing up, and the "exceeding great horn" growing out of one of these four horns,—that is, if the 2300 days are located in "the time of the end,"—and this would not only prevent our understanding the days as symbols of years, but also prevent our believing the angel's explanation of these beasts: no such kingdoms have risen since "the time of the end" began. The "vision" includes the beasts as well as the 2300 days.

3. The marginal reading, "evenings mornings," refers to literal days, which literal days, are used as symbols of years. Days never mean years unless used as symbols of years.

4. The Jubilee was a type, and, therefore, must have its antitype, and the time of the antitype must correspond with the time of the type: therefore, as 1868 is a Jubilee year, the antitypical jubilee must come then, or not till the next jubilee, forty-nine years after, which the signs show to be nearer; nor could the prophetic measurements be stretched to so remote a date. In the type God's typical people were to return to their typical land: so in the antitype God's antitypical people will possess the antitypical land; and Christ must come first to set us free from the bondage of death and mortality.

5. The typical people have had their day: their only chance is to be "grafted in by faith; "Jerusalem shall be trodden down of the GENTILES till the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled," and Daniel saw that the last Gentile kingdom continued till it was "given to the burning flame." (Dan. 7: 11.)

6. The "whole argument" is not suspended on the idea that the 70 weeks are "cut off" from the 2300 days, though that argument is forcible; but the "vision spans the history of the Ram, Goat, and the "exceeding great horn," which cannot be crowded into 2300 literal days, past or future. The next "great disappointment" will be to the unready ones, I fully believe. May we all speedily get the light on these themes, and unitedly give the judgment alarm to a perishing world.

In due time I intend to show the incorrectness of the claim that the 2300 days are literal days, in the past; and also the claim that they are literal days, and yet future.

Respectfully submitted. W. SHELDON.
—Voice of the West.

For the World's Crisis.

THE NOMINAL CHURCH.

It would seem very desirable, if it were possible, to have all true christians joined in societies, into which no wolf in sheep's clothing could be admitted.

This would be our ideal of the true church. But has such a body with such an organization, ever existed? We cannot look further back than the days of our blessed Savior, in search of such a body, as the forms of the Mosaic law, though kept to the letter outwardly, could hardly fail to cover some hypocrites—whited sepulchres.

If a true church, free from evil men, was to be formed on earth, surely JESUS would be the one to form it. But one of the twelve was a servant of Satan, and some have supposed that about one in twelve of all who have professed conversion were hypocrites at heart. And many more who mean to be honest, seem to run well for a time, and then fall away. Allowing that the majority of the members of evangelical churches intend to be honest, we must admit that as a body they are in a state of drowsiness and stupor, nearly allied to spiritual death. Where this state does not prevail, there we may look for revivals. It is lamentable, indeed, to behold the spectacle of a backslidden church joined in affinity with the world like Jehosaphat with Ahab. O, that the messengers of the LORD, with tongues of fire might arouse the sleepers, and persuade them to prepare for the coming of the LORD. Let each one who has the light, see that it shines, and all who can do anything to arouse the sleepers, do it with their might.

F. H. CHAMBERLAIN.

For the World's Crisis.

SCATTERED TRUTHS.

GATHERED BY E. A. A.

He who loses anything and gets wisdom by it, is gainer by the loss.

The votaries of fashion starve their happiness to feed their pride.

A little deaf and dumb girl being asked what prayer was, wrote on her slate, "Prayer is the wish of the heart."

A blind child being asked what forgiveness was, replied, "It is the odor that flowers breathe when trampled upon."

Work for the Lord while you are waiting for him; and wait for him while you are working.

The troubles of most men are mere apprehensions; like fog, they are not found when you reach them.

Those who are contented with little deserve much; and those who deserve much, are the most likely to be contented with little.

Above all circumstances itself, religion will lift man above them.

Hell (a wise man has said) is paved with good intentions. Pluck up the stones, ye sluggards, and break the devil's head with them!

As the nettle does not sting when stoutly grasped, so the petty vexations of life, met with determination, lose their power to annoy.

Obedience not prompted by love for a crucified Savior, is but the grimace of a galvanized corpse.

One of the saddest things about human nature is, that a man may guide others in the path of life without walking in it himself; that he may be a pilot and yet a castaway.

He who is patient and keeps silent, overcomes his calamities by the service of love.

Family friction needs the oil of prayer.

Afflictions are God's hired laborers, to break the clods and plough the land.

Truth is the basis of all excellence. It is the intellectual gold, which is as durable as it is valuable.

The trials of life cannot be avoided by shrinking from the duties which they impose.

It is better to err in the behalf of pity, than listen to the call of self-love.

It is easier to censure others than to correct ourselves.

For the World's Crisis.

A VOICE FROM MONTREAL.

Bro. H. L. Hastings has been on here, and preached in Bonaventure Hall for over two weeks. The meetings have generally been interesting. Some have been added to the number of those who are looking for the coming kingdom, and scores of others have been shaken in the faith they once had of dying and going direct to heaven. The truth has been presented in such a plain and forcible manner, many have been led to see the absurdity of the old heathen theory of a man being a part of God, and though after he is dead, the real conscious being still lives and escapes away to a spirit-land, or, as it is said, to paradise, to the presence of God, to heaven, to hell, or to purgatory, as their teachings or preferences may suggest. O that Protestants would study the theology of the Bible, and cast from them all the absurdities which they have learned from Popery. Let them protest against all Popish errors, and not go only half way.

It is the duty of every honest man who sees the light which the Scriptures shed on this subject to protest against an absurdity which is productive of such evil consequences. But there are a great many who have been convicted of the truth, and see the light as we see it, and still their lips are sealed in its defence. Their hearts are with us,—but old associations, interest, and other considerations keep them away from us, and they still continue to fellowship with those who brand us as heretics and infidels. A great many here in Montreal have expressed their surprise, when these truths were brought so convincingly before them, that these truths were concealed so long, and have been led, as they expressed it, to look upon the Bible as a new book, and also have been led to study it more. But it is only a few radical and independent minds who are willing to come out and identify themselves with a cause which will bring upon them reproach. The fear of man has a wonderful influence upon some. I believe it to be a fact, and to a certain extent am acquainted with it, that there are hundreds of persons belonging to the different churches here who are disgusted with the immortal-soul theory as taught by their ministers. The little tracts and books that have been scattered far and wide have done their work.

One great barrier to the spread of truth is worldly-mindedness. A great many of the professing christians are so worldly-minded that they take little or no interest in religious matters,—the truth or fallacy of a doctrine they don't care about inquiring into. They go backwards and forwards to their fashionable churches, as the door upon its hinges, and the truths of christianity give them little or no concern. Hence we receive no opposition from that quarter; all the opposition comes from the sectarian bigot, who thinks more of his creed and the particular denomination which he is seeking to extend, than he does of the truth. How foolish and unchristian-like this is! There is no common sense in such prejudices as lead men to condemn others without having heard them and judging for themselves. I have noticed that those who occasionally attend our meetings, but who do not profess any marked sympathy with us, have had, to a great degree, their prejudices and unbelief removed; a portion of light appears to dawn upon their minds, which I have no doubt in many cases will be increased, and truth in the end will triumph over error.

When there is such a vast amount of ignorance amongst the christian churches of nearly all denominations with respect to many of the most important truths contained in the Scriptures, it is of the utmost importance that these greatly neglected truths should be dwelt upon as frequently as possible. Agitation, argument, and all the force of reason, should be brought to bear upon them by all those possessing the light, and at the same time making a judicious use of those means, and not unwarrantably forcing our opinions upon those who have no ears to hear.

The christian world, who hold to the immortal-soul theory, require to be enlightened on the subject of the coming kingdom,—that this kingdom is to be established on the earth when Christ comes to reign, and that this kingdom is not an etherial abode where men go after death. They require to be enlightened on the subject of the state of the dead,—that when a man dies he "lieth down and riseth not till the heavens be no more," and that while in this state they "know not anything," which the Scriptures emphatically teach, and the opposite theory is nowhere taught therein. They require to be enlightened on the subject of the destiny of the wicked,—that "all the wicked will God "destroy"; that "the wicked shall perish, and the enemies of the Lord shall be as the fat of lambs; they shall consume; into smoke shall they consume away"; that "the transgressors shall be destroyed together; the end of the wicked shall be cut off." They require to be enlightened on the subject of the time when the righteous will be rewarded and the wicked punished; that the saints do not obtain their reward, and crown, and glory, in heaven at death, but in the kingdom of Christ at his coming; that 'when the Son of man shall come," . . . he shall say "unto them on the left hand, Depart from me ye cursed into everlasting fire, prepared for the devil and his angels."

All these subjects have been prominently brought before us here in Montreal, and dwelt upon very forcibly by Bro. Hastings and our good Bro. D. T. Taylor, who preaches here fortnightly. JOHN WILSON.

Montreal, C. E.

For the World's Crisis.

ORDINATION IN PORTLAND, ME.

Bro. C. Goud, of Topsham, Me., was set apart for the work of the gospel ministry, by the laying on of hands, at a public meeting appointed for that purpose, in the "Second Advent Hall," Portland, Me., on the evening of Feb. 24th. The occasion was a happy and interesting one. Elds. Wm. H. Mitchell, R. R. York, and I. C. Wellcome, united in the services of the ordination. Bro. Mitchell preached an important and impressive discourse on the commission and duties of the christian ministry.

Bro. Goud has been preaching in Portland several weeks, with good results; and on Lord's day, following his ordination, he baptized five happy converts to Christ. We will here remark, that Bro. G. is a faithful and worthy man, "apt to teach," and should be encouraged in the work by the church of Christ. He will not betray their confidence, nor sow discord among them. May God give him abundant success, in leading souls to Christ, and soon bring us all into the everlasting kingdom. I. C. WELLCOME.

The World's Crisis AND SECOND ADVENT MESSENGER.

Boston, Tuesday, April 25, 1865.

☞ TAKE NOTICE.

All subscriptions for the Crisis are payable in advance, at the rate of $2.50 a year; but if delayed six months beyond the time of payment, the rate is $3.00 a year, or $1.50 for six months. Thus 50 cents a year is saved by paying in advance.

LOWELL.

We spent Lord's day, April 16th, in Lowell, Mass., and had a profitable season. The church there is doing well, and feels encouraged to press forward. Their weekly prayer meetings are heart-cheering. New ones are becoming interested in the way of life. Three happy souls were baptized, and others, we trust, will soon follow in the steps of our Redeemer.

THE JUBILEES.

When did the jubilee years begin? We find there are two opinions on the subject. Some think they began at the same time as the Sabbatical year; and others, that the Sabbatical year began in the spring, with the month Nisan, and the jubilee year in autumn, with the month Tisri. We have endeavored to carefully weigh the arguments on both sides, and compared them with the Scripture, and will give our readers the result. In Leviticus we read as follows:—

"And thou shalt number seven Sabbaths of years unto thee, seven times seven years; and the space of the seven sabbaths of years shall be unto thee forty and nine years. Then shalt thou cause the trumpet of the jubilee to sound on the tenth day of the seventh month, in the day of atonement shall ye make the trumpet sound throughout all your land. And ye shall hallow the fiftieth year, and proclaim liberty throughout all the land unto all the inhabitants thereof: it shall be a jubilee unto you; and ye shall return every man unto his possession, and ye shall return every man unto his family. A jubilee shall that fiftieth year be unto you: ye shall not sow, neither reap that which groweth of itself in it, nor gather the grapes in it of thy vine undressed. For it is the jubilee; it shall be holy unto you: ye shall eat the increase thereof out of the field. In the year of this jubilee ye shall return every man unto his possesion. . . . And if ye shall say, what shall we eat the seventh year? behold, we shall not sow, nor gather in our increase: Then I will command my blessing upon you in the sixth year, and it shall bring forth fruit for three years. And ye shall sow the eighth year, and eat yet of old fruit until the ninth year; until her fruits come in ye shall eat of the old store."—Lev. 25: 8–22.

It must be admitted that "the trumpet of the jubilee" sounded "on the tenth day of the seventh month," as expressly declared in the Scriptures; and all admit that this time was in autumn, in our September. As the jubilee trumpet always sounded on the tenth day of the seventh month, it certainly follows that it was not the first month, hence the year, of which it was the seventh month must have begun in the spring of the same year, which was the month Nisan, or first month of the sacred year. Thus it appears certain that the jubilee trumpet sounded on the tenth day of the seventh month of the sacred year. We can see no possibility to come to any other conclusion; for if the jubilee trumpet sounded on the tenth day of the seventh month of the civil year, then it would be in the month Nisan, in the spring, the first month of the sacred year; but the Bible is very plainly against such a conclusion. Then we must consider the following points settled.

1. "The trumpet of the jubilee" sounded "on the tenth day of the seventh month," in autumn..

2. That it was the tenth day of the seventh month of the sacred year, which began at the first new moon after the vernal equinox.

When speaking of the Jewish Calendar, Calmet says:—The first month of the civil year" was "the seventh month of the sacred year;" and "the seventh month of the civil year" was "the first month of the sacred year." —Calmet, V. ii. Jewish Calendar.

With these facts before us, let us pursue the examination of the subject, and see if all is harmonious. The only objection, of any weight, that we have seen, is based on the following scripture:—

"Speak unto the children of Israel, and say unto them, When ye come into the land which I give you, then shall the land keep a Sabbath unto the Lord. Six years thou shalt sow thy field, and six years thou shalt prune thy vineyard, and gather in the fruit thereof; but in the seventh year shall be a Sabbath of rest unto the land, a Sabbath for the Lord: thou shalt neither sow thy field, nor prune thy vineyard. That which groweth of its own accord of thy harvest thou shalt not reap, neither gather the grapes of thy vine undressed: for it is a year of rest unto the land."—Lev. 25: 2–5.

The ground for the objection is this: the Lord permitted the children of Israel to sow and reap six years, which they could not do if the Jubilee year began on the 10th day of the seventh month of the sacred year. It will be seen from examination, that there would be the same difficulty if the jubilee and Sabbatical years began at the same time, in the month Tisri,—the seventh month. But it has already been shown that with such an arrangement the jubilee would be in the first month, instead of the seventh.

Let the following diagram be taken to illustrate the point:—

48*	49*	50*	51*
6	7	8	9

In the above diagram, the 49th year, and the 7th under it, represent the Sabbatical year, beginning with the month Nisan, in the spring. The stars represent the beginning of the civil year, in autumn, or the seventh month of the sacred year. Now suppose again, for argument's sake, that the Sabbatical and jubilee years begin together in autumn, in the month Tisri. Then this must be the first month, and not the seventh. The 48th, or 6th year, would then end in autumn at the first star in the diagram. At this point the 49th, 7th, or Sabbatic year, would begin, and end at the second star, in the autumn. As this was a sabbatic year, they could not sow nor reap. At the second star, corresponding with the beginning of the 50th, or 8th year, would commence the jubilee year, in our September, and end at the third star, in the end of the 50th, or 8th year, in September. They were not allowed to sow nor reap in the 50th year, because it was a jubilee year. The sowing time for wheat did not come till October and November, one or two months after the end of the 8th year, if we take the foregoing arrangement. Hence they would not sow till the NINTH year; but the Lord said: "Ye shall sow the EIGHTH year, and eat of the old fruit until the ninth year; until her fruits come in ye shall eat of the old store."

But even supposing the foregoing arrangement had allowed them to have sown in the eighth year, it should be remembered that the jubilee was made to begin in the first month, and not the seventh, because both the sacred and civil years were supposed to begin together in autumn, which is certainly contrary to the express direction of the Lord. See Exodus, which reads as follows:—"And the Lord spake unto Moses and Aaron in the land of Egypt, saying, This month [Abib or Nisan] shall be unto you the beginning of months; it shall be the first month of the year to you."—Ex. 12: 1–2.

Again, if we call the month Tisri [September], where the civil year begins, the first month of the year in which the jubilee occurs, it follows that we must pass to the tenth day of the seventh month of that same year or the next spring, which would carry its termination into the spring of the ninth year, in which case they could not sow till the tenth year.

We return to consider again the objection founded on Lev. 25: 2–5, that they could not sow "six years," if the sacred year began in the spring. We have already shown that they could not sow but five years, if they began the sacred and civil years together in autumn.

The Scripture does not say they shall sow wheat six years; but "six years thou shalt sow thy field, and six years thou shalt prune thy vineyard, and gather in the fruit thereof." Lev. 25: 2–5. Six years they could attend to agricultural duties. The ordinary time for sowing wheat, in Palestine, was October and November, but they sowed other kinds of corn in the spring, and harvested them the same year, and the fruit of the vineyard was not gathered till September. Cotton was gathered in September.

Thompson says:—"Rice, Indian wheat, corn of Damascus, which produces a long stalk, and has an ear like millet, are sown this month [March] in Lower Egypt."—Thompson's Travels, vol. ii. p. 169.

The editor says:—"I have inserted this, because I have not been able to get any information concerning the time when these sorts of corn are sown in Palestine." They must be sown a little later of course, because Egypt is further south than Palestine. Hence these kinds of corn must be sown in Palestine as late as April, in which case they would sow and reap them the same year, and this would give the six years' sowing and reaping. Thus the difficulty, relative to the six years of sowing and reaping, seems to vanish away, if we have the sacred year begin in the spring, with the month Nisan, and the Jubilee year in the tenth day of the seventh month of the same year, which is in September.

Let us now refer to the diagram once more, and see if all is not plain. The perpendicular lines represent the points where the sacred years end, in the spring; and the stars where the civil years begin in autumn. The 49th, or 7th year of the series, is a sabbatical year, in which no work could be done; but "on the tenth day of the seventh month" of that year, the jubilee trumpet sounded, when the jubilee year began, and continued till the corresponding time in the 50th, or 8th year. But as the civil, or jubilee year, closed before it was time to sow in the 8th year, the instruction given by the Lord could be observed. "Ye shall sow the eigthh year, and eat of the old fruit until the ninth year; until her fruits come in, ye shall eat of the old store."

The sixth year brought "forth fruit for three years."—Lev. 25: 21. The sixth year was one, the seventh two, and the eighth three; but as they only sowed in the eighth year, of course they must eat of the "old fruit until the ninth year, until her fruits come in," which was the spring harvest of what was sown in the autumn of "the eighth year." With this view all seems plain and harmonious.

A gentleman in East Boston, who had conversation with an intelligent Jew, was informed that the jubilee trumpet sounded on the tenth day of the seventh month of the forty-ninth year, and from that time to the close of the year was a time of rejoicing. At the beginning of the fiftieth year, in the month of Nisan, the priests commenced distributing the land according to the law given by Moses, relative to the jubilee, and by the close of the jubilee year, in September, arrangements were completed, so that each one could commence the cultivation of his portion of the land, and sow it that autumn, which was the eighth year.

Taking this view, every thing seems harmonious with the Scriptures; hence, we have come to the conclusion that the jubilee year begins on the tenth day of the seventh month of the forty-ninth sacred year, and ends at the corresponding time of the fiftieth. While it takes in a part of the forty-ninth sacred year, it comprises the entire fiftieth civil year; consequently, it is in one sense the forty-ninth year, and in another, the fiftieth.

AN APOLOGY may be due our readers for the long article on the first page. It was designed for two articles; but by a mishap the two are in one.

PERILS INCREASE.

Notwithstanding the apostle was inspired to prophesy that "in the last days perilous times shall come," some have been thinking that the worst were past, or would close up with the war. We find no such intimation in the Scriptures. They most clearly teach that when we come to the "perils" of the last days they will grow "worse and worse" unto the end of the present dispensation.

Men seem to have become more "heady" within a few days than ever. The spirit of mobocracy appears to be upon a rapid increase. Each is anxious to have his own way, if possible; but if not, then look out for trouble. Human life is taken as a thing of but little value. Robbers and assassins are all about us, and growing bold over their success in wickedness.

The close observing statesman sees a strong probability of trouble not far in the distance, that will try men more than the war through which we have been passing. A struggle of somewhat different character is evidently at hand.

Says the Boston Journal of April 12th:—

"So far as the existence of the rebellion depends upon the arbitrament of arms, every citizen may safely hold himself at rest. But let no man be therefore deluded into the thought that the Republic is safe. The contest through which the nation for the four years past has been struggling, sometimes in light and sometimes in darkness, has been a contest for the supremacy of ideas, not of men; or if of men, then only as they were the embodiments of ideas. Every contest that was not for the temporary aggrandizement of individuals, or families, or dynasties—every contest that did not spring from pride, or passion, or lust, eminently from the beginning—every contest in which humanity has had interests in which the growth of human attributes, the freedom of human action, or the enthronement of human rights has formed any part of the issue, has been conducted in the presence and under the pressure of two absorbing perils—the peril of power and the peril of ideas. The one is the department of arms, the other of statesmanship, diplomacy and strategy. The one is the question of military science and skill, of army organization, of army movements, of commissary supply, of sanitary precaution and relief, of soldierly valor and endurance. Its office is to determine whether the time for the inauguration of the new thought has come, and this it does by conquering the higher vantage ground by the sword and the cannon. By superiority of power it overcomes opposing obstacles, straightens the crooked paths, levels the cragged hills: it is the forerunner of the thought that is stirring underneath, and is to come to light. It deals not itself with ideas, it creates no limitations, makes no announcements, it only opens the way. Its sole issue to every element of opposition is unconditional surrender. It takes possession—holds guard over the vanquished. When it achieves victory all the peril of power is determined.

But with the subsidence of arms arises the second crisis, more to be feared than the first, because subtler in its terms, more hidden in its operations, and resting not so much on open facts and issues, as in significant inferences, pregnant implications—logical sequences of ideas. The peril of this crisis is lest the thought for which the expenditure of life and treasure has been made shall be robbed of its legitimate significance, shall have its influence foreshortened, its beneficences still-born. In this crisis words and definitions become the basis of the new life of the State. If the thought to be enthroned is freedom, and it be cut short of its full scope by allowing the possibility of human subjection, it will be called upon again, sooner or later, to try a second or a third time its very title to life. . . . The power of the North was in peril; it was in suspense whether the North ultimately could by any means bring its rebellious subjects to submission. Strong, wise, patriotic men have doubted its ability, and trembled. This peril is now passed, and the nation emerges jubilant to undertake the management of a peril more difficult and intricate of adjustment than any it has yet assumed."

THE MOURNING.

We very much doubt whether mourning was ever so universal and deep for any one man before, as it has been the past week for Abraham Lincoln. The amount of mourning drapery displayed in our city is almost to an incredible extent. Hundreds of yards hang in festoons from single buildings. It seems as though the people could not do enough to satisfy their feelings.

A Washington correspondent of the Daily Advertiser says:—

"From every store in the city has been bought the last yard of any material symbolical of mourning, and miles upon miles of crape flutter upon every street, and upon houses of every degree. For nearly two miles of Pennsylvania avenue there is a continuous and unbroken line of draped buildings, while upon several other streets there are stretches of a mile which show scarcely half a dozen houses that fail to join the general mourning. No national calamity ever before so came home as a personal loss, for this death is one counted by every man as that of his best friend. This frowning sky, this sobbing day, these low and agonizing words, these closed stores, offices, and departments, these stern sentries, pacing to and fro in strange places, these miles of crape, are but signs of a grief that no outward manifestations can wholly express."

For the World's Crisis.

THE NEW WESTERN TENT.

Pledges indicate the probable success of the enterprise. Let others send in forthwith. Let the whole amount be made up within a week or two, without further talk. Let us raise about $500, and get a tent that will be right while about it. I intend to pitch it for ten or twelve days in a place, and call to my aid true men of God, and try to press the battle earnestly. The tent will be largely used in Wisconsin, though not exclusively. Will not some of my old eastern friends lend a helping hand again? Feeling confident that the enterprise will succeed (even if I have to borrow money), those who wish to remit at once, instead of pledging, may do so. Direct to me at Baraboo, Sauk Co., Wis., or to Bro. Grant. W. SHELDON.

P. S.—Those who desire meetings may begin to inform me, and I will select as duty may dictate. W. S.

Pledges for Eld. Sheldon's Tent.

(To be paid by the first of June.)

Brn. Braley, Quimby & Sargant	$100.00
W. Sheldon	100.00
G. G. Godfrey	10.00
H. Cooshman	10.00
C. Rice	10.00
A. W. Bethel	10.00
H. Button	10.00
C. Silver	10.00
P. W. Matts	10.00
John Matts	5.00
J. Jenkins	5.00
S. Nye	10.00
S. Basford	10.00
Joseph Eells	10.00
E. Tallman	10.00

THE NEW $2000-TRACT FUND.

We, the undersigned, agree to give the sums affixed to our names for the purpose of raising TWO THOUSAND DOLLARS to aid the Christian Publication Society in the gratuitous distribution of tracts.

Previous donations	$775.46
Mrs. C. Warner	1.00
M. C. W.	.30

POOR FUND DONATIONS.

To pay for Papers sent to the Poor.

Whole number sent free 800. Amount $2000.00.

Previous donations	$379.57
H. Holkins	7.50
N. Bassett	2.00
A. C. Scranton	.67
Ira Morgan	5.00

For the World's Crisis.

THE ITALIAN MISSION.

DEAR BRO. GRANT:—God in rich mercy has kept us through another month, and we enjoy health and many blessings. We rejoice in the return of spring, always lovely, but here especially beautiful and health-inspiring. A few hardy flowers have blossomed through the winter, spite of some frosts and snows, and the past two months the vales and hillsides have been quite gay with these lovely ornaments of nature. Through Jan. and Feb. we had most of the time delightful weather, similar to that of May in New England. The husbandmen were busy in their vineyards and fields, and some even planted potatoes in the latter part of Jan. There was occasionally a light fall of snow during those months, which the warm sun, however, soon melted. But since the 11th of March much snow has fallen. It has been some of the time two or three feet deep on the hills near us, and although there have been many warm, sunny days since that time, it has not all melted yet, as storm has succeeded storm. We have found the climate thus far all we could desire.

God is indeed lavish of his gifts in beautiful Italy. But the people know not how to appreciate their natural advantages and make the most of them. They seem to have no idea of comfort. Every thing here is many centuries behind the times. Their houses, which are built somewhat like forts, several connected together in two rows facing each other, and enclosed entirely by means of a large gate, are built invariably of stone, the walls of which are from two to three feet thick. They are roofed with large flat stones, with floors often of the same solid material. In many of the houses, however, earth takes the place of stone, there being no floors. Most of the houses are lighted with paper instead of glass, and outside the windows are strong iron gratings, and in addition there is often a network of coarse iron wire outside the grating. Strength and safety seem to be the only thought in the construction of their dwellings, and health, comfort and taste not to be taken into account. As they are quite cool and damp, even when it is warm and sunny without, much artificial heat is necessary for comfort, as well as to guard against disease.

Fuel is expensive. Wood is principally used, and in common with every thing here—there is scarcely an exception—is sold by weight. Seventy-five lbs. sell for one franc or more. Though this is quite an item in our expenses, the people here expend but little, if any more, for fuel in winter than in summer, using only what is necessary for cooking purposes. They keep up the animal heat in a way of their own, which may seem incredible to you, as it did to us when first informed of it, but which is nevertheless strictly true. I do not believe that my American readers ever thought of substituting the heat of their cattle for wood and coal. But the people of this part of Italy economize thus. Their "ecuries," or stables, form a part of the lower story of their houses. They are good sized rooms, constructed in the same manner as their other rooms, and equally comfortable. In them they keep all their domestic animals, during cool weather, and treat them with much care and kindness. The floor is covered with dry leaves, of which the people gather abundance in autumn. In one part of the room the cattle are securely fastened; the other, which is as well lighted as their other rooms, serves as a sitting-room for the family, and seems to be, of all their apartments, the dearest to them. No family however rich, no lady however well dressed, can dispense with the comfort of sitting through the day in the "ecurie," or think of depriving those who call on them of the same luxury!

After spending eight months among the Vaudois, laboring for their spiritual good, we cherish the hope that there are many among them who will soon exchange their simple and unpolished life for the glory of the New Jerusalem state; that the truths they hear and embrace will exercise such a sanctifying, elevating influence upon them, that they will be fitted for a nobler life here, and prepared to "stand upon the sea of glass, having the harps of God," and enjoy forever that future life of blessedness to which all the luxury and magnificence of the present state bear no comparison.

We feel the necessity of organizing a little church here that with the blessing of God may be as a light shining from these Alpine mountains, piercing the thick darkness that surrounds us, to enlighten the surrounding nations. I do not desire a large church; I do not look for multitudes "uncircumcised in heart" and "lukewarm," but prefer to be associated with a few faithful, reliable children of God, however poor, who give good evidence of being dead to the world, than with thousands of the worldly and unconverted. I consider it very important, especially in Europe, that all who may profess a belief in the solemn and glorious truths we preach, shall be lively stones in this spiritual house, and able, with the assistance of God, to stand firmly amidst all the surrounding opposition.

Owing to the bad weather of which we have had much the past month, I have preached but twenty-one times here. Spent the 12th of March at Turin, and had a warm reception from my friends there, whom I found firm in the faith of the Lord's soon coming; and I preached once to a small but attentive congregation. I found in Turin one hundred and sixty of my countrymen, Polanders, from eighteen to sixty years of age, who escaped from Poland during the last war, and are in a very critical situation. Without means, without occupation, and destitute of the true religion of Christ. It is worse in Paris, as many more have found refuge there from banishment or the scaffold. I spoke to them in Turin, and found them very kind and disposed to receive good counsel; but in a state bordering on despair. I returned home with a very sad heart, weighed down with a sense of the awful situation of my once happy country of twenty-two millions of people, many of them now murdered, banished, or in exile. Dear brethren and sisters, please join with me in prayer that I may be free to preach to them the everlasting gospel, and labor to bring some of them to a knowledge of the truth, that they may be saved. There is no hope of them in the present state; but as Paul said of his countrymen: "My heart's desire is that they may be saved."

I regret that I have not been able to visit Milano and other large places, as I had hoped before this to do; but I have not been able as yet. In my judgment it would be unwise to travel without some publications to scatter abroad; as I consider them of even more importance to the spread of the truth than preaching. We have already commenced the translation of some of our best American tracts, and we trust that some of God's stewards, to whom he has entrusted the "unrighteous mammon," will feel also the great importance of spreading abroad the important truths we preach by means of publications, and contribute to this end, that we may be able to buy a hand press, paper, type and ink, and publish them and others without delay.

We request the especial prayers of our brethren and sisters in our behalf, that all we do may be owned and blessed of God, and that his work may prosper in our hands. With grateful hearts for the assistance you have recently sent us, for your christian cooperation in this great work, I remain your faithful Bro. in Christ, M. B. CZECHOWSKI.

La Tour, Pellice, via Turin, Italy, April 1st, 1865.

For the World's Crisis.

NEW YORK GENERAL CONF.

DEAR BRN. AND SRS.:—I wish to call your attention to this meeting. Years gone by, we as a people have enjoyed many precious seasons in mingling our voices together in worshiping God. Much good has been the result. But that was at a time when the great truth of the soon coming of the Lord inspired our hearts to much zeal; and doctrines of minor importance were not allowed to separate us as a people. But since that time many influences have been at work to separate our interests. We have, to a great degree, become scattered in our labors, and divided in our feelings, and come far short of filling our mission to the world. The result has been, our influence has fallen, our zeal cooled off, God's cause dishonored, hearts have been hardened, and our state, like a burnt district, lies smouldering in its ruins, and the devil with his damnable heresies is gloating over our condition. It is in view of these surroundings, this general meeting has been called, and that call signed by so many, who anxiously wait to cooperate as one common brotherhood, looking for the soon coming of the Lord.

We have already spent too much time in disputing about questions to no profit. Then let us come together at this meeting with a determination to have a good meeting, and that we will unite our efforts in trying to prepare the world for the judgment. To do this, we must be willing to live, and let live. We must realize that it is not possible for us all to be alike on all minor points; but at the same time we all agree that we are living in the exhausted state of prophecy, and that the Lord must soon come. Then let us come together with willing hearts and ready minds to work for the Lord. If we thus come, we shall be united, and the Lord's work will prosper in our hands. But if we come for strife and vain glory, we shall go home as lean as we came. Then come, all that feel a love for the truth and have a desire to labor, come to this meeting. But if you are coming to give light, and take none, or to ride your own peculiar hobby, then stay at home; your room will be much more desirable than your company; for we have already had too many such gatherings, which have resulted in ruin.

Dear Brn. and Srs., make this meeting a subject of prayer, that God's blessing may rest upon the effort. Your Bro. in Christ, C. B. TURNER.

P. S.—Other arrangements will be published in due time. See notice.

Correspondence.

From Sr. Annie Parry.

ELD. GRANT:—Dear Sir:—It is my painful duty to announce to you the sudden death of our dear sister, Mary Parry. She died of diphtheria. Was taken sick on Monday, and on Friday afternoon fell asleep in Jesus. She was a kind and affectionate sister; a true christian. She lived to do good, often denying herself comforts that she might have to give to the needy. Chloe Lankton had her last aid and sympathy. She was induced to purchase one of her books from something she read respecting her in the Crisis. After reading her life, she set about doing what she could. She bought six books, and gave to her friends. Got them interested and in that way collected a few dollars, which she sent, with Muller's Life of Faith. When she was taken sick, she had in her purse some money which had been given her for Chloe. She told me to send it. She had spoken the Sabbath previous to our minister, asking him to present her case to the Sabbath school, which he did, and last Monday $17.00, with what she left, was collected. It will be sent this week. She received two letters from Chloe; one I have before me now. Many friends will be raised up for the poor, suffering one, through the instrumentality of our dear departed sister. I thought as she was a contributor to your columns, you might wish to notice her death. Her end, as her life, was peace. Your sister in Christ, ANNIE PARRY.

Davenport, Mich., April 11th.

From Bro. B. Spaulding.

BRO. GRANT:—Once more I am in the field of my Master. I came direct to Kennebunkport, when acts of kindness and words of love, which make this earth an Eden, like to heaven above, almost cured me of my low spirits. The kindness of brethren and sisters made me weep tears of joy, I felt so unworthy of their sympathy and kindness. Here providentially I met Bro. Piper, whom I had never seen. I am glad to meet God's faithful, humble servants.

Found a good interest at Kennebunkport. The brethren are well united, striving together for the faith of the gospel. I am glad to find some places where there is no discord. At Biddeford the good work of the Lord has been going on for some months past, and quite a number have embraced the truth and put on the Lord Jesus by baptism. Six were buried in this emblematical ordinance by our beloved Bro. Mitchell last Sunday. Solemnity rested on every mind. The Holy Spirit was present, and God blessed his own ordinance. The church here are alive, and in working order. Found in Biddeford, that kindness, hospitality and liberality reigned in the hearts of the children. O that this good spirit were more generally cultivated.

I received a large bundle of tracts at Biddeford, for which I thank the Publication Society. I give one in every family, and add some words of exhortation, and very generally pray. I will do my best to put them into the hand of those who will read them. Pray for me, ye who can pray, for I need much strength. Yours, B. SPAULDING.

Biddeford, Me.

From Sr. S. E. Teeple.

BRETHREN AND SISTERS:—It is a blessed privilege for those of us who have not many means of grace, to communicate our thoughts to each other through the Crisis, a paper I should not feel willing to be deprived of, and wonder how any one can that loves the Lord and his truth. We may not feel satisfied with all we see in the paper, but let us remember we are living in an unsatisfying world, a world of trial and disappointment, and never shall have everything just as we want it. I have learned to make the best of everything, and try to live and let live. I see there has been much said on time, on both sides. Well, it is all good, it goes well, only let us differ in love, for that should be the ruling principle in all our hearts. I have tried to serve God in adversity, as well as in prosperity; in sickness and in health. Was in the '44 time, or rather embraced the Advent views just prior to the passing of the time, also in '54 was strong in the faith, and can say—

It was blessed, holy living,
And it was only by believing.

But the time passed. A sad disappointment to me, as well as to others. But the blessed book still reads, "He that shall come, will côme, and will not tarry." Thus I have tried to struggle on, sometimes on the mountain top, where I could view the promised land; sometimes, I fear (and with shame and regret), down by the cold streams of Babylon, with my harp hung on the willow; sometimes wading through deep trials and nearly ready to sink; cast down at times, but not destroyed; and notwithstanding all this I feel to-day the evidence of my acceptance with God, and that my ways please him; and, as Sr. Mussey says, if the church move out on time, I am going, too, for

"I will be in this band, hallelujah!"

But, brethren and sisters, we need to be very cautious. Let us not be too hasty, but watch and pray, and

Bear our cross from day to day,
And learn to do as well as say.

And then when the Master appeareth he will say, Well done.

"Oh how joyful then to hear him,
Whilst all nations shall revere him,
Saying to his flock who fear him,
I have come on earth to reign!"

In the faith and hope of the gospel,
Roxbury, Ct. SUSAN E. TEEPLE.

From John H. Philbrick.

ELD. MILES GRANT:—I have often thought of the command given to Timothy, "Preach the word," and am glad to know that there is a class, though despised, which, in spite of the formal church, will preach the word and stand up for the same. I have been a reader of your paper for some time. I am a soldier in the American army, but I believe in your doctrine, and have found this Jesus of whom you speak very precious, and can recommend him to all who have never experienced his love.

I am thankful that ever your paper came here to the army, for I believe that it has been the means of enlightening many who were in the dark. I have a few copies sent to me occasionally by my wife, and I distribute them, and they are doing a great deal of good. I do believe that if your paper could have a circulation in the army that many who are now groping in the dark would find the light, for they need the word.

SERG'T. JOHN H. PHILBRICK.

Chapin's Bluff, Va.

From Bro. C. Lovis.

BRO. GRANT:—I love the Crisis, and lend it to my neighbors, and mail it to my brother for two cents. How cheap for such rays of light. Who would keep light and truth in a corner, when it is so cheaply sown broadcast? I am a poor man, and live by day labor, but I think I have found light and truth through the Crisis, that I would not sell for any earthly treasure. I meet with scoffers walking after their own lusts on every hand, but I give my testimony from Christ and his apostles, as I get it from Holy Writ. They scoff at me; but what of that? They scoffed at my Master, the great Teacher, from whom we should all learn. They drove nails through his hands, and spit in his face, and took his life. And we should be willing to suffer, and die for him, if need be. Your brother in the gospel, CHARLES LOVIS.

Webb's Mills, Me.

From a Baptist Sister in Wisconsin.

I am a member of the Baptist denomination, and have tried to live worthy the name thirty-five years; but as I have been providentially deprived of associating with the children of God for a number of years, I have become famished and weak. Reading the Bible in my sick room, on the bed, was my main food, when your beautiful sheet, the Crisis, found its way to my lonely and retired abode; and it was to me as an invigorating shower is to a drooping plant. As it was the first Advent publication I had seen, I at once became so absorbed in its perusal and in comparing references with the Bible, that I almost forgot that I was sick. I need not add my testimony to the multitude who have spoken of its merit, but will just say I like it, first for its plain print and simplicity of language. Secondly, its out-spoken sentiments, so that a wayfaring man, though a fool, may not err therein. In fact, it has almost persuaded me to become an Adventist, for really I want to be a christian. Yes, I wish to not believe a lie. If I have not been traveling my pilgrimage aright, I pray God to set me right, that I may in the morning of the resurrection join in singing his praises in the kingdom of his dear Son.

I do not feel able to pay for the Crisis at present, as I am one of the poor of the earth, and have to make many sacrifices these pressing times. Our dear Heavenly Father has, in his wisdom and mercy, seen fit to lay his hand of affliction heavily upon me. I have been a cripple from infancy, and am now suffering from a throat and lung affection, which seems to be counting fast the sands of life.

And now that I must take my leave of the Crisis, it creates in me feelings of sadness, much indeed like the taking leave of a dear friend. And let me say, dear brother, may God sustain you in your arduous labors in gathering ripe sheathes to bring in, with a shout, to the kingdom of God. Your friend in Christ Jesus, MRS. JANE HULEE.

Taycheedah, Fond du Lac Co., Wis.

Obituaries.

E. GOODWIN.

Died at Warren, N. H., Jan. 20th, 1865, Sister Elsie, wife of Bro. Samuel Goodwin, aged seventy years.

Sister Goodwin embraced religion in the earlier years of her life, but neglected baptism until about six years since, when she united with the Free-will Baptists. She was a lover of the truth. For the last year or two of her life, new light had shone upon the sacred page. The great truths of the Bible, relating to the sleep of the dead, and life only through Christ, were joyfully received by our aged sister. She leaves an aged companion, one son, and other relatives to mourn their loss.

ANN E. CLARK.

J. E. BURNHAM.

Died at Hollis Centre, Me., Josiah E. Burnham, aged forty-seven years, nine months.

He has left a wife and several children, and a large circle of friends to mourn their loss, yet they mourn not without hope, though he never made a profession of religion. The friends were addressed by the writer, from the words of Christ, as recorded in Luke 20: 37. B. S. EMERY.

MARY WETHERELL.

Died in Palmer, Me., April 10th, 1865, Mary Jane, wife of Bro. Thomas Wetherell, and daughter of Bro. Harvey Goodell, aged twenty-six years.

Jane was a good girl, an affectionate companion, and a faithful christian. May we meet her in the kingdom. H. PRATT.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

Liverpool April 12th, Londonderry 13th.

PRUSSIA.

In the Chamber of Deputies the Minister of War has introduced a bill for extraordinary grants for the Navy, and for constructing harbors and building war vessels. The Prussian Government has resolved to keep possession of Kikel and the fortifications of that place. The bill asks for nineteen million thalers.

RUSSIA.

The British government having telegraphed to its officials in Russia for information relative to the epidemic in that country, the Ambassador at St. Petersburg, in a telegram dated the 5th, says the fever is contagious, and in England is called the relapsing or famine fever, also the remittent or billious typhoid fever. It was unknown in Russia until eight months ago. There is also much ordinary typhus in St. Petersburg. The official St. Petersburg Journal asserts that the fever had slightly diminished.

Lord Napier reports from Berlin on the 5th that an unknown disorder had appeared along the valley of the Vistula, but the Prussian government is not aware that it came from St. Petersburg.

The London Times suggests that medical officers be sent from England to study the disease.

A Paris letter says several medical students who went from France to investigate the epidemic had fallen victims.

MELBOURNE, Feb. 23. The Panama mail contract is signed.

The war has recommenced in New Zealand and the British troops had suffered considerable loss. Mr. Hewitt, a member of the Provincial Council, had been murdered and decapitated by the rebels.

BERLIN, April 6. The plague continues at St. Petersburg. The number of deaths had reached 20,000. There were 100 cases a day. Forty physicians had died. The Ismailoff Barracks had been turned into a hospital. Precautionary measures were being taken at Moscow, where the food and lodgings of the laboring classes were being inspected by the police. It is not the cholera, but the plague—with dilated pupils, carbuncles, ect.

THE EPIDEMIC IN RUSSIA. Our foreign papers give a few particulars of the terrible epidemic raging in St. Petersburg and other parts of Russia. It was at first supposed to be a violent form of fever, aggravated, if not produced, by the eating of diseased rye among the laboring classes. A shivering fit commenced the attack, followed by acute pains in the head and limbs. The skin turned yellow. The fever reached its final climax in seven or eight days, ending with copious perspiration. Then occurred an interval of some days, in which the patient seemed to be slowly improving, but a second and still more dangerous paroxysm ensued, and sometimes a third. In these latter attacks there was a general collapse, decomposition of blood and paralysis.

The death rate, at first but 20, has risen to 40 per cent. Quite recently, says a Berlin dispatch, the Siberian plague has broken out also. Of this 70 per cent die within a few hours. A strong disposition to vomit, which cannot be satisfied, a swelling of the belly, pestilential carbuncles, and dark color of the skin are its unmistakable symptoms. It is the Black Death.—Boston Journal.

DOMESTIC.

San Francisco, April 18. The public grief over the death of President Lincoln in all the Pacific States continues unabated. Arrangements have been made for his obsequies to-morrow. In several places men were lynched for expressing joy at his assassination. Order has been completely restored in this city and the military disbanded.

The determination of President Johnson not to treat with the rebel leaders gives great satisfaction, and a disposition is manifested to accord to his Administration general confidence.

A severe earthquake occurred in some of the Southern counties to-day.

Gen. McDowell has issued an order for the immediate arrest of any person expressing approval of Mr. Lincoln's death and for the suppression of any journal so offending.

War Department, Washington,
April 19—11 P. M.

To Maj. Gen. Dix:

It has been finally concluded to conform to the original arrangements, made yesterday, for the conveyance of the remains of the late President, Abraham Lincoln, from Washington to Springfield., Ill., viz.: via Baltimore, Harrisburg, Philadelphia, New York city, Albany, Buffalo, Cleveland, Columbus, Indianapolis and Chicago to Springfield.

E. M. STANTON, Secretary of War.

New York, April 20. The steamer Creole, from Hilton Head 16th inst., has arrived.

The Savannah Herald says the capture of Mobile was announced in Savannah by a rebel deserter, on the 14th. The capture of Columbus, Ga., by Thomas' cavalry, after a severe fight with Forrest's troopers, is announced. Four or five hundred of Forrest's men were captured at Ufonla and Montgomery, Ala.

Col. Gurney, Commandant at Charleston, advises the people collected there to proceed to the inlands in the department, and settle on the plantations.

War Department, Washington,
April 20—9.45 P. M.

Maj. Gen. Dix, New York:

The evening report of the Surgeon-General as to the condition of Secretary Seward and his son is as follows:

"Surgeon-General's Office, Washington,
April 20—9 P. M.

I have the honor to report that there has been a decided improvement in the condition of the Secretary of State. No perceptible alteration in the case of Mr. F. Seward. Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

J. K. BARNES, Brigadier-General."

(Signed) EDWIN M. STANTON, Secretary of War.

Baltimore, April 20. A dispatch from Gen. E. B. Tyler, dated Relay House this evening, says:

"Sergeant Gammill, of the 1st Delaware cavalry, Capt. Townsend's company, of my command, has just brought in George A. Alzerot, one of the assassins. He has been identified by the detectives who have been pursuing him."

New York, April 21. The Herald's Paris correspondence says Maximilian's minister in London has resigned, declaring that he is satisfied the Mexican Empire is collapsing, and that Maximilian will soon abdicate and return to Austria, being completely disappointed in his two most important expectations—the reorganization of the United States and the support of the Pope and Mexican clergy. As a confirmation of this report it is stated that Maximilian has retracted the renunciation of his family rights to the Throne of Austria, made before leaving Europe.

Louisville, Ky., April 21. Gen. Brisbane in a recent report shows that 21,000 colored men have enlisted in Kentucky, 1000 of which were drafted and 2000 ran away from their masters and enlisted in Indiana, Ohio and Tennessee. Eleven new regiments are formed, which, when completed, will make a quota of 30,000 colored men for Kentucky. Gen. Brisbane hopes to fill up all the regiments now raising in sixty days. Over 100 negroes are enlisted daily.

New York, April 22. The Herald's special Washington dispatch states that information received this evening from Gen. Sheridan's army, states that he had received a dispatch last night from Gen. Sherman, announcing the surrender of Johnston's army.

Washington, April 22. A dispatch from the Army of the Potomac 20th says an officer from Goldsboro' states that Johnston's army has become completely demoralized since the news of Lee's surrender, and that Johnston dared not risk a battle. The same officer reports that overtures had been made for surrender.

In consequence of this news a new disposition of the Army of the Potomac has been made. The 9th Corps has been ordered to Washington.

Wednesday was observed in the army as a day of mourning.

War Department,
Washington, April 22.

Yesterday evening a bearer of dispatches arrived from Gen. Sherman. An agreement for a suspension of hostilities and a memorandum of what is called a basis for peace had been entered into on the 18th inst. by Gen. Sherman with the rebel Gen. Johnston. The rebel Gen. Breckinridge was present at the conference.

A Cabinet meeting was held at 8 o'clock in the evening, at which the action of Gen. Sherman was disapproved by the President, by the Secretary of War, by Gen. Grant, and by every member of the Cabinet. Gen. Sherman was ordered to resume hostilities immediately.

E. M. STANTON, Secretary of War.

War Department,
Washington, April 22.

Maj. Gen. Dix:

In a dispatch dated Mobile, 5 P. M., April 14, Maj. Gen. Canby reports as follows:

"We find in Mobile and defenses on the west side of the bay over 150 guns and a very large amonnt of ammunition, and supplies of all kinds, and about 1000 prisoners.

Inventories are now being taken and a detailed report will be forwarded as soon as they are complete. The quantity of cotton will probably reach 3000 bales, and there is a large amount of provisions and forage."

Maj. Gen. Hancock reports that nearly all of Mosby's command have surrendered, including nearly or quite all of the officers, except Mosby himself. Some of Mosby's own men are hunting for him, being stimulated by a reward of $2000 offered for him by Gen. Hancock, who has been directed to establish his headquarters at Washington.

The counties of Prince George, Charles and St. Marys have, during the whole war, been noted for hostilities to the government and their protection to the rebel blockade runners, rebel spies and every species of public enemy. The murderers of the President were harbored there before the murder, and Booth fled in that direction. If he escapes it will be owing to rebel accomplices in that region. The military commander of this department will surely take measures to bring these rebel sympathizers and accomplices in murder to a sense of their criminal conduct.

E. M. STANTON, Secretary of War.

New York, April 23. Circumstances which have come to the knowledge of the Government render it nearly certain that Booth's horse fell with him on Friday night, the 14th inst., and it is believed, caused a fracture of one of his legs. It is also reported that he has divested himself of his moustache. The attention of surgeons is called to these circumstances. If Booth is lying concealed and wounded, the rewards offered and the detestation of his crimes by all loyal citizens will bring him to light.

New Orleans, April 18 via Cairo 23d. It is reported that Jeff. Davis crossed the Mississippi river at Turkey Bend, which was occupied by Texas cavalry, on the night of the 16th, escaping the observation of the naval forces.

New York, April 24. The steamer Blackstone, from Hilton Head 20th, brings Savannah papers of the 19th.

The Savannah Herald of the 18th says intelligence reached there on the 17th, which confirms the report of the fall of Montgomery, Ala. The place was occupied by the Federal troops on the 11th, the rebels evacuating and retreating in the direction of Columbus, Ga. The government stores were being removed from the latter place, the fall of which was expected by the next news from Augusta.

TEMPORARY BLOCKADE OF BOSTON HARBOR.—A good deal of speculation was caused on the 23d by firing, frequently heard, down the harbor, and by the return of some small vessels that had gone off on outward voyages toward nightfall. It appeared from the reports of those on board the returned vessels that they were severally brought to by a shot from one of the two United States steam cutters, "Pawtuxet" and "Morris," anchored in the channel, and ordered to return to the harbor, "by command of the Navy Department." In every instance the order was promptly obeyed, of course. This blockade commenced in the afternoon about 3 o'clock, and not even a fishing boat was permitted to pass seaward. The reason for this proceeding was not made known, and speculations and rumors flew about with unwonted wildness. No one, of course, knew anything concerning the cause, but everybody seemed of the opinion that it was a sufficient one, as it undoubtedly will prove to be when understood. Whether any interruption took place in the case of inward bound vessels, we have not learned.

Abraham Lincoln.

The following brief sketch of the life of Abraham Lincoln, published in the Boston Daily Advertiser, will give the reader a general view of the life of our lamented President:

Abraham Lincoln was born in Hardin County, Kentucky, on the 12th of February, 1809. The story of his early life is one of the hardships and trials, the energy and perseverance, so well devoloped by the difficulties of the frontier. At the age of seven years he began his school life with the Bible and a copy of Delworth's spelling book,—good tools in the hands of an earnest soul. Thomas Lincoln, his father, dissatisfied with the prospect held out to a man of moderate means in a slave State, removed with his family to Indiana in 1817. There also all was a new country, and the last eighteen miles of their journey to Spencer County had to be literally cut through the woods. Father and son built with their own hands a log cabin, and lived there twelve years. Abraham Lincoln's mother, who seems to have given him the rudiments of that sturdy moral strength afterwards so conspicuous in his character, died when he was ten years old. The son continued his efforts for an education at the cabin of one of the settlers, and in his rough backwoods costume, began arithmetic and eagerly read such books as fell in his way. At nineteen years of age he had an adventurous flatboat voyage to New Orleans, in the course of which he encountered and overcame, with the boat's crew, a marauding party of seven negroes. In 1830, the family again removed to Illinois, and Abraham, now twenty-one, aided his father in fencing in and planting the new farm, before entering into service on his own account. It was for that fence that he split the rails which as an honorable symbol of free labor have become historical, and at one time rail-splitting furnished him, as it did most other frontier men, constant employment. Our space will not allow us to recount the successive steps by which the young pioneer fought his way into the respect and confidence of his fellows. He was fertile in resources, quick of perception, never discouraged, and lost no honorable chance to better his condition. In the Black Hawk war his hardy bravery pointed him out as a fit man for a captain, and two years afterward, in 1834, he was elected to the Legislature. After three years' service in the political field, he began the practice of law, a knowledge of which he had acquired while serving as a clerk in a store, or guiding his flatboat down the river. For six years he continued his legal studies and practice with uniform and remarkable success. It was at that time that he acquired the art of putting facts which he wanted to express into language,—plain and homely, indeed,—but the meaning of which no man could mistake. In 1844, Mr. Lincoln was recognized as one of the leading politicians of Illinois, and stumped the State during the presidential campaign. In 1847, he served his first term in Congress, where his course was somewhat in advance of the general position of the Whig party. It will be remembered that while he would not neglect the soldiers in the field, nor withhold from them supplies, he refused to acknowledge the justice of the Mexican war. He urged the abolition of slavery in the District of Columbia, and advocated stringent measures against the slave trade; he voted, as he said, more than forty times for the Wilmot Proviso, in whatever form it came up, and placed his name on record as a consistent and earnest opponent of the aggressions of slavery. He was a member of the national convention that nominated Zachary Taylor, in 1848, and was defeated as a candidate for the United States Senate the next year.

During the time when the vexed question of Kansas and Nebraska occupied the public attention, Mr. Lincoln was true to his record, and as he had opportunity opposed his plain good sense and honest speech to the sophistries of his opponents. At the national republican convention which nominated John C. Fremont, Mr. Lincoln received one hundred and eleven votes for Vice President. In 1858, he was nominated again for the Senate, and then took place the memorable debates between himself and Stephen A. Douglas,—debates in which all the mental characteristics of the statesman of the backwoods, were brought out and displayed to the best advantage. Mr. Lincoln lost the election to the Senate, but he really won the victory with the people. In 1860 he made that celebrated speech at New York city which so admirably discussed the questions at issue before the country, and made him the second choice of New York for the Presidency.

In the republican convention at Chicago, which followed soon after, Mr. Lincoln was nominated for the Presidency on the third ballot, and in the election received the electoral vote of every free State except New Jersey.

South Carolina passed the act of secession on the 20th of December; Mississippi, Jan. 9th; Alabama and Florida, Jan. 11th; Louisiana on the 26th, and Texas on the 5th of February. On the 4th of February, Jefferson Davis was elected President, and A. H. Stephens Vice President of the States in revolt, and they were inaugurated on the 18th. Recruiting began at once in the Southern States, a military of one hundred thousand men was organized, and all the machinery of rebellion set on foot before the new President could declare his policy or exercise his power. Mr. Lincoln left Springfield, Illinois, on Feb. 11th, and on his way to the capital foreshadowed the course of his administration in a series of speeches made at the chief places along his route. It is said that his assassination was plotted at Baltimore, but he evaded the murderers then by taking an earlier train.

We all remember the tone of the President's inaugural, its mingled pathos and persuasion; and the iron firmness as well, which was couched under his honest intent and kindly phrase. On the 12th of April, Sumter was fired on. Mr. Lincoln's proclamation calling out seventy-five thousand men, and assembling Congress, was issued three days after. The ports of the rebellious States were declared under a blockade on April 10th, and on the 17th of May Virginia followed her sister States into secession. On the 22d of September, 1862, Mr. Lincoln issued his preliminary proclamation of emancipation, which made free all slaves whose masters should be in revolt on the first day of January, 1863, and on the latter date he issued a second proclamation, confirming and completing the design of the first.

We need not here repeat the more recent official acts of President Lincoln. The world has witnessed his unwearied patience, his overflowing kindness, his utter lack of any passion or sentiment of revenge against those who were seeking his ruin and that of the nation. Neither bitter invective nor vile abuse moved him from the path of duty; and he went from the council chamber, where his solicitude had been expressed as to how he could best forgive his enemies, to meet death at the hand of the assassin.

THE RUSSIAN PLAGUE PREDICTED.—It appears that the terrible plague which is now making such deadly ravages in Russia has been anticipated in Germany for a long time. The first Napoleon, who was very superstitious, placed great reliance in the predictions of Mademoiselle Lenormand, a professional prophet in Paris, who also succeeded in interesting the Emperor of Russia in prophecies. In 1853 a small pamphlet was published in Germany, which professed to contain a series of pro prophetic revelations made by Lenormaud, and which at the time attracted much attention throughout Germany. It announced among other things:

"That in the year 1853 there would be a European war upon Russian soil, upon which the Eagle and the leopard would closely hug the bear (the elder Napoleon always having declared the leopard, not the lion, was the symbolic animal of England;) that after peace had been restored, the elephant (India) would attempt to trample down the leopard (England), but would not succeed; that following the war between Russia, England and France, would be an immense emigration from Germany to the West (United States,) for many years; that the emigrants would prosper in their new home, but a time would come when civil war would make them desire that they had not left their fatherland; that after the civil war had fearfully raged for four years, peace would be restored, and remarkable prosperity ensue; and that, about the time the war in the West had ended, a fearful sickness, commencing in Russia, would extend across the Baltic, desolate Germany, cause immense mortality in England, and thence simultaneously spread to the east and to the west. This prediction Germans in this country believe to be now in its last stage of fulfillment. It is, at least, remarkable."

ITEMS.

☞ A London paper calls attention to the fact that the year 1866, which Louis Napoleon has fixed on as the time for withdrawing his troops from Rome, which will be virtually leaving the Papacy in that city to its fate, is the very year which nearly all our most eminent commentators on the New Testament, and writers on the Prophecy, from the time of Bishop Newton downward, have, by a wonderful concurrence of opinion, named as the year in which Popery is to receive its death blow.

☞ The new Postal Law provides that all domestic letters deposited wholly unpaid in any post-office are to be forwarded to the Dead-letter Office at Washington; if part paid, they are to be forwarded to their destination, charged only with the unpaid postage—not double the unpaid rates, as heretofore.

☞ Those who have mutilated currency, in order to get it redeemed, must send it in letters to the Treasury Department. The letters will go free of postage. That department is alone authorized to redeem.

☞ It is said that the French embassy at Washington have received news of the dangerous illness of the Emperor Napoleon.

☞ It is stated that Napoleon will leave Paris early in May, not returning until November, his physicians having recommended seven months absence in the country air.

☞ One million two hundred thousand two cent pieces were coined last month.

☞ Spain spends $20,000,000 annually for tobacco and $64,000,000 for lottery tickets!

☞ The mechanics' pay roll at the Charlestown Navy Yard for the month of March amounted to $291,384 76. There are at the present time 4567 men mustered on the roll. The total expenses of the yard for the month of March were $311,685 49.

☞ The Emperor of the French has sent a magnificent chalice in gold, to the priest of the small church of Hoboken, near New York, where his Majesty lived as a private gentleman during his stay in America.

☞ Official reports show that more than one half of the children born in St. Kitts and Demarara are illegitimate, and much comment is made on the state of morals generally existing in the West India Islands.

☞ A legal reform is about to be carried out in France. It is decided that the judges of assize shall wear scarlet robes, "in order to spread more terror among the audience."

☞ An epidemic fever is sweeping off hundreds of victims at St. Petersburg daily, and all measures adopted for checking it have proved unavailing.

☞ King Victor Emmanuel has resolved upon establishing a naval station in the Gulf of Mexico and the Pacific, and a frigate, a corvette, and a despatch boat are now being armed at Genoa for that service.

☞ The Mormon temple at Salt Lake City will seat 9,000 persons.

Married.

At Athol, April 11th, by Eld. J. Hemenway, Bro. ELIPHAS GAGE, of Northfield, and Sr. HANNAH ELLENWOOD of Athol.

At Cassel's Prarie, Wis., Feb. 2d, 1895, by Eld. Geo. W. Turner, Bro. WILLIAM PIERCE and Sr. MARY PATTERSON, both of Cassel's Prarie.

Note from Bro. D. R. Mansfield.

TO OUR FRIENDS:—I am constantly receiving letters of inquiry as to Mrs. Mansfield's health, and how soon we may be able to enter the field again. As it is inconvenient to answer all the letters, and some have requested to hear through the Voice, I would say to the friends that Mrs. M's health is improving so that she is able to be about the house, and to ride out. But there seems to have been a severe injury of the spine, affecting the whole nervous system, from which she recovers slowly. Her condition demands quiet and rest until nature can repair the injuries received, and the system recover its tone and strength. We sometimes wonder that we should be kept from the field at a time when the call for laborers is so urgent; but "He doeth all things well." What we know not now, we shall know hereafter. We hope to be remembered in the prayers of God's dear people. D. R. MANSFIELD.

Notices.

New York General Meeting.

There will be a general meeting of the church of God in New York and Northern Pennsylvania held at SOUTH BUTLER, Wayne Co., N. Y., commencing Thursday evening, June 1st, to continue over the following Sunday, for the purpose of uniting and concentrating our efforts in promulgating the glorious gospel of the soon coming kingdom of God. In view of our scattered condition, and the feebleness of the efforts now being put forth, such a meeting is needed. Therefore, we whose names are subjoined, members of the church of God, living in the above named vicinity, do hereby heartily co-operate in this call for a general meeting; hoping that all who love the glorious truths we advocate, will come together in the spirit of love and unity, for the purpose of adopting such measures as shall be necessary to speed the glad tidings, and prepare others for the coming kingdom.

Come, brethren and sisters, let us rally once more. THE LORD IS COMING. Let all interested, who want meetings in their own localities, come to this meeting, and help make provision for such a work; and let every christian heart interested, make this meeting a subject of prayer, that God's blessing may rest upon our efforts. There will be a goodly number of God's chosen servants present to preach the word. We want brethren from other localities to come and help us in this meeting, but come as willing to receive, as to give light.

Elder	C. B. Turner,	Syracuse,	N. Y.
"	J. B. Cook,	Binghampton,	"
"	C. W. Low,	Fredonia,	"
"	C. F. Sweet,	Albion,	"
"	Frank Burr,	Dansville,	"
"	A. Chase,	Eagle Harbour,	"
"	Wm. Ingmire,	Seneca Falls,	"
"	Wm. H. Fenn,	Pulaski,	"
"	B. P. Stevens,	South Butler,	"
"	M. R. Miles,	"	"
"	J. Wendel,	Edenborough,	Pa.
"	J. D. Brown,	"	"
	B. C. Simons,	Darien,	N. Y.
	Wm. Freeman,	Lockport,	"
	A. Riggs,	"	"
	M. Egerton,	Royalton,	"
	W. Burnham,	Newstead,	"
	D. Miller,	Dresserville,	"
	A. Black,	Eagle Harbour,	"
	L. Collins,	"	"
	L. Grinnell,	West Barree,	"
	F. Douglass,	Syracuse,	"
	G. Abright,	South Butler,	"
	J. Westcott,	"	"
	C. West,	"	"
	Wm Brown,	"	"
	G. Dillabaugh,	Seneca Falls,	"
	Wm. Thayer,	"	"
	J. C. Thayer,	"	"
	J. C. King,	"	"
	N. R. Wicks,	"	"
	L. Ingmire,	"	"
	S. Hewitt,	"	"
	W. Hopkins,	"	"
	Wm Morrell,	New London,	"
	J. Fields,	Vanburen,	"
	D. Cogswell,	Dansville,	"
	Wm. Brown, Jr.,	"	"
	R. Lovell,	Nunda,	"
	L. Webster,	Conesus,	"
	Saml. Withington,	Springwater,	"
	N. Tibbles,	Canadice,	"
	Ira Allen, Jr.,	Honeoye,	"
	J. W. Taylor,	Chatham Valley,	Pa.
	D. R. Moor,	Jackson,	"
	J. S. H. Dickenson,	"	"
	B. O. Wheeler,	"	"
	D. Calhoun,	Lawrenceville,	"
	J. Moore,	South Creek,	"
	G. Dickerson,	"	"
	J. Salsbury,	Troy,	"
	N. R. Keeler,	Herick,	"
	D. R. Miller,	Conquest,	"

P. S. Railroad and other arrangements will be published in due time.

Illinois Annual Conference.

The Illinois Second Advent Christian Conference will hold its annual session at New Rutland, La Salle Co., commencing on Wednesday, May 24th, 1865, and continuing during the week and over Sunday. As this is in some respects the most important conference during the year, it is desirable to have a FULL ATTENDANCE.

Rutland is on the Illinois Central Railroad, some forty miles below Mendota.

E. ROYCE, Secretary.

Notice.

The next annual meeting of the Iowa Christian Conference will be held at Manchester, Delaware Co., Iowa, commencing June 15th, 1865, and continuing over the first day. Strangers may call on Bro. Cooley near the depot. Dear brethren, let this be the largest gathering of the kind we have ever had. Come laden with grace, to work for the salvation of sinners.—Voice copy.

H. H. JANES, Pres.
P. S. W. DEYO, Conf. Clerk.

Book Notice.

The second edition of my treatise on Rev. XIII. is exhausted. The Lord willing, there will be issued a third in a few days. It is a work in two parts, treating on "THE LEOPARD BEAST" and the "Two Horned Beast." Single copies, by mail, 20 cents.

I would solicit the attention of the readers of the Crisis to the list of my works on prophecy on the third page of this paper. My address is Ashburnham Depot, Mass. S. S. BREWER.

Western Grove Meetings.

For several years past I have practised holding several grove meetings each summer, which have been attended with blessed results. I intend to spend the coming summer in the same enterprise. Those who desire my services in this department will do well to give me timely notice. The King of glory is coming, and it becomes us to give the trumpet a certain sound, that a people may be prepared to meet him. Address me at Baraboo, Sauk Co., Wis. W. SHELDON.

New Hampshire Quarterly Conference.

The third quarterly session of the New Hampshire State Conference will be held in Sunapee, N. H., (South meeting-house,) commencing Thursday, June 1st, at one o'clock, P. M., and continue over the following Sunday.

We hope prayer will go up to God that this meeting will prove a great blessing to the people in this part of the State.

A. W. SIBLEY, Secretary.

Notice.

Will the brother in Bristol, Vt., who wrote me for a preacher, write me whether he has yet obtained one, giving me his address once more? I have a supply in view for that place.

Rutland, Vt. H. F. CARPENTER.

Request.

Bro. Andrew Simpson is requested to give the earliest possible notice in the Crisis, when he will preach on the prophecies at Dover, N. H., and at Great Falls. For the brethren,

J. M. HACKETT.

Dedication.

The new chapel in Chichester, N. H. (Pine Ground), will be dedicated on Saturday, Apr. 29th, 1 o'clock, P. M. Preaching on the following Sabbath. J. COUCH.

VALUABLE BOOKS FOR SALE CHEAP.

Circumstances having rendered it necessary, the following books are offered for sale at a sacrifice,—as low, it is believed, (notwithstanding the great advance in the prices of books generally), as they could have been obtained three years ago. They were all selected for my own use, and are in good condition.

Bower's History of the Popes, 3 vols., sheep. (Regular price $6.00.) By express, $4.00, or postpaid, $5.00.

Mosheim's Ecclesiastical History, cloth, 3 vols. By express, $4.00; postpaid, $5.00.

Livy's History of Rome, translated by Baker, 2 vols., cloth, new, $1.75; postage 72c.

Paley's Complete Works, 1 vol., sheep, new. (Sold for $2.00.) $1.25, postage 40c.

Kitto's Encyclopedia of Biblical Literature, 2 vols., half calf, gilt back, new. (Sold for $10.00.) By express $7.50, or postpaid $8.70.

Englishman's Greek Concordance, sheep, new, $4.00; postage 50c.

De Cormenin's History of the Popes, 2 vols. in one, 900 pp. $1.25, postage 50c.

Butterworth's Concordance, sheep, new, $1.25; postage 32c.

Dowling's History of Romanism, 1 vol. $1.00, postage 50c.

Our Lord's Great Prophecy, by Buck. $1.25, postage 25c.

Wakefield's New Testament, new bound, half morocco, very rare. $2.25, postage 50c.

Campbell's Four Gospels and Notes, 2 vols., cloth, also very rare, $2.50; postage 60c.

Eclipse of Faith, (an excellent work for sceptics.) (Sells for $1.50.) 70c., postage 25c.

Historical Evidences, by Rawlinson. (Sells for $2.00.) $1.50, postage 25c.

Bagster's New Testament, containing the following, bound in one volume, cloth: (1.) The English and Greek New Testament, interleaved. (2.) Several fine maps. (3.) A Lexicon to the Greek. (4.) A condensed Greek Concordance. Making a very convenient and useful volume. Sells (with gold at par) for $4.50. Will be sent postpaid for $4.00.

Synonyms of the Greek New Testament, still lower than ever. 60 cents, postpaid.

Paley's Evidences of Christianity, cloth. 50c. Postpaid 24c.

Address E. P. WOODWARD, Crisis Box, Boston, Mass.

Maine Second Advent Tract Society.

S. K. PARTRIDGE, R. R. YORK, I. C. WELLCOME, Board of Managers.

I. C. WELLCOME, Secretary and Business Agent.

ISAAC WIGHT, Treasurer.

It was voted that all orders for tracts and books for distribution by this Society be addressed to the Agent, I. C. WELLCOME, Yarmouth, Me., who will supply them as fast as the means are furnished.

All our ministers will receive subscriptions for the Tract Fund, and they purpose to raise $200, or more, for free distribution in Maine this year.

I. C. WELLCOME, Agent.

Meetings in Burlington, Me.

Conference meetings will be held on the 4th Saturday in each month at Burlington, Me., Folsom's Ridge. Preaching brethren and others are invited to attend. SAMUEL HAMMONS.

Appointments.

We would say to our preaching Brethren that it is necessary we should receive their appointments as early as TUESDAY MORNING, as our paper goes to press about noon; otherwise they will not be inserted till the week following.

LOWELL STREET CHAPEL, BOSTON, CORNER OF CAUSEWAY AND LOWELL STREETS. Meetings are held regularly three times every Sunday, and Tuesday and Friday evenings. Seats free.

LOWELL STREET CHAPEL.
J. Hemenway........Sunday, April 30th
J. Couch........Sunday, May 7th

Philadelphia, Pa........April 30th and May 7th
New York, (Bro. Samuel Curry's congregation, 24th Street)........Wednesday evening, May 10th
New Haven, Ct........May 11th
Springfield, Mass........May 12th
Worcester........Lord's day, May 14th
MILES GRANT.

Haverhill, Mass........Lord's day, April 30th
WM. C. THURMAN.

SPRINGFIELD, BARNES' BLOCK.
Ira Morgan........Sunday, May 7th
Miles Grant........Sunday, May 12th
SUBJECT: "The cause of the phenomena of Modern Spiritualism, showing that human spirits have nothing to do with the manifestations." Any one will be allowed to ask questions.

Melvin Village, N. H........April 30th
Loudon Ridge........May 7th
T. W. PIPER.

Cheshire Street, Ct........Sunday, May 14th
Wallingford, Ct........Sunday, May 21st
IRA MORGAN.

Richmond........May 7th
Bristol, (Round Pond)........May 14th
Jefferson, (Week's school-house)........May 21s
S. K. PARTRIDGE.

Tariffville........April 30th
Agawam........May 7th
Turkey Hills and Windsor Locks........May 14th
R. WILLIAMS.

P. S. I wish Bro. Allen to meet me at Windsor Locks May 6th, on the arrival of the two o'clock train from Hartford. R. W.

Hartford, Ct........Thursday evening, May 4th
New Britain Ct........Friday evening, May 5th
L. BOUTELL.

North Canton, Ct........Sunday, April 30th
Canton Street........Sunday, May 7th
S. WOODRUFF.

Brookfield, N. H., (where Bro. Churchill may appoint), Sunday, April 30th.
Haverhill, Mass........Sunday, May 7th
NO NAME.—Perhaps Bro. Pinkham.

Great Falls, N. H........April 30th
Barrington, N. H., (at Shurben's school-house) May 7th
S. HAWKINS.

Wrightville, Conn........Sunday, April 30th
North Canton, Conn........Sunday, May 11th
Wallingford, (North Farms), Ct., (Baptism) Sunday, May 7th.
B. HITCHCOCK.

Walbridge........Sunday, April 30th
Scitico, Ct........Sunday, May 7th
E. OWEN.

Kennebunk Port, Me........April 30th
Biddeford........Tuesday evening, May 2nd
A. MUSSEY.

East Canaan, N. H., Saturday evening, and Sunday, April 29th and 30th.
North Chichester, N. H., (Pine Ground school-house), Saturday evening, May 6th.
Pittsfield, (New Chapel)........Sunday, May 7th
JOHN G. HOOK.

Freeport, (Swamp school-house)....Sunday, April 30th 2 o'clock P. M.
Bath........Sunday, May 7th
Cumberland, (Merrill school-house), May 21st, 2 P. M.
R. R. YORK.

Holderness, (Brick school-house)....Sabbath, May 7th
Meredith Village........Sabbath, May 14th
NELSON HARTSHORN.

New Bedford........April 30th, and May 7th and 14th
Head of the River........May 9th
Mattapoisett........May 11th
J. S. WHITE.

Farmington, (Ricker school-house), Saturday evening, April 29th, and Sunday, 30th.
New Boston........Sunday, May 7th
New Durham Corner........May 14th
Northwood Narrows........May 21st
(Signed) J. G. JAMES.
Perhaps intended for J. G. SMITH.

Ware, Mass., (at school-house near Bro. Newcomb's), April 30th.
Westminster, Mass., (at Bro. Cruise's)........May 5th
Townsend, Mass........May 7th
GEO. A. STREETER.

Lawrence, Mass........Sunday, April 30th
L. L. HOWARD.

Rome, (Gellery school-house)........April 31st
Rome, Town House........May 7th
Augusta........May 14th
H. B. SEEEY.

Bichmond, R. I........Sunday, April 30th
A. DURFEE.

Ashburnham, Mass........Tuesday evening, May 9th
Athol, Mass........Wednesday evening, May 10th
Vernon, Vt........Thursday evening, May 11th
North Springfield, Vt........Friday evening, May 12th and over the following Sunday.
Rutland, Vt........Thursday evening, May 18th and over the following Sunday.
Castleton, Vt........Tuesday evening, May 23d till Friday evening.
Poultney, Vt., Saturday evening, May 27th, and over the following Sunday, and remain in that region as long as may be duty.
A. SIMPSON.

Darien, at the school-house near Bro. Geo. Strong's, at 11 A. M., Sunday, May 6th. Baptist meeting-house, near Bro. B. C. Simonds, at 5 o'clock, P. M.

I hope to see many brethren at these appointments, as we may make arrangements for a summer campaign. Let us all occupy until our Master shall return, for thus the Lord hath said. C. F. SWEET.

Lee, N. H., (Wednesday Hill school-house), Lord's day, April 30th. GEO. W. BROWN.

Cheshire Street, Ct........Sunday, May 7th
Yalesville and Cheshire Street........Monday, May 8th through the week, and over Sunday, May 14th.
L. BOUTELL.

Abington, Ct........Sunday, April 30th
M. R. PHETTEPLACE.

Holden, Mass........Sunday, April 30th
Worcester, Mass........Sunday, May 7th
A. SIMPSON.

Elliot, Me........April 30th
Portsmouth, N. H........May 7th and 14th
Plymouth, Mass........May 21st
Westboro, Mass........May 28th
Philadelphia, Penn........June 4th
and remain as long as duty demands.
F. H. BURBANK.

Concord, N. H........Sunday, April 30th
JOSEPH W. WHITE.

Yalesville, Ct........Sunday, April 30th
O. D. WOODRUFF.

Agawam........Sunday, April 30th
P. S. BUTLER.

Portsmouth, N. H........Sunday, April 30th
Ashburnham, Mass........May 7th
Lunenberg, Mass........May 14th
S. S. BREWER.

FOR THE CHURCH IN GLOUCESTER.
Eld. D. O. Hopkins........Sunday, May 7th
(If stormy, the next Sunday.)

Scitico, Ct........Sunday, April 30th
I. B. POTTER.

West Abington, Mass........May 7th
C. C. RAMSAY.

South Windham........Sunday, April 30th
Windham Center........Tuesday, May 2d
and between as opportunities offer.
B. SPAULDING.

North End, (at the dwelling of D. Baker)........April 30th
H. ROCKWELL.

Northfield Farms, Mass........Sunday, April 30th
WM. W. SUTHERLAND.

Plymouth Hollow, Ct........Sunday, April 30th
Wrightville........Wednesday evening, May 3d
GEO. L. TEEPLE.

West Hoosic, N. Y., (Advent Chapel)........April 29th and over the Sabbath.
Pittstown, N. Y........May 1st and 2nd
North Easton, N. Y........May 3d, 4th and 5th
North Bennington, Vt........May 6th and over the Sabbath.
South Shaftsboro........May 8th and 9th
WM. J. BLANCHARD.

Business.

Our Volunteer Agents.

REPORT FOR WEEK ENDING APRIL 22.

Whole number of new subscribers in the week, 29. By the efforts of the following brethren, 12:—

ONE each—By W. H. Blaisdell, S. D. Deyo, Mrs. M. Gage, Mary L. Hodgdon, Mary Kunce, S. M. Parsons, J. W. Taylor.
TWO by W. B. Reed.
THREE by Alba Bellows.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

J. P. Camp—It pays for A. C. to No. 539.
J Converse—It is credited. Pays to No. 546.
Daniel Killam—You can send it by mail.
M. L. Clark—Six copies for six months are $6.72. $6.00 pays for 23 Nos.
C. H. Bartlett—You were credited.
D. G. M.—It is forwarded.
E. B. Coon—Her address is New Hartford, Ct.
S. Bradley—It was received.
A. P. Moore—The last received was $2.80, Nov. 16th, paid to No. 487.

CASH RECEIPTS FOR THE CRISIS.

To find how your account stands.

The present No. of the Crisis is 499. The No. which follows your name is the No. to which you have paid.

If the No. paid to, is greater than the present No., the difference shows how many weeks you have paid for in advance. If the No. paid to, is less than the present No., the difference shows for how many weeks you owe. For every week of indebtedness before No. 468, charge (at the old rate) four cents; and, for every week of indebtedness since No. 468, charge (at the new rate) five cents,—and you have the amount due the office. (This, however, will give a trifle more than the amount due. To make it exact, deduct four cents for every dollar due before No. 468, and five cents for every dollar due since No. 468.)

$1.00 each—J M Dalton 519, S A Jeffrey 319, H. E. Twing 515, P. Lawton 505, Mrs. C. Howe 531, M Stevens 519, J Q Moulton 525, W G Gray 516, P C Hutchins 478, E Sanderson 521, T Inman 498, H Buell 509, J. Riley 521, D B Waterbury 516, J Brown 492, S P Thayer 516, J Mathews 511, S Hooper 515.

$1.25 each—R E Bryant 521, T. D. Bailey 520, A. E. Goodrich 521, J Bayley 536, A A Peavey 521, J B Mooney 520, J Jacques 521, L S Andrews 521, C Gage 521, E King 497, S. J. Coverly 528, A. Watt 518, G. Crouse 547, S Bemis 520, T Gordon 528, A Gillett 521, N Staples 521, M G Dunham 520, H. Green —, M. Bishop 490, T Snow 477, W Robinson 521, I C Humes 528, A Worth 519, N. McCulloch Jr. 520, E J Brown 521, E. Williams 531, D E Smith 519, F P Drummond 518, J Palmer 520, W Colbath Jr., 522, J D Emerson 521, S C Carpenter 520.

$2.00 each—G W Chisman 494, J W Trumbull 548, S A Haggett 486, M Cooper 549, L Moore 492, A Watson 519, S Goodell 541, J Hills 537, J W Thomas 516, A Z Dow 511, J. Turpie 533, A. A. Pierce 515, J. Partridge 489, A Adams 526, J Chambers 492, A Stillman 485.

$2.50 each—B & A Parkman 546, A. Bryant 547, C. Churchill 487, B J Waterman 546, G W Mingle 538, N J Langley 537, S Chapell 547, W Pinkham 544, G. T. Downing 539, H Hoikins 546, J P Burnsted 547, T. R Emmons 534, N M Pierce 546, E S. Morse 536, H. D. Bradley 546, S F Rogers 509, F M Davis 541, G S Peterson 535, P McIntyre 540, C L Moe 547, A S Catlin 542, H Lynch 540, M D Richardson 546, N M Parsons 536, J Taylor 527.

$3.00 each—J B Whittemore 499, R Chandler 561, A B Howard 519, J S Canney 498, J N Brown 502, W M Houghtaling 489, O George 505, D B Channell 528, A Spaulding 481.

Various Sums.—N. Bassett $5.00, 578; M A Weaver 17c, 537; J S Parsons 30c, 498; A C Doe $4.58, 546; F Robbins $3.67, 498; F. A. Freeman $1.33, 482; M. M. Goodale 50c, 505; C. Goodwin $5.00, 354; F. A. Taylor $5.75, 494; A McLaren 63c, 510; J P Babcock 25c, —; A. N. Seymour $23.00, 540; A. Clark $5.00, 559; O. F. Goodwin $2.28, 498; W B Reed 50c, (what P. O.?) D. N Kidder 34c, 537; L M Bliss $5.20, 491; A C Scranton $10.32, 494; C. J. Smith $5.00, 431; E. D. Drew $2.25, 533; M. Gordon 50c, 505; J. S. Young $7.00, 536; M. Rollins 50c, 505; A. Flanders $1.50, 495; A. C. Beckworth $4.00, 400; U Kinton 50c, 401; G H Downs 15c, 498; S Eaton $5.10, 494; M L Clark $6.00, 517; T. W. Haskins 63c, 506; E Dexter $5.60, 520; W G Wait 1.25, 521; H C Anderson $1.10, 518; J Waterbury 45c, 497, L Parr 20c, 494; S. Welch 20c, 494; S. Ferren 50c, 436; P Burnham 60c, 498; W. Burnham —, 530; R. Gould $2.70, 513; R Stanely $1.35, 507; W H Hacking $1.15, 515; J. Starr $1.00, 514; J. N. Snyder 50c, 516; J. B. Chamberlain $2.70, 531; J. G Johnson $2.45, 546; R. Vandervoort $1.54, 523; J. Burton $1.65, 498; D. M. Fulton $1.10, 518; A. Woodard 50c, 521; M. Lichtenthaler $1.38, 540; M M Hazard $1.27, 521; A. B. F—, $5.00, 357; J M Pierce 59c, 501; J H Stevens 50c, 463, M A Wilbur 25c, 485; N Hall $2.25, 408; E. D. Hutchins $9.25, 494; J. J. Batchelder 50c, 515; J. B. Clark $1.45; 493; J Spear $1.50, 495; E D Warner 85c, 512; E Murrow 63c, 508; S H Nichols $5.00, 566; D Goodwin 63c, 508; J Lightfoot 62c, 508; W L Larkin 43c, 496.

FOR BOOKS AND TRACTS.

H Pratt $5.00, S G Coon 50c, M D Richardson 30c, S M Parsons $1.50, J B Mitchell 50c, W. Lloyd 50c, A. Burbee 50c, H Holcomb $1.50, H F Carpenter $10.00, S Harper $1.50, C Stratton $5.00, D E Smith $3.75, T W Piper 75c, M A Blodgett 50c, M P McCulloch 50c, L Jackman 50c, J C Jackson $1.25, J. Wise 25c, H. H. Janes $1.00, J. B. Frost 35c, W E Harris 30c, R Allen 30c, D N Kidder 25c, F Sherman 00c, M Croft 152, J H F Varney 25c, E Mets 54c, S L Wells $1.00, J W Thomas 30c, L S Dinsmore $2.25, W B Read $1.12, J Hills $1.13.

BOOKS AND TRACTS SENT.

BY MAIL—J W Thomas, M Croft, J Hills, L L Dinsmore, S H Howlett, R Allen, W E Harris, M A Blodgett, L Jackman, D E Smith, H Holcomb, W Floyd, L Rounds, M A Munson, J L Chute, H Pratt, H P Lason, F Sherman, M Kunce, W B Reed, O George, H H Janes, J B Frost, T W Piper, J Turpie, Mary P McCullock, T Fletcher, A Burbee, J B Mitchell, E L Crumb, E A Adams, J B Potter, P Brownell, M D Richardson.

BY EXPRESS.—S M Parsons, S Hale.

LETTERS RECEIVED.

J W Taylor, H. F. C., M P Lamprey, T M Preble, C. F. R., Wm. B Haggett, M B Czechowski, B Spaulding, E. A. A., E P Haggett, H L Thayer, P. S. W. Deyo, L B Braley, D F Newton, Wm C Thurman, Wm. Sweet, J. N. Berry, D. Clow, M. L. Pratt, D. G. M.

POST OFFICE ADDRESS.

Nelson Hartshorn—Meredith Village, N. H.
J. K. Bellows—364 Broome Street, New York.
N. P. Nason—After May 1st, North Hermon, Me.
P. A. Smith—After May 13th, San Francisco.
Bro. Wm. C. Thurman's address for the present is Boston, Mass., Box 292, care of Miles Grant.
Mrs. Anna E. Smith—128 East twenty-seventh Street, New York City.
A. W. Sibley—East Boston, Mass.
H. F. Carpenter—Rutland, Vt.
J. Couch—Concord, N. H.

BOOKS FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

THE EMPHATIC DIAGLOTT: containing the Original Greek Text of the New Testament, according to the Recension of Dr. J. J. Griesbach, with an Interlinear Word-for-Word English Translation, based on the renderings of eminent critics, and on the various readings of the Vatican Manuscript (No. 1209) in the Vatican Library; with Notes, References, and an Appendix. 880pp. 12mo. Price, plain leather, $4.00, extra, gilt, $4.50; Turkey morocco, $5.00. Postage, 16 cents.

THE NEW TESTAMENT of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ; with brief Notes and Instructions; containing the references and marginal readings of the Polyglott Bible; also the Psalms, Maps, and Harmony of the Gospels. Published by the American Tract Society. For family use. $1.75; by mail, $2.15.

DICTIONARY OF THE HOLY BIBLE, for general use in the study of the Scriptures, with Engravings, Maps, and Tables. Published by the Amer. Tract Society. This is one of the best. Cloth, $1.50; by mail, $1.75. Sheep, $2.00; by mail, $2.25.

WHY THE SHOE PINCHES. A useful little work, with cuts, showing the conditions of a healthy foot, the causes of deformities, and how to avoid those troublesome diseases and malformations, such as chilblains, corns, bunions, flat-foot, bent-up toes, grown-in nails, etc. Price, 30 cents.

CRUDEN'S COMPLETE CONCORDANCE to the Holy Scriptures. New and condensed edition. Edited by John Eadie, D. D., L.L.D. Cloth, $1.75; by mail, $2.05. Sheep, 2.00; by mail, $2.30.

HIRAM MUNGER'S LIFE and Religious Experience, including many singular circumstances connected with Campmeetings and Revivals. Written by himself. 224 pages. Price 30 cents, postpaid.

THURMAN'S BIBLE CHRONOLOGY, or, The Sealed Book of Daniel Opened. A work for every Bible Student. $1.50; by mail, $1.75.

THE SCRIPTURAL QUESTION BOOK. "Sanctify them through thy truth; thy word is truth." A valuable help to Sunday School and family instruction. 127 pp. Price, 15 cts.; postage 4 cts. $1.50 per dozen; postage 8 cts. on every three copies.

CANON OF THE HOLY SCRIPTURES examined in the light of History. By Prof. L. Gaussen, of Geneva, Switzerland. Translated from the French, and abridged by Edward N. Kirk, D. D. $1.75. By mail, $2.00.

THE TAKING OF HUMAN LIFE incompatible with Christianity; with remarks on the present crisis. By T. F. Tukesbury. Price, 8 cts.; postage 2 cts. A tract for the times.

THE SYRIAC NEW TESTAMENT. A literal translation from the Syriac Peshito Version. By James Murdock, D. D. Price $2.50. Postage 36 cts.

NON-RESISTANCE; or, the Spirit of Christianity restored. By W. C. Thurman. Price 20 cts.; postage 4 cts.

CHLOE LANKTON; or, Light beyond the Clouds. A Story of Real Life. 75 cents. By mail, 87 cts.

MULLER'S LIFE OF TRUST. A Narration of the Lord's dealings with George Muller, written by himself. $1.75; by mail, $2.00.

ENGLISH BIBLES

FOR SALE BY H. L. HASTINGS, BOSTON.

1. MINION, references between the verses. Sheep $2.40; roan gilt, $3.00; Turkey morocco, gilt, $3.60.
2. NONPAREIL. Sheep, $2.00; Roan gilt, rims and clasps, $2.25.
3. PEARL BIBLES. Roan gilt, $2.00; Roan gilt, rims and clasps, $2.50; Morocco, $3; Circuit (Turkey), with flaps to protect the edges, $4.00.
4. DIAMOND. Flexible roan, $1.25; Rims and clasps, $2.00.

TESTAMENTS, flexible enamelled, cloth, 18 cts. Sent by mail, postpaid, on receipt of the price. Ten per cent discount to those who buy to sell again.

Address all orders to H. L. HASTINGS, Boston.

BOOKS AND TRACTS.

[illegible]

All orders for any of the following works must be addressed to MILES GRANT, Boston, Mass.

MILES GRANT'S WORKS.

Resurrection of the Wicked. Discussion with Rev. T. Curry. [illegible]

Eternal Suffering. Discussion with Dr. J. Litch. [illegible]

State of the Dead. Discussion with W. W. Clayton, [illegible]

Miles Grant's Tracts. 32 pages each. Price 5 cents single, [illegible]

What is Man? A Bible view of his creation; The meaning of Soul, Spirit, Death, and Hell.

The Soul, What is it? Or a careful examination of [illegible]

The Spirit, What is it? Or a careful examination of [illegible]

The Rich Man and Lazarus. Thief on the Cross; [illegible]

EXPOSITORY WORKS ON PROPHECY. BY S. S. BREWER.

1. The Days in which we Live. This is a concise [illegible]
2. An Exposition of the Seven Seals. History [illegible]
3. The Slaying of the Witnesses. Showing that [illegible]
4. A Treatise on Revelation XIII, in Two Parts. [illegible]
5. The Kingdom of God and Signs of the Times. [illegible]
6. The Last Day Tokens. No. 1. This is an argument based upon Amos 3: 7,—"Surely the Lord God will do nothing, but he revealeth his secret unto his servants the prophets." [illegible]
7. Last Day Tokens. No. 2 is an answer to the question, "What shall be the Sign of thy coming, and the end of the World?" [illegible]
8. Last Day Tokens. No. 3. This is a phenomenal compend, containing a history of the Signs in the Sun, in the Moon, and in the Stars; [illegible]
9. The Great Image soon to be dashed to pieces. [illegible]
10. The History of an Immortal Soul. Mythology and Theology vs. Bible; [illegible]
11. Rich Man and Lazarus. New edition, [illegible]

One copy of each of the above works sent by mail for $1.35

MISCELLANEOUS.

Cruden's Condensed Concordance, by which any passage of Scripture, of which only a single word is remembered, [illegible]

The Life of Trust. An account of the Lord's Dealings with George Müller, [illegible]

A Treatise on the 24th and 25th chapters of Matthew, [illegible]

Should Christians Fight? A pamphlet on War, [illegible]

The Bible from Heaven, or a dissertation on the Evidences of Christianity. By M. Hall. [illegible]

America in Prophecy. Exposition of the 18th chap. of Isaiah, [illegible]

The Celestial Railroad, or Modern Pilgrim's Progress. [illegible]

The Three Kingdoms, or the Kingdom of God the Father, the kingdom of Satan, the kingdom of the Lord Jesus Christ; [illegible]

The Ten Virgins, or Wisdom and Folly contrasted. By T. M. Preble. [illegible]

The Two Adams. By T. M. Preble. An interesting tract. [illegible]

Messiah's Mission, or an exposition of the Gospel Covenant, [illegible]

The Excellency of the Lord's Anointed, or Christ the promised Messiah. By Mrs. Mary A. Seymour. [illegible]

Everybody's Book. The Bible View of the personality of God. The Devil; his origin, personality, power, and doom. [illegible]

Cook Book. By Dr. F. W. Hurd. This book gives instructions for preparing all the articles of food used at Dr. Jackson's [illegible]

Premature Decay of American Youth. [illegible]

The Saint's Harvest, [illegible]

The Old and New Covenant. [illegible]

The Christian Lyre. [illegible]

A Discussion on the Prophecies. [illegible]

An Appeal to Pious Trinitarians. [illegible]

THE BIBLE STUDENT'S LIBRARY.

A Series of Volumes Edited and Published by H. L. HASTINGS, 167 Hanover St., Boston, Mass.

Each vol. contains over 400 pages, uniformly bound in Cloth and in Paper Covers. Sold separately or in sets. Single volumes sent post-paid on receipt of the price.

I. THE SIGNS OF THE TIMES; or, a Glance at Christendom as it is. By H. L. Hastings. [illegible]

II. THE VOICE OF THE CHURCH on the Coming and Kingdom of the Redeemer. By D. T. Taylor. [illegible]

III. THESSALONICA, OR THE MODEL CHURCH; [illegible]

IV. THE GREAT CONTROVERSY BETWEEN GOD AND MAN; [illegible]

V. FUTURE PUNISHMENT, [illegible]

IMPORTANT BOOKS WORTH BUYING, LENDING, READING, AND PRESERVING.

[illegible]

CASH PRICES.

[illegible]

H. L. HASTINGS, 167 Hanover St., Boston.

June, 1864.

[illegible] AT THIS OFFICE.

For the World's Crisis.

REJOICE!

"Rejoice in the Lord always: and again I say, rejoice."—PHIL. 4: 4.

I think, my dear friends, in holy Word,
The apostle commands to rejoice in the Lord:
And truly my soul doth rejoice!
I rejoice in his goodness, his mercy and love,
In every rich blessing that comes from above;
And that I am grateful, how shall I prove?
I'll hearken unto his voice.

I'll hear when he asks me to give him my heart;
I'll obey, when he bids me with idols to part,
When he bids me seek his throne.
I have made me idols, and found them clay;
I bewail their worship, while I try to pray;
O! I am resolved from this hour of to-day
To worship my God alone.

Our God is a jealous God, we read,
And our inmost thought and every deed
Is open to his eye;
So I'll fold no more in my heart's embrace
These idols of clay, and the "fountain of grace,"
Like the waves on the sand, shall their image erase,
Where His name should engraven lie.

And I know if I hear and obey his voice,
That my soul in the Lord may ever rejoice,
Peace flow to my heart like the river.
God's servants have told us of glorious things,
And I almost hear, as the prophet sings,
Our Savior welcomed "King of kings"
Forever and forever!

East Roxbury, Vt. ANNA E. MCELLISTER.

For the World's Crisis.

THE VOICE OF HISTORIANS.
"The Lord's Day"—The True Christian Sabbath.

NUMBER EIGHT.

From Justin Martyr's Dialogue with Trypho, (Cambridge Ed.), pp. 38–99, and 145. Justin "was beheaded at Rome in 165."

"Is there any objection, gentlemen, that you have to make against us, besides this, viz., that we do not live according to the law; that we are not circumcised as your ancestors were; nor observe the sabbaths as ye do? . . .

"There never was, Trypho, said I, from all eternity, nor ever will be, any other God beside him who created the universe, and placed it in such beautiful order. We do not believe either our or your God to be any other than the same that brought up your fathers out of the land of Egypt with a mighty hand and outstretched arm. Nor do we trust in any other (for there is no other) than in him, in whom you also trust, viz., the God of Abraham, and of Isaac, and of Jacob. But we trust not in him through Moses, or the law; for then there would be no difference between us and you. But now, for I have read, Trypho, that there was to be a new law, and covenant of greater and much more extensive power and authority than any other; which covenant now all that desire to obtain a blessed inheritance must observe. For that law which was promulgated from Horeb is now waxen old and was peculiar to you only; but this new covenant extends to the whole race of mankind. And as a subsequent law repeals that which was made before it, in like manner does the NEW COVENANT DISANNUL THE OLD. But a new and everlasting law is given to us, viz., Christ, and a faithful covenant; after which no other law, precept or command shall be given. . . .

"I then proceeded to show that Esaias said, in another place, 'Hear my words, and your soul shall live, and I will make an everlasting covenant with you, even the sure mercies of David. Behold I have given him for a witness to the people. The nations which knew thee not shall call upon thee, and the people which know not thee shall run unto thee, because of thy God, the holy One of Israel, for he hath glorified thee.' (Isa. 55: 3–5.) This very law you have injuriously treated; this new and holy covenant you have despised and set at nought; and you do not even now receive it, nor repent of your evil deeds. 'For your ears are still heavy, your eyes shut, and your heart is made fat.' (Isa. 6: 10.) Jeremias hath spoken, but ye have not regarded; the Law-giver is come, but ye see him not; the poor have the gospel preached unto them; the blind receive their sight; and ye do not understand: ye have need of another circumcision; though you boast greatly of that which is in the flesh. This new law teaches you to observe a perpetual sabbath; and you, when you have spent one day in idleness, think you have discharged the duties of religion, not well considering to what end this command was given you; and if you have eaten unleavened bread, you say you have fulfilled the will of God: but with such things as these the Lord our God is not well pleased. If any one amongst you is guilty of perjury or theft, let him forbear to commit such sins; if any one is guilty of adultery, let him repent, and then he hath kept the true and delightful sabbath unto God: if any one hath impure hands, let him wash and be clean. . . .

"And to prove that this is what this new Law-giver requires of you, I will again repeat to you those words of Esaias which I mentioned before, with some that follow them, which I then omitted." (Here he quoted from Isa. 53: 3, to the end of the chapter, and then says,) "Of these and other such like words which were spoken of by the prophets, some of them, Trypho, said I, relate to the first coming of Christ, in which it is foretold that he was to appear in an inglorious, dishonorable, and mortal state; and some of them relate to his second coming, when he shall appear in glory and in the clouds, and your people shall look upon, and acknowledge him whom they have pierced. . . . . For we really should observe that circumcision which is in the flesh, and the sabbaths, and all the feasts, if we had not known the reason why they were imposed upon you, namely, upon the account of your iniquities and the hardness of your hearts. For if we can endure all those dreadful torments which men and evil spirits take delight to inflict upon us, so that even while we are in the midst of these inexpressible miseries, in the agonies of death, and in the most extreme tortures, we can put up our petitions to the throne of grace that they that thus despitefully use us may obtain mercy, and according to the injunction of our new Law-giver, do not entertain so much as the least revengeful thought against any of them; why should we not observe those precepts, Trypho, which would do us no hurt,—I mean the circumcision of the flesh, the sabbaths, and the feasts?

"'This, indeed, (says Trypho), 'is a matter of surprise to us, that you, who can patiently endure such miseries and hardships, should refuse to observe those things now in dispute.' . . . It was because of your iniquities and the iniquities of your fathers, that God enjoined you to observe the sabbath; and imposed upon you several other ordinances for a sign, as I said before. . . . Now, gentlemen, if these things are not so, do you speak your thoughts on this subject. And as nobody made any answer, I thus proceeded and said: I will declare unto you, Trypho, and to all that desire to be proselytes to the Christian religion, that divine doctrine which I heard from that venerable old gentleman. You see that the heavens are not idle, nor do they observe the sabbaths. Continue as ye were born. For if before Abraham there was no need of circumcision, nor of the sabbaths, nor feasts, nor offerings before Moses; so now in like manner there is no need of them, since Jesus Christ, the Son of God, was by the determinate counsel of God, born of a virgin of the seed of Abraham, without sin. For even Abraham himself, while he was yet in uncircumcision, was justified through that faith, by which he believed in God, and received the blessing, as the scripture testifies. But he received circumcision for a sign, and not for righteousness, as the same scriptures, and the nature of the thing itself, force us to acknowledge. . . . Moreover, gentlemen, I say, I can prove that God has by these means discovered to us that the eighth day contains some greater mystery in it than the seventh. . . .

"Here Trypho said, 'Why do you, in your quotations from the prophetical writings, omit those passages which expressly enjoin the observation of the sabbath?' I did not therefore omit the prophecies of this kind, gentlemen, because they make against me; but because I supposed you did, and still do understand, that although God did by all his prophets enjoin you to perform the very same things which he had by Moses before enjoined you to perform, that the reason why he always inculcated the same thing was, because of the hardness of your heart, and your ingratitude towards him, that you might by this means one time or other repent, and turn unto, and please him, and not sacrifice your children unto devils, nor be companions of thieves, nor followers after rewards, nor such as judge not the fatherless, nor permit the cause of the widow to come unto them; and that your hands might not be full of blood. . . .

Is it probable, think you, that God could design that your high priests should commit sin in offering the oblations on the sabbath-day? (See Num. 28: 9, 10), or that those that did circumcise on the sabbath-day should commit sin, when he expressly commanded that every male infant should be circumcised the eighth day, though it should happen to be the sabbath? Why did he not order this ceremony on male infants to be performed the day before, or the day after the sabbath, if he knew it to be a wicked thing to do it on the sabbath-day? or why did he not teach those men before Moses and Abraham, to whom he gave this testimony that they were righteous and pleased him, though they were not circumcised, nor kept the sabbaths, to observe these things? . . . Don't you be angry with us nor reproach us for being uncircumcised; because God made us so; nor esteem it an an heinous crime because we drink hot water on YOUR SABBATHS; seeing God governs the world on that day just as he does on all others; and your high priests, as on all other days, so also on this, are commanded to work in offering sacrifices; and so many righteous men, which never observed any of the legal institutions, obtained the approbation of God.

"Moreover, to convince you that you do not understand the scriptures, I will produce another of David's psalms, indited by the Holy Spirit, which you interpret of king Solomon, but was in reality spoken of our Christ. But you deceive yourselves by equivocal expressions. For, when the law of the Lord is called a perfect or undefiled law (Ps. 19: 7), you interpret it of the law of Moses, and not of that which was to come after it, though God himself says that 'he would make a new law and a new covenant' (Jer. 31: 31). And when it is said 'Give the king thy judgments, O God' (Ps. 22: 1), ye say, because Solomon was a king, that this psalm spake of him; whereas the words of the psalm expressly declare that it was spoken of the eternal king, that is Christ. For Christ is said to be a king, and priest, and God, and Lord, and angel, and man, and captain of the host, and stone, and child that is born, and that he was the first to be exposed to sufferings, and then to be taken up into heaven, and to return from thence with glory, and receive an everlasting kingdom, as I can prove from the scriptures. . . . .

"Moreover, that precept of circumcision which positively commands you to circumcise male infants on the eighth day, was a type of that true circumcision by which we are circumcised from sin and error, through him who rose again from the dead on the first day of the week, namely, Jesus Christ our Lord: for the first day of the week is the FIRST OF ALL THE DAYS; but when all the days of the week are gone regularly round again in their course, it is called the eighth,* and yet still continues to be, as it really is, the first. . . .

"And now, gentlemen, said I, I could run over all the other things commanded by Moses, and prove, was it necessary, that they were only types and figures and representations both of those things which were to happen to Christ, and of those persons which it was foreknown would believe in him, and also of those things which Christ himself should perform. But because what I have already said is, I think, sufficient, I shall return. As, therefore, circumcision took its rise from Abraham, and the sabbath and the sacrifices and the offerings and the feasts from Moses, and were instituted, as has been proved, because of the hardness of your people's heart; so it is necessary they should CEASE, ACCORDING to the good pleasure of the Father, in him who was born of a virgin of the seed of Abraham, and of the tribe of Judah, and of the race of David, even Christ the Son of God; who is the everlasting law, the new covenant, which, as was foretold, should be published to all the world, as the prophecies before alleged do abundantly prove. . . . . .

"'You,' said Trypho, 'have owned that he was circumcised, and that he did observe all things commanded by the law of Moses.' 'This,' said I, 'I have and still do own; but I did not say that he therefore endured all these things that he might thereby be justified; but that he might fulfill the dispensation committed to him, according to the will of his Father, the Creator of all things, and who is both Lord and God. I also own that he condescended to be crucified, and to die, and to be made man, and to suffer whatsoever they of your nation were pleased to inflict upon him. But since, Trypho, you do again deny those things which you have assented to, I desire you would answer these questions. Have the patriarchs, and those just and righteous men which were before Moses, who observed none of those things which the scripture assures us were first instituted by him, an inheritance amongst the saints, or not? 'The scriptures,' said Trypho, 'force me to confess that they have.'

East Weare, N. H. T. M. PREBLE.

* "Is called the eighth." According to this is what St. Barnabas says to the Jews, sect. 15.

For the World's Crisis.

THE SABBATIC YEAR.

BRO. GRANT:—Mr. Thurman and others claim that the Sabbatic year began in the month Nisan, in the spring that the jubilee year began in the month Tisri, or September, about the autumnal equinox.

In the examination of this subject, I do not intend to appeal to the learned, for nothing can be settled by them; for they cannot agree among themselves.

The Sabbatic year, as well as the jubilee year, had two objects. The Sabbatic year was for the release of servants, and to give the land rest. "Six years thou shalt sow thy field, and six years thou shalt prune thy vineyard, and gather in the fruit thereof; but in the seventh year shall be a sabbath of rest unto the land, a sabbath for the Lord; thou shalt neither sow thy field, nor prune thy vineyard." Lev. 25: 3, 4. Again, "If thou buy an Hebrew servant, six years he shall serve; and in the seventh he shall go free for nothing."—Ex. 21: 2. The jubilee was for the purpose of freeing the land, and to disannull all contracts entered into from jubilee to jubilee. It was a general bankrupt law, ordered by Jehovah himself.

It is said that the jubilee year relates "to selling and buying," and therefore belongs to the civil year, which began in the month Tisri. It no more belongs to the civil than the Sabbatic year. "If thou buy an Hebrew servant, six years he shall serve, and in the seventh he shall go free for nothing." Here is a transaction of a civil nature, and as much so as any transaction that pertains to the jubilee year. There was a time appointed when this release should take place. "At the end of every seven years thou shalt make a release." Deut. 15: 1. Again, "Moses commanded them, saying, At the end of every seven years, in the solemnity of the year of release, in the feast of tabernacles, . . . thou shalt read this law." Deut. 31: 10. Again, "Six years thou shalt sow thy land, and shalt gather in the fruits thereof; but the seventh year thou shalt let it rest and lie still. . . . Three times thou shalt keep a feast unto me in the year. Thou shalt keep the feast of unleavened bread, . . . and the feast of harvest, the first fruits of thy labors, which thou hast sown in thy field; and the feast of ingathering, which is in the end of the year." Ex. 23: 10, 14–16. There cannot be any more positive evidence to show that our year ends on the last day of December, than is here adduced to prove that the Sabbatic year ends in the month Tisri; and wherever the year ends, the other must begin. Immediately after the ending of the Sabbatic year, the jubilee trumpet sounded. "Thou shalt number seven sabbaths of years unto thee, seven times seven years; and the space of seven sabbaths of years shall be unto thee forty and nine years (not 48½ or little more). Then thou shalt cause the trumpet of the jubilee to sound, on the tenth day of the seventh month; in the day of atonement, . . . and ye shall hallow the fiftieth year. . . . It shall be a jubilee unto you; and ye shall return every man unto his possession, and ye shall return every man unto his family. A jubilee shall that fiftieth year be unto you; ye shall not sow, neither reap that which groweth of itself in it, nor gather the grapes in it of thy vine undressed." Lev. 25: 8–11. We see that the law required two successive years for the land to rest, the forty-ninth and fiftieth years. There would be no sense in saying the fiftieth, if it did not succeed, or begin where the forty-ninth ended, no more than it would to say a man was in his fiftieth year, when he had not attained his forty-ninth year within six months. The law required them to sow and reap six years.

Suppose we begin the year with the month Nisan; seven months of that year is passed before they began to sow, which sowing began the first of October, and ended the first of January. When will the reaping time come? Surely not in the first year. All must see that there is one year that the law was not complied with. Reaping is a command, as well as sowing. It will be seen that the first year's sowing was reaped in the second year, on until we come to the sixth year, when we sow our seed, four months before the year ends. It cannot be reaped, for it will not do to reap next year, as it is the Sabbatic year. We have seen that there could have been no reaping done in the first year, for seven months of the first year had passed before they began to sow; and the crops would not be matured until another year had commenced. It would be useless to sow the sixth year, for the crop would not be ripe before the Sabbatic year had commenced. We see, therefore, that one year of the six was blank; for there were only five years they could reap. To sow without reaping would be labor lost. If we begin the year with the month Tisri, the time for sowing, the month where it has been clearly shown that the Sabbatic year ends, then we sow and reap in the same year.

Again. "And if ye shall say, What shall we eat the seventh year? behold, we shall not sow, nor gather in our increase; then will I command my blessing upon you in the sixth year, and it shall bring forth fruit for three years. And ye shall sow the eighth year, and eat yet of old fruit until the ninth year; until her fruits come in ye shall eat of the old store." Lev. 25: 20–22. It is supposed that because God has said, "Ye shall sow the eighth year, and eat yet of old fruit until the ninth year; until her fruits come in," that the fruits of the ninth were that which were sown in the eighth. It is only an inference. The fruits gathered from the seed sown in the eighth year would be the fruits of the eighth, gather it whenever you please. If God had not provided three years' harvest, the jubilee year would be unprovided for, and he still would have to bless the forty-eighth year with an extra blessing, which he has not shown necessary. God did not stint his blessings, but gave them a hundred fold; that is, one more year's provision than was necessary to be provided for the Sabbatic year, as he has told them in this same connection, "Ye shall eat old store, and bring forth the old because of the new." Lev. 26: 10. He is no doubt referring here to the old store with which God had blessed them, in the sixth year, which was on hand in the ninth year, after the eighth year's fruit had come in which was the "new fruits" here referred to.

It is said that they were to sow the eighth year. This eighth year corresponds with the first of the six years, which they were commanded to sow; and therefore it must refer only to the Sabbatic year, for the jubilee fell on the eighth, in which year they were commanded not to sow. This suggests another difficulty. If we continue to count the Sabbatic years in succession, without reference to the jubilee year, for they would not be able to sow the jubilee year, the sowing would have to be done in the second year after the Sabbatic year. We have seen that it was impossible to reap the first year of the sixth, if we begin the year in the month Nisan, in consequence of which one year's reaping was lost; and as they could not sow until the next year after the jubilee, it would only leave four years' reaping, leaving two blank years in which the law was not fulfilled. How easy and natural the commandments can be obeyed if we begin the year where the last year ends, in the feast of tabernacles, at the end of the year,—forty-nine years. Then the jubilee year,—a year of freedom; and then begin to count anew at the end of the jubilee year, forty-nine years, to another jubilee; so on to the final deliverance,—the jubilee of jubilees.

M. E. GREEN.

236 Sullivan St., N. Y. City.

For the World's Crisis.

OUR LATE VICTORIES.

Joy to the land! the day has come
When Treason "bites the dust";
While many a desolated home
Proclaims that "God is just."

From what we've suffered may we learn,
Though "hand shall join in hand,"*
The claims of God, and man to spurn,
Their counsels shall not stand.

While we are smarting 'neath the rod,
By heaven in judgment sent,—
O, may we hear the voice of God,
And of our sins repent.

Then may we pray, and God shall hear,
And all our foes subdue;
And all the people, far and near,
Give him the praise that's due.

Each heart shall then be ruled by love,
No more man wear the chain,
And angels, bending from above,
Sing "PEACE ON EARTH TO MEN."

Boston, April 10th, 1865. HUMANITAS.

* "Though hand join in hand, the wicked shall not be unpunished."—Bible.

"THOUGHTS AND APOTHEGEMS."

"Those who boldly stand out and court inquiry, and bring forward cogent reason for their conviction, are reproached, by a certain modern writer, with infirm faith and timidity. Timidity of all things! One is reminded of the story of some Indian savage serving as allies to the British in America, who, when the allied force was attacked by the enemy, ran and took shelter in the woods, while the British troops stood firm under a heavy fire, and repulsed the assailants. It was expected that their Indian friends would have been full of admiration at this display of superior valour; but, on the contrary, their interpretation of it was, that the British soldiers were such cowards that they were too much frightened to run away. Almost every chapter of the New Testament convicts the Lord Jesus and his followers of that "timidity," in appealing to that evidence of miracles and prophecies, which is censured and derided."

"All men wish to have truth on their side, but few to be on the side of truth."

"Men miss truth more often from their indifference about it, than from intellectual capacity."

"The pursuit of religious truth is the noblest, as it is the most important pursuit, in which any human being can be engaged."

"To dread danger from the progress of any truth, physical, moral, or religious, is to manifest a want of faith in God's power, or, in his will to maintain his own cause."

"Falsehood, like the dry-rot, flourishes the more in proportion as light and air are excluded."

"Truths dangerous indeed; yes—and so are meat and drink; but who will therefore resolve to perish with hunger?"

"It is often said, that though it may be well for learned and skillful Divines to have the objections to christianity placed before them, yet that it is better not to notice objections generally, for fear of alarming and unsettling the minds of plain unlearned people, who had, probably, never heard of anything of the kind. Now, many persons, who have never heard anything distinct on the subject, have heard, and are made uneasy by, vague reports and obscure rumors of objections, made by some supposed learned men, who have proceeded on "rational" grounds, without knowing distinctly what they are; when, perhaps, if these objections were clearly stated to them, they are qualififed, by their own plain sense, to perceive how irrational they are. Suppose you were startled in a dark night by something that looked like a spectre in a winding-sheet, would not he who should bring a lantern, and show you that it was nothing but a white cloth hanging on a bush, give you far better encouragement, than he who merely exhorted you to "look another way, keep up your heart, whistle and pass on"?—Selected by F. H. BURBANK.

For the World's Crisis.

LETTER FROM BRO. W. NICHOLS.

DEAR BRO. GRANT:—I am slowly recovering from a sickness that confined me to my house several weeks, but my Heavenly Father, whose mercy and goodness has followed me all the days of my life, has restored me so that I am able to walk about again, for which I praise him. It seemed for some time the disease would overpower my mortal energies, and I, too, should walk through the valley of the shadow of death, and be laid away to sleep beside my brethren Wilson and Stewart whose graves are not yet one year old; but at all times I could cheerfully say, "Not my will, but thine, be done;" and in view of all his mercies I am determined my life and all I have shall be more fully devoted to his service. How unutterably precious are the words of the Savior—"He that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live."

I am much pleased with the Crisis, and the manner in which it is conducted, and the generous support given to it by its readers and patrons is the best evidence of its usefulness. But why is it that Mr. Thurman's book causes such a fluttering among some of our people? I read it, and was well pleased with its contents. It is true some of his interpretations and deductions were new to me; still I could not say they might not be true. His arguments based upon astronomy and chronology are beyond my reach, for I am not sufficiently learned to understand them, but I think he has thrown much light upon some points which were dark to us before, and which makes history harmonize with the word of God and causes it to shine more and more, as he promised it should, until the perfect day. With what lustre, and beauty, and solemn majesty it shines forth, when stripped of the mists and darkness that obscure it through our ignorance and want of prayerful attention to its holy teachings. It is to those that receive it into good and honest hearts, and bring forth fruits with patience, that God has promised to give a knowledge of the kingdom. It can come from no other source, and is given on no other condition.

I do not think Mr. Thurman has met that generous and friendly response, which a christian should expect and receive from another. I am surprised at the conduct of some who have labored among us for years, who confess that they know but little or nothing on the subject; but still condemn it, and seem to try to prevent others from understanding it. It makes me think of the actions of the churches during the campaign of '43, and '44. Is this proving all things and holding fast that which is good? We want the truth. We have too much at stake to be deterred from searching for it by all laudable means. The Adventists as a people will investigate, and men much mistake their character if they think to turn their minds from the object so dear to them as the time when they may expect the glorious kingdom of God.

Why cannot the position advanced by Mr. Thurman be met and discussed in a calm and courteous manner, and if false, show wherein it is so? If true, let the people know it. Have we sunk so low that we must resort to a sort of guerilla warfare? If so, our position must be humiliating indeed, and we should expect to receive the pity, at least, of all good men. We want the truth on this most important subject. It is an evil cause that loves darkness. It is an old adage, Raise the voice of the multitude, and in the tumult truth is as soon crucified as error. The book may not be true; if so, no thanks to its opposers; they have failed so far as I have seen to detect its errors; and if it is true, which many good men hope, in what condition will these men find themselves? I wonder upon which branch of the heavenly vine, filled with all its rich and beautiful clusters, yielding fruit to the great Husbandman, grew the spirit that dictated some of the articles found in the Crisis? I was pained when I read them. There were taunts, and thrusts, and flings, and surmisings unworthy the thoughts of a christian, and seemed more like the language of the men of this world in their political squabbles than the peaceful droppings from the pen of the christian. Out of the abundance of the heart the mouth will speak. "A good man out of the treasure of his heart," etc.

We have preached, and prayed, and sung for years, that we were strangers and exiles from our Father's house, where are stored all our treasures and hope, and some of us, at least, were in earnest, and these unseen things are real to us. It is more surprising to me that even a whisper on the time of that greatest of all events should not send a thrill through every heart. Every sigh, every song, every prayer, every friend we bury from our sight, as they sink down weary in life's rugged march, but bring thoughts of home, sweet home; and the wonder is that all that ever heard the name of Jesus and his glorious kingdom, do not with united voice make earth vocal with his praise, until the breaking heavens should reveal the coming One. But then he tells me of the times of Noah and Lot. I read at one time when our Savior was on earth, his disciples and friends began to sing and shout a little in genuine Advent style, and disturbed some people of propriety; and there was something said about rebuking them. I am glad to note it did not come from the lips of the blessed Master. We have some excellent precedents, if we do make a little noise when we sing of the kingdom.

It may seem wrong in the eyes of some, that when our Heavenly Father wishes to communicate his will to us, he should choose his own instruments, qualify them himself, and neglect to employ sometimes men wise in the learning of this world. I fear the disciples, or the Master himself, even, would stand but poor chance were they catechised by modern professors in human philosophy and religion. I do not wish to underrate the value of learned men, who have spent their time and talents to acquire a knowledge of the language by which holy men wrote as they were moved by the Holy Ghost; far from it; nor would I wish by any means to discourage any one, who by patient industry endeavors to search into the deep things of God, and spends his life trying to persuade men to be reconciled to God. All honor to them. The world knows them not, nor will they ever be repaid until the time when they shall shine as the stars for ever and ever.

But what shall we say of the men who bring in damnable heresies, even denying the Lord that bought them; who risk their eternal inheritance and spend their lives in subverting the words of life, and scattering the flock? The blessed word does not give a very flattering picture of the times in which we live, nor need we think all the false teachers died long ago. There are men now who, if they do not deny the words of the Lord, it is so near it but few men can see the difference. They twist and distort the plain word of God, and by some dark process unknown to honest men who think God means what he says, by correcting its translations as they call it try to make it bear wicked evidence against its author, and the waters of life that God designed for his thirsty flock they foul with their feet. Each has some new theory to present, and if the word will not support it, why the word is wrong, and must be bent to suit the theory. Men are perishing for life's healing waters, and they are drugged by some vile stupefying stuff of man's prescription; they amuse their hearers with late discoveries they have made of some great plan, which the Lord either had forgotten or had neglected to make plain for his waiting church, until they arose to shed light upon these unrevealed subjects; and if at any time some faithful souls hesitate to receive their gospel, they are told this is an age of progress, you must receive the light, and the teacher throws all his influence, with his worthless trash, into the wavering balance, vainly endeavoring to outweigh the peaceful word of God before the gaze of admiring dupes.

We should always bear in mind the great apostasy, originated by men professing godliness, who misled and scattered the church, and built up a wicked power, above all law, and contemned the word of the Almighty, and in the name of Christ murdered the flock of God. People have sometimes "gone wool-gathering and came back shorn;" so are all who leave the calm precepts of the blessed Jesus, and go after strange doctrines. Are not his words of promise plain? Have any ever trusted them and been deceived! Hear him: "If a man love me he will keep my sayings; and my Father will love him; and we will come and make our abode with him." Is not that good? And, "If ye love me, keep my commandments; and I will pray the Father, and he shall give you another Comforter, that he may abide with you forever; the spirit of truth, whom the world cannot receive, because it seeth him not, neither knoweth him; but ye know him, for he dwelleth with you, and shall be in you, and he shall take of the things of the Father and show them unto you. He shall bring my words to your remembrance, whatsoever I have said unto you."

Blessed Jesus! priceless words! every word is truth. It was that Spirit that awakened me while running with the giddy throng to death. It was he that showed me where that path led. It was he who, in the time of my deep distress and affliction, because of my sins, pointed me to Jesus as the sinner's only hope. He received me, forgave me my sins, comforted my poor affrighted heart, and gave me his peace. He laid his cross upon me, and told me to bear it as the badge of discipleship at all times, until he should be pleased to release me, and give me a crown of everlasting life. Sometimes when passing by the gay and proud they have sneered at the token of my subjection to my Master, and I felt mortified; he was touched at my weakness, and assisted me, and gave strength, and spoke kind words of encouragement, until I am able to say in his strength, "God forbid that I should glory, save in the cross of Christ, by which I am crucified to the world, and the world to me."

Thanks be to God, my prospects are glorious. The world which once seemed to possess some value, has lost its charms. I am no longer attracted by its dull vanities, or allured by its miserable, empty follies, called pleasures. Jesus is mine! What want I besides? He will lead me, and whether in sorrow or joy, all things shall work for my good; and I long for the time when I can exchange the garments of my humiliation, and be clothed with immortality, and with that innumerable company raise my glad voice to swell the joyful song of earth's eternal jubilee. Your brother, in hope of eternal life.

Albany, N. Y. WILLIAM NICHOLS.

The Children's Corner.

PLEDGE OF THE TRY COMPANY.

We, the Undersigned, hereby pledge ourselves to abstain from Tea, Coffee, Tobacco, and all Intoxicating Drinks as a Beverage.

For the World's Crisis.

CONTENTED JOHN.

One honest John Tompkins, a hedger and ditcher,
Although he was poor, did not want to be richer;
For all such vain wishes to him were prevented,
By a fortunate habit of being contented.

Though cold were the weather, or dear were the food,
John never was found in a murmuring mood;
For this he was constantly heard to declare,
What he could not prevent he would cheerfully bear.

For "why should I grumble and murmur," he said,
"When I cannot get meat, I'll be thankful for bread,"
And "though fretting may make my calamity deeper,
"It never can make bread and cheese to grow cheaper."

If John was afflicted with sickness or pain,
He wished himself better, but did not complain,
Nor lie down to fret in despondence or sorrow,
But said that he hoped to be better to-morrow.

If any one wronged him or treated him ill,
Why John was good-natured and sociable still;
For he said that revenging the injury done,
Would be making two wrongs when there would be one.

And thus honest John, though his station was humble,
Passed through this sad world without even a grumble;
And 'twere well if the most who're thought wiser and richer,
Would copy John Tompkins, the nedger and ditcher.

—Selected.

THE LITTLE GIRL AND HER COPY.

A little girl went to writing school. When she saw her copy, with every line so perfect, "I can never write like that," she said.

She looked steadfastly at its straight lines, which were so very straight, and the round lines so slim and glaceful. Then she took up her pen and timidly put it on the paper. Her hand trembled; she drew it back; she stopped, studied the copy, and began again.

"I can but try," said the little girl; "I will do as well as I can."

She wrote half a page. The letters were crooked. What more could we expect from a first effort? The next scholar stretched across her desk and said:

"What scraggly things you make!"

Tears filled the little girl's eyes. She dreaded to have the teacher see her book. He will be angry with me and scold," she said to herself.

But when the teacher came and looked, he smiled.

"I see you are trying, my little girl," he said kindly, "and that is enough for me."

She took courage. Again and again she studied the beautiful copy. She wanted to know how every line went, how every letter was rounded and made. She then took up her pen and began again to write. She wrote carefully, with the copy always before her.

But O, what slow work it was! Her letters straddled here, they crowded there, and some of them looked "which way."

The little girl trembled at the step of the teacher.

"I am afraid you will find fault with me," she said; "my letters are not fit to be on the same page with the copy."

"I do not find fault with you," said the teacher, "because I do not look so much at what you do, as to what you aim and have the heart to do. By sincerely trying, you will make a little improvement every day; and a little improvement every day will enable you to reach excellence by and by."

"Thank you, sir," said the little girl, and thus encouraged, she took up her pen with a greater spirit of application than before.

And so it is with the dear children who are trying to become like Jesus. God has given us a heavenly copy. He has given us his dear Son "for an example, that we should follow his steps." He "did no sin, neither was guile found in his mouth." How he loved people; how he forgave his enemies; how kind and tender he was; how "meek and lowly in heart;" how "he went about doing good!" He is "altogether lovely," and "full of grace and truth."

And when you study his character, "I can never reach that," you say. "I can never be like Jesus."

God does not expect you to be like his dear Son in a minute, or a day, or a year; but what pleases him is, that you should love him and have a disposition to try. It is that temper which helps you grow day by day, little by little, into his likeness, which God desires to see. Your companions may see no signs of improvement in your conduct; they may even laugh at your efforts; but God, with his all-seeing eye, can discern them. He looks at the heart. God sees you try. God loves you for trying, and he will give you his Holy Spirit to help you.

The younger you try, the easier it becomes. The harder you try, the sweeter you will find it. And what sight is more lovely to those who love you, than to mark you growing day by day into the temper and spirit of our Lord Jesus Christ?—Child's Paper.

"SOMEBODY'S GRANDPA."

"O," cried Emma Rich, out of breath with running to catch up with Julia Kent, "there's an old man coming down Truman Street, and he walks so queer; the boys are pestering him, and it frightened me awfully."

Julia looked round, yet saw nobody but Emma at her side, pale and trembling.

"How did he look?" asked Julia.

"Awfully," said Emma, who saw him through her fears; and fears, you know, often give quite a wrong impression.

Julia looked again, and then caught sight of an old man staggering round the corner, with a pack of rude boys behind him.

"Let's run away," cried Emma.

Instead of that, Julia stopped.

"I should think those boys would be ashamed to treat an old man so," she said, her cheeks glowing. "He's somebody's grandpa."

"O, I am so scared!" cried Emma again.

"Scared!" cried Julia indignantly; "then run." Julia went back. "Boys," she said, boldly, "I think you ought to be ashamed to treat a poor old man so. Should you like it, if 'twas your grandpa?"

"Who are you?" cried the rude boys, and they began to sneer at her.

"You may laugh as much as you please," said Julia; "I don't mind it."

"I hear a friendly voice," said the old man, "but I'm blind; I cannot see where it comes from."

"It is I," answered the child, going up to him, "and I will lead you home, if you'll like me to. Maybe you lost your way, sir. It must be so hard not to see."

"Yes, dear child," said the old blind man; "I'm a stranger here. I'm visiting my daughter, who lives in —— Street. I just stepped out to sun and air myself, and somehow missed my way. The boys think I'm in liquor, for I can't walk with young legs. How came you to befriend me, dear child?"

"O, sir said Julia, "I thought you might be somebody's grandpa, and I could not bear to see you treated so. I will lead you home, sir."

HOW A THIEF BEGAN.

A boy once slyly took a marble from a playmate while playing with him. This playmate had many marbles, and did not notice his loss. The same boys met frequently, and no notice was taken of the transaction, the little boy never having missed his marble. This seemed to harden the little boy who stole the marble, for soon after he had an opportunity, when his mother was not at home, and took some cake from her cupboard. This also, was not discovered, which only seemed to harden him in his crime. Some time after this, he stole some money from his father, and spent it foolishly amongst his careless and wicked companions; but his father did not miss it either, so the little boy became more and more emboldened and thought he could go on in this way whenever an opportunity presented itself; but, like all others who persist in sin, it found him out. He was sent as an errand boy to a milliner's shop, and, being a smart little fellow, became a favorite with his employer, and was frequently behind the counter; but again evil thoughts came into his mind, and he robbed the good lady who had employed him, first, by taking small sums again and again without detection, but at last it was found out, and he was taken to prison, and sent far away to a strange land, and never saw his father or mother again.

Who can describe the grief of those fond parents, when they found that their son had been guilty of such a sinful and dishonorable thing as stealing? But his father's grief and his mother's tears could not prevent the punishment of the boy, or the law to take its course. Perhaps if he had not cheated his playmate of the marble he would never have robbed his employer, and come to so bad an end.

A LESSON FOR BOYS.

The present King of Hanover, in his early youth, was remarkable for his candid and open disposition. Playing one day with the young Count L——, in the principal drawing-room of the palace, they heedlessly injured and destroyed a very valuable ornament, which the Duchess had expressly charged them neither to touch nor go near. On her return, her Royal Highness discovered the accident, and demanded how it happened.

"I," said Prince George, stepping boldly forward, "I did it."

On being afterwards asked why he had taken the whole blame on himself, when his companion was equally in fault, he replied,

"Because I was the oldest, and ought to be punished most; and because," he added, "I looked in L——'s face, and I thought he was going to deny it, and say what was not true."

BE GENTLE.

Be gentle. Much is done by kindness. When you are troubled sometimes, do you not find yourselves made happier if some one asks you pleasantly, "What is the matter?" and tries to comfort you? Then when you see others sorrowful, try to help them. If they are angry with you, answer them kindly. If they have tried to injure you, do some good act in return, and every one will love you. More than all, conscience will whisper, "That is right."

☞ Humility is better than a gold mine.

The World's Crisis
AND SECOND ADVENT MESSENGER.

TERMS:

If paid in advance,—One year......$2.40; Six months......$1.20
If not paid within six months,—One year......$3.00; Six months......$1.50
Five copies, to one address, six months......$5.00
—same rate for any larger number under ten.
Ten copies, to one address, six months......$10.00
—same rate for any number over ten.
CLUB PRICES PAYABLE ALWAYS IN ADVANCE.

POSTAGE.—The postage, in the United States, on each single copy of the Crisis, is 20 cents a year, payable quarterly, in advance, at the office of delivery.

RULES FOR CORRESPONDENTS.—Over all matters not intended for publication, write PRIVATE.
Over all business matters, write BUSINESS.
Over all articles for the paper, write FOR THE CRISIS.
All articles should be accompanied by the writer's name, for the Editor's information, even if it is not published.
When the names of new subscribers are sent, please say they are new, and it will save us much labor.

PRIVATE LETTERS.—Those wishing to address the Editor on matters not connected with the paper will please write the word PRIVATE on the outside of the envelope.

Please put the business matters and appointments on a piece of paper separate from other communications.

All persons writing to the office should give DISTINCTLY and PLAINLY the Post Office, County and State at which they wish to be addressed; and all orders, subscriptions, communications and remittances, should be plainly directed to
MILES GRANT, BOSTON, MASS.

PUBLISHED ALSO AT THE SAME OFFICE, Semi-monthly:

THE YOUNG PILGRIM:
An Illustrated Sunday School Paper,
FOR CHILDREN AND YOUTH.

TERMS:

[illegible]

Payable always in advance.

[illegible]

The World's Crisis

AND SECOND ADVENT MESSENGER.

"BEHOLD, I COME QUICKLY; AND MY REWARD IS WITH ME."

WHOLE NO. 500. BOSTON, TUESDAY, MAY 2, 1865. VOL. XXI.—NO. 7.

The World's Crisis
AND SECOND ADVENT MESSENGER,
Issued every Tuesday Afternoon, at
167 HANOVER STREET, BOSTON.

MILES GRANT, EDITOR.

EDITORIAL COMMITTEE:
S. O. MATHEWSON, I. C. WELLCOME,
H. F. CARPENTER.

PUBLISHING COMMITTEE:
C. F. HUDSON, H. V. DAVIS,
S. S. BREWER, J. G. HAMBLIN,
D. MATHEWSON.

GEORGE T. ADAMS,
Treasurer and Business Agent.

☞ The Crisis is devoted to the exposition of all Bible truth; especially the doctrine of the immediate, personal coming and reign of Christ on the earth; holiness of heart; the unconscious state of the dead; their literal resurrection, and final destruction of the wicked.

For the World's Crisis.

THOU WILT COME, DEAR SAVIOR.

Air.—"Willie on the dark blue sea."

How many long, long years have passed
Since Jesus went away;
Lone hearts with grief are overcast,—
Dear Jesus, come! we pray.
How many a weary soul would long
To see thee coming now;
They'd fly to join the mighty throng,
Which at thy feet will bow.

Chorus.
Thou wilt come, dear Savior, thou wilt come;
Thou hast said, "I'll come again!"
"Amen! even so, Lord Jesus, come,"
We long for Thee to reign.

How many a sick and dying one
Would shout to know thee near;
To know that thou wilt quickly come,
To wipe away each tear.
How many precious saints of God
Have fallen at their posts,
And slumber 'neath the grave's cold sod,
Which proudly o'er them boasts.

How many little ones have died,
Who never knew earth's strife;
Oh Jesus, come! we've often cried,
And bring them all to life.
How many hearts, all torn by grief,
Are mourning for their dead;
No earthly joy to bring relief,
And hope seems almost fled.

How many years death has been king;
The grave conceals his slain;
But victory! victory! we shall sing,
When Jesus comes again.
What hallelujahs we shall raise,
Ten thousand times as sweet
As ever mortal tongues could raise,
When we before him meet.

J. N. Berry.

For the World's Crisis.

ELD. THURMAN'S ECLIPSES.

ORACLES CONSULTED.

Opinions are influenced or determined by two methods,—the authoritative and the argumentative. And the two elements, authority and reason, may be combined in all possible proportions, really or apparently, and it is often hard to tell where one ends and the other begins.

It is not for us to say how far the adherents of Eld. Thurman's astronomy have relied on his arguments, fairly mastered and understood, or on his general character and his particular "tables," believing that neither of these would deceive them. But doubtless his tables have been an authority in the case. And to the extent of these tables, at least, there must have been a reliance upon authority, viz., that of Mr. Ferguson, corrected—if indeed corrected—by Mr. Thurman.

Beyond this, there may be appealed to, on either side, the authority of astronomers who actually compute the eclipses in question, using such tables as they think the best.

I have designed, in this discussion, to use the argumentative method as far as I possibly could. I know this method is not very summary. It may tax the patience both of myself and of my friends on Eld. Thurman's side of the house. If they will be patient, I have plenty to say for weeks to come. And if I digress too far, or multiply words unduly, or assert things too arrogantly, or talk too nonsensically,—if in any way I speak unprofitably, and convert the Crisis into waste paper, —I trust the failure will be one of capacity and not a lack of honest industry; and so I may be forgiven, if to ruin paper costing thirty cents a pound is a pardonable sin.

Meanwhile I have not, in my plan, despised such authorities as the actual computation of eclipses by good astronomers, living or dead. Such authorities are among my papers biding their time. I have preferred to detain them until they should find their most fitting place in the argumentative method, be best understood, and their value be fairly determined. If you would like authority, good friends, please trust that of my word when I say that the oracles I have consulted may satisfy some of you when they come to speak.

Meanwhile, again, Eld. Thurman's friends have used the like privilege, and have consulted an astronomer, whom I will call, for convenience, their oracle. I have learned from one who knows him that he is an accomplished astronomer, worthy to be an oracle in this dispute, and to be relied on as far as any authority may be appealed to in the case.

He is the gentleman to whom allusion was made by Bro. Hastings in his inquiry about a sum of money supposed to have been paid for the computation of some of Eld. T.'s eclipses. I am myself partly responsible for this inquiry made by Bro. H. I have had some correspondence with the gentleman, and have obtained the results of his computations. The occasion of the correspondence was as follows: Bro. H. and myself learned that Eld. T.'s friends had consulted such an astronomer. I afterwards asked one of them what results were obtained in two eclipses. 1, That of B. C. 477, which Dr. Zech regards as the one seen by Xerxes and his army: "Did this gentleman find it to be an annular eclipse?" I was told that he did. 2, That of B. C. 457, which Eld. Thurman regards as the one seen by Xerxes and his army, and which his tables make a total eclipse; "Did this gentleman find it total?" I was told that he did not. I inquired how much it lacked of being total, and my friend did not recollect. So I addressed an inquiry, indirectly, to the gentleman himself. I presumed that the desired information was not contraband, and offered in exchange for the courtesy some historical items I had access to, if they should be of any value or interest to the gentleman.

I have his reply, dated Feb. 13th. A few days after I requested the privilege of publishing it, either anonymously or with such other modification as he might wish. Soon after this I addressed a note to one of Eld. T.'s friends, suggesting the propriety of the readers of the Crisis hearing from their oracle. If they regarded the oracle as unfavorable, yet not seriously damaging, it was easy to say so, and to say why. In any case I thought that current and pertinent facts should appear in the columns of the Crisis.

But, though invited once and again, for reasons best known to themselves, Mr. Thurman's friends have not yet published the response of their oracle, and I have received permission from the astronomer to do so. He does not wish, however, to be drawn personally into the controversy; but, entertaining toward Mr. T., and, I dare say, all the parties concerned, "none but the most kindly feelings," he desires his name not to appear in the discussion. But this can not affect the value of his results, either way.

It is but just to say that I probably have these results more fully and in detail than Mr. Thurman's friends have received them. But the most important facts were doubtless fully understood by them; and if they were of any value in this question of the alleged astronomical refutation of Ptolemy's Canon, I see no reason why either party should fear to see them in print. Facts are not our enemies if they may help us to the truth. And what is fifty dollars to that which is better than fine gold or rubies? (Prov. iii. 14, 15.) If hopes were disappointed, was the money therefore lost?

The following table gives the results obtained by the gentleman, in respect to the time, place, and dimensions of several of Mr. Thurman's eclipses.

Sun or Moon	Year B. C.	Month	Day	Hour	Digits eclipsed	Place
M.	721	March	19th	8.18	total	Babylon
,,	720	March	8th	10.39	2.5	,,
,,	720	Sept.	1st	6.51	7.1	,,
,,	682	Aug.	3rd	6.25	7.3	,,
,,	681	Jan.	27th	11.52	total	,,
,,	681	July	22nd	6.49	,,	,,
S.	549	June	19th	6.47	See below.
,,	478	Feb.	17th	11.04	,,
,,	457	Dec.	16th	7.53	,,
,,	431	Aug.	3rd	4.55	7.7	Athens
M.	413	Aug.	27th	9.51	total	,,
,,	201	Sept.	22nd	6.17	7.5	Alex'dria
,, A. D.	14	Sept.	27th	4.46	total	Rome

The eclipse of 549 B. C. was central in latitude 30 deg. 20 min. north, longitude 109 deg. east.

That of 478 B. C. was of 10.1 digits in Lat. 38 deg. 20 min. N., Long. 28 deg. E. The sun was centrally eclipsed in Lat. 48 deg. 57 min. N., Long. 35 deg. 88 min. E.

That of 457 B. C. was total in Lat. 36 deg. 29 min. N., Long. 102 deg. 13 min. E.

In order to know the meaning of these results, it will be necessary to compare them with the times and dimensions named by Ptolemy and in other ancient statements, and also with the computations made by Mr. Thurman. I shall make these comparisons as I proceed, in future articles. But some remarks of the gentleman, stating the differences between his results and those of Mr. Thurman, are in place here.

He says he was desired "to take particular pains with the eclipse of 457 B. C." Yet he "could not make any eclipse at all at Sardis, or at least a very small one if any, while Mr. Thurman makes a total one. Mr. T., he found, had made the time of new moon almost three hours later than himself, and the moon's latitude, he thought, 10 or 12 minutes less. "These two circumstances combined gave him the total eclipse." He adds: "The disagreement in our calculations is too great to be reconciled on any other ground than that of a mistake, especially in the latitude, either by Mr. Thurman or myself. But I have tested my computations in various ways without detecting any error." He had used, in his computations, the tables published in a late edition of the British Encyclopedia, which employ, he says, a greater number of equations, including secular ones, than those of Ferguson. But for this eclipse he also employed Pierce's tables of the Moon, by which he found "a small eclipse at Sardis, the total phase occurring about Lat. 36½ deg. north, Long. 100 deg. east."

The eclipse of 478 B. C. is the same with that of Dr. Zech, with a year's difference in the style of reckoning time B. C.; and it was found to be an annular eclipse. Our astronomer is decidedly of the opinion that such an eclipse could not have caused the darkness which Herodotus describes; and in this opinion he accords with Mr. Thurman and his friends. I do not know but this explains the statement made to me,—to which Bro. Hastings alludes,—and other rumors I have heard, that Mr. Thurman had been sustained by an astronomical authority. I have only to say, I do not quarrel with this opinion. I have a good deal more to say about the Xerxes eclipse when I get to it. For the present I remark that I reported Dr. Zech faithfully so far as I reported him at all. I did so, knowing what might be said against his theory. But to demolish Dr. Zech's theory,—which I have neither accepted nor rejected,—is not to establish Eld. Thurman's. And surely, if an annular eclipse would not cause the darkness which Herodotus reports, how would that darkness be produced by a small eclipse, or by none at all?

Our astronomer also remarks: "It will be seen that in not one instance do we exactly agree, while in several there is quite a discrepancy between us. Thus Thurman makes the eclipse of the moon, Jan. 681 B. C., about 4 hours later than I do, and 1½ hours later than Ferguson's tables make it.

The following statement, in the second letter which I received, shows what are some of the elements to be reckoned in the computation of eclipses. It is understood that Eld. Thurman's tables are a correction of Ferguson's. Whether the correction is properly made or not, there should be some ratio or proportion in the various results produced by it. Now in the eclipse of B. C. 681 Eld. T. makes a difference of 1½ hours in time, requiring a reduction of 10 or 11 degrees in the moon's anomaly. In the eclipse of B. C. 682, 4 degrees are required. And in that of 457 B. C. a difference of one hour in time, made by Ferguson's and Thurman's tables, requires a change of 6 degrees in anomaly. Thus instead of numbers nearly equal, we have 10 or 11, 4, and 6.

"I am aware," says our astronomer, "that the equations depending on this argument change more rapidly when the moon is near its apses than at any other point of its orbit, and that therefore equal variations in the argument are followed by unequal differences in the times or equations. But in all the cases before us the moon was near one of its apses, and hence a uniform change in the argument should have produced about equal differences between Thurman's times and those deduced from Ferguson's tables."

The gentleman does not undertake to say how Eld. T. obtains results so unequal. He wishes to pass no judgment upon his astronomy. The reader must decide for himself what authority is most reliable. If I shall hereafter pronounce against the authority of Eld. T., I shall try to make my reasons apparent for preferring some other authority.

C. F. H.

For the World's Crisis.

MORE LIGHT.

We think it due to Professor Hudson, that the lovers of truth should present him an expression of thanks for the valuable information which he has brought to light, by giving us in our own mother tongue Ptolemy's description of those eclipses which, being handed down to us in a dead language, we before have had no access unto. This is the information which we have long desired, knowing that, being the highest authority to which we can appeal, it must either establish the correctness, or prove the erroneousness of my tables, thus enabling us to speak with more confidence for the future. Had we been in possession of this valuable information some ten or twelve years ago, it would have saved much labor and trouble in properly arranging our tables. But we are now availing ourselves of this new light by calculating and comparing all of those eclipses, the result of which we will give soon.

For the encouragement of those who love the glorious appearing and kingdom of our blessed Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, I might here add, that we have already proceeded far enough to discover that our true Bible chronology is placed upon a foundation which can never be shaken.

To give something of the result of my investigation, call to mind that Ptolemy informs us that "the middle of the eclipse of A. D. 136 was four hours after midnight." This being the last of those three which were not only calculated by him, but also "carefully observed" with his own eyes, must be considered the highest authority to which we can appeal; and my tables make this eclipse just 11 min. 5 sec. later. Therefore, if, as Prof. Hudson well remarks, "we must not prove the eclipses by the tables, but the tables by the eclipses," we will here have only 11 min. 5 sec. to allow for the moon's acceleration in a period of about seventeen hundred years. According to Ptolemy, the quantity of this eclipse was "half its (the moon's) diameter on the north." My tables eclipse just 14 seconds of a degree less. If, therefore, after the instruction of Prof. Hudson, we correct our tables by this eclipse, I must subtract 14seconds from the moon's latitude in eclipses. But this will throw the moon that much further from the node, Mar. 8th B. C. 720, which according to my tables is already too far from the node for any eclipse at all.

If, therefore, we admit with Prof. Hudson that we must first prove our "tables by the eclipses," and that the eclipse of A. D. 136 is the highest authority to which we can appeal in thus correcting our tables, it is now proved to absolute certainty that the three eclipses which Hipparchus found recorded at Babylon did not occur in the year B. C. 720. According to the "Bible chronology," the first year of Mardock, in whose reign these eclipses occurred, was B. C. 682; and in this year we find the first, and in 681, that is in his second year, we find the other two answering to the three Hipparchus found at Babylon. The reader should bear in mind that the eclipse of A. D. 136, having been seen by Ptolemy himself, and "carefully observed" by him, "at Alexandria," in the very year in which his attention being directed to the subject of computing eclipses of the moon, he must have made the nicest observation of this eclipse which was within the limits of his power; hence this eclipse must be regarded as of the highest authority to which we can appeal in correcting tables.

Says Prof. Hudson, "If an eclipse is recorded as accurately and credibly as are reliable historical events generally, then it becomes a standard, and the tables will come nearer and nearer to it as they are made more and more accurate." Thus he has driven for us one stake which cannot be drawn. Then according to his own admission the eclipse of A. D. 136 "becomes a standard" by which the errors of our tables are to be corrected, and if so, then of all the tables of which we have any knowledge, ours come the nearest to the truth.

The next eclipse, which occurring the nearest to the time at which Ptolemy wrote, must be regarded as the next highest authority or surest standard by which our tables are to be corrected, occurred A. D. 134. Concerning this, Ptolemy says, "We have computed its middle time to have been one equinoctial hour before midnight." And according to my tables, it was one hour lacking 4 minutes and 56 seconds before midnight. Hence so far from finding it necessary to allow anything here for the moon's acceleration, we will have to add 4 min. 56 sec. to her retarded motion. But if from the 11 min. and 5 sec., which we have noticed at the year A. D. 136, we subtract this 4 min. 56 seconds, we have 6 min. and 9 seconds to allow for the moon's accelerated motion in 1700 years. But since Prof. Hudson, in his allusion to Dr. Hales, appears to justify the idea of making the eclipses which occurred at the one node with one set of tables, and those that happened at the opposite node with other tables, saying this is "just right"; the controversy between him and me, on the subject of astronomy, is at an end; for, if this is allowable, astronomy is of no more worth in computing eclipses than that of the boy's calculation of the quantity of land he has surveyed, without any regard to the length of his chain. But if astronomy is set aside as of no worth, "we have also a more sure word of prophecy," even the express word of God, which no man can set aside; for "the Scripture can not be broken"; and the Lord has declared that "from the going forth of the commandment to restore and to build Jerusalem unto the Messiah the Prince, shall be seven weeks, and threescore and two weeks"; "whereunto ye do well that ye take heed as unto a light that shineth in a dark place, until the day dawn, and the day-star arise."

But though some may prefer claiming the right to use two sets of tables to that of acknowledging the incorrectness of Bishop Usher's chronology, this can weigh nothing with practical astronomers; hence, if willing to examine the matter, they at least must acknowledge that the chronology which contradicts the express word of God is now clearly proven to be erroneous; and if so, the seal is removed, and the book of Daniel is opened. Then "lift up your heads," O ye saints of the living God, "for your redemption draweth nigh." And you, O dying sinner, "prepare, prepare; O prepare to meet thy God."

Since we should give honor to whom honor is due, let all lovers of truth acknowledge their gratitude to Bro. Hudson, for this large share of the most valuable information, which he has so kindly contributed to our stock of knowledge. That open frankness with which he has given us all the truth, even where it is against the position he occupies, must ever speak loudly in his praise. That the reader may discover something of our indebtedness to him for this act of kindness, we might remark, that if our astronomical tables having passed the strictest criticism of all of the most learned astronomers on earth, and they had pronounced them strictly correct, this could not have contributed half so much to the confidence of those who prefer seeing and knowing for themselves, to that of resting on the opinions of others. Being thus put in possession of the highest authority, to which man can appeal, our tables can, by the learned, never be called in question as to their correctness. We say the highest authority to which we can appeal; for here we have the express words of Ptolemy, not concerning that which occurred before he was born, on which he was dependent upon others for information; but concerning those eclipses which having occurred, not only in his day and under his own personal observation, but even at the very time when his attention being turned to astronomy, he was computing and comparing eclipses of the moon, the one with another; hence to use his own language, "carefully observed by 'himself' at Alexandria," the place where he had all of his astronomical means of discovering with great precision, both the time and quantity of eclipses; raises the three last eclipses, as recorded by Ptolemy, to a standard far transcending everything else, as found in all antiquity concerning eclipses, hence they must become that standard by which all of our astronomical tables are to be tested. And that which must give every man the greatest confidence in our tables is, that while they make all of the ancient eclipses, both of the sun and moon, they come so near the very minute and second of those standard elipses, of which, at the time of arranging those tables, I had no knowledge. And I do from the heart thank our Heavenly Father for this standard raised up as a defense.

Having now within our reach this standard, by which every man can for himself test the correctness of our tables, those who are not afraid of the light of truth are no longer dependent, neither on the say so of Thurman, nor that of the most learned astronomer's on earth.

As the eclipse of A. D. 136 is the last one in Ptolemy's catalogue, it must be the one which occurred the nearest to the time he wrote, and when his astronomical observations had reached their highest state of perfection; hence, must be regarded as of the highest authority found in all antiquity to which we can appeal in testing our tables.

Ferguson's tables fall short about one digit and three-fourths of making this eclipse; and are about half an hour, or twenty-nine minutes and seven seconds in error as to time; which proves that Prof. Hudson is correct in supposing that his tables are not reliable. Struyks's tables lack one digit, all but seventeen minutes, of reaching this standard. My tables come within the limits of fourteen seconds of the quantity, as mentioned by Ptolemy, which being too small to have been noticed by him, we are unable to detect an error here.

The next highest standard to which we can appeal, being the next nearest to the time at which Ptolemy wrote, occurred A. D. 133; but since he failed to give the depth in which the moon was immersed in the earth's shade, this is of but little worth in testing tables.

Our tables having thus stood the criticisms of the highest truth-testing power to which we can appeal, and having thus been sealed correct by the highest astronomical school of authority, our adversaries can no longer weaken the hands of the watchman, on the walls of Zion, who are required to sound the alarm, saying, "behold the bridegroom cometh."

Wm. C. Thurman.

For the World's Crisis.

THURMAN'S CHRONOLOGY.

IS IT TRUE?

It is not my purpose (in the very brief note that I design to pen upon this occasion) either to affirm, or to controvert, the astronomical data and chronological order of events that this worthy Brother Thurman (who is a stranger to me in the flesh) has presented to us for our serious reflection. It is enough for me to believe that he is correct upon all the fundamental questions relating to the fulfillment of the prophetic time; and believing this, I esteem it a privilege and a duty, to frankly acknowledge my honest conviction of the same; and make haste to prepare for the wondrous change that is soon to transpire in the material universe.

Lest it be said of us, "O! fool and slow of heart to believe all the prophets have said," I esteem it a part of wisdom to catch at the slightest flash of truth, as it bursts upon our mortal vision; and hold on to it with a dying grasp, until revolving nature and the events of time again point us to the tables of prophetic history, and tell us to "prophesy again."

It matters not with me, though the world and nominal professors of religion rail against me and gnash upon me with their teeth; my faith is unchangeably fixed upon the immutable promises of the great Jehovah, that at the end of the 2300 days, the "sanctuary shall be cleansed."

Now that the sanctuary here spoken of is the one that was to be trodden under foot," (Dan. 8: 13, 14), none will deny. Nor is it possible to give any other construction to the language used, without doing violence to the spirit and philosophy of the Anglo-Saxon tongue. And I am filled with amazement at my own folly in once subscribing to the doctrine that the sanctuary in the heavens was ever, even in the remotest sense, connected with this vision. Nor yet do I regret that I floated off upon the resistless current of that once popular delusion; as in the course of the reaction, the vision looms up with the brightness of the morning star; and though we erred in '43 and '44, the error (thank kind Heaven!) is found to consist, not in the computation of the prophetic time, nor yet in the grand event that is to transpire at the end of the days, but in the weakness and fallibility of men, in putting their trust in men, "whose breath is in his nostrils." Never before was Ptolemy's Canon brought into serious question, nor was it ever before demonstrated that the Egyptian's chronological chart differed essentially from the Bible, and from the unerring astronomical data, to which our attention is now called.

But "the wise shall understand." O, blessed thought! Is it indeed true, that some devoted friend (may be Bro. Thurman, who, like Daniel, may "set his face unto the Lord God to seek by prayer and supplication with fasting,") is to come to our relief? The thought inspires me with a vivid reflection of the past; and bright prospects loom up in the distance, dispelling the thick darkness that surrounds us, and revealing the Son of God with all the glorified saints in the full enjoyment of their eternal inheritance.

But, hark! I hear the voice of the "fearful and the unbelieving." And when I cast my eyes around, I recognize some with whom I counseled and labored in '43, standing far in the background, taking counsel now with the "wise and prudent," and hurling the missiles of infidelity and skepticism into the open arena of the household of faith. These were once loud champions of revealed time, and stood up manfully, as did the apostle to the Gentiles, witnessing both to small and great, and saying none other things than those which the prophets and Moses did say should come. And when nominal professors of religion talked and reasoned as they now talk and reason, they called them "scoffers," walking after their own lusts, and saying, where is the promise of his coming? In this they virtually say, "the days are prolonged, and every vision faileth." Like some, whose faith seemed to fail them after the crucifixion of the Savior, and turned again to their ordinary avocations; so do these forget the weakness of their own nature, and because the net was not cast upon the right side of the ship in '43 and '44, they seem to fancy that all is lost, and to make any further effort to solve the great problem of prophetic times, is an evidence of weakness and folly. "O! ye of little faith." In the name of Heaven I beseech you to abandon the thought that you are commissioned to preach the gospel of the kingdom at hand, for there is definite time connected with this gospel; and we are commanded to preach the "word" in all its fulness and simplicity.

Because we cannot comprehend at a glance the broad plans of revealed truth, is no evidence of weakness in us, nor yet of unfaithfulness on the part of the Holy Spirit, to "make known what shall be in the last end of the indignation." Now if Daniel understood the vision (and he says he did, Dan. 10: 1), then it follows that some will understand the same vision in the time of the end, for he has told us all that was told to him. And again, "it was not unto themselves, but unto us, they did minister the things which are now reported unto you by them that have preached the gospel unto you, with the Holy Ghost sent down from heaven, which things the angels desire to look into."

Daniel, too, was disappointed through a long series of years, before he fully comprehended the meaning of the time specified in the vision, and yet he fainted not by the way. Nor did he say "the days are prolonged." Indeed, I have often wondered with great admiration at the prophet's unchangeable confidence in the messengers that were sent to inform of these things. It was some fifteen years subsequent to the declaration, "I will make thee know what shall be in the last end of the indignation," to the positive fulfillment of the promise, and yet we find him faithful to the end.

"But none understood the vision" at first. And he rose up, as usual, and "did the king's business," for he was an officer of state, as well as a prophet, and he looked forward, no doubt, with great anxiety to the accomplishment of 2300 literal days, and to the cleansing, or the justifying of the sanctuary at Jerusalem, at that time.

But his time failed him, as did ours in '43, and then, and not till then, could he see that the time given was symbolic, corresponding with the whole vision, and could mean nothing short of 2300 years. And yet he was left in doubt as to the point of time when to commence the said years, as no time had been given, or designated. But he had learned from books that the Lord would accomplish seventy years in the desolations of Jerusalem, and he flattered himself, no doubt, that those days would run out with those years. And knowing that the said years were about accomplished, he turned his face heavenward and prayed most fervently for the fulfillment of the said promise to cleanse the sanctuary. And it was upon this occasion that Gabriel was commanded to "fly swiftly," and inform him of his mistake, and to designate the time for the commencement of the said days, to wit, from the going forth of the commandment to restore and build Jerusalem, which event transpired about two years subsequently, in the first year of Cyrus, king of Persia.

Now, in the third year of the same king, "a thing was revealed unto Daniel, and the thing was true, but the time appointed was long, and he understood the thing." Now what was the thing revealed? Surely it was something that had time connected with it, and "the time was long." It was, therefore, the vision of 2300 days, and he was made to understand that it was to cover the duration of several great empires, to wit, the Medes and Persians, the Grecians, and the Romans, through all the subsequent divisions of each, down to the time of the end, when he would be permitted to "stand in his lot."

Now as Daniel was held in suspense about twenty years, from the time that the vision of 2300 days was spread out before him, till he fully comprehended and understood it, is it not reasonable to suppose, that about the same time will intervene from the time that the vision was written upon tables in '43 to the time when we may fully comprehend and understand the whole matter? O! blessed thought! My soul expands with gratitude to God, when I remember that I have kept the word of his patience; and the promise is sure, that he will keep me from the hour of temptation, which shall come upon all the world, to try them that dwell upon the earth.

Daniel Clow.

For the World's Crisis.

CHRISTIAN UNION;

Or, "Sectarianism a Waste of Means."

NUMBER SIX.

"The saints on earth, and all the dead,
But one communion make;
All join in Christ, their living Head,
And of his grace partake."

Testimonials.

"This building five sects where one church is all-sufficient, involves an immense waste of talents, time and money. The items of unnecessary expense may be set down as follows: Four unnecessary meeting-houses. Suppose these, with fixtures attached, cost five thousand dollars each. One house costing, say, eight thousand dollars, would answer the religious wants of the people, if united. Here, then, is a needless expense of twelve thousand dollars in every such village for meeting-houses. Suppose that there are ten such villages in one county. This would make one hundred and twenty thousand dollars expended in such county for sectarian meeting-houses over what would be necessary if the christians of the county were united. This sum would sustain twelve missionaries abroad ten years, on a salary of one thousand dollars each. Ten such counties will thus expend for sectarian meeting-houses one million two hundred thousand dollars in a generation. This sum would be sufficient to send the Bible, in ten years, to nearly every tribe on earth, in its own language or dialect.

"One half of the state of New York thus expends, on needless houses of sectarian worship, in a single generation, a sum sufficient to carry christianity to millions of heathens, by sustaining one hundred missionaries for twelve years. From this data, any one can form an appropriate estimate of that immense sum expended in Christendom for sectarian temples. It will be seen that we have left out of our calculation a sum sufficient to supply the people of each place with all needed accommodations in the shape of churches, provided they are united. All expended outside of what would be needed in such a case, is, of course, to be set down to the cost of schism.

"The support of religious teachers has ever been a heavy tax upon the world. Whole nations have been impoverished, and empires financially ruined, by this cause alone. In modern times, the voluntary system has greatly modified this evil; but sectarianism more than quadruples the necessary expense of sustaining religious teachers in the world. We are not disposed to call attention to this subject, because of the waste of money alone, but because of the perversion of moral and mental power consequent upon the system.

"In a community of a thousand people, but one preacher is needed. They can all gather under the sound of one voice, and be reached by the same thoughts. Others beside the one preacher ought to teach in their social capacity; but, so far as public preaching, at stated times, is concerned, one can do it better than four. Such a man would be well sustained, and under no temptation to preach to please public opinion. But instead of this, the present system saddles, at least, four preachers upon a community, where one would be more efficient, because free from the collisions which occur among the four. If the three extra preachers receive five hundred dollars each, it will make fifteen hundred dollars a year, which one thousand worshipers pay for sectarian preaching, over and above what they would need to pay if they were united.

"There are ninety-eight thousand inhabitants in a certain county. Suppose that twenty-four thousand, or about one-fourth of them, attend church on the Sabbath. It would need but twenty-four preachers to supply them, if they were united in congregations of one thousand each. They would be so united, on an average, if it were not for sectarianism. But now they do not average two hundred and fifty hearers to a preacher; thus supporting ninety-six preachers, where, if it were not for sectarianism, twenty-four would do the work much better. This leaves seventy-two preachers in this county useless for any other practical purpose than watching each other, to see that neither sect gets the advantage. The twenty-four would preach the gospel better than the whole ninety-six do now. These seventy-two needless preachers, at five hundred dollars each, cost the people of the county thirty-six thousand dollars each year. Add to that three hundred per year that they might earn, if each one was on a farm, rather than preaching sectarianism, and we have twenty-one thousand six hundred dollars more, that is lost in this misdirected labor. This makes the round sum of fifty-seven thousand dollars a year, paid by the people of the country for sectarian preachers over what it would cost to preach the gospel to the same number of people to whom these men preach sectarianism, provided the christians of each place were united.

"When the last census was taken, there were 26,842 clergymen in the United States. These are divided among about fifty different sects. But, on an average, perhaps about four sects occupy the same territory; and if it were not for the sectarian system, three of four preachers in each town or locality could be spared to go among the heathen, or into the destitute portions of our own country. There are none too many preachers in the nation; but sectarianism huddles them together, to sustain the power of each party against the other, and thus wastes three quarters of their labors. There is not a village of a thousand people in the land but what would be religiously better off, if united, with one minister intent upon spreading the gospel, than it now is, with four to checkmate each other, and keep up the walls of division.

"Three quarters of the ministerial labor in the nation, then, is wasted; because the preachers are three quarters of them employed where they are not needed, and where the people would show much more love to God and man, if united, under one godly minister of the gospel, than they now do while wrangling under the leadership of four sectarians. This calculation would leave us over twenty thousand preachers to spare to the unchristianized portions of the eaath. Quite a respectable army of missionaries for one nation to send forth! If these sectarians were only content to preach 'Christ and him crucified,' rather than to stay where they are not needed for any purpose but to keep up the party, how soon could the world be converted! Suppose these twenty thousand preachers are sustained at the rate of four hundred dollars per year, each; this would make the round sum of eight millions of dollars paid out for sectarian preaching in these United States.

"The reader will understand that this result is, based upon the calculation, that, on an average, there are four sects where but one church is needed. These twenty thousand preachers might be well employed in our country; but they are now so employed that their labors are a waste, and the expense of their maintainance is lost to the church and the gospel. These eight millions of dollars might be expended every year in christianizing Africa, and leave America, practically, as well supplied with christianizing forces, as it is to day. We should thus lose only the alloy of sectarianism with which our religion is mixed, in the proportion of four to one,—thus leaving us purer, and therefore stronger, after this alloy was sent away. It will need but a moment's consideration to satisfy any one that one minister to one thousand worshipers would, if the community was united, place any community in a much better condition than divided under four. That there would be a greater diminution of strife, envy and party zeal, and a great increase of friendliness and love, under a united system, is so obvious, that no argument on that point is needed.

"The total amount of church property in the United States, according to the last census, was 87,446,371. This estimate includes twenty of the principal sects, and a gross estimate of the minor sects, not mentioned by name. Now, if we shall say that there are three meeting-houses, on an average, where one would accommodate the worshipers, we shall make an estimate quite low enough. We know that there are none too many meeting-houses in the nation. Indeed, there are too few, by half. But few as there are, two thirds

The World's Crisis

AND SECOND ADVENT MESSENGER.

"BEHOLD, I COME QUICKLY; AND MY REWARD IS WITH ME."

WHOLE NO. 500. | BOSTON, TUESDAY, MAY 2, 1865. | VOL. XXI.—NO. 7.

The World's Crisis
AND SECOND ADVENT MESSENGER,
Issued every Tuesday Afternoon, at
167 HANOVER STREET, BOSTON.

MILES GRANT, EDITOR.

EDITORIAL COMMITTEE:
S. G. MATHEWSON, I. C. WELLCOME, H. F. CARPENTER.

PUBLISHING COMMITTEE:
C. F. HUDSON, H. V. DAVIS, S. S. BREWER, J. G. HAMBLIN, D. MATHEWSON.

GEORGE T. ADAMS, Treasurer and Business Agent.

☞ The Crisis is devoted to the exposition of all Bible truth; especially the doctrine of the immediate, personal coming and reign of Christ on the earth; holiness of heart; the unconscious state of the dead; their literal resurrection, and final destruction of the wicked.

For the World's Crisis.

THOU WILT COME, DEAR SAVIOR.

Air.—"Willie on the dark blue sea."

How many long, long years have passed
Since Jesus went away;
Lone hearts with grief are overcast,—
Dear Jesus, come! we pray.
How many a weary soul would long
To see thee coming now;
They'd fly to join the mighty throng,
Which at thy feet will bow.

Chorus.
Thou wilt come, dear Savior, thou wilt come;
Thou hast said, "I'll come again!"
"Amen! even so, Lord Jesus, come,"
We long for Thee to reign.

How many a sick and dying one
Would shout to know thee near;
To know that thou wilt quickly come,
To wipe away each tear.
How many precious saints of God
Have fallen at their posts,
And slumber 'neath the grave's cold sod,
Which proudly o'er them boasts.

How many little ones have died,
Who never knew earth's strife;
Oh Jesus, come! we've often cried,
And bring them all to life.
How many hearts, all torn by grief,
Are mourning for their dead;
No earthly joy to bring relief,
And hope seems almost fled.

How many years death has been king;
The grave conceals his slain;
But victory! victory! we shall sing,
When Jesus comes again.
What hallelujahs we shall raise,
Ten thousand times as sweet
As ever mortal tongues could raise,
When we before him meet.

J. N. Berry.

For the World's Crisis.

ELD. THURMAN'S ECLIPSES.

ORACLES CONSULTED.

Opinions are influenced or determined by two methods,—the authoritative and the argumentative. And the two elements, authority and reason, may be combined in all possible proportions, really or apparently, and it is often hard to tell where one ends and the other begins.

It is not for us to say how far the adherents of Eld. Thurman's astronomy have relied on his arguments, fairly mastered and understood, or on his general character and his particular "tables," believing that neither of these would deceive them. But doubtless his tables have been an authority in the case. And to the extent of these tables, at least, there must have been a reliance upon authority, viz., that of Mr. Ferguson, corrected—if indeed corrected—by Mr. Thurman.

Beyond this, there may be appealed to, on either side, the authority of astronomers who actually compute the eclipses in question, using such tables as they think the best.

I have designed, in this discussion, to use the argumentative method as far as I possibly could. I know this method is not very summary. It may tax the patience both of myself and of my friends on Eld. Thurman's side of the house. If they will be patient, I have plenty to say for weeks to come. And if I digress too far, or multiply words unduly, or assert things too arrogantly, or talk too nonsensically,—if in any way I speak unprofitably, and convert the Crisis into waste paper,—I trust the failure will be one of capacity and not a lack of honest industry; and so I may be forgiven, if to ruin paper costing thirty cents a pound is a pardonable sin.

Meanwhile I have not, in my plan, despised such authorities as the actual computation of eclipses by good astronomers, living or dead. Such authorities are among my papers biding their time. I have preferred to detain them until they should find their most fitting place in the argumentative method, be best understood, and their value be fairly determined. If you would like authority, good friends, please trust that of my word when I say that the oracles I have consulted may satisfy some of you when they come to speak.

Meanwhile, again, Eld. Thurman's friends have used the like privilege, and have consulted an astronomer, whom I will call, for convenience, their oracle. I have learned from one who knows him that he is an accomplished astronomer, worthy to be an oracle in this dispute, and to be relied on as far as any authority may be appealed to in the case.

He is the gentleman to whom allusion was made by Bro. Hastings in his inquiry about a sum of money supposed to have been paid for the computation of some of Eld. T.'s eclipses. I am myself partly responsible for this inquiry made by Bro. H. I have had some correspondence with the gentleman, and have obtained the results of his computations. The occasion of the correspondence was as follows: Bro. H. and myself learned that Eld. T.'s friends had consulted such an astronomer. I afterwards asked one of them what results were obtained in two eclipses. 1, That of B. C. 477, which Dr. Zech regards as the one seen by Xerxes and his army: "Did this gentleman find it to be an annular eclipse?" I was told that he did. 2, That of B. C. 457, which Eld. Thurman regards as the one seen by Xerxes and his army, and which his tables make a total eclipse; "Did this gentleman find it total?" I was told that he did not. I inquired how much it lacked of being total, and my friend did not recollect. So I addressed an inquiry, indirectly, to the gentleman himself. I presumed that the desired information was not contraband, and offered in exchange for the courtesy some historical items I had access to, if they should be of any value or interest to the gentleman.

I have his reply, dated Feb. 13th. A few days after I requested the privilege of publishing it, either anonymously or with such other modification as he might wish. Soon after this I addressed a note to one of Eld. T.'s friends, suggesting the propriety of the readers of the Crisis hearing from their oracle. If they regarded the oracle as unfavorable, yet not seriously damaging, it was easy to say so, and to say why. In any case I thought that current and pertinent facts should appear in the columns of the Crisis.

But, though invited once and again, for reasons best known to themselves, Mr. Thurman's friends have not yet published the response of their oracle, and I have received permission from the astronomer to do so. He does not wish, however, to be drawn personally into the controversy; but, entertaining toward Mr. T., and, I dare say, all the parties concerned, "none but the most kindly feelings," he desires his name not to appear in the discussion. But this can not affect the value of his results, either way.

It is but just to say that I probably have these results more fully and in detail than Mr. Thurman's friends have received them. But the most important facts were doubtless fully understood by them; and if they were of any value in this question of the alleged astronomical refutation of Ptolemy's Canon, I see no reason why either party should fear to see them in print. Facts are not our enemies if they may help us to the truth. And what is fifty dollars to that which is better than fine gold or rubies? (Prov. iii. 14, 15.) If hopes were disappointed, was the money therefore lost?

The following table gives the results obtained by the gentleman, in respect to the time, place, and dimensions of several of Mr. Thurman's eclipses.

Sun or Moon	Year B. C.	Month	Day	Hour	Digits eclipsed	Place
M.	721	March	19th	8.18	total	Babylon
"	720	March	8th	10.39	2.5	"
"	720	Sept.	1st	6.51	7.1	"
"	682	Aug.	3rd	6.25	7.3	"
"	681	Jan.	27th	11.52	total	"
"	681	July	22nd	6.49	"	"
S.	549	June	19th	6.47	See below.
"	478	Feb.	17th	11.04	"
"	457	Dec.	16th	7.53	"
"	431	Aug.	3rd	4.55	7.7	Athens
M.	413	Aug.	27th	9.51	total	"
"	201	Sept.	22nd	6.17	7.5	Alex'dria
"	A. D. 14	Sept.	27th	4.46	total	Rome

The eclipse of 549 B. C. was central in latitude 30 deg. 20 min. north, longitude 109 deg. east.

That of 478 B. C. was of 10.1 digits in Lat. 38 deg. 20 min. N., Long. 28 deg. E. The sun was centrally eclipsed in Lat. 48 deg. 57 min. N., Long. 35 deg. 88 min. E.

That of 457 B. C. was total in Lat. 36 deg. 29 min. N., Long. 102 deg. 13 min. E.

In order to know the meaning of these results, it will be necessary to compare them with the times and dimensions named by Ptolemy and in other ancient statements, and also with the computations made by Mr. Thurman. I shall make these comparisons as I proceed, in future articles. But some remarks of the gentleman, stating the differences between his results and those of Mr. Thurman, are in place here.

He says he was desired "to take particular pains with the eclipse of 457 B. C." Yet he "could not make any eclipse at all at Sardis, or at least a very small one if any, while Mr. Thurman makes a total one. Mr. T., he found, had made the time of new moon almost three hours later than himself, and the moon's latitude, he thought, 10 or 12 minutes less. "These two circumstances combined gave him the total eclipse." He adds: "The disagreement in our calculations is too great to be reconciled on any other ground than that of a mistake, especially in the latitude, either by Mr. Thurman or myself. But I have tested my computations in various ways without detecting any error." He had used, in his computations, the tables published in a late edition of the British Encyclopedia, which employ, he says, a greater number of equations, including secular ones, than those of Ferguson. But for this eclipse he also employed Pierce's tables of the Moon, by which he found "a small eclipse at Sardis, the total phase occurring about Lat. 36½ deg. north, Long. 100 deg. east."

The eclipse of 478 B. C. is the same with that of Dr. Zech, with a year's difference in the style of reckoning time B. C.; and it was found to be an annular eclipse. Our astronomer is decidedly of the opinion that such an eclipse could not have caused the darkness which Herodotus describes; and in this opinion he accords with Mr. Thurman and his friends. I do not know but this explains the statement made to me,—to which Bro. Hastings alludes,—and other rumors I have heard, that Mr. Thurman had been sustained by an astronomical authority. I have only to say, I do not quarrel with this opinion. I have a good deal more to say about the Xerxes eclipse when I get to it. For the present I remark that I reported Dr. Zech faithfully so far as I reported him at all. I did so, knowing what might be said against his theory. But to demolish Dr. Zech's theory,—which I have neither accepted nor rejected,—is not to establish Eld. Thurman's. And surely, if an annular eclipse would not cause the darkness which Herodotus reports, how would that darkness be produced by a small eclipse, or by none at all?

Our astronomer also remarks: "It will be seen that in not one instance do we exactly agree, while in several there is quite a discrepancy between us. Thus Thurman makes the eclipse of the moon, Jan. 681 B. C., about 4 hours later than I do, and 1¾ hours later than Ferguson's tables make it.

The following statement, in the second letter which I received, shows what are some of the elements to be reckoned in the computation of eclipses. It is understood that Eld. Thurman's tables are a correction of Ferguson's. Whether the correction is properly made or not, there should be some ratio or proportion in the various results produced by it. Now in the eclipse of B. C. 681 Eld. T. makes a difference of 1¾ hours in time, requiring a reduction of 10 or 11 degrees in the moon's anomaly. In the eclipse of B. C. 682, 4 degrees are required. And in that of 457 B. C. a difference of one hour in time, made by Ferguson's and Thurman's tables, requires a change of 6 degrees in anomaly. Thus instead of numbers nearly equal, we have 10 or 11, 4, and 6.

"I am aware," says our astronomer, "that the equations depending on this argument change more rapidly when the moon is near its apses than at any other point of its orbit, and that therefore equal variations in the argument are followed by unequal differences in the times or equations. But in all the cases before us the moon was near one of its apses, and hence a uniform change in the argument should have produced about equal differences between Thurman's times and those deduced from Ferguson's tables."

The gentleman does not undertake to say how Eld. T. obtains results so unequal. He wishes to pass no judgment upon his astronomy. The reader must decide for himself what authority is most reliable. If I shall hereafter pronounce against the authority of Eld. T., I shall try to make my reasons apparent for preferring some other authority.

C. F. H.

For the World's Crisis.

MORE LIGHT.

We think it due to Professor Hudson, that the lovers of truth should present him an expression of thanks for the valuable information which he has brought to light, by giving us in our own mother tongue Ptolemy's description of those eclipses which, being handed down to us in a dead language, we before have had no access unto. This is the information which we have long desired, knowing that, being the highest authority to which we can appeal, it must either establish the correctness, or prove the erroneousness of my tables, thus enabling us to speak with more confidence for the future. Had we been in possession of this valuable information some ten or twelve years ago, it would have saved much labor and trouble in properly arranging our tables. But we are now availing ourselves of this new light by calculating and comparing all of those eclipses, the result of which we will give soon.

For the encouragement of those who love the glorious appearing and kingdom of our blessed Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, I might here add, that we have already proceeded far enough to discover that our true Bible chronology is placed upon a foundation which can never be shaken.

To give something of the result of my investigation, call to mind that Ptolemy informs us that "the middle of the eclipse of A. D. 136 was four hours after midnight." This being the last of those three which were not only calculated by him, but also "carefully observed" with his own eyes, must be considered the highest authority to which we can appeal; and my tables make this eclipse just 11 min. 5 sec. later. Therefore, if, as Prof. Hudson well remarks, "we must not prove the eclipses by the tables, but the tables by the eclipses," we will here have only 11 min. 5 sec. to allow for the moon's acceleration in a period of about seventeen hundred years. According to Ptolemy, the quantity of this eclipse was "half its (the moon's) diameter on the north." My tables eclipse just 14 seconds of a degree less. If, therefore, after the instruction of Prof. Hudson, we correct our tables by this eclipse, I must subtract 1 4seconds from the moon's latitude in eclipses. But this will throw the moon that much further from the node, Mar. 8th B. C. 720, which according to my tables is already too far from the node for any eclipse at all.

If, therefore, we admit with Prof. Hudson that we must first prove our "tables by the eclipses," and that the eclipse of A. D. 136 is the highest authority to which we can appeal in thus correcting our tables, it is now proved to absolute certainty that the three eclipses which Hipparchus found recorded at Babylon did not occur in the year B. C. 720. According to the "Bible chronology," the first year of Mardock, in whose reign these eclipses occurred, was B. C. 682; and in this year we find the first, and in 681, that is in his second year, we find the other two answering to the three Hipparchus found at Babylon. The reader should bear in mind that the eclipse of A. D. 136, having been seen by Ptolemy himself, and "carefully observed" by him, "at Alexandria," in the very year in which his attention being directed to the subject of computing eclipses of the moon, he must have made the nicest observation of this eclipse which was within the limits of his power; hence this eclipse must be regarded as of the highest authority to which we can appeal in correcting tables.

Says Prof. Hudson, "If an eclipse is recorded as accurately and credibly as are reliable historical events generally, then it becomes a standard, and the tables will come nearer and nearer to it as they are made more and more accurate." Thus he has driven for us one stake which cannot be drawn. Then according to his own admission the eclipse of A. D. 136 "becomes a standard" by which the errors of our tables are to be corrected, and if so, then of all the tables of which we have any knowledge, ours come the nearest to the truth.

The next eclipse, which occurring the nearest to the time at which Ptolemy wrote, must be regarded as the next highest authority or surest standard by which our tables are to be corrected, occurred A. D. 134. Concerning this, Ptolemy says, "We have computed its middle time to have been one equinoctial hour before midnight." And according to my tables, it was one hour lacking 4 minutes and 56 seconds before midnight. Hence so far from finding it necessary to allow anything here for the moon's acceleration, we will have to add 4 min. 56 sec. to her retarded motion. But if from the 11 min. and 5 sec., which we have noticed at the year A. D. 136, we subtract this 4 min. 56 seconds, we have 6 min. and 9 seconds to allow for the moon's accelerated motion in 1700 years. But since Prof. Hudson, in his allusion to Dr. Hales, appears to justify the idea of making the eclipses which occurred at the one node with one set of tables, and those that happened at the opposite node with other tables, saying this is "just right"; the controversy between him and me, on the subject of astronomy, is at an end; for, if this is allowable, astronomy is of no more worth in computing eclipses than that of the boy's calculation of the quantity of land he has surveyed, without any regard to the length of his chain. But if astronomy is set aside as of no worth, "we have also a more sure word of prophecy," even the express word of God, which no man can set aside; for "the Scripture can not be broken"; and the Lord has declared that "from the going forth of the commandment to restore and to build Jerusalem unto the Messiah the Prince, shall be seven weeks, and threescore and two weeks"; "whereunto ye do well that ye take heed as unto a light that shineth in a dark place, until the day dawn, and the day-star arise."

But though some may prefer claiming the right to use two sets of tables to that of acknowledging the incorrectness of Bishop Usher's chronology, this can weigh nothing with practical astronomers; hence, if willing to examine the matter, they at least must acknowledge that the chronology which contradicts the express word of God is now clearly proven to be erroneous; and if so, the seal is removed, and the book of Daniel is opened. Then "lift up your heads," O ye saints of the living God, "for your redemption draweth nigh." And you, O dying sinner, "prepare, prepare; O prepare to meet thy God."

Since we should give honor to whom honor is due, let all lovers of truth acknowledge their gratitude to Bro. Hudson, for this large share of the most valuable information, which he has so kindly contributed to our stock of knowledge. That open frankness with which he has given us all the truth, even where it is against the position he occupies, must ever speak loudly in his praise. That the reader may discover something of our indebtedness to him for this act of kindness, we might remark, that if our astronomical tables having passed the strictest criticism of all of the most learned astronomers on earth, and they had pronounced them strictly correct, this could not have contributed half so much to the confidence of those who prefer seeing and knowing for themselves, to that of resting on the opinions of others. Being thus put in possession of the highest authority, to which man can appeal, our tables can, by the learned, never be called in question as to their correctness. We say the highest authority to which we can appeal; for here we have the express words of Ptolemy, not concerning that which occurred before he was born, on which he was dependent upon others for information; but concerning those eclipses which having occurred, not only in his day and under his own personal observation, but even at the very time when his attention being turned to astronomy, he was computing and comparing eclipses of the moon, the one with another; hence to use his own language, "CAREFULLY OBSERVED BY 'himself' at Alexandria," the place where he had all of his astronomical means of discovering with great precision, both the time and quantity of eclipses; raises the three last eclipses, as recorded by Ptolemy, to a standard far transcending everything else, as found in all antiquity concerning eclipses, hence they must become that standard by which all of our astronomical tables are to be tested. And that which must give every man the greatest confidence in our tables is, that while they make all of the ancient eclipses, both of the sun and moon, they come so near the very minute and second of those standard elipses, of which, at the time of arranging those tables, I had no knowledge. And I do from the heart thank our Heavenly Father for this standard raised up as a defense.

Having now within our reach this standard, by which every man can for himself test the correctness of our tables, those who are not afraid of the light of truth are no longer dependent, neither on the say so of Thurman, nor that of the most learned astronomer's on earth.

As the eclipse of A. D. 136 is the last one in Ptolemy's catalogue, it must be the one which occurred the nearest to the time he wrote, and when his astronomical observations had reached their highest state of perfection; hence, must be regarded as of the highest authority found in all antiquity to which we can appeal in testing our tables.

Ferguson's tables fall short about one digit and three-fourths of making this eclipse; and are about half an hour, or twenty-nine minutes and seven seconds in error as to time; which proves that Prof. Hudson is correct in supposing that his tables are not reliable. Struyks's tables lack one digit, all but seventeen minutes, of reaching this standard. My tables come within the limits of fourteen seconds of the quantity, as mentioned by Ptolemy, which being too small to have been noticed by him, we are unable to detect an error here.

The next highest standard to which we can appeal, being the next nearest to the time at which Ptolemy wrote, occurred A. D. 133; but since he failed to give the depth in which the moon was immersed in the earth's shade, this is of but little worth in testing tables.

Our tables having thus stood the criticisms of the highest truth-testing power to which we can appeal, and having thus been sealed correct by the highest astronomical school of authority, our adversaries can no longer weaken the hands of the watchman, on the walls of Zion, who are required to sound the alarm, saying, "behold the bridegroom cometh."

Wm. C. Thurman.

For the World's Crisis.

THURMAN'S CHRONOLOGY.

IS IT TRUE?

It is not my purpose (in the very brief note that I design to pen upon this occasion) either to affirm, or to controvert, the astronomical data and chronological order of events that this worthy Brother Thurman (who is a stranger to me in the flesh) has presented to us for our serious reflection. It is enough for me to believe that he is correct upon all the fundamental questions relating to the fulfillment of the prophetic time; and believing this, I esteem it a privilege and a duty, to frankly acknowledge my honest conviction of the same; and make haste to prepare for the wondrous change that is soon to transpire in the material universe.

Lest it be said of us, "O! fool and slow of heart to believe all the prophets have said," I esteem it a part of wisdom to catch at the slightest flash of truth, as it bursts upon our mortal vision; and hold on to it with a dying grasp, until revolving nature and the events of time again point us to the tables of prophetic history, and tell us to "prophesy again."

It matters not with me, though the world and nominal professors of religion rail against me and gnash upon me with their teeth; my faith is unchangeably fixed upon the immutable promises of the great Jehovah, that at the end of the 2300 days, the "sanctuary shall be cleansed."

Now that the sanctuary here spoken of is the one that was to be trodden under foot," (Dan. 8: 13, 14), none will deny. Nor is it possible to give any other construction to the language used, without doing violence to the spirit and philosophy of the Anglo-Saxon tongue. And I am filled with amazement at my own folly in once subscribing to the doctrine that the sanctuary in the heavens was ever, even in the remotest sense, connected with this vision. Nor yet do I regret that I floated off upon the resistless current of that once popular delusion; as in the course of the reaction, the vision looms up with the brightness of the morning star; and though we erred in '43 and '44, the error (thank kind Heaven!) is found to consist, not in the computation of the prophetic time, nor yet in the grand event that is to transpire at the end of the days, but in the weakness and fallibility of men, in putting their trust in men, "whose breath is in his nostrils." Never before was Ptolemy's Canon brought into serious question, nor was it ever before demonstrated that the Egyptian's chronological chart differed essentially from the Bible, and from the unerring astronomical data, to which our attention is now called.

But "the wise shall understand." O, blessed thought! Is it indeed true, that some devoted friend (may be Bro. Thurman, who, like Daniel, may "set his face unto the Lord God to seek by prayer and supplication with fasting,") is to come to our relief? The thought inspires me with a vivid reflection of the past; and bright prospects loom up in the distance, dispelling the thick darkness that surrounds us, and revealing the Son of God with all the glorified saints in the full enjoyment of their eternal inheritance.

But, hark! I hear the voice of the "fearful and the unbelieving." And when I cast my eyes around, I recognize some with whom I counseled and labored in '43, standing far in the background, taking counsel now with the "wise and prudent," and hurling the missiles of infidelity and skepticism into the open arena of the household of faith. These were once loud champions of revealed time, and stood up manfully, as did the apostle to the Gentiles, witnessing both to small and great, and saying none other things than those which the prophets and Moses did say should come. And when nominal professors of religion talked and reasoned as they now talk and reason, they called them "scoffers," walking after their own lusts, and saying, where is the promise of his coming? In this they virtually say, "the days are prolonged, and every vision faileth." Like some, whose faith seemed to fail them after the crucifixion of the Savior, and turned again to their ordinary avocations; so do these forget the weakness of their own nature, and because the net was not cast upon the right side of the ship in '43 and '44, they seem to fancy that all is lost, and to make any further effort to solve the great problem of prophetic times, is an evidence of weakness and folly. "O! ye of little faith." In the name of Heaven I beseech you to abandon the thought that you are commissioned to preach the gospel of the kingdom at hand, for there is definite time connected with this gospel; and we are commanded to preach the "word" in all its fulness and simplicity.

Because we cannot comprehend at a glance the broad plans of revealed truth, is no evidence of weakness in us, nor yet of unfaithfulness on the part of the Holy Spirit, to "make known what shall be in the last end of the indignation." Now if Daniel understood the vision (and he says he did, Dan. 10: 1), then it follows that some will understand the same vision in the time of the end, for he has told us all that was told to him. And again, "it was not unto themselves, but unto us, they did minister the things which are now reported unto you by them that have preached the gospel unto you, with the Holy Ghost sent down from heaven, which things the angels desire to look into."

Daniel, too, was disappointed through a long series of years, before he fully comprehended the meaning of the time specified in the vision, and yet he fainted not by the way. Nor did he say "the days are prolonged." Indeed, I have often wondered with great admiration at the prophet's unchangeable confidence in the messengers that were sent to inform of these things. It was some fifteen years subsequent to the declaration, "I will make thee know what shall be in the last end of the indignation," to the positive fulfillment of the promise, and yet we find him faithful to the end.

"But none understood the vision" at first. And he rose up, as usual, and "did the king's business," for he was an officer of state, as well as a prophet, and he looked forward, no doubt, with great anxiety to the accomplishment of 2300 literal days, and to the cleansing, or the justifying of the sanctuary at Jerusalem, at that time.

But his time failed him, as did ours in '43, and then, and not till then, could he see that the time given was symbolic, corresponding with the whole vision, and could mean nothing short of 2300 years. And yet he was left in doubt as to the point of time when to commence the said years, as no time had been given, or designated. But he had learned from books that the Lord would accomplish seventy years in the desolations of Jerusalem, and he flattered himself, no doubt, that those days would run out with those years. And knowing that the said years were about accomplished, he turned his face heavenward and prayed most fervently for the fulfillment of the said promise to cleanse the sanctuary. And it was upon this occasion that Gabriel was commanded to "fly swiftly," and inform him of his mistake, and to designate the time for the commencement of the said days, to wit, from the going forth of the commandment to restore and build Jerusalem, which event transpired about two years subsequently, in the first year of Cyrus, king of Persia.

Now, in the third year of the same king, "a thing was revealed unto Daniel, and the thing was true, but the time appointed was long, and he understood the thing." Now what was the thing revealed? Surely it was something that had time connected with it, and "the time was long." It was, therefore, the vision of 2300 days, and he was made to understand that it was to cover the duration of several great empires, to wit, the Medes and Persians, the Grecians, and the Romans, through all the subsequent divisions of each, down to the time of the end, when he would be permitted to "stand in his lot."

Now as Daniel was held in suspense about twenty years, from the time that the vision of 2300 days was spread out before him, till he fully comprehended and understood it, is it not reasonable to suppose, that about the same time will intervene from the time that the vision was written upon tables in '43 to the time when we may fully comprehend and understand the whole matter? O! blessed thought! My soul expands with gratitude to God, when I remember that I have kept the word of his patience; and the promise is sure, that he will keep me from the hour of temptation, which shall come upon all the world, to try them that dwell upon the earth.

Daniel Clow.

For the World's Crisis

CHRISTIAN UNION;
Or, "Sectarianism a Waste of Means."

NUMBER SIX.

"The saints on earth, and all the dead,
But one communion make;
All join in Christ, their living Head,
And of his grace partake."

Testimonials.

"This building five sects where one church is all-sufficient, involves an immense waste of talents, time and money. The items of unnecessary expense may be set down as follows: Four unnecessary meeting-houses. Suppose these, with fixtures attached, cost five thousand dollars each. One house costing, say, eight thousand dollars, would answer the religious wants of the people, if united. Here, then, is a needless expense of twelve thousand dollars in every such village for meeting-houses. Suppose that there are ten such villages in one county. This would make one hundred and twenty thousand dollars expended in such county for sectarian meeting-houses over what would be necessary if the christians of the county were united. This sum would sustain twelve missionaries abroad ten years, on a salary of one thousand dollars each. Ten such counties will thus expend for sectarian meeting-houses one million two hundred thousand dollars in a generation. This sum would be sufficient to send the Bible, in ten years, to nearly every tribe on earth, in its own language or dialect.

"One half of the state of New York thus expends, on needless houses of sectarian worship, in a single generation, a sum sufficient to carry christianity to millions of heathens, by sustaining one hundred missionaries for twelve years. From this data, any one can form an appropriate estimate of that immense sum expended in Christendom for sectarian temples. It will be seen that we have left out of our calculation a sum sufficient to supply the people of each place with all needed accommodations in the shape of churches, provided they are united. All expended outside of what would be needed in such a case, is, of course, to be set down to the cost of schism.

"The support of religious teachers has ever been a heavy tax upon the world. Whole nations have been impoverished, and empires financially ruined, by this cause alone. In modern times, the voluntary system has greatly modified this evil; but sectarianism more than quadruples the necessary expense of sustaining religious teachers in the world. We are not disposed to call attention to this subject, because of the waste of money alone, but because of the perversion of moral and mental power consequent upon the system.

"In a community of a thousand people, but one preacher is needed. They can all gather under the sound of one voice, and be reached by the same thoughts. Others beside the one preacher ought to teach in their social capacity; but, so far as public preaching, at stated times, is concerned, one can do it better than four. Such a man would be well sustained, and under no temptation to preach to please public opinion. But instead of this, the present system saddles, at least, four preachers upon a community, where one would be more efficient, because free from the collisions which occur among the four. If the three extra preachers receive five hundred dollars each, it will make fifteen hundred dollars a year, which one thousand worshipers pay for sectarian preaching, over and above what they would need to pay if they were united.

"There are ninety-eight thousand inhabitants in a certain county. Suppose that twenty-four thousand, or about one-fourth of them, attend church on the Sabbath. It would need but twenty-four preachers to supply them, if they were united in congregations of one thousand each. They would be so united, on an average, if it were not for sectarianism. But now they [illegible] not average two hundred and fifty hearers to a preacher; thus supporting ninety-six preachers, where, if it were not for sectarianism, twenty-four would do the work much better. This leaves seventy-two preachers in this county useless for any other practical purpose than watching each other, to see that neither sect gets the advantage. The twenty-four would preach the gospel better than the whole ninety-six do now. These seventy-two needless preachers, at five hundred dollars each, cost the people of the county thirty-six thousand dollars each year. Add to that three hundred per year that they might earn, if each one was on a farm, rather than preaching sectarianism, and we have twenty-one thousand six hundred dollars more, that is lost in this misdirected labor. This makes the round sum of fifty-seven thousand dollars a year, paid by the people of the country for sectarian preachers over what it would cost to preach the gospel to the same number of people to whom these men preach sectarianism, provided the christians of each place were united.

"When the last census was taken, there were 26,842 clergymen in the United States. These are divided among about fifty different sects. But, on an average, perhaps about four sects occupy the same territory; and if it were not for the sectarian system, three of four preachers in each town or locality could be spared to go among the heathen, or into the destitute portions of our own country. There are none too many preachers in the nation; but sectarianism huddles them together, to sustain the power of each party against the other, and thus wastes three quarters of their labors. There is not a village of a thousand people in the land but what would be religiously better off, if united, with one minister intent upon spreading the gospel, than it now is, with four to checkmate each other, and keep up the walls of division.

"Three quarters of the ministerial labor in the nation, then, is wasted; because the preachers are three quarters of them employed where they are not needed, and where the people would show much more love to God and man, if united, under one godly minister of the gospel, than they now do while wrangling under the leadership of four sectarians. This calculation would leave us over twenty thousand preachers to spare to the unchristianized portions of the eaath. Quite a respectable army of missionaries for one nation to send forth! If these sectarians were only content to preach 'Christ and him crucified,' rather than to stay where they are not needed for any purpose but to keep up the party, how soon could the world be converted! Suppose these twenty thousand preachers are sustained at the rate of four hundred dollars per year, each; this would make the round sum of eight millions of dollars paid out for sectarian preaching in these United States.

"The reader will understand that this result is, based upon the calculation, that, on an average, there are four sects where but one church is needed. These twenty thousand preachers might be well employed in our country; but they are now so employed that their labors are a waste, and the expense of their maintainance is lost to the church and the gospel. These eight millions of dollars might be expended every year in christianizing Africa, and leave America, practically, as well supplied with christianizing forces, as it is to day. We should thus lose only the alloy of sectarianism with which our religion is mixed, in the proportion of four to one,—thus leaving us purer, and therefore stronger, after this alloy was sent away. It will need but a moment's consideration to satisfy any one that one minister to one thousand worshipers would, if the community was united, place any community in a much better condition than divided under four. That there would be a greater diminution of strife, envy and party zeal, and a great increase of friendliness and love, under a united system, is so obvious, that no argument on that point is needed.

"The total amount of church property in the United States, according to the last census, was 87,446,371. This estimate includes twenty of the principal sects, and a gross estimate of the minor sects, not mentioned by name. Now, if we shall say that there are three meeting-houses, on an average, where one would accommodate the worshipers, we shall make an estimate quite low enough. We know that there are none too many meeting-houses in the nation. Indeed, there are too few, by half. But few as there are, two thirds of these are useless, so far as accommodating the people are concerned; because they, like the ministers, are huddled together, three or four in a place, where, if the people were united, but one would be needed. Nearly every village in the state, where there are actually six hundred worshipers, has three or four congregations, where the whole six hundred could be easily accommodated in one house, were it not for the party-spirit.

Practically, therefore, two of the three houses, as now located, are useless except for party purposes. If, then, there would be as many actual worshipers accommodated by one meeting-house, where the sects have now built three, the two extra houses are, to the cause of christianity, as free from party, a dead loss. This loss would amount to $58, 597,580 every time a new set of meeting-houses is needed, which is once in about thirty years; so that, were all the christians in each place united, this sum might be expended in building churches where the world does need them; because sectarians would no longer build three where but one is needed. This fifty-eight millions of dollars might either be used to send the gospel to the heathen, or to feed the poor and clothe the naked; while meeting-houses enough would be left to convene the same number of worshipers that are now actually convened each Sabbath. Or, these houses might be so located as to accommodate the destitute portions of our own country, and thus fill the whole destitute west with houses that are now useless, only as partisan rallying points.

We have thus shown the wastefulness of the sectarian system in its application to preachers and meeting-houses. The same ruinous system of factional expenditures runs through all our religious institutions. Each great denomination must have its 'Book Concern,' the main efforts of which are to propagate its peculiar tenets, mixed, of course, with something of essential gospel truth. But when you have taken from the religious literature of our times its partisan elements, you have but about one quarter left. Put the cost of this partisan element of our religious literature into Bibles, without note or comment, and exhortations and incentives to practical godliness, and it would baptize the heathen world, embracing all tribes and tongues, with such a flood of pure literature that its light would soon encircle the whole earth.

Sectarianism not only consumes millions of dollars annually, upon the lust of party at home, which might be employed in spreading the gospel abroad, but even the little effort made to convert the heathen is cursed by its blighting power. Each sect must have its own 'Missionary Board,' and its whole array of missionary machinery. A godly man sent out to Burmah from the Presbyterian sect, on changing his views of baptism, is deserted by his patrons, and left alone on heathen shores.

A Baptist sent to Hayti, becomes convinced that the last day of the week is the Sabbath, and he must look to some new Board for support. If all Burmah was converted to one sect, to be consistent with home practice, another sect would be as anxious to convert the natives into its peculiar church as before; and so we should have the heathen converted crosswise, to first one sect and then the other, as we are attempting to do at home.

It is a sad reflection upon our religion that while all Christendom is praying for the conversion of the heathen world, the church is consuming upon the lust of partyism millions of dollars annually. Missionary agents appeal to our children, and to the very servant girls in our land, for money to convert the poor heathen, while the sects spend enough in their party strife to send the gospel speedily to all lands. Countless agents swarm the country begging for philanthropic purposes, while millions are extorted by party pressure from the sects to sustain a useless clergy.

Christendom is priest-ridden beyond all endurance, because the party whip and spur can be used upon the poor ignorant multitude effectively. The shameful advantage taken of the religious nature of man to make it minister to the support of brawling partisans, should awaken deep indignation. If half the money which is thus wasted annually by the church, was squandered by the government, it would produce a revolution. The annual cost of intemperance is far less than the annual cost of sectarianism, over what would be the cost of keeping in the field all needed church machinery. If this waste was perpetrated in any other name than that of religion, it would not be tolerated; and the time will come when an enlightened church will have a fearful reckoning with those who have misled her into all these abuses. We feel that we have only just entered upon this vast branch of our subject; but the plan of this work will not permit us to pursue it farther."

D. F. N.—Home Thrusts.

For the World's Crisis.

SOUTH BUTLER MEETING.

Dear Brn. and Srs.:—Let there be a general turnout. It is expected that there will be a goodly number of veterans at this meeting, to help give life to this enterprise. South Butler is a pleasant country town, situated four miles north of Savannah station. This station lies about half way from Syracuse to Rochester, on the direct R. R. to Rochester. I know of no place better prepared to entertain a large gathering than S. B. The church there have a good house in which to hold their meetings; besides many outside the society are interested in the present truth, and such a meeting will be the means of doing much good. You will see, Brn. and Srs., by the signatures attached to the call for this meeting, that nearly all our ministers in this State are united in this effort. They desire to see you present. They want your advice, counsel, and aid generally in sustaining this work. Let us work together, and I trust the Lord's work will prosper in our hands. There is a vast missionary field in this State. Let us come up to the help of the Lord against the mighty.

C. B. Turner.

Syracuse, N. Y.

For the World's Crisis.

A REQUEST.

Bro. Grant:—I have been a preacher of the gospel; and now am afflicted with a distressing complaint. I want you to ask the christian brethren every where to pray, if it can be the will of the Lord, that I may be healed. I desire my health that I may preach more, and serve the Lord, before I die, or the judgment day shall come. But if it is not his will, that I may have the blessing and presence of the Lord to go with me through the dark valley and shadow of death. I am away out west, and have no meetings to attend.

Jellerson Small.

Mankato, Minn.

The World's Crisis
AND SECOND ADVENT MESSENGER.
Boston, Tuesday, May 2, 1865.

☞ TAKE NOTICE.

All subscriptions for the Crisis are payable in advance, at the rate of $2.50 a year; but if delayed six months beyond the time of payment, the rate is $3.00 a year, or $1.50 for six months. Thus 50 cents a year is saved by paying in advance.

THE ECLIPSES OF B. C. 457.

It will be recollected that it has been shown in a previous article, (See Crisis No. 26th, March 14th, 1865,) that the total eclipse recorded by Herodotus, b. VII. s. VII. 37, as taking place when Xerxes was marching into Greece, could not have been at the time where Ptolemy's Canon places it, B. C. 481, for "no eclipse" happened at Sardis at that time, as shown by "Prof. Airy, the Astronomer Royale" of the "Royal Observatory, Greenwich," London. Hence it follows that some other date must be found for the march of Xerxes into Greece. It has been thought that Dr. Zech hit upon the right one in B. C. 477, or more correctly, Feb. 17th, 478, as shown by Bro. Thurman, and another astronomer who was consulted,—called the "oracle," by a writer in the Crisis. But this eclipse taken by Dr. Zech, for the one recorded by Herodotus, was in the third year of the Olympiad; whereas it should have been in the fourth according to the historian; and besides it was only an annular eclipse, which certainly could not have caused such darkness as that described by Herodotus, when Xerxes was about to commence his march.

When speaking on this subject, Prof. Airy says:—

"I have myself seen two total eclipses (those of 1842 and 1851) being on both occasions in the open country, and I can fully testify to the sudden and awful effects of a total eclipse. I have seen many large partial eclipses, and one annular eclipse, concealed by clouds; and I believe that a body of men, intent on military movements, could scarcely have remarked on the occasion any thing unusual."

Signed, "G. B. Airy, Esq., Astronomer Royal." Transactions of the Royal Society, London, 1853, p. 180.

The question now arises, when did a total eclipse of the sun happen at Sardis, in the fourth year of the Olympiad, that will correspond with the time when Xerxes marched into Greece? Bro. Thurman has examined all the eclipses of the sun in the fourth years of the Olympiads, that occurred during the reign of Xerxes, if we go by Ptolemy's Canon, and finds no such eclipse. But when we admit Ptolemy's error of forty-eight years, as shown by divine testimony of the Bible, he then finds such an eclipse on the 16th of Dec. B. C. 457, at 9 h. 23m. 30sec. in the morning; and can find no other one that will answer at all the description given by the historian. While Herodotus understood that the eclipse was in the spring at Sardis, astronomy shows it to have been on the 16th of Dec., which is thought to have been when Xerxes was on the point of marching from Celænæ to Sardis, instead of away from that place.

Prof. Airy says:—"Herodotus repeatedly expresses himself doubtful on matters of detail which occurred during the movements of Xerxes on the eastern side of the Ægean Sea," which was the very place where this event happened.

After it was decided that Bro. Thurman should hold a discussion on chronology with Bro. Stevenson, we took occasion to consult able astronomers relative to Bro. T's list of eclipses, found in his work. We made arrangements with one, whom Bro. C. F. Hudson denominates "the oracle," to calculate certain eclipses as tests of the correctness of Bro. T's tables, and he gave us the result found in another column in this number. (See article on "Elder Thurman's Eclipses," by C. F. Hudson.) We requested "The Oracle" "to take particular pains with the eclipse of 457 B. C." "The Oracle's" tables made all the eclipses made by Bro. Thurman's; and while he differed in some particulars from Bro. T's, the difference was not as great as between "The Oracle" and other distinguished astronomers.

As we did not think it best to rest the whole matter on one authority, if other could be had, we chose to delay our report till others could be consulted, and other facts gathered; and besides, an unusual amount of other duties has occupied our time till the present. Since consulting "The Oracle," we have been aided by astronomers, and astronomical works at Harvard College, Cambridge, Mass., to obtain more facts relative to the eclipses calculated by Bro. Thurman, and must say, that the more critically he is examined, the firmer appears his foundation, so far as we can judge.

Relative to the eclipse of B. C. 457, we have consulted a very able French work on eclipses, approved by the "Royal Academy of Science, in Paris," in which we find that eclipse calculated, and the result reported as follows:—Sun eclipsed "16th Dec. at 7½ morning, [Paris time] eastern Europe, eastern Africa, Asia, central, Lat. 46° at sunrise 30° at noon, 48° at sunset. Total." According to Bro. Thurman's calculation the eclipse would take place in Celænæ at 9 h. 15 m. in the morning. According to the computation by the French Astronomer, changing the Paris time to that of Celænæ it would have taken place at 9 h. 21 m. 59 sec. in the morning; making a difference of only six minutes and fifty-nine seconds; while the tables of "The Oracle" first consulted, made the eclipse one hour, forty-eight minutes and fifty-nine seconds earlier in the day than the French astronomer.

This is as far as we have been able to pursue the investigation up to the present time.

"MARVELOUS ELEVATION."

At the present time, no man on our planet stands so high politically as Napoleon III., Emperor of France. His whole life seems like a "wonderful tale," almost surpassing the field of fiction; but the closing scene is yet to come. We wait for it with deep anxiety.

The following is an extract from the Sun and Advertiser, published in Halifax, N. S., March 8th, 1865. The editor says:—

"At the opening of the French Legislature the Emperor delivered his anxiously expected speech, which places him among the first orators as he is among the first statesman of the day. Compared with that very commonplace affair which was delivered by commission at the opening of our own Imperial Parliament the present session, it shows a vivid contrast in its vigor, terseness, tact and comprehensiveness. And better than all, the burof it is "peace."

This wonderful man has been from the first a source of the most absorbing interest to the civilized world; lauded to the skies as a demi-god, by some; traduced and abused as the very satan by others; suspected at one time or another by every nation; he has pursued his way onward and upward, till he has attained his present marvelous elevation, from which he looks down, calm and inscrutable, without giddiness, governing his people with a firm hand, and making for himself and his country a name greater than that name and country ever possessed before."

He is truly a "wonderful man." The Bible, we think, points out his dynasty, as the last head of the scarlet-colored beast, of Rev. 17; at which, "they that dwell on the earth shall wonder," when it rises from its "wounded" condition; which we think was accomplished when he re-established the Napoleonic dynasty in France.

In his late speech, he makes one remark, well calculated to make him popular with the masses of the people; which is evidently a prominent point to be reached by this remarkable man. It is the following:—"All confessions enjoy the same liberty." This, of course, will tend to give him the support of "all confessions," and constitute him the great head of all, politically, and ecclesiastically, like the ancient Cæsars.

We shall watch this man's course with much interest, for we think his life is intimately connected with the closing scenes of this dispensation.

WORKING MIRACLES.

The time has come for the demons to work their miracles, according to the Scriptures, as foretold by the prophets. The following from the Chicago Times dated March 10th, 1865, shows that marvellous things are being accomplished by the spirits. They well know how to transform themselves into angels of light, so as to deceive, "if it were possible, . . . the very elect."

When our Savior was upon earth he found an individual who had been bound by Satan, by means of a disease, for fourteen years. Jesus healed the sick one. The primitive christians taught that demons caused diseases frequently, and were the occasion of persons becoming insane. It is evident that those diseases which they cause they may heal again; and thus claim they have the same healing power as Christ. Many say "they must be good spirits, or they would not heal the sick." We think this conclusion may be a little hasty. It should not be forgotten that these demons are "seducing spirits.." A seducer does not let his true character be known to the one whom he would seduce; but seeks to gain the confidence of the one he would lead astray by some kind deeds. Just so the demons work; hence are properly called "seducing spirits." When they can walk on the water, open the eyes of one born blind, and raise the dead, we may think they are not seducers, unless they should speak against the Bible, and the God of the Bible, as they do now.

The following is the article from the Chicago Times:—

"For several days past the talk of all the marvel seekers in Chicago has been devoted to narrations of the extraordinary cures effected by an individual in Metropolitan hall. Thousands crowd to him every day, and from morning till night he is engaged passing patients through his hands at the rate of about four per minute.

Every one he professes to cure by a touch of his hand. It is said that he has touched the limbs of the paralyzed, and they have flung their crutches from them and danced; that the blind, by the mere pressure of his finger on the eye balls, open their eyes and see; that the deaf are made to hear, and those who had stammered all their lives, speak fluently and with ease. Rumor has sent abroad the most extravagant and extraordinary stories regarding his power. The consequence is the credulous come pouring to him from all directions. One woman's faith was so strong that she traveled four hundred miles, carrying with her a bed-ridden mother's clothes in order that he might touch them. She actually believed that by so doing her mother would be cured.

The process of 'cure' occupies very little time. The patient comes up to the platform; the physician lays his hand upon him and he walks off immediately.

Yesterday morning the multitudes who flocked to the Metropolitan Hall surpassed even those of the previous day. The hall was filled before nine o'clock, and for hours the crowd continued to accumulate, the broad staircase being completely filled by the press of people crushing continually forward. The majority seemed to be skeptical, but there were also many enthusiasts. One lady tossing her head scornfully was heard to remark: 'I don't believe it for one; and they tell a great many stories about him.'

On which an elderly gentleman turned round and, in accents of grave rebuke, said: 'They crucified Christ before they believed in him.'

Sometimes a couple of men would come, carrying a paralytic or palsied friend. Others came limping up on crutches. There were many either wholly or partially blind, scores of deaf, and persons afflicted with rheumatism, neuralgia, and lung complaints. All the sufferers were marshalled in long array, twenty deep around the hall, the professed dispenser of health occupying a place at the upper end. One by one the immense assemblage, came up to him, were touched, and passed out at the other door. Those who came on crutches he manipulated for a few seconds, made them stamp on the floor, walk backward and forward once or twice, then take their crutches on their shoulders and march out. This many of them certainly did, but whether it was that they were really cured, or whether their excited imagination gave them a momentary sense of being so, it will be impossible to tell, though a few days will serve to establish whether the whole affair was a humbug or not."

THE COMING STRUGGLE.

Although our nation has apparently got about through with her military struggle against the rebellion, yet it is to be feared that the "coming struggle" for the success of particular parties and principles will be more difficult to control than the one through which we have just passed, and will put the country in greater peril than ever.

The Washington correspondent of the Boston Journal, under date of April 14th, writes;

"It has been thought strange that in this civilized age the citizens of our enlightened and advanced republic should have made the sword the supreme arbiter of their domestic difficulties. Uniforms are everywhere to be seen, bayonets bristle on all sides, and mighty hosts are being maintained at the public expense, instead of employing their skill and industry in the rational and useful occupations of life.

After speaking of the objects of the war, he goes on to say: "Many statesman" are impressed "with the conviction that Lee's capitulation is but the commencement, rather than the end, of national troubles. The struggle for human rights is just being commenced."

On that very night, after the above was written, the President was assassinated.

A CHALLENGE.

We clip the following from "The Progressive Age," a Spiritualist paper, published by Eld. Moses Hull, at Kalamazoo, Mich. He was formerly a noted defender of the seventh-day-Sabbath, and an opponent of what he is now trying to establish.

"THE SUM OF ALL VILLANIES.

In the last No. of the World's Crisis, Eld. Miles Grant comes out with his usual tirade against Spiritualism, in which he says, 'Spiritualism is the sum of all villanies.' Also he says: 'We believe there is not a more direct road to perdition than the one in which the spirits are trying to lead men at the present time. The bite of the rattlesnake can be no more poisonous to the physical system, than Spiritualism to the moral. He who embraces it signs his eternal death warrant, and severs himself from 'the tree of life.' He who expects salvation through Jesus our Lord, should shun Spiritualism as he would the poison of asps.' . . .

We now throw out a challenge; Elder Grant may accept it and appoint the place, giving us due notice. We propose to debate the following question:

Resolved, That the morality, taught and lived by a majority of the Spiritualists of America is ahead of that practiced by any other people, those under the immediate teachings of prophets, Jesus and his twelve apostles, not excepted.

Elder Grant, here is a chance to test your sincerity; will you do it? The world will know."

We would propose for Eld. Hull's acceptance, a resolution much stronger than the one he has offered, as follows:—

Resolved, That the tendency of Spiritualism is towards sensualism, infidelity, and atheism.

Will Eld. Hull state when and where he would like to have the discussion, if he has a preference? We would like to comply with his wishes in the matter as far as practicable.

BECOMING RECKLESS.

The following from Wm. Patton, D. D., New Haven, Ct., shows that the sad state of morals in society is attracting the attention of thinking men. He hails it as a token that a "great revival" is "near."

When speaking of the present state of things he says:

"How reckless have men become of the sacredness of an oath, and the obligations to keep the Sabbath holy unto the Lord. How unparalleled are the extravagance and demonstrations of fashion, so unseemly in a time of war and grief, which threaten to shut out all reflection from the mind, and to erase all sense of accountability from the heart. This tide of worldliness sweeps through, bearing along, not only the young and the inexperienced, but the middle aged, and even the aged, until the boundary line between the world and the church is so overgrown and hidden that it cannot now be found."

If the Bible taught that men were to grow better and better "in the last days," then we might hope for the "great revival," for which Dr. Patton is looking. But suppose we should have one; unless the converts came out more from the spirit and manners of the world than they did in the last one, they would not live religion any longer than did those. What is wanting is a converted church to take care of the young converts, and nurse them in the way of holy living; instead of one to lead them astray by fairs and festivals, and other fashionable follies of these last days.

"HARD TIMES" IN CANADA.

It seems that the effects of the war are felt more severely in Canada than in New England, the northern and western states. The following from the Montreal Trade Review will give one some idea of things in Upper Canada.

"The universal 'plaint is 'hard times.' In all classes, among all grades—the merchant with his promise to pay, and the laborer with his battle for bread—the burden of the conversation is the difficulties of the present, and the poor promise of the future. In the cities of Ottawa, Kingston, Toronto, and Hamilton, retail trade seems to have dwindled down to a point beyond all possibility of profit. Large stocks of dry goods, imported in the autumn by retailers, have had to be sold at whatever cost, to meet the obligations thus incurred. This, with the fear of a declining market, and a desire to take advantage of the season usually selected by the farmer for delivery of grain, has induced an amount of effort to effect sales that has been positively painful, if not disgraceful. In Toronto, for instance, there has been an immense display of drapery, flags, of golden lions and brazen monkeys; and the papers contain tremendous advertisements replete with large letters and senseless trash. The legitimate, respectable trader, who scorns to thus make a fool of himself, has had no chance in competing for a trade ordinarily limited, but this year unusually so. The consequence is great difficulty in meeting engagements. In the country towns the same condition of things is apparent, only less in degree.

The low price of produce prevents much movement of grain, and farmers who can afford it,—and many who can't,—are speculating by holding their wheat over for better rates."

Omission.—In Bro. Thurman's article on the Parian Chronicle, in last week's Crisis, the original chronicle was left out, in consequence of a misunderstanding, and the corrected one, by Dr. Hales, inserted instead. This statement is needed, in order to understand some remarks in the article, and to explain the want of connection in some of its parts. But the omission will not materially affect the general information given. If any should wish to see the figures of the original, uncorrected, we could insert them if desired.

Eclipses.—It may be asked, "What if it be proved that Bro. Thurman's list of eclipses is correct; will that prove when the Lord will come?" Certainly not. It only shows that the Bible is right and Ptolemy's Canon wrong.

THE NEW $2000 TRACT FUND.

We, the undersigned, agree to give the sums affixed to our names, for the purpose of raising TWO THOUSAND DOLLARS to aid the Christian Publication Society in the gratuitous distribution of tracts.

Previous donations	$776.56
E. S. Barber	2.50
M. C. Allen	2.00
D. N. Clark	1.00
S. Dunn	1.00
Lydia Grant	.50
John Pay	1.00
H. C.	1.00
N. Hartshorn	1.50

POOR FUND DONATIONS.

To pay for Papers sent to the Poor.

Whole number sent free 800. Amount $2000.00.

Previous donations	$894.74
E. S. Barber	2.50
Leah Trexler	1.00
C. L.	1.00
Mrs. C. L.	1.00

THE ITALIAN MISSION.

Previous donations	$426.28
C. S. Sherman	20.00
Mrs. L. H. Armstrong	5.00
H. T. Miller	.40
I. Bidwell	.70

Our Volunteer Agents.

Report for week ending April 30.

Whole number of new subscribers in the week, 28. By the efforts of the following brethren, 20:—

One each—By Lydia S. Andrew, F A Barker, Rachel Call, E B Coon, H V Croffoot, J A Cleaveland, G W Green, W E Hathaway, Mrs. O Harvey, O S Knapp, A P Moore, G S Shepard, H Tagert, C A West.
Two each—By B. B. Hill, J. G. Hook, H. Phelps.

HIRAM MUNGER.

The new edition of the Life of Hiram Munger is going off rapidly. Have sold a hundred in the last fortnight, and the orders are coming in twelve or fifteen a day. The plates are sold and melted, and this is the last edition that will be printed. He who wishes to secure a copy, will order before they are all gone. Only 30 cts.

☞ Address all orders to this office.

For the World's Crisis

REPORT.

R. I. and East Conn. Quar. Conference.

Met, according to previous adjournment, with the Abington church, Wednesday, April 5th, 1865, at two P. M. There not being a sufficient number of the members of the conference present to form a quorum, we could not proceed to business, but instead held a very interesting prayer meeting. In the evening spent a few minutes in prayer and exhortations, and were addressed by H. F. Carpenter, from words found in John 3:3.

Thursday, eight A. M., met for prayer; at nine proceeded to business, M. R. Phetteplace in the chair. Minutes of the previous conference read, and adopted. Treasurer's report read and accepted. Reading of letters received from the churches. Mostly encouraging. Bro. C. F. Dixon reported the Rocky Brook church by letter: "Brethren, with the blessing of the good Lord we have been enabled to see some fruits of our labors the past quarter. We have had some very interesting conference meetings. Some have started for the kingdom. Bro. J. Northrup has baptized four. Had very little preaching. Bro. Hastings preached to us four days. Bro. Northrup is with us at present. Sunday school interesting."

Bro. H. R. Evans reported the Gloucester church. Had preaching by J. S. Eldridge every other Sunday. Interest rather dull, but increasing at present. Bro. E. Bellows has been preaching to us on the prophecies, with great earnestness to hear. Bro. Eldridge has moved to Scituate, and will not be able to preach to us as heretofore. His absence will be deeply felt by many. Bro. Albert Sweet reported the Exeter church. We still sustain our meetings. E. R. Wood is our pastor. Preaches to us twice a month. We have prayer and conference meetings when we have no preaching. Though our numbers are few, for the most part of the time there is a good attendance. Bro. P. C. Rodman has been delivering a course of lectures on the prophecies and law of God.

Letter received from Bro. V. P. Simmons, and read before the conference. Delegates' reports. Bro. N. Shumway reported the Danielsonville church. Since the last conference we have had preaching but a few Sabbaths, from Brn. G. Teeple, J. K. Bellows, and E. Bellows. When we have no preacher we have a Bible class in the forenoon and prayer and conference in the afternoon. Our meetings are usually seasons of interest. The Sabbath School has of late increased in interest and numbers. Bro. Ingalls reported the Abington church. Have stated preaching once in four weeks, by Wm. Morse. Labor under some disadvantages. One prayer meeting a week. Have no Sabbath School. Think there might be one started.

H. C. Hopkins reported the Foster church. Have preaching every Sabbath when not stormy. Have three prayer meetings a week. No Sabbath School in the winter, but shall organize soon. Striving to be good. Bro. I. Humes unofficially reported the Providence church. We are worse than dead. If we were dead, there would be some chance to work for the Lord. Radicalism has been the means of devouring us as a church, some bringing in doctrines and making them essential to salvation. But we begin to feel that something must be done. We have held a meeting to see what we could do. We extend an invitation to the preachers to come and visit us. D. Corey reported the East Killingly church. Number fifty-one members, thirty-four absent, seventeen live in the vicinity, five out of the seventeen are no members at all. Twelve is the most that we can rely upon. Preaching once by D. O. Hopkins.

Preachers reported their labors. E. Bellows has been laboring with H. K. Flagg. We hired a hall, and large crowds attended. Went to River Point. Did not see much interest there. They have a good house, and some have become proud. Been laboring with the Foster church. Saw some backsliders reclaimed. This church never was in a better condition than at the present time. Bro. H. F. Carpenter had nearly three years of labor to report. Labored two years in Poultney, Vt. First year saw some fruits unto holiness; the last saw some manifestations of the flesh. Last year labored with the Rutland church. Church has paid its debts. D. O. Hopkins. Trying to do something for the Lord. Held meetings every other evening for the last three months. God has blessed my labors, and sinners have been converted. My labors have been confined to that region known as the Shippee District and Little Rest. M. R. Phetteplace. Laboring still in Chepachet. There is interest in the church, and one will relate an experience on the next Sabbath. Sunday School large and interesting, with the prospect of its being larger.

At this stage of the meeting Bro. E. Bellows offered the following: Resolved, that one public service on the Sabbath is more profitable to the church and people than two. Some discussion followed, but came to no final conclusion.

Moved, that we adjourn until Friday at nine A. M. Carried.

At one in the afternoon met for social worship; at two preaching by E. Bellows, from Dan. 12:6; also in the evening preaching by G. A. Streeter, from Gal. 6:7.

Friday, nine A. M., met for business. It was moved that Wm. Morse become a member of this conference. Carried. The question concerning P. C. Rodman was taken up, and discussed as to the proper steps to be taken. Some suggested one thing, and some another, but at this point Bro. H. F. Carpenter offered the following: Resolved, that this conference appoint a delegate to confer either personally or by letter with Bro. P. C. Rodman as to the propriety of continuing a member of this conference while employed and paid for his services by an antagonistic organization. Moved, that this resolution be accepted by the conference. Carried. Moved, that E. Bellows be appointed that delegate. Carried.

Bro. E. Bellows introduced the following resolution: Resolved, that it is the duty of the church to study the prophetic scriptures to learn the time when the kingdom of God will be set up. It was moved that this resolution be adopted. Carried. Moved, that the brethren in the discussion of this resolution be limited to five minutes. Carried. Some pleasing discussion followed by Brn. E. Bellows, Phetteplace, Carpenter, A. A. Durfee, N. Shumway, and Wade. A good spirit was manifested on the part of the disputants. The discussion occupied about one hour's time, and still there were points not touched which were necessarily involved in the question; and it was moved that the resolution be laid upon the table. Carried.

Brn. A. Durfee, G. Streeter, and W. Morse reported their labors. Had seen the work of the Lord prosper in their hands. Thought that it paid well to work in the vineyard of the Lord.

As there was no invitation extended by the churches for the next conference, it was moved that it be left with the clerk to ascertain what church would be pleased to have the next conference meet with them. Carried. Moved, that we adjourn this conference to meet on the first Wednesday in July, at the place designated by the clerk. Carried.

11 A. M., preaching by M. R. Phetteplace, from 1 Thess. 5:17. At one in the afternoon met for social worship. A move in the camp. A time of rejoicing with the people of God. At two, listened to a sermon by A. Durfee. Subject, the two Gods. Also in the evening a sermon by H. F. Carpenter, from Rev. 15:2.

The clerk being absent the remainder of the conference, consequently he cannot report personally the remainder of the meetings; but he learned that they were both interesting and profitable. For the encouragement of those who are interested in our conference meetings, he would say that the work of the Lord has broken out in the Abington church, and some fifteen have been converted.

Collections received for the free distribution of tracts amounted to $6.02. Preaching brethren present—E. Bellows, M. R. Phetteplace, H. F. Carpenter, W. Morse, D. O. Hopkins, G. Streeter, A. Durfee, H. Hopkins.

P. S.—I would say to those churches that desire the next conference with them, that they will please inform me immediately by letter. Direct to West Killingly, Conn., Box 87.

Wm. H. Chapman, Clerk.

Correspondence.

From Dr. J. C. Jackson.

Although the following was a private letter, we trust the Doctor will pardon us for giving it a place in "our paper."—Ed.

My Dear Bro. Grant:—I received your letter written some time since, and but for the absence of my two sons, James H. Jackson and Dr. Hurd, who at that time were in Washington, attending the inauguration of President Lincoln, I should have answered it before. Rest assured, my dear brother, that all the love and sympathy which your note expresses for me and my family is most cordially reciprocated by myself and them. I look upon the movement in which you and your coadjutors are engaged as one of the sublimest that can be brought to the attention of mortal man. A most firm and unshaken believer myself in the Bible, I do not see how any one can read it without being convinced that the world, sooner or later, is to be brought under the control of the Lord Jesus Christ. I am not prepared myself to offer an opinion as to the way, method and time when the great fulfillment is to be made manifest; but this I do know, that the world needs such a reconstruction as His presence and rule would give it, and therefore any thing which goes to indicate more clearly how it is to be done is a matter of great interest to me. I am very desirous to get Mr. Thurman's Chronology. If you have a copy that you can send, please send it to me by mail, post paid, and I will remit the money without delay.

(Now let me ask you if you cannot make it convenient to be present at the annual meeting of the Dress Reform Association. It will be held in Rochester on Wednesday and Thursday the 21st and 22d days of June coming. I have urged Bro. Himes to be present, and he has partially promised to do so. Can you not also call attention to this meeting through the columns of the Crisis, and state when it is to be held? There are a great many women of the Second Advent faith who wear the American costume. The wonder to me is that they all do not wear it.)

The time has past when Christian women who are looking for the coming of their Lord and Savior, for the reconstruction of new things out of the old, for the remodeling of this earth so that it shall be a dwelling-place only for those who love the Savior better than all else, can forego efforts to bring their present lives into conformity with the new order of things. One would naturally suppose that as the time approached for this radical rearrangement of all matters pertaining to the bodily as well as the soul life, that those who are waiting for it and are longing for it would do all they can to get ready for it. Yet christian women who are Adventists seem to carry, and do carry as far as seeming goes, the same sort of conformity to the world in the matter of dress that worldly women themselves do. Aside from the few who have adopted the American costume, the dress which Christian Advent women wear is just as open to criticism and is as much opposed to the laws of God as that worn by the worldly minded and fashionably vain woman who can be found.

I wish in my inmost soul that outward conformity to the dictates and inspirations of Christ could be urged as a duty upon all christian women. If one is not to be conformed to the world, but to be renewed in the spirit and temper of his mind, I do not see how conformity in dress, as is now universal, can pass unquestioned. Especially is it difficult for me to see it when I reflect that the styles of dress worn by woman are established and imposed upon her by worldly minded persons, and in the selection and adoption of which, under present custom, she has no voice whatever. Whether it be unhealthy or not to wear the long-skirted dress, it does not seem to me to comport with high christian sentiment for christian women to so far absolve themselvas from the exercise of their own personality as to permit so important a matter as how they they shall dress to be settled entirely and imposed upon them by ungodly women. Worldly mindedness is one of the Devil's strongest points. It is a bait which is exceedingly seductive, and christian women are very apt to be caught by it, and to be injured in christian life and christian growth thereby,

Now I said to Bro. Himes, when I saw him last, that I thought you Adventists, considering your elevation in regard to general views, are at a low ebb in matters pertaining to health. You are giving it as a body of christians far less attention than the Seventh Day Adventists are. They publish books and tracts on the subject, arousing the attention of their people, until really as a denomination they are in advance of any denomination of christians in the United States. I think the effect of this must be very conducive to a high spirituality. As long as christians are willing to degrade their bodies, and in a philosophic and yet very practical sense make them the members of an harlot, it is not difficult for me to see that in large measure they cannot partake of the most intimate intercourse with the Holy Spirit, and share largely in its divine graces. A low spiritual life must characterize any man or woman who is willing to degrade the bodily organization by the indulgence of foolish or vain gratification in the way of appetite or dress.

But I must not tire you out. May God bless you, and all who are seeking to do his will on earth as it is done in heaven. With high esteem I remain, most truly, your friend and brother,

James C. Jackson, M. D.

"Our Home," Dansville, N. Y., Mar. 18.

From Bro. P. S. W. Deyo.

Bro. Grant:—I was invited by the New Hartford church to make them regular visits until conference. I went about the 1st of February. This town is on the Beaver River, ten miles west of Cedar Falls, near the line of Grundy County, on the Dubuque and Sioux City Railroad. The church worship three miles from the town. I was there one year ago and preached seven times, when six were baptized, and nine added to the church. I visited the church last July and held a basket meeting. From this the cause of the Lord began to rise. The Annual Conference gave them another lift in the right direction. When I went up in February I preached three times, and some were desiring to become christians. It seemed to me the harvest was ripe, but I was obliged to return home. I filled my appointment, made preparation to be absent and returned in ten days, not expecting to stay but a week; but there was a work to be done, and it took time. After preaching awhile, I did what I could to set things in order. I remained three weeks, and baptized sixteen. Quite a number of backsliders were reclaimed, and there are more to be baptized when I return. The church now numbers about seventy. The Lord was with us. I trust the church has gained confidence, and secured a basis meet for the wind of doctrines that may float around, and before Jesus be found without spot or wrinkle or any such thing. I returned to Strawberry Point the sixth of March, and commenced a meeting the eighth. This town is sixteen miles from the Dubuque and Sioux City Railroad, on a dividing ridge between the Makoquata and Volga rivers, a pleasant and healthy town, of four or five hundred inhabitants. I have lived here nearly nine years. I commenced the meeting from a sense of duty, but did not expect to hold it very long, nor without help. In this I was disappointed, but not in the result of the work. We went to work about the same as in the above church. But little favor was shown us, as we could only have the house but every other night; but when they saw that we were determined to push the work through by the help of the Lord, and move as the waters moved, they gave way for us. We continued the meeting over a month. Such meetings this town never have witnessed; our enemies and members of other churches being judges. A mutual work on the part of the salt of the earth. I baptized two daughters of a minister of another order, and a son of a Methodist minister. His mother worked with us faithfully. Some of three organizations worked with us, but more of the Methodists, and they had some five or six additions.

I look back over the three months that are past, and I have been enabled to preach and work, (as I have sat at my bench during the day at my trade), more than at any time for years. I feel to praise the Lord for his goodness. When I decided last conference to serve as evangelist I thought to be at my trade most of the time, but I never had so many pressing calls, and those that I could not fill. Have been nearly all winter in the field. In these places I have fully preached my views on prophecy and the symbolic time. Brethren, pray for us, that our faith fail not, and we be kept blameless till the coming of the Lord. Your brother, PETER S. W. DEYO.

Strawberry Point, April 12, 1865.

From Sr. L. B. Braley.

BRO. GRANT:—For a few days we have had the great privilege of hearing fourteen discourses from Bro. Sheldon, of Wisconsin, practical and prophetic; and it has been a feast of fat things. How sweet to hear the word dispensed by a workman whom God assists to preach a whole gospel. To the praise of God good has been accomplished. We feel revived. Never did the word of God shine forth to our minds more plainly, and as the different chains of the prophetic word have been traced down link after link, many that before treated the subject lightly are filled with solemnity and awe, and wish to hear more on this momentous subject. Many that did not go to hear, now regret that they had not heard. The Spirit of God is evidently at work on the minds of many in this place; and may the people of God be united in prayer as the heart of one man, that the Spirit of God may be poured out upon this people, that there may be a goodly number in this place that will be ready for the return of the Nobleman.

Five or six of the different ministers in this place attended many of the meetings; and may the light from the holy oracles illume their pathway that they may be able to tell to their flocks the time of night. A bright and glorious morn for the righteous is soon to dawn; but to the unprepared a day of gloom and thick darkness, wailing, and unutterable woe. In view of the grandeur and sublimity of the scenes about to burst upon our vision, let us who have any light seek for more, and not hide it, but do all in our power to win souls to Christ while our blessed Jesus acts as Mediator; for when once arrayed in his kingly garments, and brought to our view as the parting clouds reveal him, with his escort of angels, we can do no more; then he that is holy will be holy still, and he that is filthy will be filthy still.

The meetings have proved a great blessing to our family, and some who, years before started to serve God, have been greatly encouraged and strengthened. Never did sweeter music greet our ears than the voice of prayer and thanksgiving around the family altar, especially as it comes from one whose scepticism had reached to infidelity. O there is power in Jesus' blood! His arm is not shortened, nor his ear heavy that it cannot hear. God is in this work. Let not man's puny arm be raised against God. May we all, as the people of God, search our own hearts to see if all is right within, and double our diligence to make our calling and election sure, and not throw up mist and darkness to scatter the flock; but let it be our aim to win souls to Christ.

The Methodist people here tendered to us their house of worship, where most of the meetings were held. For this great favor we are truly grateful, craving for them in return the blessing of God, and that greater light than ever before may burst in upon their minds from the blest oracles of God. The tracts came in due time, and were distributed during the meeting, and are silently doing their work. We have prayer meetings at our house Thursday evenings, and feel that the Spirit of the blessed Jesus is with us. Remember us at the throne of grace, that we may endure to the end. Your sister, desiring to be ready for the return of the Master,

LUCRETIA B. BRALEY.

Carlinville, Ill, April 12, 1865.

BRO. N. C. LOCKE writes from Salem, Mass.:—"I am thinking upon the closing scenes of this world, of time's silent, measured tread, days, hours and minutes flying as the winds, never to be recalled, yet bringing us nearer that moment when as the lightning's flash it will be said, 'It is finished!' What a moment for this doomed world. Who will be ready and stand in that day? Only those who have a 'pure heart and clean hands,' who have overcome the world, the flesh, and the adversary who is plotting our destruction continually. Let us cling to God, submitting our wills to his. Thus he will lead us and guide us in all things. Let us be careful lest we suffer our wills to be opposed to the spirit of Christ. In all things let us consult the mind of the Spirit, having our whole being submitted to the will of God. . . . Let us be continually pleading God to draw some from the broad road to the narrow way that leads unto life. Quench not God's spirit, lest it flee from you, but call upon him when he is near, seek him with a whole heart, and may you be sanctified wholly, and preserved blameless unto his coming."

Obituaries.

ELD. J. SHIPMAN.

Died in Moravia, N. Y., March 22nd, 1865, Eld. Jacob Shipman, aged forty-nine years.

Bro. Shipman has been a faithful preacher of the gospel of the kingdom for nearly twenty years, and hoped to live to see Jesus coming. In November, he arranged his business at home, which was in Farmington, Penn., to visit some of the churches, and some relatives in this State, whom he had not seen for many years, and where he was intending to stop on his return home. He came to Dresserville, and preached twenty-eight sermons within three weeks. He had labored very hard before leaving home, and also while here, trying to build up the church in the most holy faith.

Often during his illness he was heard shouting and praising God, and expressed a strong desire to be in the great field of labor. He bore his illness with christian resignation. About three hours before he died, he said to a friend who was standing by his bedside,—"Do you think I am dying? If you do, tell me." Said she, "I think the struggle will soon be over." He shouted and said, "Abraham's great farm can't be divided." He made a short prayer, committing his spirit into the hands of his God.

He leaves a companion and seven children to experience the affliction of his absence; but they do not mourn as those who have no hope; for they look forward to that bright morn when that loved husband and father shall come forth from his dusty bed, clothed in immortal beauty, singing the songs of Moses and the Lamb.

"We've laid his form beneath the sod,
His life is hid with Christ in God;
When Christ our life shall come to reign,
He'll wake him and he'll live again.
Yes, in that bright and promised morn
He'll rise in an immortal form;
With songs of triumph o'er the grave,
He then will sing his power to save.
Sweet be his rest till Christ shall come;
He'll raise him then and take him home;
While life shall last be this our prayer,
Prepare us, Lord, to meet him there."

The friends of our brother will please remember the fatherless and widow. MATTIE BERMAN.

ALICE JANE GOODRICH.

Died in Rome, Me., April 5th, 1865, of diphtheria, Alice Jane, daughter of Jeremiah and Mary Jane Goodrich, aged nine years, eight months and four days.

Alice was a lovely little girl, and she won the affections of all who saw her. Death has stolen her away. She sleeps in yonder grave yard, but soon the trump will sound, and she will come forth in immortal beauty to die no more. Just before she died, she called her friends around her bedside, and taking each by the hand in turn, she told them to meet her in heaven. May the Lord comfort them with the blessed hope of being again reunited an unbroken family in the kingdom of God. Sermon by D. Hanscomb from Jer. 31: 16.

We shall meet those buds of promise, blighted by death's chilling hand,
We shall see their fadeless beauty blooming in the goodly land;
There our hearts will not lie bleeding 'neath the strokes of sorrow's rod,
There love's bands will not be sundered in the paradise of God.

W. H. BLAISDELL.

CYNTHIA MALTBY.

Fell asleep in Jesus, in Bristol, Conn., April 13th, Cynthia Maltby, wife of Ephraim S. Maltby, aged forty-four years.

Sister Maltby joined the Congregational church when she was eleven years old; and when the cry was made, "Behold the Bridegroom cometh," she arose and trimmed her lamp, and waited his coming. She was a christian indeed. Her neighbors will miss her in time of sickness, for she was always ready to help. She will be missed at the prayer meeting, where her voice was often heard, giving kind admonitions to all to live near to Jesus. She will be missed at that long established family altar. Her dear children and beloved husband will no more hear her voice in prayer. It is hushed in death. O death, thou art an enemy.

We shall never forget the sweet countenance she bore, as we laid her away quietly to rest until Jesus, our Life Giver, shall come.

B. HITCHCOCK.

THANKFUL AUGUSTA KNIGHT.

Died in Rome, Me., April 17th, 1865, Thankful Augusta, daughter of Bro. Wm. A. and Sr. Elizabeth P. Knight, aged three years, six months and fifteen days.

Little Augusta died of dropsy. She was a great sufferer the last two months of her life, but bore her sufferings patiently, and often spoke of dying. The funeral was attended by H. Seavey, who spoke words of consolation from 1 Thess. 2: 19, "What is our hope?" Bro. and Sr. Knight sorrow deeply, but not as those who have no hope, for they expect to be reunited again when the Life Giver comes, in a world where disease and death will be unknown.

"In that bright world no tears will flow,
Death ne'er can enter there;
For all who gain that heavenly land,
Will be as angels are."

W. H. BLAISDELL.

JOHN PICKERING.

Died in Louisville, Ky., in the Transfer Hospital, Feb. 22nd, 1865, John Pickering, aged forty-one years.

He was formerly of Richmond, New Hampshire, late of Cascade, Iowa. He was drafted last fall. His afflicted wife and friends, residing here, do not mourn as those that have no hope.

The occasion was improved by a discourse from the writer, founded on Job 14: 14, April 9th, in Cascade, which was listened to by a large and attentive audience, composed of his fellow townsmen and friends. P. W. HOUGH.

T. TURNER.

Died in Hebron, Me., March 4th, 1865, Mr. Tyler Turner, aged twenty-seven years.

By this death a young wife, father and mother, brothers and sisters, are sadly bereaved. But while they sorrow, it is not without hope. They have good evidence that all was well with him. His dying words so full of hope, his parting kiss sr full of love, seemed to rob the death-bed of its terror, and the grave somewhat of its gloom. May God prepare this mourning circle for a reunion with their loved one in the deathless world.

JAS. A. LIBBY.

N. S. WEEKS.

Died in South Tamworth, N. H., March 27th, of typhoid fever, Nathan S., son of Eld. Joseph and Susan M. Weeks, aged twelve years, seven months and nine days.

Sermon by Eld. Wm. McDonald, from Matt. 24: 44,—"Therefore be ye also ready." W. S. P.

CHARLES SKIFF.

Died in New Bedford, Feb. 28th, of varioloid, Charlie Albert, only son of Stephen B. and Deborah C. N. Skiff, aged seven years, five months.

Married.

By Eld. J. A. Cleaveland, Mr. JONATHAN BOWLES, of Sugar Hill, N. H., and Miss JULIA E. KNIGHT, of Whitefield, N. H.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

Liverpool April 15th, Londonderry 16th.

FRANCE.

The debate upon the Italian portion of the address was progressing in the Chamber. M. Thiers declared himself adverse to the unity of Italy, in which he saw danger and no utility to France. He defended the Papal Government and favored an alliance with Austria. M. Oliver defended the Italian Convention of last September, which, he claimed, consolidated Italian unity. He censured M. Thiers' idea of an alliance with Austria. The debate was adjourned.

Avices from Algiers say a visit of the Emperor to that colony was still considered probable.

ITALY.

ROME. A telegram from Rome says it is asserted that Count de Sartiges will shortly be withdrawn from Rome, and France will be only represented by the Secretary of Legation until the difficulties respecting Rome are settled.

SPAIN.

The Paris correspondent of the London Times says the disturbances in Madrid were more serious than was stated. On the evening of the 10th an assembly in the streets was suddenly dispersed by a volley of musketry. The troops fired right and left. A Mr. Davis, who was going to the lasino, was killed. Another gentleman, who was wounded, died in a few minutes. Some other persons were killed and fifteen wounded, some more or less seriously. There was no provocation on the part of the people. The cavalry charged the streets and used the sabre. No proclamation had been issued to warn the people or to forbid their moving about the streets as usual.

There have been serious disturbances on the Suez Canal between the Egyptian and foreign laborers.

DOMESTIC.

War Department, Washington, April 27—9.20 A. M.

To Major-General Dix:

J. Wilkes Booth and Harrold were chased from the swamp in St. Mary's County, Maryland, to Garratt's farm, near Port Royal, on the Pappahannock, by Col. Baker's force.

The barn in which they took refuge was fired.

Booth, in making his escape, was shot through the head and killed, lingering about three hours, and Harrold was captured.

Booth's body and Harrold are now here.

E. M. STANTON, Secretary of War.

War Department, Washington, April 27—9.30 A. M.

Major-General Dix:

This Department has received the following dispatch from Maj. Gen. Halleck, commanding the Middle Division of the James. Gens. Canby and Thomas were instructed some days ago that Sherman's arrangements were disapproved by the President, and they were ordered to disregard it and push the enemy in every direction.

E. M. STANTON, Secretary of War.

Richmond, Va., April 26—9.20 P. M.

To Hon. E. M. Stanton, Secretary of War:

Gens. Meade, Sheridan and Wright are acting under orders to pay no regard to any truce or orders of Gen. Sherman respecting hostilities on the ground that Sherman's agreement could bind his own command only and no other. They are directed to push forward regardless of orders from any one except Gen. Grant, and cut off Johnston's retreat.

Beauregard has telegraphed to Danville that a new arrangement had been made with Sherman, and that the advance of the 6th corps was to be suspended until further orders. I have telegraphed back to obey no orders of Sherman, but to push forward as rapidly as possible.

The bankers here have information to-day that Jeff. Davis' specie is moving south from Goldsboro' in wagons as fast as possible. I suggest that orders be telegraphed through Gen. Thomas that Wilson obey no orders from Sherman, and notifying him and Canby, and all commanders on the Mississippi, to take measures to intercept the rebel chiefs and their plunder. The specie taken with them is estimated here at from six to thirteen millions.

H. W. HALLECK,
Major-General Commanding.

New York, April 28. The Times' dispatch says Senator Sumner was shot at last night by some person who fled and was not recognized. Mr Sumner received shortly after a note, saying: "It was fortunate for you that my aim was not good."

Washington, April 29, 1865.

The war is regarded as virtually at an end, and Lieut. Gen. Grant is expected here to-day to enter upon the work of reducing the armed forces and curtailing the expenditures.

President Johnson will not probably continue the liberal terms of amnesty offered by his predecessor to the rebels. Those who have refused to accept it will regret their hesitation.

Chief Justice Chase will leave here at once to visit the recently rebellious States and open U. S. Courts. He will first go to North Carolina.

Senator Sumner has consented to deliver the eulogy on President Lincoln at Boston on the 1st day of June.—Cor. Journal.

New York, April 29. By the steamer Fung Shuey we have New Orleans files to the 22d inst. The news of the assassination of President Lincoln was received on the 18th, and instantly spread a pall of gloom and despondency over the city. The city was draped in mourning. Meetings were held and expressions put forth of heartfelt public grief. The city was never more shocked.

A report has been received from Bagdad, Mexico, that Cortinas had entered Matamoras with a few men. A skirmish took place, in which but few men were killed on either side. Cortinas took some horses and lost three prisoners, one a Colonel, who was afterward shot by Nejia. An attack on Bagdad was expected. The foreigners in Matamoras had been organized to defend the place by Mejia. Communication between Bagdad and Matamoras had been suspended. Cortinas and Menze have 3000 men.

St. Louis, April 28. A telegram received by the military authorities from New Madrid says that the steamer Sultana, with 1400 paroled prisoners on board, exploded her boilers, and that 1400 lives were lost.

Washington, April 27, 1865.

Col. Baker, of the War detective force, has been indefatigable in his efforts to detect and arrest the assassin Booth, but he has been seriously retarded by the operations of other parties, whose scouts have twice betrayed plans which would probably have secured the villain alive.

Booth probably fractured his leg when he leaped from the box in which he committed the murder, his spur having become so entangled in a silk flag as to throw him from his balance. Nevertheless he rode off on his roan horse some thirty miles withing bridle, when he stopped to have his limb dressed by a surgeon.

Afterward he managed to cross the Potomac, to traverse what is known as the Northern Neck of Virginia, to cross the Rappahannock, and to make his way toward Bowling Green. Harrold accompanied him.

Meanwhile Lieut. Baker, a brother of the Colonel, with twelve men, were on the assassin's track, and about three o'clock Wednesday morning they surrounded a barn in which he was secreted. The country was infested with guerillas and paroled rebels, who had begun to make signals.

Booth, when summoned to surrender, came to an upper window and refused to give himself up alive. He was armed with a Spencer carbine, the knife with which he cut Maj. Rathbone, yet stained with blood, and a pistol. He declared that he would kill himself rather than be taken.

As the signals of the guerillas became more distinct, Lieut. Baker decided to set fire to the barn in order to force the assassins to come out. Booth, on ascertaining this, swore he would not be taken alive, and snapped a pistol at his own head. It missed fire and ere he could make a second attempt at suicide a Union bullet had pierced his head near the place where his murderous bullet entered the head of our martyred President.

The wound was mortal, but he lived three hours. Lieut. Baker took his head in his lap and did all in his power to soothe his dying agonies. He confessed all, and as his end approached he endeavored to raise his partially paralyzed hands before his face, saying, "Blood! Blood! There is blood on them!"

A complete diary of what has happened since he committed the fatal crime was found in his pocket, also bills of sterling exchange drawn by a Canada bank, when Booth was there in October last.

The murderer's corpse has been brought here and was last night deposited on board a gunboat. The features are remarkably natural, although his having shaved off his mustache changes their expression, and his whole beard has grown somewhat.

Harrold was arrested unharmed and brought here.

Lieut. Baker and the soldiers who composed his party are receiving much attention.—Boston Journal.

War Department—3 P. M.

To Major-General Dix:

A dispatch from Gen. Grant, dated at Raleigh, 10 o'clock P. M., April 26, just received by this Department, states that Gen. Johnston surrendered the forces in his command, embracing all from here to the Chatahoochie, to Gen. Sherman on the basis agreed upon between Lee and myself for the Army of North Virginia.

(Signed) E. M. STANTON, Secretary of War.

By the President of the United States.

A PROCLAMATION.

Whereas, By my Proclamation of the 25th inst. the 25th day of next month, was recommended as a day for special humiliation and prayer in consequence of the assassination of Abraham Lincoln, late President of the United States. But whereas, my attention has been called to the fact that the day aforesaid is sacred to large numbers of Christians as one of rejoicing for the ascension of our Savior,

Now, therefore, be it known that I, Andrew Johnson, President of the United States, do hereby suggest that the religious services recommended as aforesaid should be postponed until Thursday, the first day of June next.

In testimony whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed.

Done at the City of Washington, this 29th day of April, in the year of our Lord 1865, and of the Independence of the United States of America the eighty-ninth. ANDREW JOHNSON.

By the President:

W. HUNTER, Acting Secretary of State.

President Lincoln's Funeral.

New York, April 25. New York has amply paid her last tribute of respect to the remains of Abraham Lincoln. They were escorted to the Hudson River Railroad Depot by a funeral procession never equalled in this country, and perhaps in the world.

Leading the line were two divisions of the State militia, including infantry, cavalry and artillery, besides a battalion of marines. Immediately following was the 7th Regiment State militia, which has done guard duty since the arrival of the funeral cortege in this city. The regiment looked magnificently, some two-thirds of it doing the immediate escort duty, while the balance was formed in a hollow square around the hearse. Inside this square was still another guard of honor of military and naval officers. Next followed carriages three abreast and stretching a long distance, containing the city government, delegations from Washington and other places, and including many military and naval officers and the representatives of different nations resident here, Gov. Fenton, Ex-Governors of the State, members and ex-members of the Legislature and others. Next were the employes in the Custom House, Sub-Treasury and Post-office, in themselves a large body of men, and following them the officers and ex-officers of the army and volunteer services. The navy contributed several hundred of its officers to the procession.

The various Clubs were next represented, the Loyal Leagues appearing in great numbers, and the Tammany Society and the Democratic General Committee making an effective display. The citizens of the Pacific coast were largely represented, a striking feature being Seth Kinman, who presented an elkhorn chair to the late President, and who was dressed in a curious looking buffalo suit. The Sons of Temperance also turned out very effectively; but the most remarkable feature of the funeral procession was the immense number of Masons, who were next in line, each man wearing in his coat a sprig of evergreen. Perhaps 10,000 of the order were in the procession. The Irish Societies followed in nearly as great numbers as on St. Patrick's day. Many of their associations were fully represented.

The procession closed with large delegations from all kinds of societies from Brooklyn, and finally several thousand respectably dressed and well appearing negroes. It was three hours passing a given point, and ere the end of it reached the depot the corpse of our martyred President was many miles away from the city.

Take the procession altogether, it was one of the largest, if not the greatest, ever seen in New York, and the utmost good feeling was manifested. Everywhere the passing of the coffin was the signal for all to uncover their heads. All over the floor of the hearse on which the coffin rested were strewed the most beautiful flowers. The hearse itself was the theme of praise from all as most appropriate for the occasion.

All along the route an immense concourse of people lined the streets, filled the windows, balconies, stoops and housetops, all of whom seemed of one accord in respect to the memory of the departed.

At the depot the hearse was drawn through the lines of the military with all due ceremony. Everything in fact went off well. No accident occurred during the day. Minute guns were fired all day, and the bells tolled during the time of the removal of the remains to the depot.

After the procession passed an immense meeting was held in Union Square, at which a funeral oration was delivered by Hon. George Bancroft.

DESTINATION OF JEFF. DAVIS.—Intelligent citizens of Richmond believe that Davis is by this time beyond the Mississippi river, en route to Mexico, thence to Europe. He will never be taken alive, having said in the hearing of distinguished officers of his government, now in Richmond, that rather than give himself up to the "Yankees" he would die by his own hand. He has three million of dollars in specie in his possession, and long ago laid up quantities of treasure in Europe. In our next foreign war Jeff. Davis's sword and head will be lent to our enemies.—Correspondence World.

ITEMS.

☞ Justice has at last triumphed in Philadelphia. A colored woman has recovered a verdict of $50 damages for being put out of a horse car because her skin is not white. Judge Allison charged the jury that the passenger railway companies must conform to the terms of their charters. They were incorporated for the accommodation of the public, and have no right to adopt rules to exclude a class. They may exclude individuals who may be offensive, but they cannot declare that because a man is a German, an Irishman or a white or a black man that he shall not ride.—Journal.

☞ The news from Mexico is important. Cortinas, who a few months ago threw off his allegiance to the Republican government, has suddenly turned about and declared against the empire. He has besieged Matamoras, for the defense of which Gen. Mejia has only 500 men. Cortinas had 5000 or 6000 under his command. At last accounts he had gained possession of the suburbs of Matamoras, and would probably capture the city.

☞ The Independence Belge says:—"The present state of Mexico seriously occupies the attention of the French Government. Its responsibility is gravely involved. We are informed that the Ministers have felt bound to offer some observations on this subject to the Emperor, but that he manifests a firm resolution of maintaining in Mexico, happen what may, the honor of the French flag, and the throne established at the cost of French blood."

☞ A Palermo paper states that a few days ago a solitary mountain, near Motta St. Anastasia, in the district of Sieli, suddenly sunk down to the level of the plain, leaving no trace behind except a few trees which stood on its top, and are still partly visible. This strange phenomenon is attributed to the volcanic action of Mount Etna, though the distance is considerable.

☞ The eruptions of Vesuvius and Etna are likely to be followed by an outbreak of Stromboli. Letters from Sicily announce that symptoms of activity in that volcano have appeared, as already columns of smoke, furrowed with streaks of light, rise above it.

☞ Willmer & Smith's European Times says that the tendency in the English money market to gloomy apprehensions is now greater than it has been for several years past—greater than the gloom in the very depth of the Crimean war, ten years ago, or in the midst of the Indian mutiny.

☞ There are on the Sandwich Islands about one hundred meeting houses, erected by the people themselves, at a cost of $150,000. Some of them are valuable and durable. The one at Honolulu is built of coral rock, and may stand for centuries.

☞ It is believed that no more cotton will be burned at the South, and it is an important question how much there is on hand there. One estimate places it as high as five million bales. Some at the South estimate the amount at four million bales.

☞ Among the most interesting marks of human progress is a postal convention which has lately been concluded, one between the Italian Government and that of the United States, by which each country engages to circulate gratuitously the correspondence of the other.

☞ The colored Free Masons of New York made application to the city authorities to be assigned a place in the funeral procession of the President, but had a point blank refusal.

☞ A military guard has been established at the house occupied by President Johnson in Washington, and visitors cannot pass the guard until permission has been received from the President.

☞ Galvanized iron telegraph wire is recommended for clothes lines, because it never rusts, never need be taken in, never breaks down.

☞ Tansy Tea will keep off bugs from the vines of squashes, pumpkins, cucumbers and melons. Steep the tansy plants, and then sprinkle it over the vines with a brush.

☞ The value of the estate left by the late President Lincoln is estimated at $25,000.

☞ The Empress Eugenie wears seventy-eight lace skirts at once. Some enterprising soul counted them.

☞ Since the first of June last, 1665 pieces of artillery have been captured from the rebels.

Notices.

Conference.

The Maine Western Central Quarterly Conference will be holden with the brethren and friends in Vienna, at Sr. Carr's barn, commencing June 8th, at 4 o'clock P. M., and continue over the following Lord's day. Brethren from a distance will call on Eld. H. B. Seavey, Bro. Clifford, or Sr. Carr.

Ample provision will be made, and a general invitation is given. Come, brethren and sisters, while it is evident that those who love the Lord will soon see the King in his beauty, let us see to it that we are found faithfully discharging our duty at his appearing. D. W. GRIFFIN, Clerk.

Advent Herald, please copy.

Notice.

The Lord will, there will be a conference of christians looking for that blessed hope and the glorious appearing of the great God and our Savior Jesus Christ, about three miles north-east of Delta, Fulton Co., Ohio, to commence Thursday evening, May 25th, and continue over Lord's day. A general attendance of christians loving the appearing of Jesus is desirable. Inquire for J. Ames, Wesley and Thomas Watkins.

In behalf of the friends of Jesus,
A. N. SEYMOUR.

Voice and Harbinger please copy.

New Hampshire Quarterly Conference.

The third quarterly session of the New Hampshire State Conference will be held in Sunapee, N. H., (South meeting-house,) commencing Thursday, June 1st, at one o'clock, P. M., and continue over the following Sunday.

We hope prayer will go up to God that this meeting will prove a great blessing to the people in this part of the State.

A. W. SIBLEY, Secretary.

Illinois Annual Conference.

The Illinois Second Advent Christian Conference will hold its annual session at New Rutland, La Salle Co., commencing on Wednesday, May 24th, 1865, and continuing during the week and over Sunday. As this is in some respects the most important conference during the year, it is desirable to have a FULL ATTENDANCE.

Rutland is on the Illinois Central Railroad, some forty miles below Mendota.

E. ROYCE, Secretary.

Notice.

The next annual meeting of the Iowa Christian Conference will be held at Manchester, Delaware Co., Iowa, commencing June 15th, 1865, and continuing over the first day. Strangers may call on Bro. Cooley, near the depot. Dear brethren, let this be the largest gathering of the kind we have ever had. Come laden with grace, to work for the salvation of sinners.—Voice copy.

H. H. JAMES, Pres.
P. S. W. DEYO, Conf. Clerk.

Conference in Brookfield, N. H.

There will be a Conference at Brookfield, N. H., commencing Thursday, June 8th, at 2 o'clock P. M., and hold over the following Sunday. Eld. John Couch and others will be present to preach the word of life. For the brethren,

A. W. SIBLEY.

Appointments.

We would say to our preaching Brethren that it is necessary we should receive their appointments as early as TUESDAY MORNING, as our paper goes to press about noon; otherwise they will not be inserted till the week following.

LOWELL STREET CHAPEL, BOSTON, CORNER OF CAUSEWAY AND LOWELL STREETS. Meetings are held regularly three times every Sunday, and Tuesday and Friday evenings. Seats free.

LOWELL STREET CHAPEL.
J. Couch..........Sundays, May 7th and 14th

Philadelphia, Pa..........Sunday, May 7th
New York, (Bro. Samuel Curry's congregation, 24th Street)..........Wednesday evening, May 10th
New Haven, Ct..........May 11th
Springfield, Mass..........May 12th
Worcester..........Lord's day, May 14th
MILES GRANT.

Sandy Brook, Ct., (at Bro. Davis')..........May 7th
LEWIS ANDREWS.

West Stafford, Ct..........Sunday, May 7th
Agawam, Mass..........Sunday, May 14th
Willington Hollow, Ct., (baptism)..........Sunday, May 21st
I. B. POTTER.

Alton Corner, N. H..........Saturday evening, May 6th and over the following Sunday.
WM. C. THURMAN.

Athol..........Sunday, May 7th
Vernon, Vt..........Sunday, May 14th
J. HEMENWAY.

Lee, N. H..........Sunday, May 7th
A. MUSSEY.

Warehouse Point, Ct..........Sunday, May 7th
H. MUNGER.

Pomfret, Vt..........Sunday, May 14th
Bradford, N. H., (Pond meeting-house), Sunday, May 21st.
WM. W. SUTHERLAND.

Goffstown, (as Bro. Saulpaugh may appoint), Wednesday evening, May 10th.
Warner, Waterloo, (as Bro. Davis may appoint), Saturday evening, May 13th, and over Lord's day.
North Sutton, (as Bro. Andrew may appoint), Wednesday evening, May 17th.
Mill Village, (meeting house)..........Lord's day, May 21st
Danbury, (at Bro. A. C. Knowlton's), Wednesday, May 24th. At the Knowlton school-house, Sunday, 28th.
East Canaan, (as the brethren may appoint), Saturday evening, June 3d, and Sunday, the 4th.
B. P. MANNING.

Yarmouth, Me..........Saturday evening, May 6th and Sunday, the 7th.
Brunswick, (where Bro. Storer shall appoint), Wednesday, May 10th.
Augusta..........Saturday, May 13th, and Sunday, the 14th
Canaan, (Salisbury meeting-house)..........Sunday, May 21st
Cornville..........Saturday, May 27th, and Sunday, the 28th.
Between as the doors may be opened.
B. SPAULDING.

Plymouth Hollow, Ct., (Bro. Potter's) Sunday, May 14th
Waterbury, Ct..........Sunday, May 21st
O. D. WOODRUFF.

Kennebunkport, Me..........May 7th and 14th
C. GOODRICH.

Barnstead, (Clark Town)..........May 7th
Concord, N. H..........Sunday, May 14th
Chichester, (new chapel)..........May 21st
S. S. MOONEY.

Amherst East Street..........May 12th
Goshen, Mass..........May 14th
Plainfield, (at Bro. D. Thayer's)..........May 15th and 16th
Plainfield, (at Bro. J. E. Healy's)..........May 17th
Dalton, Mass..........May 18th and 19th
Savoy, Mass..........May 21st
Charlemont, Mass., (at Bro. Cudworth's)..........May 23d and at Bro. Calvin Hicks' May 24th.
Griswoldville, Mass..........May 26th
Northfield, Mass..........May 28th
My appointment for Townsend, Mass., is withdrawn.
GEO. A. STREETER.

Lee, N. H..........May 7th
Dover, N. H..........May 14th
C. S. EMERSON.

Lawrence, Mass., (Lyceum Hall)..........Sunday, May 7th and perhaps onward.
H. L. HASTINGS.

New Britain, Ct..........Sunday, May 7th
Also Monday and Tuesday evenings following.
Plainville, (as Bro. Jos. Wood may arrange), Wednesday evening, May 10th.
Forestville, Ct..........Thursday evening, May 11th
Will preach the following Sunday, May 14th, at Bristol or Forestville, as thought best.
Shall be at liberty the week following, and also Sabbath, May 21st, to preach as the way opens. Address me at Forestville, Ct.
H. K. FLAGG.

Scitico, Ct..........Lord's day, May 7th
SAMUEL CURRY.

Portsmouth, N. H..........Sunday, May 28th
J. G. SMITH.

SPRINGFIELD, BARNES' BLOCK.
Ira Morgan..........Sunday, May 7th
Miles Grant..........Friday, May 12th
SUBJECT: "The cause of the phenomena of Modern Spiritualism, showing that human spirits have nothing to do with the manifestations." Any one will be allowed to ask questions.

Loudon Ridge..........May 7th
T. W. PIPER.

Cheshire Street, Ct..........Sunday, May 14th
Wallingford, Ct..........Sunday, May 21st
IRA MORGAN.

Richmond..........May 7th
Bristol, (Round Pond)..........May 14th
Jefferson, (Week's school-house)..........May 21st
S. K. PARTRIDGE.

Agawam..........May 7th
Turkey Hills and Windsor Locks..........May 14th
R. WILLIAMS.

P. S. I wish Bro. Allen to meet me at Windsor Locks May 6th, on the arrival of the two o'clock train from Hartford. R. W.

Canton Street..........Sunday, May 7th
Pleasant Valley, Ct..........Sunday, May 14th
S. WOODRUFF.

Haverhill, Mass..........Sunday, May 7th
NO NAME.—Perhaps Bro. Pinkham.

Barrington, N. H., (at Shurben's school-house) May 7th
S. HAWKINS.

Wallingford, (North Farms), Ct., (Baptism) Sunday, May 7th.
North Canton, Conn..........Sunday, May 11th
B. HITCHCOCK.

Scitico, Ct..........Sunday, May 7th
E. OWEN.

North Chichester, N. H., (Pine Ground school-house), Saturday evening, May 6th.
Pittsfield, (New Chapel)..........Sunday, May 7th
JOHN G. HOOK.

Bath..........Sunday, May 7th
Cumberland, (Merrill school-house), May 21st, 2 P. M.
R. R. YORK.

Holderness, (Brick school-house)..........Sabbath, May 7th
Meredith Village..........Sabbath, May 14th
NELSON HARTSHORN.

Head of the River..........May 9th
New Bedford..........May 7th and 14th
Mattapoisett..........May 11th
J. S. WHITE.

New Boston..........Sunday, May 7th
New Durham Corner..........May 14th
Northwood Narrows..........May 21st
(Signed) J. G. JAMES.
Perhaps intended for J. G. SMITH.

Rome, Town House..........May 7th
Augusta..........May 14th
H. B. SEEEY.

Ashburnham, Mass..........Tuesday evening, May 9th
Athol, Mass..........Wednesday evening, May 10th
Vernon, Vt..........Thursday evening, May 11th
North Springfield, Vt..........Friday evening, May 12th and over the following Sunday.
Rutland, Vt..........Thursday evening, May 18th and over the following Sunday.
Castleton, Vt..........Tuesday evening, May 23d till Friday evening.
Poultney, Vt., Saturday evening, May 27th, and over the following Sunday, and remain in that region as long as may be duty.
A. SIMPSON.

Darien, at the school-house near Bro. Geo. Strong's, at 11 A. M., Sunday, May 7th. Baptist meeting-house, near Bro. B. C. Simonds, at 5 o'clock, P. M.
C. F. SWEET.

New Britain, Ct..........Friday evening, May 5th
Cheshire Street, Ct..........Sunday, May 7th
Yalesville and Cheshire Street..........Monday, May 8th through the week, and over Sunday, May 14th.
L. BOUTELL.

Worcester, Mass..........Sunday, May 7th
A. SIMPSON.

Portsmouth, N. H..........May 7th and 14th
Plymouth, Mass..........May 21st
Westboro, Mass..........May 28th
Philadelphia, Penn..........June 4th and remain as long as duty demands.
F. H. BURBANK.

Ashburnham, Mass..........May 7th
Lunenberg, Mass..........May 14th
S. S. BREWER.

FOR THE CHURCH IN GLOUCESTER.
Eld. D. O. Hopkins..........Sunday, May 7th
(If stormy, the next Sunday.)

West Abington, Mass..........May 7th
C. C. RAMSAY.

North Bennington, Vt..........May 6th and over the Sabbath.
South Shaftsboro..........May 8th and 9th
WM. J. BLANCHARD.

THE GREAT SYMBOLIC CHART of the Times of Daniel and John, in which the most important features of chronological prophecy are "made plain upon tables, that he may run that readeth." Sent by express for $5.00.

Business.

☞ The Law of Newspapers.

1. Subscribers who do not give express notice to the contrary, are considered as wishing to continue their subscriptions.

2. If subscribers order the discontinuance of their papers, publishers may continue to send them until all sums due are paid.

3. If subscribers neglect or refuse to take their papers from the office to which they are directed, they are held responsible until they have paid what is due, and order their papers discontinued.

4. If subscribers remove to other places without informing the publisher, and the paper is sent to the former direction, they are held responsible.

5. The law declares that any person to whom a periodical is sent, is responsible for payment if he receives the paper, or makes use of it, even if he has never subscribed for it, or has ordered it stopped. His duty in such a case is, not to take the paper from the office, and to notify the publisher that he does not wish it.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

W. L. Starbird—Don't keep any prayer books.
Mrs. R. Davis—It was received and credited.

CASH RECEIPTS FOR THE CRISIS.

To find how your account stands.

The present No. of the Crisis is 500. The No. which follows your name is the No. to which you have paid.

If the No. paid to, is greater than the present No., the difference shows how many weeks you have paid for in advance. If the No. paid to, is less than the present No., the difference shows for how many weeks you owe. For every week of indebtedness before No. 468, charge (at the old rate) four cents; and, for every week of indebtedness since No. 468, charge (at the new rate) five cents,—and you have the amount due the office. (This, however, will give a trifle more than the amount due. To make it exact, deduct four cents for every dollar due before No. 468, and five cents for every dollar due since No. 468.)

$1.00 each—D. Clow 454, M. Rogers 517, Phebe M. Rood 517, J C Hagerman 481, M A Powers 468, S Hawkins (what P. O.?) H Rogers 517, G W Smith 517, J W Merrill 488, L Irish 520, E McKeen, Jr., 464.

$1.25 each—N G Winn 522, A Brooks 465, G W Baker 523, J Erwin 522, J L Batchelder 508, D A Brown 522, J Pierce 524, B Lucas 522, L Shurtleff 526, R A West 522, J Stevens 520, W Waterhouse 522, T A Page 522, L Staniels 522, D Batchelder 522, S A Glazier 525, J Dunham 509, D A Shaw 518, J Will 494, Mrs. P Grover 522, R Harmon 526.

$2.00 each—S. Bradley 518, L. E. Saulpaugh 495, E. Owen 534, C Styles 503, W Baker 529, J B Whittemore 551, Mrs. A Shaw 518, C Leonard 459, Mrs. B Herrick 533.

$2.50 each—Mrs. E Tuttle 548, J F Gilkey 540, J L Small 571, J W Davis 527, D Burnham 557, A S Soper 547, N Hartshorn 493, E G Wallace 548, J E Bowles 548, A Shipman 530, J S Arnold 531, J B Davies 548, G W Knight 481, J E Stoddard 536, M E Vaughan 529, T T Stone 552, Mrs. H Curtis 532, C O Delano 550, W. Mosher 552, E Knox 523.

$3.00 each.—O. T. Wyeth 518, W. Bunce 549, J. A. Dodge 542, S Allen 549, A B Hoyt 546, J Clark 514, J. Pay 519.

$5.00 each.—H N Croffoot 493, J M Durnam 557, E. Tefft 558, W B Bancroft 600, H L Johnson 557, B Tuttle 545.

$1.50 each.—E. Smith 492, E. Foster 527, E. Lowrie 519, C A Merrill 525.

Various Sums.—A. Brown 30c, 499; M. Cottrell 63c, 509; E. B. Coon $1.17, 521; W. F. Baker 50c, 414; C. Fleming $4.40, 494; V. N. Davis $2.79, 520; H Thayer $8.50, 494; E S Diman 40c, 503; J Mason $10.00, 529; A J Mason 25c, 501; E H Downs $1.55, 497; J Caswell 35c, 497; H Godfrey 15c, 500; W L Starbird $1.20, 487; G W Stanton 65c, 509; O Clapp $2.84, 520; E Daggett $5.88, 522; D Thayer $4.90, 544; G R Hale $1.70, 503.

FOR BOOKS AND TRACTS.

30 cts. each—E B Coon, N D Wight, S. Case, H. C. Hopkins, E R Wormwood, G F Parker, J Taylor, A A Lawrence, S B Davis, R Davis, C A West, L Irish, J W Piper, J Moore, G R Hale, L B Colby, C Willoughby, C C Dow, E Greene, G Holt, A Foster, L M Doore, H Harrold, H A Clough, D A Shaw, A Knowlton, C Tillotson, C M Culbertson, I Kulp, E A Brown.

E. Baker 50c, D. L. Allen 96c, R. Harrington 50c, S. Bradley $1.00, W E Benham $2.00, H V Croffoot $2.50, W B Fenn 25c, A W Griggs 50c, B B Hill 50c, G W Knight $7.50, E. Owen $2.45, T. Smith $2.00, S. Leach 50c, J L Wetherell 55c, W T Baker $2.00, J F Funk $1.00, E Kelley $6.00, H J Baldwin 91c, M B Brinkerhof $2.00, J Brackett $1.00, J A Cleaveland $2.85, H Godfrey $2.10, E D Fisk $2.30, W Mosher $2.50, J M Taylor $1.00, H T Miller 60c, J M Lamon 25c, E Taylor 60c, M McKnight 47c.

BOOKS AND TRACTS SENT.

BY MAIL.

H Croffoot, S Bradley, R Harrington, E B Coon, W. B Fenn, D L Allyn, N D Wight, E. Baker, W E Benham, D W Knight, E R Wormwood, C Willoughby, E Greene, S Case, C C Dow, L B Colby, A W Griggs, H. C Hopkins, G Holt, B B Hill, J Taylor, G F Parker, H J Baldwin, J L Wetherell, S Leach, J F Funk, H Godfrey, W T Baker, A S Cook, J Brackett, M B Bimkerhof, Mrs. S B Davis, H Harrold, D Foster, H A Clough, A A Lawrence, D A Shaw, Mrs. R Davis, L M Doore, A Knowlton, J Moore, C M Culbertson, J W Piper, L. Irish, M. McKnight, E. Taylor, Mrs. C. Tillottson, J. Pratt, E A Brown, C A West, G R Hale, I Kulp, W. Mosher, H T Miller, J M Lamon, L Grant, J M Taylor, S H Rice, Mrs. H Snell, J A Libbey, J Roberts, Mrs. A Hibbard, S Thurlow, S Bidwell, R N Hines, B Quint, M C Perkins, J M Andrews, M Cooper, N Stevens, B S Jackson.

BY EXPRESS.—R E Ladd, E Kelley, Mrs. A E Smith, J A Cleaveland.

LETTERS RECEIVED.

N Hoyt, J Chapman, J Hindes, M H Morrison, J S White, W Sweet, H M Dubey, C H Shepherd, Wm. Sweet, C H Leverton, F. H. C., A Greeley, L E Saulpaugh, J Elkins, M. D. W., R R York, E Royce, C B Turner.

POST OFFICE ADDRESS.

Nelson Hartshorn—Meredith Village, N. H.
J. K. Bellows—364 Broome Street, New York.
N. F. Nason—After May 1st, North Hermon, Me.
P. A. Smith—After May 13th, San Francisco.
Bro. Wm. C. Thurman's address for the present is Boston, Mass., Box 292, care of Miles Grant.
Mrs. Anna E. Smith—128 East twenty-seventh Street, New York City.
A. W. Sibley—East Boston, Mass.
H. F. Carpenter—Rutland, Vt.
J. Couch—Concord, N. H.

☞ New Books.

The following books will be published in a few days:—

LIFE SKETCHES AND EXPERIENCE, by Mrs. Abigail Mussey. Price, postpaid, $1.00. This is the book Mrs. Mussey has had under way so long, and those who have subscribed for it will receive copies before long. It contains a portrait of the author, and is got up in good style.

CHRISTIAN BAPTISM, ITS DUTY AND OBJECT, containing numerous quotations from distinguished writers on the uses of words, and the practice of the primitive church. Price probably 25 cts. If not, notice will be given accordingly.

Meantime orders for "Life Sketches" may be sent to Mrs. Abigail Mussey, 167 Hanover Street, Boston, or, for "Christian Baptism" to I. C. Wellcome, Yarmouth, Me., or either may be obtained by addressing MILES GRANT, Boston, Mass.

BOOKS FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

THE EMPHATIC DIAGLOTT: containing the Original Greek Text of the New Testament, according to the Recension of Dr. J. J. Griesbach, with an Interlinear Word-for-Word English Translation, based on the renderings of eminent critics, and on the various readings of the Vatican Manuscript (No. 1209) in the Vatican Library; with Notes, References, and an Appendix. 880pp. 12mo. Price, plain leather, $4.00; extra, gilt, $4.50; Turkey morocco, $5.00. Postage, 16 cents.

THE NEW TESTAMENT of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ; with brief Notes and Instructions; containing the references and marginal readings of the Polyglott Bible; also the Psalms, Maps, and Harmony of the Gospels. Published by the American Tract Society. For family use. $1.75; by mail, $2.15.

DICTIONARY OF THE HOLY BIBLE, for general use in the study of the Scriptures, with Engravings, Maps, and Tables. Published by the Amer. Tract Society. This is one of the best. Cloth, $1.50; by mail, $1.75. Sheep, $2.00; by mail, $2.25.

WHY THE SHOE PINCHES. A useful little work, with cuts, showing the conditions of a healthy foot, the causes of deformities, and how to avoid those troublesome diseases and malformations, such as chilblains, corns, bunions, flat-foot, bent-up toes, grown-in nails, etc. Price, 30 cents.

CRUDEN'S COMPLETE CONCORDANCE to the Holy Scriptures. New and condensed edition. Edited by John Eadie, D. D., LL.D. Cloth, $1.75; by mail, $2.05. Sheep, $2.00; by mail, $2.30.

HIRAM MUNGER'S LIFE and Religious Experience, including many singular circumstances connected with Campmeetings and Revivals. Written by himself. 224 pages. Price 30 cents, postpaid.

THURMAN'S BIBLE CHRONOLOGY, or, The Sealed Book of Daniel Opened. A work for every Bible Student. $1.50; by mail, $1.75.

THE SCRIPTURAL QUESTION BOOK. "Sanctify them through thy truth; thy word is truth." A valuable help to Sunday School and family instruction. 127 pp. Price, 15 cts.; postage 4 cts. $1.50 per dozen; postage 8 cts. on every three copies.

CANON OF THE HOLY SCRIPTURES examined in the light of History. By Prof. L. Gaussen, of Geneva, Switzerland. Translated from the French, and abridged by Edward N. Kirk, D. D. $1.75. By mail, $2.00.

THE TAKING OF HUMAN LIFE incompatible with Christianity; with remarks on the present crisis. By T. F. Tukesbury. Price, 8 cts.; postage 2 cts. A tract for the times.

ENGLISH BIBLES

FOR SALE BY H. L. HASTINGS, BOSTON.

1. MINION, references between the verses. Sheep $2.40; roan gilt, $3.00; Turkey morocco, gilt, $5.00.
2. NONPAREIL. Sheep, $2.00; Roan gilt, rims and clasps, $3.25.
3. PEARL BIBLES. Roan gilt, $2.00; Roan gilt, rims and clasps, $2.50; Morocco, $3; Circuit (Turkey), with flaps to protect the edges, $4.00.
4. DIAMOND. Flexible roan, $1.25; Rims and clasps, $2.00.

TESTAMENTS, flexible enamel, cloth, 15 cts. Sent by mail, postpaid, on receipt of the price. Ten per cent discount to those who buy to sell again.

Address all orders to H. L. HASTINGS, Boston.

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

BOOKS AND TRACTS.

[illegible]

All orders for any of the following works must be addressed to MILES GRANT, Boston, Mass.

MILES GRANT'S WORKS.

Resurrection of the Wicked. Discussion with [illegible]

Eternal Suffering. Discussion with Dr. J. Litch. [illegible]

State of the Dead. Discussion with W. W. Clayton, [illegible]

Miles Grant's Tracts. 32 pages each. Price 5 cents [illegible]

What is Man? A Bible view of his creation; The [illegible]

The Soul, What is it? Or a careful examination of [illegible]

The Spirit, What is it? Or a careful examination [illegible]

The Rich Man and Lazarus. Thief on the Cross; [illegible]

EXPOSITORY WORKS ON PROPHECY. BY S. S. BREWER.

1. The Days in which we Live. This is a concise [illegible]
2. An Exposition of the Seven Seals. History [illegible]
3. The Slaying of the Witnesses. Showing that [illegible]
4. A Treatise on Revelation XIII, in Two Parts. [illegible]
5. The Kingdom of God and Signs of the Times. [illegible]
6. The Last Day Tokens. No. 1. This is an [illegible]
7. Last Day Tokens. No. 2 is an answer to the [illegible]
8. Last Day Tokens. No. 3. This is a phenom- [illegible]
9. The Great Image soon to be dashed to pieces. [illegible]
10. The History of an Immortal Soul. Mythol- [illegible]
11. Rich Man and Lazarus. New edition, [illegible]

MISCELLANEOUS.

Cruden's Condensed Concordance, by which any [illegible]
The Life of Trust. An account of the Lord's [illegible]
A Treatise on the 24th and 25th chapters of Matthew, [illegible]
Should Christians Fight? A pamphlet on War, [illegible]
The Bible from Heaven, or a dissertation on the [illegible]
America in Prophecy. Exposition of the 18th chap. [illegible]
The Celestial Railroad, or Modern Pilgrim's Progress. [illegible]
The Three Kingdoms, or the Kingdom of God the [illegible]
The Ten Virgins, or Wisdom and Folly contrasted. [illegible]
The Two Adams. By T. M. Preble. An interesting [illegible]
Messiah's Mission, or an exposition of the Gospel [illegible]
The Excellency of the Lord's Anointed, or Christ [illegible]
Everybody's Book. The Bible View of the personality of Devil, [illegible]
Cook Book. By Dr. F. W. Hurd. This book gives [illegible]
Premature Decay of American Youth. By Dr. [illegible]
The Saint's Harvest, or an exposition of Matt. 24: [illegible]
The Old and New Covenant. Superiority of the [illegible]
The Christian Lyre. A collection of Hymns and [illegible]
A Disquisition on the Prophecies. By F. H. Be- [illegible]
An Appeal to Pious Trinitarians. By H. Grew. [illegible]

THE BIBLE STUDENT'S LIBRARY,

A Series of Volumes Edited and Published by

H. L. HASTINGS,

167 Hanover St., Boston, Mass.

Each vol. contains over 400 pages, uniformly bound in Cloth and in Paper Covers. Sold separately or in sets. Single volumes sent post-paid on receipt of the price.

IMPORTANT BOOKS WORTH BUYING, LENDING, READING, AND PRESERVING.

I. THE SIGNS OF THE TIMES; or, a Glance at Christendom as it is. By H. L. Hastings. [illegible]

II. THE VOICE OF THE CHURCH on the Coming and Kingdom of the Redeemer. By D. T. Taylor. [illegible]

III. THESSALONICA; OR THE MODEL CHURCH: [illegible]

IV. THE GREAT CONTROVERSY BETWEEN GOD AND MAN: [illegible]

V. FUTURE PUNISHMENT; as Taught in the Scriptures; [illegible]

CASH PRICES.

[illegible]

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

For the World's Crisis.

JERUSALEM.

BY S. S. BREWER.

I.

Jerusalem, Jerusalem,
Foretold by prophets long,
The new creation's diadem,
The Bride of sacred song;
Jehovah is thine architect,
The mighty God above;
There with our great Melchisedec,
The saints ere long will rove.

II.

The temple of King David's Son,
That prophets long have told,
Built by the wise King Solomon,
With "manna pot" of gold;
Where budded Aaron's wondrous rod,
With all those sacred things,
And cherubs spread their wings abroad,
The pride of Hebrew kings.

III.

That was a type of what ere long
The pure in heart shall see,
And what th' Apocalyptic song
Reveals fair Salem is to be;
Thou citadel of earth and sky,
Of vast sublimity,
Where dwells the Lamb and the Most High,
To all eternity.

IV.

The son of Amos sang of thee,
Whose lips were touched with fire;
The stones all set with colors rare,
Foundations of sapphire;
He saw the windows of Agates,
Thy glory bright, sublime,
Thy massive carbuncle gates—
Oh! how those gems did shine.

V.

O when, thou great Zerrubbabel, (Zec. 4: 6, 7)
Wilt thou the headstone place,
When shouting millions loud shall tell
The wonders of free grace?
Shall I, O God, be with them there,
And join the choral song,
With all the sacramental host,
The Jubal strain prolong?

VI.

No cherubim nor seraphim
Behind the Holy Place,
Nor blue nor purple veil between,
But face shall answer face.
No Urim then nor Thummim there, (Ex. 28: 30)
On Aaron's sacred breast,
But clad in vestments rich and rare,
God's ancient priest is drest.

VII.

No longer Moses now appears
From Sinai's awful brow,
With veil upon his shining face,
That gleams with glory now;
Nor when with Peter, James and John,
Upon Mount Tabor's height,
That vision could not shed upon
His face such glory bright.

VIII.

But, hark! that sweet, the loud acclaim
Through Salem's portals swells;
Behold He comes! it doth proclaim
The great Immanuel.
From pinnacle and parapet
Admiring myriads gaze,
And angels crowd her battlements
To see the Lamb's dear face.

IX.

O how the blood-besprinkled ones
Will wonder and admire,
When standing on thy streets of gold,
Aglow with sacred fire;
When he beholds his Lord and King,
Oh how his harp will trill,—
King David then will sweeter sing,
Than when on Zion's Hill.

X.

Then how the martyrs from the stake,
Who praised God in the fires,
When they again to life shall wake,
Will sing mid angel choirs.
They suffered death their Lord to greet,
Beneath fair Salem's dome;
Oh! what a change, to tread thy streets,
From fagots to a throne!

XI.

No longer weeps Hilkiah's son
O'er Israel's fallen lot,
And Rachel's tears have ceased to run,
Because her loved were not.
Macpelah's cave, on Mamre's plain,
Hath yielded up its trust;
Good Abraham and Sarah too
Now shine amid the host.

XII.

O! there the robes of all God's saints
Transcendently do shine,
With crowns of gold in princely dress,
Prepared by hands divine.
Afar from the Ægean sea
The Seer of Patmos comes,
To join creation's jubilee,
And shout the harvest home.

XIII.

No man the ransomed host can count,
Nor tell the number o'er,
So vast the multitude's amount,
Like sands on ocean's shore;
There 'neath thy dome, Jerusalem,
Their King in beauty see,
And bend in homage at his throne,
With pure felicity.

XIV.

From out thy dazzling throne, O God,
For evermore is seen
A swelling river, deep and broad,
Life's ever-gushing stream;
Beside its vernal banks,
Beneath its blooming bowers,
Perpetually is seen
Sweet Eden's blooming flowers.

XV.

Ah! Lord, my heart is big with wo,
And weary with life's cares;
To Salem I would quickly go,
If thou wouldst hear my prayers.
Since I have read its wondrous fame,
I'd see without delay
Jerusalem—O, dear, sweet name!
Thou'st stolen my heart away.

XVI.

The marriage supper of the Lamb,
To celebrate I'd go,
'Mid the bright glories of "I Am,"
The rapturous height to know.
O Salem, dear, supremely grand,
Thy golden streets I'd tread;
Hard by the throne, Lord, let me stand,
And see my Living Head.

XVII.

The nuptial hour, Lord, let it come;
The guests, dear Lamb, invite;
Fast speed the angels, bring them home,
Haste! end the weeper's night.
Our hearts pulsate with patience, Lord,
Though exiles here we roam,
And pray with the beloved John,
O come! Lord Jesus, quickly come.

Ashburnham Depot, Mass.

For the World's Crisis.

WHAT CAN WE DO?

What can we, the little ones of the flock, do? We all admit that there is much to be done, and but little time to do it in. The harvest is ripe, and the laborers are few. We feel little, and weak, and helpless ourselves, but we want the sheaves gathered, so we pray the Lord of the harvest to send forth more laborers. But is there nothing we can do? Have we not been fed with the "sincere milk of the word" by the nursing fathers and mothers, and sustained by the working ones long enough to be able to do a little towards supporting the family ourselves? How can we work for God? By laboring for the good of others.

"O well," says one, "if I had the gift to talk and exhort that such an one has, or if I could write as some can, or if I was rich, I would do something for God's cause." Ah, yes! "If the prophet had bid thee do some great thing, wouldst thou not have done it?"

